Picturesque "Home" for Wild Life in France

There has been constituted in the south of France a national reserve for wild life which, in some ways, is the most picturesque natural home for bird and beast to be found in Europe. It is situated on the Camargue, the island famous in old French history and legend and well known to visitors to Aries in Provence. Really the delta of the River Rhone, entirely formed by alluvial deposits, it is in great part a savage region of marsh and prairie.

The Societe Nationale d'Acclimatation, which has charge of the reserve, protects about 50,000 acres as tenant, and it is proposed to increase the area ultimately to 100,000 acres. Even after a relatively short experience, however, it has been observed that the migratory birds of many species which have always used the island as a landing station are increasing in numbers. For many it is the last hopping-off place for Africa. Besides every sort of wild duck in immeasurable numbers—storks, herons and egrets—there are many rare birds which cannot be seen elsewhere in Europe. Perhaps the most astonishing are the pink flamingoes, which are to be found in flocks of 3,000 or 4,000 together.

Little-Known Men Who Are Worthy of Hono

It is suggested that a statue be erected to the memory of the man who first introduced the orange to Great Britain. Japan already has a statue to its first orange bringer. France has put up a statue to Marie Harel, the inventor of Camembert cheese, and Offenburg, in Germany boasts a statue to Sir Francis Drake for bringing the potato from the New world to the Old. But nobody knows who brought the oranges to Britain. They came from Spain about the year 1290, but beyond that there is no record. The first man to import oranges in quantity was Benjamin Bovill, a London fruit broker, the centenary of whose death recently occurred. The man who first brought bananas to Britain is just as worthy of a statue as anyone connected with oranges. Worthiest, perhaps, of any is Sir Richard Weston, who flourished in the reign of Charles I. Though very few people have heard of him it was he who introduced turnips, clover and other sown grasses into Britain and so laid the foundation of modern agriculture.—London Mail.

Blinds Not "Venetian"

Venetian blinds, now becoming popular in America, are not, and never were, really Venetian, Home and Field says.

"While the roller shade is purely an American invention, the use of venetian blinds, or tilting slats, dates back nearly 300 years to the West Indies," the article says. "The blinds now in use are quite similar, but with added improvements. Apparently there is no authoritative information as to why they are called venetian. Careful research shows that they were not seen in Venice until many years after they had been in use elsewhere. It has been suggested, however, that they may have been invented by a Venetian trader making his home in the West Indies and named in his honor."

The Three of Them

The following incident is reported by Mrs. A. M. G.:

"A little five-year-old girl was added to my class last Sunday, and when the lady who brought her introduced her to me she said: 'She was born in Egypt.'

"I thought no more about it, and when class work began, I told the little tots about Moses. The little newcomer said she had heard about Moses; and then, to interest her, I said, 'Moses was a Jew, but he was born in Egypt.'

"'Yes,' exclaimed the new child, 'all three of us were born in Egypt: my sister, and I, and Moses.'"—Kansas City Star.

Make Life a Battle

Young people like to be doing things. A keen student of youth has said that the average young person gets a far greater thrill out of hewing his own pathway through the world than in rolling along in a luxurious car over a roadway that other hands have prepared. But, after all, no one can wholly remove from us all responsibility or fight all our battles for us. Nobody has a right to find life uninteresting or unrewarding who sees within the sphere of his own activity a wrong he can help to remedy, or within himself an evil he can hope to overcome.—Montreal Family Herald.

Says New Buildings Ugly

"There is a saying that God made the country and the devil made the towns," said Sir Thomas Comyn-Platt in an address before the council for the Preservation of Rural England, in London recently. "When I walk in London and see the buildings they are erecting I can quite believe they are not the work of the Almighty. England owes everything to the country."

Health in Economy

In order to determine the effect of a special diet, nine young women, students at the Washington Missionary college, lived four weeks on food costing 28 cents a day apiece. At the end of the period physicians pronounced them fitter, fatter and fairer.

Early History of Streetsville

Paper Read by Miss Mabel Graydon at a recent Meeting of Women's Institute

Streetsville is the oldest settled village in the County of Peel. James Glendenning was the first settler, Frank Lightheart the second, and John Barnhart, the third. The latter, in 1821, opened a small store for the accommodation of the few settlers, and also traded with the Indians, who at that time were very numerous. About the same time, Timothy Street built a saw-mill and shortly after a grist mill. Up to the time that Street's mill was started, the settlers carried their flour from Gooderham's wind mill, near the Don, at Little York.

We have heard our grandfather speak of the time when he carried grain through the woods on horseback to Little York, and returned with flour and groceries. The Lervishes, Embletons, Rutledges, Hydes, Bennets and Ransoms were among the earliest settlers. The Rutledges received a crown deed for their farm in 1818, and comprised the land, now the west end of Streetsville as far south as Dr. Crombie's property.

Near Street's grist mill were grouped a number of houses, on one a conspicuous sign, T. Cartwright, Hatter, where fashionable plugs were turned out which were the admiration of the country.

A cabinet warehouse and shop was started for the manufacture of sideboards, tables and other furniture, all made from birdseye maple, which grew on the banks of the Credit. These were very handsome and solid, much more so than many of the present day. This was owned by Smith and Co.

Mr. Street also started a broom factory, and afterwards a tub and pail factory. Hazelton's chair and paint shop could also be seen dimly through the trees, situated at the head of what is now Main Street.

The Misses Sovereign kept a millinery store. Bennet's blacksmith shop is deserving of mention. Bennet was also a veterinary-surgeon, and his shop was on Main Street, where he used to shoe oxen which were used a great deal at this time. His method of doing this was to swing them up by a windlass in a canvas sling.

It is said that these dove-eyed creatures might be seen on the streets, drawing from house to house, ladies returning calls and visits.

The only stores for miles around were kept by Israel Ransom and John Barnhart, who also dealt in lumber and gave employment to a number of men. W. H. Paterson commenced the lumbering business on an extensive scale; he was also the first merchant who shipped Upper Canadian wheat to Montreal. The mails about this time were brought once a week on horseback, by a Mr. Lightheart, the postage ranging from fourpence halfpenny to three and nine pence.

The village continued to improve until 1858, when it was incorporated, the first council being John Street, reeve; Messrs. Henry Rutledge, James Anderson, Thos. Paterson and Henry Kerr, councillors.

In 1877 the council was composed of John Graydon, reeve; Messrs. Matthew Cunningham, George Howard, John C. Rutledge and J. G. Cooper, councillors. (Mr. J. C. Rutledge being the only one living at the present time).

The population was 678 and the assessed value of village property, $119,910. There were now three schools, Mr. W. H. Westney, headmaster of the high school; Mr. Geo. McAuley, master of the public school, (the building now occupied by Leslie Hollingshead for a dwelling house), and Miss Woodington, who taught in what is now the Court House. The mercantile business was represented by Messrs. Gooderham and Worts doing an extensive business in dry goods, groceries, boots and shoes, hardware, millinery, etc., with Mr. Wm. Webb as manager, in the building on the corner of Queen and Main Street. This was afterwards carried on by Messrs. Webb and Falconer, then Mr. Frank Morgan, and is now the Superior store.

Mr. R. K. Beaty kept a grocery and liquor store across the street; Alex. Irwin, a general store, where Woodruff's garage now stands.

Embleton's general store was in the building, afterwards T. H. Goodison, now occupied by the Post Office and Customs.

The first Post Office was kept by Mr. W. H. Paterson; he was followed by James Rutledge, then Robt. Graydon, and was on the corner of Queen and Pearl Streets. The original building was sold to Mr. Geo. Allen, when Robt. Graydon built a new brick store, office and dwelling, and moved further down the street, and is now Dr. Bowie's drug store.

In the early days everyone wore hand-made shoes and there were several shoe-makers doing a good business, including Armstrong's, Tunstall's, Cuthbert's, Torrance's, Anderson's, Ryan's and Wm. Graydon. A Mr. Torrance kept a furniture store on Queen Street, where Miss Clifton now lives.

Carr's furniture store was on Queen Street, where later Miss A. Taylor kept a dressmaking and millinery store, now Mr. Hammond's residence.

A man named Jafo had a foundry on Tannery Street, where one of the first stoves used in this part of the country was made.

A brewery at the end of Tannery Street was owned by Geo. Adamson. Henry and George Howard had a blacksmith and carriage shop, where the Review Office now is.

James Graham had a Cooper shop and stove factory, and John Baptiste a blacksmith shop, on Pearl Street.

Hyde's store and dwelling, on the corner of Queen and Ontario Streets was one of the finest buildings in the village. On the opposite corner, he also built a hotel, when his flour mill was operating on the site of the present power plant, when farmers teamed grain from as far as Orangeville, and teams were lined up for blocks, waiting their turn. This mill was later sold to Gooderham's and used as a flax mill; this was destroyed by fire in 1867.

A number of other industries were operated on the flats, near the flax mill—Hirum Castor's Carding mill, Hyde's saw mill and stave factory, and Carr's bobbin factory. The high brick chimney of the engine house, built by Gooderham's, is the only building remaining of these.

Mr. James Goode[illegible]m, who was reeve of the village for a number of years, was killed at the opening of the Credit Valley Railway, on September 19th, 1879.

Besides Hyde's and Street's flour mills, Noah Barnhart built and operated lower down on the river, which was afterwards owned by Beaty's, now Reid's; he also built the house, now owned by Mrs. Dracass, and occupied by Mr. McArthur, known as "Noah's Ark."

Mr. Barnhart, Sr., built and lived in the house, now Miss Morrisey's. Solomon Barnhart, owned the "Streetsville Review," which was published in the office now occupied by W. Watson, corner Queen and Pearl Streets. This paper was edited by Rev. Mr. McGeorge, one of the first ministers in the Anglican Church. He built the house where Mr. Foster now resides, known as Solomon's temple.

Robt. Barnhart built the house, now the Anglican rectory, and John Barnhart, the house now Mrs. Cook's. This was called "The house that Jack built." There was one daughter in this family, who married Mr. W. H. Paterson. After his death, she married Mr. Pinney, who was village clerk for a number of years. Their house was where Mr. John Atkinson now lives.

Dr. Crombie was the pioneer doctor, who started to practice about 1829; he lived in the house now occupied by Miss Sterling; afterwards building the house where Mr. Ardagh is now living.

The present Queen's Hotel was built for a residence by Peter Douglas, and here his son, Dr. Chas. Douglas, had an office for a number of years. Two fine hotels were built in the block, between Main Street and Maiden Lane. The Globe, built by Robt. Stevens, and kept by Mr. Thos. Harris, and the Telegraph, built by Mr. Waterson, a brother of Mrs. Timothy Street, and kept by a Mr. Lennon. These were burned in 1876.

The first Presbyterian Church was on the west side of Queen Street, about opposite the present church. Later one was built on the land now occupied by the old cemetery and in 18— the present church was erected.

The Anglican Church was built on the present site about 86 years ago, the chancel being added later; the bricks and land being devoted by the Rutledge family on whose farm the bricks were made.

The first Methodist Church was next to the house lately owned by the late Geo. Hawkins. The next one, what is now the back part of the public school, and later the present building on Queen Street, now the United Church, was built in 1875.

Ira Leflar built a large brick foundry on the corner of Queen and Ontario Streets for the manufacturing of farm implements. This was later bought by Mr. John Graydon, who carried on a lumber and planing mill, sash and door factory, manufacturing everything used in construction of houses. Piles of lumber and logs covered the ground of the whole block; he also had a brick-yard in the lower end of the village, where brick was made by horse and hand machine-power. The mills were twice destroyed by fire, after which they were moved to the site of Hope's Sash factory.

Robt. Irwin made all sorts of crocks and flower pots in his pottery on Queen Street, while Wm. Hardy's furniture store was on the opposite side of the street. Mr. Geo Allen's tailor shop was on the corner opposite the post office in the building now occupied as a store by W. Watson.

Voice of the Press

Canada, The Empire and The World at Large

Good Example

Her Excellency the Countess of Bessborough sailed from Halifax on the Canadian Pacific liner Montclare. The Maritime Provinces will appreciate this example set by Her Excellency in the use of Canadian winter ports. In many respects sailing from Halifax is more comfortable, although the ships are less elaborate, than sailing from New York.—The Ottawa Citizen.

Force of World Opinion

After all, the cautious policy of the League of Nations has borne fruit. Critics who spoke of the impotency of the league and jeered at its inaction must admit that, had it not been for the existence of that body, very serious international complications might have arisen. No one can say what would have been the result of a vigorous assertion of the powers conferred by the covenant, or the adoption of the coercive expedients proposed by some impatient counsellors. Moderation, and the force of world opinion, have had their effect. Instead of being discredited, the League is vindicated as an agency of international co-operation against a common menace, when emergencies arise. — Hamilton Spectator.

International Affairs

In the realm of international dealings the United States has provided no record which Canada would desire to parallel. It has guessed wrong on matters of foreign policy far oftener than any other major power. Few parts of its program in recent years could justify either blind imitation by Canada or excessively-amiable attempts to meet its wishes. If Canada needs outside advice on foreign policies she will be wise to remember that Britain still holds the world's all-time record in the matter of guessing right on international questions.—Toronto Telegram.

World Trade Decline

A graphic idea of the extent to which depression affected the trade of the world during the past year may be gained from a perusal of the statistics just issued by the British Board of Trade. There was a decrease of 27 per cent. in comparison with 1930 and of 41 per cent. from the total for 1929. But British trade stood up very well compared with American trade, since British imports fell off by 16.6 per cent. and American by 32 per cent., while British exports decreased only $1.8 per cent. compared with a falling-off of 37 per cent. in exports from the United States.

The devastating effects of Australia's fiscal policy were reflected in a decrease in her imports of 54 per cent. Australia's exports, however, fell off only 17 per cent. The depression hit the rubber industry very heavily in Malaya, and this is indicated in the fact that British Malaya showed the heaviest decrease in exports—57 per cent below the figure for 1929.

The German figures show an amazing turnover. For 1929, 1930 and 1931 Germany had a progressively favourable trade balance. It was less than £2,000,000 in 1929; it rose to more than £80,000,000 in the following year, and it was in excess of £140,000,000 for the 1931 period.—Montreal Star.

Empire Trade

One of the points brought out by the Minister of Finance in his budget speech is that, owing to the policy of the present Government, Canada is trading less with the United States and more with the British Empire than it did in other years. For the 11 months of the past fiscal year for which reports are available our imports from the British Empire were 25.3% of our total imports as compared with 22.6% the previous year; our imports from the United States 60.9% as against 64.5%, and our imports from other foreign countries 13.8% compared with 12.9%. Our exports have shown a somewhat similar change for the better. This trend is encouraging to all those who entertain high hopes of closer trade relations within the Empire as a result of the forthcoming Imperial Economic Conference at Ottawa next July. It is moreover to be repeated that for 11 months of the past year Canada has a favorable trade balance of over $25,000,000 compared with an unfavorable balance of nearly $71,000,000 in the previous corresponding period. In other words ther has been a change in Canada's favor of nearly $100,000,000. —Mail & Empire, Toronto.

Unemployed and Placer Mining

It would be far better in every way, and cheaper in the longer run, to put unemployed men in the way of earning a good living for themselves than continue to keep them in idleness by way of direct relief. It is a matter of organization chiefly to transfer a large body of men to the placer gold district of British Columbia, where climatic and general working conditions are highly suitable to outdoor work. They need employment and Canada needs gold.—Calgary Herald.

Paying the Piper

The great middle class of white collar workers in offices, stores and factories is the backbone of society, the big tax-paying class and the big purchasing class. And it is the class that stands as a buffer between organized labour and organized capital. It is the white collar middle-class worker whose grievances have raised Adolf Hitler to great influence in Germany. It is the white collar middle-class worker who is paying the piper in Canada. What can be done for him?—Vancouver Sun.

The Ottawa Conference

The conference will not be of merely external importance; its intended purpose is inextricably interwoven with the dom stic business of this country, and to allow it to be thrust out of thought for the sake of seemingly more intimate affairs would be suicidal. When the "strictly business" nature of its work is appreciated there is met the absolute necessity of a representation fully qualified to deal with matters of trade.—Auckland Weekly News.

"Managing" the Pound

If there is any chance of a further speculative bull movement in the pound developing—and we are not disposed to minimize the danger—it would, we urge, be useful if it were made clear by the actions of the Bank of England, reinforced, if need be, by a definite official statement of policy, that while no decision as to the ultimate level of sterling has yet been reached, there is, so far, no underlying justification for any substantial upward movement, and that, therefore, effective steps will be taken, by the acquisition "a l'outrance" of foreign short-term assets (or even gold) to give speculation "for the rise" its quietus.—Economist (London).

Britain's Recovery

We are satisfied that never since the war has there been so firm a case for sane optimism. True that everything cannot be done at once. True that the larger problems are still almost of the same magnitude, and that we are only just beginning to make a real impression on them. But the great work of national reconstruction is fairly in hand.—J. L. Garvin in the London Observer (Ind.)

Prices in Britain

The doleful prophecies that the prices of imported foodstuffs were bound to rise have not been fulfilled. This is due in part to the fact that certain countries from which we purchase 59 per cent. of our imports of food followed Great Britain; the gold standard, and other gold countries had to adjust their prices to ours. But it is also due to the praiseworthy self-restraint of both wholesale and retail traders, who refrained from exploiting such opportunities as offered.—London Daily Telegraph (Ind. Cons.)

Britain's Great Effort

It is fair to say that things are looking up. Our trade balance is better; the stock market has visibly brightened; sterling has risen; we have paid back before it was due a large part of the £80,000,000 credits from France and America. Income tax payments are flowing in well. Budget prospects are reasonably good, and the economies effected by departments more than come up to expectations. All these things bear testimony to the nation's immense strength and to its magnificent capacity for effort.—London Sunday Times (Cons.)

The Enigma of Germany

Germany is a curious country, where the unexpected always happens. From an economic point of view the Germans are perhaps the greatest race of modern times. At any rate, they possess a capacity for work unrivalled by other nations. But politically they are incompetent. Many among them are the first to admit it, and this curious absence of an understanding of politics is one of the tragedies of civilization. —George Soleveythick in the Nineteenth Century (London).

30,000 Barrels of Flour Distributed to Needy

Philadelphia.—Thirty thousand barrels of flour, milled from the surplus government wheat of the Farm Board, will arrive shortly in the Philadelphia area to be distributed to 55,000 needy families here, according to Mr. George Wilkins, Chairman of the special Red Cross Four Distribution Committee here and superintendent of the Shelter for Homeless Men in this city.

The flour will be distributed in 24 and 48-pound sacks directly to the consumers from warehouses conveniently located throughout the city. Unemployed men from the Shelter will operate trucks, donated for the work, to haul both the wheat and the flour. Authorized welfare agencies will have charge of the distribution.

Toulon Suburbs Yield Abundant Helium Source

Previously, the precious non-inflammable balloon gas has been produced only in America.

The French experts were seeking new water supplies in the suburbs when they discovered the helium. If the source proves as extensive as indicated and if it can be developed to good effect, the construction of lighter-than-air craft in Europe may be stimulated.

Newfoundlanders Protest

Newfoundlanders never let the old flag fall, even when a-rioting. Part of crowd of 10,000 is shown mounting the steps of the Assembly house just before they began wrecking the place, completely demoralizing the police and civil forces.

Furniture Industry In the Dominion

Canadian Manufacturers Supply Over 90 p.c. of Demand

Over 90 per cent. of the furniture used in Canada is manufactured by the Canadian industry. It imports considerable quantities of its raw materials, but the great bulk of the lumber it uses is cut from Canadian trees. It does a small export business, but both imports and exports of the finished products are small. In the latest five years for which information is available, the output of the industry has risen by over 35 per cent.

The value of furniture produced in Canadian factories in 1930 was $36,866,195. This was a reduction of about $8,000,000 from the previous year but was larger than any other recent year. In 1925 th value of the output of the industry was $27,110,462, so that the growth in the interval was some 36 per cent. Imports of furniture into the Dominion in 1930 were valued at $2,967,572, and exports at $291,015. Imports in 1930 showed a falling-off of about 30 per cent from the previous year, as did also exports.

Furniture manufactured by the Canadian industry consists chiefly of household furniture. In 1930 this branch of production was valued at $19,741,724, and was made up of upholstered living room, bedroom, dining room and miscellaneous household and kitchen furniture in the order named. The next most important items were store furniture and fixtures at $5,103,182, radios and cabinets $1,516,800, and church and theatre furniture $1,317,347.

Roman Epoch Coins Found

Rome.—About fifty coins of the Roman epoch, some of them dating to the year 537 ab urbe condita, or 216 B. C., have been found in the village of Bufalara, near Termoli, on the southeast coast of Italy. The coins were struck by the neighboring city of Larinum or Alarium, now known as Larino, in bronze in accordance with the Roman edict which forbade her depenent cities to strike coins in silver or gold. The coins have been place in an amphora which was discovered when the Roman tomb protecting it was unearthed by some farm workers. The tomb lay a meter an a half underneath the surface of the soil and is composed of slabs of tufa stone.

Thousands Perish In China's Quake

Many Towns and Villages in Hupeh Affected—Corpses Strew Ground

Hankow, China. — Chinese reports slowly trickling in from the Northeast Hupeh Province Sunday said an earthquake on April 6 took a terrible toll, "several tens of thousands of persons perishing."

The despatches said that the quake, which slightly jarred the Yangtze Valley, had affected scores of towns and villages in Northeast Hupeh.

The reports, whose tardiness illustrates the lack of communications in the interior, painted a picture of appalling conditions as the result of the quake.

"Human corpses and dead animals are strewn over the ground in the stricken area," the Chinese messages said.

The important walled town of Ma Cheng was reported to have received the severest jarring, the walls of 70 per cent. of the houses having crumpled on their inhabitants.

The despatches concluded that the quakes had been "a terrible visitation upon the people who already have suffered untold plunderings from Communists and bandits."

Relief from the Provincial Government was requested.

In April

If I am slow forgetting.
It is because the sun
Has such old tricks of setting
When April days are done.

The soft spring sunlight traces
Old patterns green and gold.
The flowers have no new faces,
The very buds are old.

If I am slow forgetting
Ah, well, come back and see
The same old sunbeams petting
My garden-plots for me.

Come smell the green things growing
The bokwood after rain.
See where old beds are showing
Their slender spears again.

At dusk, that fosters dreaming
Come back at dusk and rest,
And watch our old star gleaming
Against the primrose west.

Second Contact In Lindbergh Case

Go-Between Issues Announcement at New York—Money is Posted

New York.—Dr. John F. Condon said Sunday that he was "in contact" with the kidnappers of Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr., and that he "hoped to have the baby back soon."

Condon, who under the name "Jafsie" conducted the negotiations that led to Col. Lindbergh's payment of $50,000 to swindlers who failed to give back his infant son, made his statement during a charity baseball game at which he umpired.

Speaking into a talking picture microphone, Condon said: "We are in contact with the kidnappers, and the baby will be returned soon, I hope." The 72-year-old Fordham lecturer said he could add nothing more to this statement, and that the public "will understand why."

A series of mysterious occurrences at sea off Vineyard Haven, including "contact" between an amphibian plane and the coast guard destroyer, MacDougall, early Sunday morning, led to rumors that Lindbergh's agents—or perhaps the colonel himself—were once more surveying the locality where, two weeks ago, the kidnappers had promised to restore the baby to his father.

Cruiser Sighted

Authorities at Hopewell said they had no knowledge of the plane that met the destroyers in the early morning darkness. The MacDougall is reported to have passed out to sea after meeting the amphibian, and late today a naval cruiser resembling the Milwaukee steamed through Vineyard Sound and headed towards New York.

Dr. Condon indicated, after the baseball game, that he would go back to his home in the Bronx and wait developments there. At a late hour he had not returned, however.

It was known, meanwhile, that Col. Lingbergh has placed "a certain sum of money" with one of his agents in New York, for immediate payment to the abductors of his child, provided any agreement made with them stipulate immediate livery of the baby.

"No Progress"

Police bulletins, outlining some of the activities of the authorities, showed no progress in the actual tracing of the criminals. Two clues which had appeared "promising" earlier in the case, were knocked down. The first had to do with an automobile parked in a Brooklyn garage early in March under suspicious circumstances. Investigation proved it had no connection with the case.

Another boat, supposed to have been used by two men, a woman and a small blonde-haired baby, was traced by marine authorities and discovered to be innocent of connection with the kidnapping.

In his afternoon bulletin, Col. Schwartzkopf said only that there was "no progress to report."

At Norfok, Col. Lindbergh's three intermediaries were silent as to any developments from their contacts with persons they believe to be the kidnapping gang. The three men, John Hughes Curtis, the Rev. H. Dobson-Peacock, and Rear Admiral Guy H. Burrage remained in Norfolk throughout Sunday.

Col. Schwartzkopf's 9 p.m. bulletin was as noncommittal as his earlier statements, but it is intimated that one child said to resemble the Lindbergh baby was being investigated.

Ontario Attracts Majority of Tourists

76 Per Cent. of American Cars Came Here in Three Years

Toronto.—Using the recent tourist trade report of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics to complete his computations, Hon. Leopold Macaulay, Minister of Highways, recently noted that during the past three years, of the 14,878,586 American automobiles that entered Canada, according to the bureau more than 76 per cent., or 11,361,823 cars, came into Ontario to use the province's network of fine roads.

Using the Dominion bureau's average of 3.2 persons to a car, Mr. Macaulay calculated that 36,000,000 motor tourists and travellers had entered this province during the three-year period. On this basis, he added, Ontario got a lion's share of the one billion three hundred and three million dollars that the tourist industry brought into Canada, according to Dominion statistics, during the five years ending 1930.

Build Up Health With Spring Tonic

The fashion of taking a Spring tonic is based on sound medical grounds. Winter has thinned and devitalized the blood stream so that it isn't carrying enough oxygen. That is the reason for the listless, languid, easily-tired-out condition so prevalent at this season.

What is needed is a tonic—one that will build new blood and restore and purify the blood stream, and thus enable it to carry the energizing oxygen that quickly revitalizes the whole system. Thousands have proven that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are the ideal tonic for this purpose.

Mrs. A. Merritt of Welland says: "Again last Spring I became ill. I could not do my work; was pale, weak, and tired all the time. British Commonwealth or British Empire

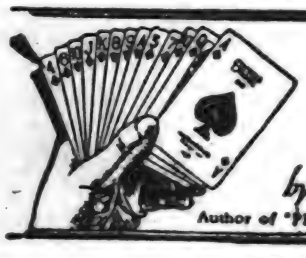
A correspondent writes that many readers are puzzled over the apparently contradictory use of the terms "British Empire" and "British Commonwealth of Nations" made by Ministers of the Crown. He asks whether the British Empire as a term is officially done away with, and if in its stead the term British Commonwealth of Nations is the proper designation and why the change was made

An answer may be found in a lecture upon the Statute of Westminster delivered to the students of McGill University a few days ago by Hon. P. B. Mignault, former justice of the Supreme Court of Canada. That statute was enacted at the request of the Dominions themselves on December 11, 1931. The preamble of it includes the following words: "Inasmuch as the Crown is the symbol of the free association of the members of the British Commonwealth of Nations, and as they are united by a common allegiance to the Crown. . . ." His Lordship stated that this common allegiance to the Crown is the keystone of the British Commonwealth of Nations; there is one Crown and there are associated nations, and that Crown is the symbol of their free association. He added that the term "British Empire" was not used for the reason that absolute equality exists between the Dominions and and the United Kingdom. Instead the term "British Commonwealth of Nations" is used, and His Lordship thought it was first used in the treaty which gave birth to the Irish Free State in 1921.—Mail and Empire, Toronto.

Berlin Restricts Taxis



Berlin.—The German capital has more taxis than can profitably be operated at the present state of the public's purse. The question what to do about the excess has given owners much concern and has produced a series of ineffectual corrective measures.

Now the long arm of authority has reached in and an order from the police summarily directs that taxis with odd registration numbers are allowed in the streets only on the odd days of the month, and the even-numbered ones on the even days. That is, only half of the total number of cabs can be operated on any one day.

The authorities figure that the plan gives everybody an even chance. But although the big taxi company, the Kraftag, does not demur, there is a good deal of grumbling on the part of the small fry, and vehement protests from owners of single cabs.

How to play Bridge

AUCTION and CONTRACT

by Wynne Ferguson

Author of "PRACTICAL AUCTION BRIDGE"

ARTICLE No. 19

In the preceding article, a number of interesting hands were given for analysis. If you have not already decided on the proper play or bid, do so now before you read the solution in each instance. A comparison of your opinion with the writer's solution will prove most interesting and should help to improve your game.

Solutions of Last Week's Problems

Hand No. 1

Hearts—Q, 9, 8, 6, 5, 3
Clubs—8, 4
Diamonds—A, 7
Spades—A, 8, 6

A B
Z

No score, first game. Z dealt and bid one club, A one heart and Y doubled.

Hearts—Q, 10, 9
Clubs—A, Q, 10, 8, 6, 3
Diamonds—Q, 10, 7
Spades—9

Hand No. 2

Hearts—8, 6
Clubs—7, 2
Diamonds—K, J, 9, 5, 2
Spades—Q, 8, 4, 3

Z

No score, rubber game. Z dealt and bid one no trump, A bid two clubs, Y passed, B bid two no trump and all passed. Z opened the five of spades, A played the nine, Y the queen and B won the trick with the ace. B now led the king of clubs, followed with jack, winning the trick in A's hand with the queen. All followed, so that the clubs are set up. B then led the ace of clubs. What should Y discard and why?

Solution: Y should discard the nine of diamonds to show his partner at once that the only tricks in his hand are in the diamond suit. There are three discards coming and, unless Z is informed at once that Y can protect diamonds, he may be forced to discard to his disadvantage. Don't hesitate to inform your partner at once of strength in your hand when you see that he will be obliged to discard several times. If he has to guess, he probably will guess wrong; so make it easy for him. A high discard indicates strength in the suit discarded.

Hearts—10, 9, 7, 6, 4
Clubs—A, K, 10
Diamonds—A, Q, 10, 9

A B
Z

No score, first game. Z dealt and bid one spade and A passed. What should Y now bid with the foregoing hand and why?

Solution: At Auction, Y should bid two hearts and, if Z rebids spades, Y should bid two no trump. A suit bid is always preferable to a no trump bid, particularly with a singleton of partner's suit.

At Contract, Y should bid three no trump. The hand is so strong that Z may not have a rebid and yet game is fairly certain in no trump and it is up to Y to try for game.

Hand No. 4

Hearts—7
Clubs—Q
Diamonds—J, 10, 9, 4, 2
Spades—A, Q, 10, 9, 5, 3

Z

No score and A B a game in. Z dealt and bid one spade. A and Y passed and B bid one spade. Z bid two hearts, A two spades, Y three hearts and B three spades. Z now bid four hearts, A four spades and Y five hearts, B and Z passed, A doubled and Y passed. What should B now bid and why?

Solution: B should bid five spades at either Auction or Contract. His hand is too unbalanced to play to defeat five hearts, particularly after a double raise by A. This double raise by A should indicate at least four spades, so that A B cannot hope to win more than one spade trick against a five-heart bid, therefore Y Z will either make the bid or only be defeated by one trick. B should bid five spades without any question.

Hand No. 5

Hearts—A
Clubs—8, 4, 2
Diamonds—A, 5
Spades—J, 9, 8, 7, 6, 4, 3

A B
Z

No score, rubber game. Z dealt and bid one spade. A passed, Y bid one no trump and B and Z passed. What should A bid with the foregoing hand and why?

Auction Bidding:

A should bid two spades, not with the hope of making the bid, but with the hope that it will save game and rubber. A will probably lose one or two tricks, with a two-spade bid, but even if it is doubled, it will be a cheap way to save the certain loss of game and rubber if he allows Y Z to play the hand at no trump.

Contract Bidding:

A should pass. His opponents have not contracted for game, and he has no chance for game in spades.

Policy in India

By the Earl of Willingdon, Viceroy of India, to the Princes of India.

Your highnesses realize as well as I do that the forces of repression cannot be an end in themselves and that I have only adopted them so as to produce conditions in which we shall be able to proceed with the details of the great constitutional changes which are pending.

It is in the firm belief that we shall before long be able to inaugurate a new era in the constitutional history of this great country that I am determined at all costs to secure and maintain the peaceful conditions under which alone such progress can be made.

Wind From the Shore

Wind from the shore, slow-lifting waves—serrated
By vibrant ripples—dark'ning as they rise
From changing grays to green—the sun belated—
Dropping half-radiance through misty skies.
Far on the dim horizon, slowly trailing,
Two barges beat across the bay again,
One in a patch of mirrored sunlight sailing,
The other softly veiled by blowing rain.
Quiet on shore, where waves to gentle measure
Cares in cadence unresisting stones—
Echoing memories of hidden treasure—
That rise and vanish with those rhythmic tones!
Wind from the shore—almost tranquillity—
But shore winds call us—call us—far at sea!

Rome Shopkeepers Resist Tax on Advertisements

Rome—The growing budget deficit has compelled the Italian Government to seek new sources of revenue an among the new levies recently enforced here is one concerning shop signs, advertisements and notices. The bare announcement that the Government intended to raise the taxation sums due for the display of window signs has had extraordinary results. The movable signs were at once removed and many window inscriptions were covere over with strips of black paper to avoid paying the new tax. The attitude of passive resistance adopted by the shopkeepers came as a great surprise to the Government and assurances were immediately given that the matter would be reconsidered, but to no avail, as the shopkeepers refused to remove the black paper hastily placed on their signs. The tax on shop signs has been raised from 70 centesimi to 7 lire per letter, and the tax for words printed in a foreign language has been raised from 20 to 36 lire per letter. The application of this stiff tax will most likely result in a loss instead of gain of revenue.

Those who through the winter months wish they might live where summer is an all-year-round affair stop about this time of year to wonder how they would get along without spring.—The Christian Science Monitor.

DON'T Trifle WITH COLDS

SHE LOST 18 lbs.

Here is a lady who writes:—"I am most thankful I saw your announcement 'Lose Ugly Fat.'" The recipe she read about was such a simple one—just that almost magical morning dose of Kruschen Salts.

"I started taking Kruschen Salts 16 weeks ago to reduce weight. I then weighed 140 lbs., and now 122 lbs. I am anxious to get down to 112 lbs., and suppose I will in time. Kruschen Salts have done me good all round. And most thankful I saw your announcement 'Lose Ugly Fat.'"—Mrs. V. W. C.

Unlike most salts, Kruschen isn't simply a laxative. When you take Kruschen Salts you not only stimulate your liver and kidneys to function naturally and perfectly, but you supply every internal organ, gland, nerve and fibre in the body with Nature's own revitalizing and rejuvenating minerals.

Get a bottle of Kruschen Salts today, and take one-half a teaspoon in a glass of hot water every morning before breakfast.

Before the bottle is empty you'll feel years younger—eyes will brighten—step grow sprightlier—nerves steadier—you'll sleep sound, enjoy your meals, and after a hard day's work you'll be ready for wholesome recreation—one million women already know all this.

Play Draws Crowded House

The Prince of Wales Theatre was filled to overflowing last night and many were turned away—they came to hear the Young People of Saint Andrews Church present their play entitled "Eliza Comes to Stay."

Mr. Harold Hunter, director, gave a short address, by way of introduction, and thanked the audience for their presence, as well as those who had assisted to make the play a success.

Vocal selections by Mr. A. Munro a singer of repute from Toronto, were highly appreciated. He was encored repeatedly.

Those taking part were: Edmund Wolfe, Floyd Marlatt, Allan Couse, Clift Robertson, Mac Gibson, Mrs. H. Couse, Miss A.R.V. Weylie, Mrs. Fred Maas, and Miss Cora Woodruff.

The presentation was remarkably well done, and we would say that no city artists could have done it any better, in fact it would be hard to find another set of characters who could do as well.

The editors of local newspapers are often blamed for partiality in their notices for churches, societies and even families, when the fact is the parties most interested are the ones to blame. The local newspaper does not possess a sufficient number of reporters to send to every church service in the range of its circulation and it must needs depends upon some person to send in the news. Many pastors or leaders of the congregation do this and their items are gladly printed. Many societies appoint one of their members to attend to this important work.

Authorship of Poetic Gem Long Kept Secret

What a big niche in literature can be secured by a little poem is proved by the history of that exquisite ballad, "Auld Robin Gray," written by Lady Anne Barnard in 1771. The other half dozen or so pieces by Lady Anne are entirely negligible. For more than fifty years the authorship of "Auld Robin Gray" was a complete mystery. It was in 1823 that she revealed her secret to Sir Walter Scott.

When Lady Anne Lindsay (as she was before her marriage)—set about writing a new Scottish ballad to the tune of an old one that had "naughty words," she produced a song she never could have guessed would be celebrated for generations. In the letter to Scott in 1823 (given in "The Private Letter Book of Sir Walter Scott," edited by Wilfred Partington) in which Lady Anne confesses to the authorship of "Auld Robin Gray," she says:

"I was pleased in secret with the approbation it met with, but such was my dread of being suspected of writing anything, that I carefully kept my own secret."

It was considered daring, if not indelicate, for a lady to aspire to authorship in those days.—Kansas City Star.

Positively the Latest in "Simplified English"

What is described as "a scientific and practical method of simplifying English spelling" has been worked out by a Swedish professor, who calls his system "Anglic." It is designed especially for the use of foreign students. The professor apparently has the idea that "Anglic" may become a sort of universal language, because, he explains, in the "nue speling" he has devised, that he wants to "pae" our "langgwig the hiest kompliment possibl by endevering to maek it noen, uesd, luvd, and apreeshiaeted aul over the wurld." Such a language—which all may read—has been worked out between the British railways and a number of foreign lines. It consists of a series of picture labels, affixed to goods carried by rail, which are going from one country to another. The labels show the nature of the goods and, consequently, how they have to be treated. For instance, one design shows a fish, a flower, and a bunch of grapes. This means perishable traffic which would deteriorate if not delivered quickly.

Eyes for the Blind

In ever-increasing numbers German shepherd dogs, better known in this country as police dogs, are being employed as guides for the blind. The dogs used are generally females, for they are less easily distracted than males. They require only three or four months of training to lead a blind man safely through crowded streets and dangerous construction work. The commands, "right," "left," and "forward" are known and obeyed by the dogs but also they are trained to disobey if carrying out the order involves danger. The intelligence of these dogs is beyond belief unless one sees them in action.

Unbreakable Glass

Glass used for the "hull panes"—not portholes now—of a new liner is of a special kind that has withstood a pressure of twenty tons. In one test of this glass, a piece of it weighing fifty-six pounds was dropped eighteen feet on to a steel plate. It came through this ordeal without showing even a crack. But glass nowadays can be wonderfully resistant. In certain tests of a bullet-proof glass recently, a .303 bullet was fired at it at a range of five yards. The glass plate under test was about an inch and a half thick and was made up of three layers. The bullet starred the first layer, but made no impression on the second.

Find Elephants at Bath

On a world cruise you may be disappointed at not seeing elephants in Ceylon, unless you plan to make your trip with knowledge of where they may be found. Ceylon has been the great home of elephants from earliest history, yet many who visit Colombo or Kandy never see one, though they search the streets of those cities for days. So, when in Kandy, get a rickshaw and go down to the Katagastota river, about three miles away, in the afternoon, and you will find the river crowded with magnificent animals taking their bath.—Exchange.

Powdered Eggs

Ten million dozen eggs will be cracked and either frozen or powdered by a Kansas City concern within the next few months. The company, one of the few of its kind in the country, sells the liquid and powdered eggs to bakers, candy makers and manufacturers of ice cream, noodles and macaroni. Eggs from Missouri and Kansas are preferred because the yolks are a deeper yellow and the whites of thicker consistency. The eggs are packed in 30-gallon cans and then frozen before being shipped.

Born Accountant

An Indianapolis accountant is the proud father of a new boy. A business associate inquiring about the baby asked whether he was teaching him to figure.

"I know he has figured me out of a lot of money already," said the proud father.

LEGION POST HAS MEMORABLE EVENING

Streetsville Veterans to the number of nearly twenty, met in church's hall on Tuesday evening for their monthly meeting. The guests of the evening were Dr. Adams, president of the Long Branch Post and comrade Parker who holds the distinction of being the first Canadian soldier to land in England en route to the war in 1914. Following the business part of the club, Dr. Adams addressed the boys on the work of the Legion and told of the advantages of belonging to such a worthy organization. Comrade Parker related the high spots of the convention in Hamilton and answered questions on the purpose and scope of the British Empire Service League. The next feature of the evening was an impressive initiating ceremony conducted by Dr. Adams and President McArthur. Those received into membership were comrades, Dick, Sheid, Thompson, Buckingham, Lee and L. Pope. Others who has signified their intention of joining will be initiated at the May meeting. The club aims at 100 per cent. membership of all veterans in the district. The program consisted of selections by the veterans' quartette; solo by C. Dick and a round robin of war time experiences related by all present.

Refreshments were served and all voted the occasion the best night yet.

Young People's Meeting

On April 11th the Young People of the United Church held a very successful meeting. The weather was rather inclement, but there was a very large attendance. The interest throughout the meeting was unusual. The devotional exercises were taken by Edna Stephens. Following the business, the usual current events were ably conducted by Mrs. C. P. McArthur, assisted by members of the Association. The main program, under the leadership of Margaret Cook, was well received, the main item being an inspiring address by Mr. C. McArthur, B.A., and was of a devotional nature. Several young people contributed to this part of the program The meeting closed by a much-appreciated surprise contest.

For TEETHING troubles

FUSSY, fretful . . . . of course babies are uncomfortable at teething time! And mothers are worried because of the little upsets which come so suddenly then. But there's one sure way to comfort a restless, teething child. Castoria — made especially for babies and children! It's perfectly harmless, as the formula on the wrapper tells you. It's mild in taste and action. Yet it rights little upsets with a never-failing effectiveness.

That's the beauty of this special children's remedy! It may be given to tiny infants—as often as there is need. In cases of colic and similar disturbances, it is invaluable. But it has every-day uses all mothers should understand. A coated tongue calls for a few drops to ward off constipation; so does any suggestion of bad breath. Whenever older children don't eat well, don't rest well, or have any little upset, a more liberal dose of this pure vegetable preparation is usually all that's needed. Genuine Castoria has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper. Doctors prescribe it.

The Aztec Mystrey

A Thrilling Story of the Old West

BY MURRAY LEINSTER

SYNOPSIS.

The stage running into Moleville is held up by Sonny Holman, who declares he is the real owner of the mine and if he cannot win through the courts he will by force.

The stage proceeds toward Moleville bearing Tilford, manager, and Janet Laurier, owner of the Aztec mine, who offers $1,000 reward for Sonny's capture. The sheriff visits Sonny that night and the two try to capture a band of thieves who have been stealing ore from the Aztec. The sheriff is wounded in the fight.

CHAPTER V.

The three riders went streaking for the ranch-house. Neither Circle Bar man made any movement to relieve Sonny of the limp figure Gunpowder carried as an extra burden. He demanded it, twice, but the rifles behind were still too many and too close of risk the stop or slackening of speed the change would necessitate. And besides, there was no particular sense in Sonny committing suicide by riding into the mob back there.

He was half raging and half sobbing when they thundered into the ranch-house corral and the bunkhouse was errupting half-clothed cowboys who might have forgotten shirts and even chaps but never six-guns.

"Damn yuh!" Sonny panted. "I coulda got some of 'em! I'd ha' caught some of 'em an' we'd ha' made 'em talk! Get the sheriff inside an' on a bed. Quick! He ain't spoke in three miles. He may be dead."

But he carried out his own orders himself. The sheriff was breathing, but little more. Sonny swore pantingly. "I'm goin' for the doc," he raged. "You fellers scatter an' pick up some of Garcia's gang. We tried t' stick up the bunch an' they durn' near wiped the earth with us."

He started for the door. Thompson, the owner of the Circle Bar, stopped him. "What's this, Sonny?" he asked curtly.

"I'm goin' for the doctor," snapped Sonny. "The sheriff an' me, we was tryin' to get them ore thieves an—" He stared into suddenly dubious faces. He went deathly pale and his hand dropped to his gun. "Easy Thompson," he said in a sudden deadly calm. "I said I was goin' for the doctor. Get outer my way!"

Hand to his hip, he walked for the door. He went out it. A moment later the scurrying of Gunpowder's hoofs sounded. They whirled away and were gone. Thompson fingered his chin uncertainly.

The sheriff's eyes flickered open. They found Thompson. "Yuh—yuh go plumb to hell, Thompson," said the sheriff weakly. "Don't yuh know Sonny yet?" His eyes closed once more and he was still.

It was two hours before Sonny got back, sweat stained and haggard. Two shots heralded his arrival.

"Doc's on the way," he reported. "Some of Garcia's fellers' still hangin' around. One of 'em plugged at me as I come ridin'. Thompson, yuh send a gang t' meet the doc. Hear?"

Thompson nodded.

A joyous posse rode to meet the doctor, coming on a slower horse than Gunpowder. They returned disheartened because no one had tried to bar the way. Sonny hung around anxiously while the first rough bandages were removed and replaced.

"I'll be able to tell in the morning," said the doctor, and yawned, having lost half a night's sleep. "But, Sonny, there's a thousand dollars reward out for you. You're nicked up some with bullets. Let me fix you up and you hike off. All of Moleville will be out here by daybreak in hopes of getting that thousand."

Sonny's teeth shut with a click. "I'm goin' to stay an' argue with 'em," he said grimly. "There's folks that's goin' to say the sheriff was crooked, goin' out with a holdup man to catch ore thieves. An'," he finished stubbornly, "I'm goin' to convert them that has such ideas!"

Thompson frowned. Then his face cleared again. "Crazy fool," he chided amiably. "Doctor, fix him up a drink. He's half out of his head. I've got enough men here to stand off the county anyhow. Let him rest until he finds out about the sheriff."

He went into the next room with the doctor, saying something in a whisper, while Sonny stared restlessly at the bed on which the sheriff lay motionless. They came back with a stiff drink in a tumbler. Sonny drank it.

In ten minutes he was sleeping like a log.

He slept through till sunrise. He slept through until noon, when an impromptu committee was hanging about the Circle Bar ranch-house and receiving no information whatever from the ranch hands. He slept, in fact, until five o'clock or later. Then he rolled out of his bunk with a jerk, feeling for his gun suspiciously.

Thompson blinked from the chair in which he had been napping. "I hoped you'd sleep longer," he observed. "Most of the Moleville crowd has gone home. Get up and take a look at the sheriff and I'll feed you."

Sonny ran his fingers through his hair, frowning. "How come I slep' so long?" he demanded.

"Laudanum in that drink we gave you," said Thompson, and grinned. "The doctor didn't want any more sick men on his hands. He doped you to keep the peace. You'd better hang around here until dark."

Sonny considered, and shrugged his shoulders. "All right," he conceded. "I got me a better idea than scrappin', anyways. How's the sheriff?"

"Probably pull through," said Thompson. "It's going to take him a good long time, though."

He opened a door and nodded within. Sonny went into the shadowed stillness for a while. He came out, looking grim. "My fault," he observed. "I shoulda played a lone hand. If I can call off—Hm!"

He ate in silence, frowning. Thompson watched him. Sonny looked out of the window at the light from time to time. When he had tucked away the last biscuit and drunk the last cup of coffee he said suddenly: "Gunpowder all set for a li'l pasear?"

"Waiting for you," admitted Thompson. "What are you going to do?"

"Go an' see Miss Laurier," said Sonny briefly. "We're both kinda interested in roundin' up those ore thieves. Yuh know I object strenuous to anybody robbin' the Aztec but me. Maybe me an' Miss Laurier might get to work together."

"You're crazy!" said Thompson.

"Prob'ly," admitted Sonny. "Prob'by I am. But I might be able to get her to lay off me until I settle with Garcia. It'd help a lot."

He stood up and rolled a reflective cigarette. He smoked it, maturing plans and developing a line of argument. Then he slipped out of the ranch-house. A few men still lingered about the ranch but they were mostly hangerson from curiosity. Few believed that Sonny was still at the ranch-house where the rumor—started in Mexican quarters—said he had taken refuge with the sheriff. And those who still remained at the ranch were being entertained by excessively hospitable hosts in the bunkhouse.

When Sonny started away from the ranch he was not followed. Thompson had seen to that. So he rode direct for Moleville as his mind revolved many schemes. He let Gunpowder pick the way and was only vividly aware of his surroundings once, when Gunpowder stopped short. Sonny had trained the big stallion well. Gunpowder stood like a statue while a cloudy dark mass drifted past to the pounding of hoofs and the noise of murmured talk. It was impossible to do more than guess at the number of riders. In the darkness they were a mere blur, but from the jangling of their saddles and the tone of their voices Sonny muttered, "Mexicans," from force of habit. Then he classified them further. "Vaqueros from across the border, I rek'n, lookin' for better pay this side. Or maybe dodgin' trouble on the other side."

The lights of the little town appeared and he looked up at the stars and dismounted. He eased Gunpowder's girth and squatted down on the ground, watching, until nearly midnight. He smoked innumerable cigarettes and perhaps loneliness assailed him. The sounds of the town were clear. There was tinny music from the Roaring Zephyr, made thin and pale by the distance and the silence outside. There were occasional shoutings and once a burst of hilarious yelling. And from the Mexican section—Moleville boasted no more than five or six hundred people in all, but after true border fashion the race lines were sharp as far as dwellings went—there was the sound of much festivity. A wedding dance was in progress there and the music carried much better and with a more authentic note of gayety than the dancehall tunes.

Sonny may have been lonely. He surely thought of many things not usual in an outlaw with a price of a thousand dollars on his head. But at midnight he mounted and rode into the town. He did not ride furtively—that would have been conspicuous. He rode quietly up by the mine enclosure and dismounted. He whispered in Gunpowder's ear. A whistle would bring the big black horse crashing through anything to his side. And then Sonny slipped away into the darkness.

Wild Apples

The frost, still heavy on the lowlands, won
A radiance soon melted by the sun
That gave it, and the river took the lost
Quick splendor that had faded with the frost.
Then Malcolm looked a moment as in doubt
Across the river and the fields about
Touched with the glory . . .
He left the road and followed down a lane
Leading to uplands bright above the plain.
His free stride rustled dead leaves as he went Along the hill-path -To him came the scent
Of wild grapes heavy with their sweetness still Ungathered in the brambles on the hill
Except by birds in flocks that now and then
Arose near him and settled down again.
In one place opened eastward on the slope
He looked far back and saw the hazes grope
Below him stood the cabin in the trees.
The orchard, sweet with its old mysteries
Of blooms that faded, fruit that came to pass
Ungathered always in the matted grass.
Now greeted him with but one definite sound
Of ripened apples falling to the ground.

"Cheer up, old boy," advised the married man. "You know 'tis better to have loved and lost than never to have loved at all." "Yes," agreed the rejected suitor, jingling a bunch of keys in his pocket, "better for the florist, the confectioner, the messenger boy, the restaurant waiter, the taxicab man, the theatrical magnate and the jeweler."

April

Whenever Mamacita's room
Is sweet with rose and orange bloom,
And there is never any rain,
I know that April's come again.

What April is I cannot say,
Nor why it makes me feel this way.—
And everybody feels the same!—
All purry, warm, and glad I came.

I know that when old Pablo goes
To prune the vine and clip the rose,
And spade the beds, it's all to make
The garden neat for April's sake.

I know it gets here on the night
When the magnolia tree turns white:
I always feel when April's there,
Though I can't see it anywhere.

International Friendship Promoted by Radio

An international exchange of broadcasts is a recent feature of radio which was explained to the Parliamentary Committee at Ottawa by Major Murray, of the British Broadcasting Corporation. Periodically a British programme, for example, is relayed throughout Germany by the German stations, and a German programme is similarly relayed throughout Great Britain by the B. B. C.

Major Murray said that apart from the value of international understanding and good will, this practice of interchange provides an advertisement which no enterprising country can afford any longer to ignore. If Canada had her independent broadcasting authority so recognized as to be in a position to deal on equal terms with the other broadcasting authorities of the world, she would share in enterprises of this kind.

Among a multitude of international societies and organizations perhaps one of the most unusual and original is the Societe Internationale des Katovicards which has been established by the listeners of the Katowice radio station in Poland, and numbers over 2,000,000 members grouped in 57 centers spread over almost the whole of Europe and North Africa. This society is four years old, and owes its origin to an outburst of excitement by M. Stefan Tymieniecki, the musical director of the Katowice broadcasting station. Except for Russia, Czechoslovakia and Portugal, all Europe participates in the organization which now has a special badge with the inscription "Loin des yeux—pres du coeur," designed by Dr. Ruch of Vienna, one of the most enthusiastic members. North Africa is also much interested, while from time to time letters are received from Japan and North America, where a centre is being established in Chicago.

The friendship between the "Katovicards" manifests itself in various forms: the poorer members write and exchange photographs, the rich exchange visits by cars, going sometimes from France to Cairo or Bucharest. When the Katovicards meet one another at international events they start immediate co-operation and show the same interest as in hitherto unknown relatives. This international friendship over the ether has resulted in several marriages, several adoptions and also, perhaps, some advertising, but the great majority of people have been attracted by it without any selfish interests.—The Mail and Empire. GERMANS TO EXPLORE ANDES.

Heidelberg.—Despite the hard times, Germany will have at least one major mountaineering expedition in the field this year, the Andes Reconnoissance of 1932. It has just sailed from Bremen for Peru. It has for object not only mountain conquest but scientific research, and Professor Kuenzel of the University of Heidelberg is its geologist and geographer. Professor Th. Hertzog of Jena University looks after botanical exploration. The leader of the expedition if Dr. P. H. Borcher, second vice-president of the German Alpine Club. The climbing team is recruited mainly from members of last year's Dyhrenfurth expedition to the Himalayas, and Erwin Schneider, who proved their star, heads it. The particular objective is the Cordillera Blanca. Besides Mount Huascaran, nearly 22,500 feet high, there are a number of 20,000-footers never yet climbed.

England Likes Brazil Oranges

Rio de Janeiro.—England is the greatest consumer of Brazilian oranges and bananas, export figures for 1931 reveal.

Out of a total of 2,054,302 boxes of oranges exported by Brazil last year fully four-fifths were bought by England. Total banana exports that year reached 7,855,752 bunches, half of which were shipped to the English market.

Another reason why some are pleased to see amateurs planting gardens in April is that it often means more jobs for professional gardeners in June.—The Christian Science Monitar.

London's Storehouse of Wines

A vault that contains three-quarters of a million gallons of wine has been shown to several of London's distinguished visitors of late. Known as the Crescent Vault, it is one of the wonders of the London docks.

Built 127 years ago, it is still in use as London's main store for wines placed in bond. It covers more than three acres and houses row after row of gigantic barrels filled with wines that are slowly maturing. Here is port that has been around the world and sherry that was pressed from the grapes when the present generation was young. Here are marsala and madeira.

It is important to keep wine at an even temperature, and that of the Crescent Vault is regulated by means of gas-jets. These give off blue rays that made the surrounding darkness all the more intense.

From time to time in the long corridors, some of them a quarter of a mile in length, one catches sight of a circle of faces, half- revealed by hand-lamps, bending over a cask, like those of smuggl... conspiring. The quiet is broken ... by voices and by a mysterious tapping made by the coopers as they test the casks for leakages. They are guided entirely by the sound of the casks in response to their tapping. Twice daily they have to complete the round of casks. Eight men are kept busy on this job.

Students in Bulgaria Live on $5 a Month

Lom, Bulg.—The average cost of maintenance for an out-of-town student attending the high schools in this typical provincial Bulgarian town is $5 a month, according to the director of the "gymnasium," in which there are 1,000 boys and girls.

Many of the village boys and girls liven even more economically. They go home every Saturday and return on Sunday, with a bundle of bread, cheese, dried fruit, and salt pork, to which they restrict their diet, adding now and then a bowl of sour milk or a portion of bean stew. Schools are crowded far beyond capacity and have two shifts daily, one beginning before dawn and the other closing long after dark.

The weakness of the social affections and the strength of the private desires constitute selfishness. — Sir James MacKintosh.

THE modern Miss needs no "time out" for the time of month.

If you've ever taken Aspirin for a headache, you know how soon the pain subsides. It is just as effective in the relief of those pains peculiar to women!

Don't dedicate certain days of every month to suffering. It's old-fashioned. It's unnecessary. Aspirin will always enable you to carry-on in comfort. Take enough to assure your complete comfort. If it is genuine Aspirin it cannot possibly hurt you. Aspirin tablets do not depress the heart. They do not upset the stomach. They do nothing but stop the pain.

Headaches come at inconvenient times. So do colds. But a little Aspirin will always save the day. A throat so sore that you can hardly swallow is made comfortable with one good gargle made from these tablets. Neuralgia. Neuritis. Rheumatism. Pains that once kept people home are forgotten half an hour after taking a few of these remarkable tablets. So are the little nagging aches that bring fatigue and "nerves" by day, or a sleepless night.

Genuine Aspirin tablets cost so very little after all, that it doesn't pay to experiment with imitations!

Sunday School Lesson

April 24. Lesson IV—Abram's Generosity to Lot—Genesis 13: 5-18. Golden Text—In honor preferring one another.—Romans 12: 10.

ANALYSIS.

I. THE DISPUTE, vs. 5-7.
II. A GENEROUS PROPOSAL, vs. 8, 9.
III. A FATEFUL DECISION, vs. 10-13.
IV. THE SOVEREIGNTY OF GOD, vs. 14, 15.

INTRODUCTION — To-day's lesson forms at once the continuation of the story of the migration of Abram and Lot into Canaan (12: 1-8) and also the introduction to the story of the visit of the three strangers to Abram (chapter 18) and of their visit to Lot (chapter 19). It is a very human account. Abram and Lot were uncle and nephew (12: 5); together they migrated to Canaan and together they wandered through the land. Doubtless Lot was drawn to his uncle by the latter's greatness of soul and audacious faith. Credit should, therefore, be given him for his appreciation of spiritual greatness. The two men had no difficulty in dwelling together until a miserable squabble about property drove them apart.

I. THE DISPUTE, vs. 5-7.

Although he had not come to Canaan for hope of gain, Abram had become wealthy there. Lot, his partner, shared in the prosperity. On the whole, the men of the Old Testament believed that devotion to God leads to prosperity. Abram's conspicuous wealth would serve to illustrate and confirm that conviction. Now, one of the dangers of wealth is that it may sow the seeds of discord. As long as Abram and Lot were not too rich, they got along together amicably. As their means increased, however, their relationships became complicated and precarious. They were nomads, shifting at intervals from place to place, and their possessions consisted chiefly of flocks and herds, ample pasturage and watersupply was all important, but as their flocks and herds multiplied the supply of water and fodder became quite inadequate. "The land was not able to bear them." It frequently happens that the increase of their flocks and herds compels nomadic peoples to separate. Bickerings arose among the herdsmen about the rights to pasture-lands and wells, and the dispute, once kindled, spread to their masters. A significant touch is given to the narrative in the statement that the Canaanite (who lived in walled towns) and the Perizzite (country-folk living in open villages) dwelt then in the land. It was a scandal that Abram and Lot, both committed to the high adventure of faith, should quarrel before their heathen neighbors.

II. A GENEROUS PROPOSAL, vs. 8, 9.

Abram now rose to the full stature of his moral greatness. "His calm, strong figure," says Strachan, "rebuked all petty feelings. In the midst of strife he was tranquil and self-possessed, his speech was gentle and courteous." First, he condemned strife, especially when, as in their case, the sacred ties of kinship should bind them together. Then he proposed that peace should be maintained by separation. The patriarchs were men of peace, although the world around them was continually aflame with strife and war. Their principle was to win peace by isolation. If one cannot live amicably with another, then it is better to separate from him. The Christian principle, we believe, is higher—to turn one's foe into a friend by the way of self-sacrifice. Abram's proposal involved him in a great renunciation. As the older of the two, he could have claimed the right to the first choice of the land, but this right he generously waived aside.

III. A FATEFUL DECISION, vs. 10-13.

In contrast to Abram, Lot was selfish and covetous—a man who had his eye upon worldly success. It never occurred to him forthwith to concede to Abram the choicer portion of the land. From the elevation at Bethel where they stood (v. 3) the two enjoyed a wide outlook over the land; on the west rose the austere highlands of Judah and on the east, below them, lay the fertile valley of the Jordan. To the covetous Lot the plain of the Jordan resembled, in fertility, the Garden of Eden or Egypt, where harvests are uniformly good from the inundation of, or irrigation from, the Nile. So Lot chose the Jordan valley. His decision was made without consideration of the character of the neighbors among whom he would live. For the Jordan valley was known, not alone for the fertility of its soil, but for the great wickedness of its inhabitants—especially the men of Sodom. Lot had, therefore, none but himself to blame when later he became involved in the ruin of Sodom, chapter 19.

IV. THE SOVEREIGNTY OF GOD, vs. 14, 15.

The purpose of God's appearance to Abram was not only to assure him that he had done the right and wise thing, but to remind him that the future possession of the land rested, not alone on human choice, but on the sovereign will of God. The decisions of men are over-ruled by the unfailing purpose of God.

Brazilian Finds Weighty Diamond

Diamantino, Brazil.—A diamond of fabulous size, the largest ever found in Brazil, has been dug up by a prospector near here. The diamond, weighing 574 carats, is one of the largest in the world. A Rio de Janeiro broker offered $80,000 for the stone but the prospector was reported to have rejected the offer.

A diamond of 574 carats is of extraordinary size. The largest ever found in the Kimberley mines of Africa weighed 442 carats, and the largest found in the de Beers mines, 503 carats. The largest diamond ever found was the famous Cullinan, in South Africa, which was of 3024 carats. It was presented to King EdwardVII and was cut up into smaller stones to be added to the crown jewels. No diamond even remotely approaching it in size has been found.

In several instances, however, diamonds weighing more than 500 carats in the rough have been found. They are invariably reduced considerably in cutting.

Soviet Unable to Satisfy Demand for Amusements

Moscow. — Despite intensive construction of theatres, motion picture houses and circuses, the demand for tickets all over the country far exceeds the supply. In the capital long lines of theatre lobbies have become an almost permanent feature. The queues stretch from the box office into the street.

Statistics recently made public indicate the speed with which public interest in theatrical entertainment has developed. Figures for the Russian Federation of Republics (which includes some 90 per cent. of the total population) follow:

Theatre attendance: 1930 — 30,000,000; 1931—70,000,000.

Motion picture attendance: 1930—473,000,000; 1931—817,000,000.

Circus attendance: 1930—5,000,000; 1931—8,000,000.

6,000-Year-Old Relics Are Unearthed in India

Mysore, India.—Relics of a race which lived in the Deccan 6,000 years ago, made pottery with remarkable skill and attained a considerable degree of culture have been discovered in the Chandravalli valley near Chitaldrug.

Six different levels, each making a ground surface on which an ancient people once lived, were revealed by excavations. The most recent strata was 800 years old; the lowest marked the level of 6,000 years ago.

In this lowest strata the pottery and other relics of Stone and Iron Ages were found. The Stone Age relics were ornate, with geometrical, floral and other designs. The discoveries are considered to indicate a degree of culture equal to that of the Campignian of France and Get Ulan of Africa.

Soviet Students Face Pay Cut for Failures

Tashkent,U.S.S.R. — Soviet college students who cut classes and flunk examinations soon may find literally that it does not pay. Setting a course which other institution are expected to follow, the Middle Asia State University here has abolished the system of equal pay for all students in favor of one measured by work they accomplish.

College students in the Soviet Union are paid by the state so that they may defray their living expenses while studying. The salary ranges from $50 monthly for single men and women up to twice that amount for married students.

Why Plants Die In Modern Homes

Experiment Proves Tin Cans Used in Grandmother's Day Are Best

Our grandmothers were right. They grew good plants in tin cans, sometimes punching holes in the bottoms of the cans for drainage. A window in a stuffy kitchen or a chilly room was their greenhouse. To-day, with our bettered home conditions, there are very few people who can buy a luxuriantly growing plant from a florist and keep it healthy in well-heated, well-ventilated, well-lighted homes. Such plants as ferns and begonias soon turn yellow and die back to a skeleton framework of stalks and stems. The more resistant plants, such as rubber plants and aspidistra, may appear healthy for a long time, yet they grow but slowly, if at all.

Now we know why our grandmothers could grow good plants. It was because of the non-porous tin can. An investigation, conducted by the department of botany at the Massachusetts State College in Amherst has revealed some interesting facts about plant containers.

Lower Soil Impoverished

The clay pot, kept on a moist soil by the commercial grower of plants, is very satisfactory because it is on a moist surface. In the house the potted plants are on a dry surface, usually a saucer. The pot itself is evaporating moisture into the air, an air which, during the colder months, is probably drier than the atmosphere of Death Valley. Though water is added to the potted plant as a daily chore, it is not sufficient to make up the total amount lost by evaporation from the wall of the pot. This water added to the surface of the soil penetrates through the uper third of the soil and then gradually is drawn to the absorbing wall of the pot.

The lower third of the pot still demands water to make up for that evaporated and continues to draw upon the soil moisture in the lower section of the soil until the moisture is entirely withdrawn. The soil in this section becomes powder dry and the active root system in this region dies. The destruction of an important part of the root system is necessarily felt by the foliage part of the plant, which dies back in proportion to the destroyed feeding roots.

The Non-porous Container

Grandmother, with her tin can plant container, had no such worry about the uneven distribution of moisture in the soil. There was no evaporating wall to dissipate the water intended for the plant. The water added to the surface of the soil was soon evenly distributed throughout the soil mass. And, furthermore, grandmother did not have to water the plants every day, for the soil in such containers dries out very slowly and requires, per week, but about half the amount of water given to the same mass of soil in a clay pot.

The clay pot, as used by the florist on a moist surface such as cinders, soil or sand, draws most of its moisture from the moist surface on which the pot rests and only a fraction from the moisture within the pot. This process keeps the pores of the pot filled with moisture. When water is added to the surface of the soil in pots on a moist bed, the water may be all absorbed by the soil mass and not shared by the clay pot.

If clay pots must be used in the home, they should rest on a moist surface, a practice similar to that of the florist. This condition is easily met by filling the saucer with moist sphagnum moss. This sphagnum moss is the type utilized by florists for holding flowers in wreathes and it is relatively inexpensive compared with the price paid for potted plants.

Painting clay pots, inside and outside, makes this type of pot more practical for home grown plants. The paint, by filling up the pore spaces, destroys the evaporating surface and makes the pot more ornamental as well. A pot may be porous or non-porous without any injury occurring to the plant if cultural practices are adapted to the type of pot. When non-porous containers are used, less frequent watering should be the practice—with the added caution that the plant in such containers should never be watered if the soil is wet to the touch. The non-porous pot is adaptable to home and office culture of ornamental plants, particularly so if no one is present to care for the plants over a week-end or holiday.

Plant containers of glass, metal and rubber have been used with considerably more success in homes and offices than the clay flower pot. The better distribution of soil moisture in the non-porous containers is equaled only by the clay pot on moist sphagnum moss. With such containers, attention and care in watering are considerably lessened. The plants will survive the week-end absence from the office, and in the home we may have more luxuriant plants.—Linus H. Jones in N.Y. Herald-Tribune.

Wave Organ Made By Electric Hums

Belleville, Ont.—After seven years of experimenting, Mr. Morse Robb announces he has perfected a small wave organ which he said has the power of the largest pipe organ, but ocupies only about as much room as an ordinary writing desk.

Demonstrating his organ, Mr. Robb, son of Mr. W. D. Robb, vice-president of the Canadian National Railways, explained that this invention is one which produces musical tones from electrically induced vibrations rather than from blowing air through pipes. It will play like an ordinary organ console with manuals, pedals and stops.

Fog of Platinum Richest of Mists

This precious vapor, probably the world's highest-priced mist, condenses into unimaginably thin films upon a wide variety of materials. It coats them virtually permanently.

Smoother than dew it will cover fibres, converting them into pliant, filmy threads that seem made of pure platinum. These threads are prized as wires for various precision instruments. A Midas might even be able to pay for a platinum gown.

The process was developed by Dr. John Strong, national research fellow, who reports it in the Physical Review, a natural scientific journal. Formerly the nearest approach to platinum mist has been the process of "sputtering," in which the molten metal is reduced to minute droplets and sprayed like paint.

Dr. Strong produced evaporation in a vacuum by a slight change of methods which had failed. The heat is supplied by a wire or filament of tungsten, one of the metals with a higher melting point than platinum. The failures occurred when platinum was laid in the glowing tungsten coil. Apparently too much heat was lost in the small space separating the metals.

So Dr. Strong tried electroplating the platinum directly upon the tungsten wire and that worked to perfection.

U.S. Expands Helium Plant To Meet Increasing Needs

Amarillo, Tex.—Since the Federal government has gone into the building of lighter-than-air craft in earnest, the United States helium plant near Amarillo has been remodelled to increase production and improve the quality of gas. The first plant unit, in operation four years, has been rebuilt to increase its capacity 50 per cent. and now embodies improvements made when a second unit was constructed two yea.s ago.

Bureau of Mines officials told Congress in 1928 that the first unit would produce 10,000,000 cubic feet a year.

The purity of helium produced at the plant never falls below 98 per cent., compared with 94 to 96 per cent. at the old Fort Worth plant in 1926—and improvement which means an increase of about two tons in the lifting power of a dirigible like the Akron. More than 9 per cent. of the helium content of the natural gas, which is about 1.75 per cent., is being recovered.

With the Macon, now under construction, and the Akron in operation, the Army and Navy will need about 20,000,000 cubic feet of helium a year, compared with a present capacity of the Amarillo plant of about 36,000,000 feet.

Brazil Trains Athletes For First Olympic Entry

Rio De Janiero.—For the first time Brazil is turning an interested eye toward international sports participation and in particular is evincing a determination to compete in the Olympic games in Los Angeles, Colif., next August.

The Brazilian Sports Federation, representing the fourteen major athletic clubs in Brazil, has appealed to athletes for early training so that a strong delegation may be sent to compete in all Olympic divisions. Spartan rules have been laid down for the selection of athletes. Each athlete must submit to an examination before a special committee. He must prove himself not only physically fit but must show a high psychological rating. He must be in "top form" by June 15, when examinations will be held. Indications are that 3,000 athletes will seek positions on the team.

Australia Plans State Radio For Cultural Broadcasting

Sydney, Australia.—A noval plan for the broadcasting of high class educational and entertainment programs is contemplated by J. W. Fenton, Postmaster-General of Australia, when the new broadcasting commission gets into its stride.

A bill authorizing the Commonwealth to take over control of all broadcasting in Australia is now before Parliament and is expected to be passed. Fenton said that when the new commission was formed every effort would be made to establish separate designated stations which would broadcast the most important literary, scientific and other intellectual discussions, along with the highest class of music including selected programs from England for rebroadcasting.

MIDDLE AGE

There are certain bodily changes which occur with age. Just as it is true that the child is not a little man, so it is equally true that, at middle age, the body is not the same as it was during the period of youth.

It comes as an unpleasant surprise to many persons when they realize that the years are passing and that they are growing old. The truth is driven home to them, however, when they first appreciate that their body is no longer able to do with ease those things which it used to do readily and without effort.

The infant has to adjust himself to a new environment; the child requires adjustment to school, and the middle-aged, if they are to keep well, must adjust their lives to their changed bodies. There is no definite birthday which ushers us into middle age. It is not the number of years we have lived, but rather the actual condition of our bodies which is the index to our real age. It has been truly said that a man is as old as his arteries, and when heart and arteries have undergone the changes associated with middle age, then that person is middle-aged, no matter what his next birthday may be numerically speaking.

To meet these bodily changes and to continue a useful, happy life, it is necessary that life, in all its aspects, be moderated. Moderation in all things should be the guiding principle. The middle-aged require less food and they should eat less. Their exercise should be regular and moderate. There should not be any sudden physical strains, such as a dash for the tram-car. Exercise should always stop short of fatigue. The sudden strain and the continued over-strain lead to disaster. The older body is not able to meet the sudden or excessive demand, and the penalty paid when this is forgotten is often a severe one.

Throughout life, rest is the healing and rehabilitating power of nature. A night's rest is required at all ages, and as we become older, rest becomes even more essential to health. The middle-aged should make sure of long hours of sleep each night, so that the morning will find them refreshed.

The mental life must also be moderated. Life should not be continued at high pressure, but taken in a moderate, easy way. It is sufficient to do every day what time permits; the task can be done deliberately, and to-morrow's work and worries allowed to take care of themselves.

If each individual would live within his limitations and not demand of his body service which it cannot give readily because of its altered condition, life would be happier and more useful.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

EARLY HISTORY

The Cunningham brothers, William and Matthew, kept stoves, hardware, tinware, etc., in the building later given to the village by Mr. John Cunningham, to be used as a public library.

Robt. Graydon's general store and post office with residence on the corner of Queen and Pearl Streets, was destroyed by fire in June, 1909.

Interesting stories are told of the days when the Streetsville fair was held on Main Street, where the monument now stands, with exhibits of cattle, horses, grain, etc., and horse races as the main attraction, and ending up with a gathering of the clans with plenty of liquor to help celebrate.

Streetsville has improved in a great many ways since those times, but with the coming of the railway and the closing of the woollen mills at Barberton, and the discontinuance of a number of the industries, then in existence, it has not improved numerically.

PORT CREDIT

A debenture by-law providing for $13,000 on credit of tax arrears, which total $26,000, was given two readings by Port Credit council last night. By statute municipal councils are allowed to issue debentures for one half of the tax arrears. The tax rate will be struck this week, it was announced.

Following the meeting members of council went in a body to Clark Hall to witness the presentation of life-saving certificates to three local boys, Sam Joyce, Kenneth Trotter and Billy Clancy. Major-General Cawthra-Elliott made the awards.

An automobile stolen Sunday night from J.J. Willeton, Humberview Blvd., Toronto, was found undamaged, abandoned in a ditch on the Mississauga Rd., by Chief Telfer Wilson yesterday.

Here and There

Forty British sportsmen will make up five parties which have arranged to fish trout and salmon on the Miramichi River, N.B., during 1932, according to announcement by the provincial director of information and tourist travel.

Canada shipped more than 5,000,000 pairs of rubber and rubber-soled boots and shoes valued at approximately $4,408,100 to more than 80 countries during 1931, according to information given out by the Dominion Department of Trade and Commerce.

Travelling Canadian Pacific across the Dominion from Detroit and visiting Niagara Falls, Toronto, Ottawa, Montreal and Saint John prior to sailing by S.S. Melita for their home countries, eight European Ford Motor dealers were lavishly entertained at all cities they stopped at.

S.S. Montclare, the ship that inaugurated Canadian Pacific ocean passenger service at Halifax this winter after a lapse of twenty years, saluted the port with a shrill blast of her whistle Good Friday evening when she ended her last visit to Maritime ports for the 1931-1932 season.

Scotland will send an official Trade Mission ship to Canada this spring with a view to developing closer business relations with the Dominion. Over a hundred Scottish firms have already booked space on the ship which has been fitted out for the purpose by the Corporation of Glasgow.

Her Majesty, Queen Mary, and her two sons, the Duke of York and Prince George, showed great interest in the Canadian Industries section at the British Industries Fair at Olympia, London, on the occasion of their visit. The Royal party was received by Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, High Commissioner for Canada.

The highest Canadian mountain ski ascent was made in March when Russell H. Bennett of Minneapolis, Clifford White of Banff, and Joe Weiss of Basher, accomplished the unprecedented feat of climbing to the peak of the Snow Dome, centre of the vast Columbia ice fields. The peak is over 11,000 feet above sea level.

Bargain rates are forecast for western lines of the Canadian Pacific Railway, said C. B. Foster, passenger traffic manager of the railway, on his recent arrival in Winnipeg after an official visit to the Pacific Coast. The successful experiment in popular low rates excursions in Eastern Canada this year has invited consideration of extension of the project to the West, he added.

In continuance of its policy of inter-city visits between the major centres of population in Eastern Canada, the Canadian Pacific Railway will on April 8 operate one of the most ambitious of these projects by running a round trip excursion from Toronto to Montreal at a cost below one-fourth of that of the ordinary return fare. There is every indication of heavy participation in the excursion.

All Canada, as well as many interested mining men in far distant lands, will have an opportunity of listening to the speech of His Excellency the Governor-General, the Earl of Bessborough, to be delivered at the annual banquet of the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy at Montreal Thursday evening, April 7. It will be broadcast over 21 stations from Halifax to Vancouver over the lines of the Communications Department of the Canadian Pacific Railway. (833)

Smile, Symbol That Has Never Changed Meaning

A mile seems a steady, dependable measure, 5,280 feet long as we learned in school, a fine old Latin word meaning the equivalent of a thousand paces. But a learned English colonel, writing in the Geographical Journal, points out that a mile means whatever it is held to mean, and very little more. In 1344 Dover was 12 miles from Canterbury; in 1633 the same Dover was 15¼ miles from the same Canterbury; the mile had changed. And a widely traveled Englishman, writing in 1617, noted that "five Italian miles, or three French, or two and a halfe English, make one Dutch mile, and that one Dutch mile and a halfe makes a mile of Sweitzerland. . . . Even in England the miles seeme, and indeed are more short, neere London, where the ways are faire and plaine . . . but towards the North and in some particular places of England, the miles are longer."

So when we read old English travel books a mile may be a mile, or two miles, or hardly a quarter of a mile. But then, as a matter of fact, almost all words are like that. They do not mean precisely the same thing in the Twentieth century as in the Sixteenth, or in England as in America. The only symbol which seems to survive the centuries and transoceanic transplantings without change is a smile. That is understood across all the boundaries of space and time.

Many and Varied Uses for Humble "Hen Fruit"

An egg, an albuminous egg, though to most of us just a filler or a spiller, is a whole day's work for the hen. Egged on by insistent demand for a market, the editor of the National Poultry Journal lists a surprising number of its uses, aside from its use as an interior decoration. Eggs, he points out, are used extensively in the manufacture of imitation ivory, drugs, ice cream, adhesives, pigment fixers, printer's ink and glue; for tanning, bookbinding, cleaning of fine leathers and gloves, sizing paper, art varnishes for photographs, cards and paintings, dyeing textiles; and in addition to their use by bakers, makers of candy, pastries, mayonnaise and salad dressing, they are indispensable in the preparation of films for your camera. Even the antiques, though not extensively collected, are, instead of being wasted, used for fertilizer. And they are used (we really ought not to tell you this) for—Listen!—clarifying wine. May the hen's son never set! He won't!—Pathfinder Magazine.

Saar Valley Mines

Under the terms of the peace treaty between Germany and the allies the mines of the Saar valley were given to France as compensation for the destruction of her northern mines during the World war and as part payment of her reparations. French occupation was to hold until reparations were completed. The districts containing the mines were detached from Germany and formed into the Saar territory. An international governing commission, responsible to the League of Nations, was formed for 15 years, consisting of five members—one French, one native (non-French), one British, one Czechoslovak one Finnish. In a few years a plebiscite vote is to be taken and final disposition made by decision of the League of Nations.

Big Map of Argentina

There has been recently placed on exhibition in the library of a Buenos Aires newspaper a giant relief map of Argentina, just completed after 20 years of work by Pablo Fonticalli, an Italian who emigrated to Argentina as a lad. Eight years were consumed in the preliminary work of laying out the map and 12 years were spent in exploration and study to revise it and make it accurate in every detail. The map is on a scale of 1 to 500,000 and is 24 feet by 12 and is complete in the most minute particulars. The maker of the map explored the foothills and ranges of the Andes in order to get accurate information of land which had never before been trodden by humans. In this rough work he was greatly aided by his wife, who accompanied him.

Scotch Cure for Witches

Fisherfolk of the little village of Burghead, on Moray Firth, Scotland, have again held the ceremony of "burning the clnire," a holdover from medieval times. While some continue the old Scottish custom in a spirit of merry making, the majority of the people are superstitious and believe that witches will refrain from sneaking down their chimneys for a whole year if the clair is burned. This ceremony is the pouring of casks of tar on the ruins of a Roman altar setting fire to it, then a dance by the villagers around the resulting flames.

Gains Seventeen Pounds

Anyone seeing Mary would find it hard to believe that this smiling young woman was a consumptive. Indeed, for Mary this word "was" is the best part of the whole story, for she fully believes that she is just about "cured" and ready to go back to work. "Why, in just three months they put nearly seventeen pounds weight on me," says she, with a hint of Irish brogue, "and me that weak when I came in that I had to be carried on a stretcher."

Mary has been in the Toronto Hospital for Consumptives for several months, but such is the skill of the doctors, such the result of good food, rest and careful nursing, that she again meets the world with a smile, and counts the days to the time when she will be able to work once more and help in her mother's support.

A great work this, that cares for many hundreds of the consumptive poor who otherwise would have to accept the hardships and uncertainties of being tended at home. Will you please help such as Mary to get well? Your subscription will be gratefully acknowledged if sent to Mr. A. E. Ames, 225 College Street, Toronto.

COMMUNITY CLUB

The last meeting was held at the home of Mrs. N. S. McCracken, April 6. Owing to weather and road conditions there weren't as many present as usual. The roll call was answered by a short story from everyone, of the first thing remembered as a child.

The main feature of the meeting was the planing and finishing a quilt, which we hope to complete at the next meeting. Mrs. W. Steen gave a short talk on the history of Toronto and Hamilton of a hundred years ago. The quartette sang several selections and was much enjoyed by all.

Mrs. McCracken then served the club's lunch, assisted by Mrs. W. Atkinson and Mrs. W. Leslie.

The next meeting will be Wednesday, April 20, at 2.30, at the home of Mrs. Robert Coulson. Members please come prepared to sew.

Sunday School Lesson

April 24. Lesson IV—Abram's Generosity to Lot—Genesis 13: 5-15. Golden Text—In honor preferring one another.—Romans 12: 10.

ANALYSIS.

I. THE DISPUTE, vs. 5-7.

II. A GENEROUS PROPOSAL, vs. 8, 9.

III. A FATEFUL DECISION, vs. 10-13.

IV. THE SOVEREIGNTY OF GOD, vs. 14, 15.

INTRODUCTION — To-day's lesson forms at once the continuation of the story of the migration of Abram and Lot into Canaan (12: 1-8) and also the introduction to the story of the visit of the three strangers to Abram (chapter 18) and of their visit to Lot (chapter 19). It is a very human account. Abram and Lot were uncle and nephew (12: 5); together they migrated to Canaan and together they wandered through the land. Doubtless Lot was drawn to his uncle by the latter's greatness of soul and audacious faith. Credit should, therefore, be given him for his appreciation of spiritual greatness. The two men had no difficulty in dwelling together until a miserable squabble about property drove them apart.

I. THE DISPUTE, vs. 5-7.

Although he had not come to Canaan for hope of gain, Abram had become wealthy there. Lot, his partner, shared in the prosperity. On the whole, the men of the Old Testament believed that devotion to God leads to prosperity. Abram's conspicuous wealth would serve to illustrate and confirm that conviction. Now, one of the dangers of wealth is that it may sow the seeds of discord. As long as Abram and Lot were not too rich, they got along together amicably. As their means increased, however, their relationships became complicated and precarious. They were nomads, shifting at intervals from place to place, and their possessions consisted chiefly of flocks and herds, ample pasturage and watersupply was all important, but as their flocks and herds multiplied the supply of water and fodder became quite inadequate. "The land was not able to bear them." It frequently happens that the increase of their flocks and herds compels nomadic peoples to separate. Bickerings arose among the herdsmen about the rights to pasture-lands and wells, and the dispute, once kindled, spread to their masters. A significant touch is given to the narrative in the statement that the Canaanite (who lived in walled towns) and the Perizzite (country-folk living in open villages) dwelt then in the land. It was a scandal that Abram and Lot, both committed to the high adventure of faith, should quarrel before their heathen neighbors.

II. A GENEROUS PROPOSAL, vs. 8, 9.

Abram now rose to the full stature of his moral greatness. "His calm, strong figure," says Strachan, "rebuked all petty feelings. In the midst of strife he was tranquil and self-possessed, his speech was gentle and courteous." First, he condemned strife, especially when, as in their case, the sacred ties of kinship should bind them together. Then he proposed that peace should be maintained by separation. The patriarchs were men of peace, although the world around them was continually aflame with strife and war. Their principle was to win peace by isolation. If one cannot live amicably with another, then it is better to separate from him. The Christian principle, we believe, is higher—to turn one's foe into a friend by the way of self-sacrifice. Abram's proposal involved him in a great renunciation. As the older of the two, he could have claimed the right to the first choice of the land, but this right he generously waived aside.

III. A FATEFUL DECISION, vs. 10-13.

In contrast to Abram, Lot was selfish and covetous—a man who had his eye upon worldly success. It never occurred to him forthwith to concede to Abram the choicer portion of the land. From the elevation at Bethel where they stood (v. 3) the two enjoyed a wide outlook over the land; on the west rose the austere highlands of Judah and on the east, below them, lay the fertile valley of the Jordan. To the covetous Lot the plain of the Jordan resembled, in fertility, the Garden of Eden or Egypt, where harvests are uniformly good from the inundation of, or irrigation from, the Nile. So Lot chose the Jordan valley. His decision was made without consideration of the character of the neighbors among whom he would live. For the Jordan valley was known, not alone for the fertility of its soil, but for the great wickedness of its inhabitants—especially the men of Sodom. Lot had, therefore, none but himself to blame when later he became involved in the ruin of Sodom, chapter 19.

IV. THE SOVEREIGNTY OF GOD, vs. 14, 15.

The purpose of God's appearance to Abram was not only to assure him that he had done the right and wise thing, but to remind him that the future possession of the land rested, not alone on human choice, but on the sovereign will of God. The decisions of men are over-ruled by the unfailing purpose of God.

Brazilian Finds Weighty Diamond

Diamantino, Brazil.—A diamond of fabulous size, the largest ever found in Brazil, has been dug up by a prospector near here. The diamond, weighing 574 carats, is one of the largest in the world. A Rio de Janeiro broker offered $80,000 for the stone but the prospector was reported to have rejected the offer.

A diamond of 574 carats is of extraordinary size. The largest ever found in the Kimberley mines of Africa weighed 442 carats, and the largest found in the de Beers mines, 503 carats. The largest diamond ever found was the famous Cullinan, in South Africa, which was of 3024 carats. It was presented to King EdwardVII and was cut up into smaller stones to be added to the crown jewels. No diamond even remotely approaching it in size has been found.

In several instances, however, diamonds weighing more than 500 carats in the rough have been found. They are invariably reduced considerably in cutting.

Soviet Unable to Satisfy Demand for Amusements

Moscow. — Despite intensive construction of theatres, motion picture houses and circuses, the demand for tickets all over the country far exceeds the supply. In the capital long lines of theatre lobbies have become an almost permanent feature. The queues stretch from the box office into the street.

Statistics recently made public indicate the speed with which public interest in theatrical entertainment has developed. Figures for the Russian Federation of Republics (which includes some 90 per cent. of the total population) follow:

Theatre attendance: 1930 — 30,000,000; 1931—70,000,000.

Motion picture attendance: 1930—473,000,000; 1931—817,000,000.

Circus attendance: 1930—5,000,000; 1931—8,000,000.

6,000-Year-Old Relics Are Unearthed in India

Mysore, India.—Relics of a race which lived in the Deccan 6,000 years ago, made pottery with remarkable skill and attained a considerable degree of culture have been discovered in the Chandravalli valley near Chitaldrug.

Six different levels, each making a ground surface on which an ancient people once lived, were revealed by excavations. The most recent strata was 800 years old; the lowest marked the level of 6,000 years ago.

In this lowest strata the pottery and other relics of Stone and Iron Ages were found. The Stone Age relics were ornate, with geometrical, floral and other designs. The discoveries are considered to indicate a degree of culture equal to that of the Campignian of France and Get Ulan of Africa.

Soviet Students Face Pay Cut for Failures

Tashkent,U.S.S.R. — Soviet college students who cut classes and flunk examinations soon may find literally that it does not pay. Setting a course which other institution are expected to follow, the Middle Asia State University here has abolished the system of equal pay for all students in favor of one measured by work they accomplish.

College students in the Soviet Union are paid by the state so that they may defray their living expenses while studying. The salary ranges from $50 monthly for single men and women up to twice that amount for married students.

Why Plants Die In Modern Homes

Experiment Proves Tin Cans Used in Grandmother's Day Are Best

Our grandmothers were right. They grew good plants in tin cans, sometimes punching holes in the bottoms of the cans for drainage. A window in a stuffy kitchen or a chilly room was their greenhouse. To-day, with our bettered home conditions, there are very few people who can buy a luxuriantly growing plant from a florist and keep it healthy in well-heated, well-ventilated, well-lighted homes. Such plants as ferns and begonias soon turn yellow and die back to a skeleton framework of stalks and stems. The more resistant plants, such as rubber plants and aspidistra, may appear healthy for a long time, yet they grow but slowly, if at all.

Now we know why our grandmothers could grow good plants. It was because of the non-porous tin can. An investigation, conducted by the department of botany at the Massachusetts State College in Amherst has revealed some interesting facts about plant containers.

Lower Soil Impoverished

The clay pot, kept on a moist soil by the commercial grower of plants, is very satisfactory because it is on a moist surface. In the house the potted plants are on a dry surface, usually a saucer. The pot itself is evaporating moisture into the air, an air which, during the colder months, is probably drier than the atmosphere of Death Valley. Though water is added to the potted plant as a daily chore, it is not sufficient to make up the total amount lost by evaporation from the wall of the pot. This water added to the surface of the soil penetrates through the uper third of the soil and then gradually is drawn to the absorbing wall of the pot.

The lower third of the pot still demands water to make up for that evaporated and continues to draw upon the soil moisture in the lower section of the soil until the moisture is entirely withdrawn. The soil in this section becomes powder dry and the active root system in this region dies. The destruction of an important part of the root system is necessarily felt by the foliage part of the plant, which dies back in proportion to the destroyed feeding roots.

The Non-porous Container

Grandmother, with her tin can plant container, had no such worry about the uneven distribution of moisture in the soil. There was no evaporating wall to dissipate the water intended for the plant. The water added to the surface of the soil was soon evenly distributed throughout the soil mass. And, furthermore, grandmother did not have to water the plants every day, for the soil in such containers dries out very slowly and requires, per week, but about half the amount of water given to the same mass of soil in a clay pot.

The clay pot, as used by the florist on a moist surface such as cinders, soil or sand, draws most of its moisture from the moist surface on which the pot rests and only a fraction from the moisture within the pot. This process keeps the pores of the pot filled with moisture. When water is added to the surface of the soil in pots on a moist bed, the water may be all absorbed by the soil mass and not shared by the clay pot.

If clay pots must be used in the home, they should rest on a moist surface, a practice similar to that of the florist. This condition is easily met by filling the saucer with moist sphagnum moss. This sphagnum moss is the type utilized by florists for holding flowers in wreathes and it is relatively inexpensive compared with the price paid for potted plants.

Painting clay pots, inside and outside, makes this type of pot more practical for home grown plants. The paint, by filling up the pore spaces, destroys the evaporating surface and makes the pot more ornamental as well. A pot may be porous or non-porous without any injury occurring to the plant if cultural practices are adapted to the type of pot. When non-porous containers are used, less frequent watering should be the practice —with the added caution that the plant in such containers should never be watered if the soil is wet to the touch. The non-porous pot is adaptable to home and office culture of ornamental plants, particularly so if no one is present to care for the plants over a week-end or holiday.

Plant containers of glass, metal and rubber have been used with considerably more success in homes and offices than the clay flower pot. The better distribution of soil moisture in the non-porous containers is equaled only by the clay pot on moist sphagnum moss. With such containers, attention and care in watering are considerably lessened. The plants will survive the week-end absence from the office, and in the home we may have more luxuriant plants.—Linus H. Jones in N.Y. Herald-Tribune.

Wave Organ Made By Electric Hums

Belleville, Ont.—After seven years of experimenting, Mr. Morse Robb announces he has perfected a small wave organ which he said has the power of the largest pipe organ, but ocupies only about as much room as an ordinary writing desk.

Demonstrating his organ, Mr. Robb, son of Mr. W. D. Robb, vice-president of the Canadian National Railways, explained that this invention is one which produces musical tones from electrically induced vibrations rather than from blowing air through pipes. It will play like an ordinary organ console with manuals, pedals and stops.

One dis.. et enemy is better than two indiscreet friends.

Fog of Platinum Richest of Mists

This precious vapor, probably the world's highest-priced mist, condenses into unimaginably thin films upon a wide variety of materials. It coats them virtually permanently.

Smoother than dew it will cover fibres, converting them into pliant, filmy threads that seem made of pure platinum. These threads are prized as wires for various precision instruments. A Midas might even be able to pay for a platinum gown.

The process was developed by Dr. John Strong, national research fellow, who reports it in the Physical Review, a natural scientific journal. Formerly the nearest approach to platinum mist has been the process of "sputtering," in which the molten metal is reduced to minute droplets and sprayed like paint.

Dr. Strong produced evaporation in a vacuum by a slight change of methods which had failed. The heat is supplied by a wire or filament of tungsten, one of the metals with a higher melting point than platinum. The failures occurred when platinum was laid in the glowing tungsten coil. Apparently too much heat was lost in the small space separating the metals.

So Dr. Strong tried electroplating the platinum directly upon the tungsten wire and that worked to perfection.

U.S. Expands Helium Plant To Meet Increasing Needs

Amarillo, Tex.—Since the Federal government has gone into the building of lighter-than-air craft in earnest, the United States helium plant near Amarillo has been remodelled to increase production and improve the quality of gas. The first plant unit, in operation four years, has been rebuilt to increase its capacity 50 per cent. and now embodies improvements made when a second unit was constructed two years ago.

Bureau of Mines officials told Congress in 1928 that the first unit would produce 10,000,000 cubic feet a year.

The purity of helium produced at the plant never falls below 98 per cent., compared with 94 to 96 per cent. at the old Fort Worth plant in 1926—and improvement which means an increase of about two tons in the lifting power of a dirigible like the Akron. More than 9 per cent. of the helium content of the natural gas, which is about 1.75 per cent., is being recovered.

With the Macon, now under construction, and the Akron in operation, the Army and Navy will need about 20,000,000 cubic feet of helium a year, compared with a present capacity of the Amarillo plant of about 36,000,000 feet.

Brazil Trains Athletes For First Olympic Entry

Rio De Janiero.—For the first time Brazil is turning an interested eye toward international sports participation and in particular is evincing a determination to compete in the Olympic games in Los Angeles, Colif., next August.

The Brazilian Sports Federation, representing the fourteen major athletic clubs in Brazil, has appealed to athletes for early training so that a strong delegation may be sent to compete in all Olympic divisions. Spartan rules have been laid down for the selection of athletes. Each athlete must submit to an examination before a special committee. He must prove himself not only physically fit but must show a high psychological rating. He must be in "top form" by June 15, when examinations will be held. Indications are that 3,000 athletes will seek positions on the team.

Australia Plans State Radio For Cultural Broadcasting

Sydney, Australia.—A novel plan for the broadcasting of high class educational and entertainment programs is contemplated by J. W. Fenton, Postmaster-General of Australia, when the new broadcasting commission gets into its stride.

A bill authorizing the Commonwealth to take over control of all broadcasting in Australia is now before Parliament and is expected to be passed. Fenton said that when the new commission was formed every effort would be made to establish separate designated stations which would broadcast the most important literary, scientific and other intellectual discussions, along with the highest class of music including selected programs from England for rebroadcasting.

Canada's Art

MIDDLE AGE

There are certain bodily changes which occur with age. Just as it is true that the child is not a little man, so it is equally true that, at middle age, the body is not the same as it was during the period of youth.

It comes as an unpleasant surprise to many persons when they realize that the years are passing and that they are growing old. The truth is driven home to them, however, when they first appreciate that their body is no longer able to do with ease those things which it used to do readily and without effort.

The infant has to adjust himself to a new environment; the child requires adjustment to school, and the middle-aged, if they are to keep well, must adjust their lives to their changed bodies. There is no definite birthday which ushers us into middle age. It is not the number of years we have lived, but rather the actual condition of our bodies which is the index to our real age. It has been truly said that a man is as old as his arteries, and when heart and arteries have undergone the changes associated with middle age, then that person is middle-aged, no matter what his next birthday may be numerically speaking.

To meet these bodily changes and to continue a useful, happy life, it is necessary that life, in all its aspects, be moderated. Moderation in all things should be the guiding principle. The middle-aged require less food and they should eat less. Their exercise should be regular and moderate. There should not be any sudden physical strains, such as a dash for the tram-car. Exercise should always stop short of fatigue. The sudden strain and the continued over-strain lead to disaster. The older body is not able to meet the sudden or excessive demand, and the penalty paid when this is forgotten is often a severe one.

Throughout life, rest is the healing and rehabilitating power of nature. A night's rest is required at all ages, and as we become older, rest becomes even more essential to health. The middle-aged should make sure of long hours of sleep each night, so that the morning will find them refreshed.

The mental life must also be moderated. Life should not be continued at high pressure, but taken in a moderate, easy way. It is sufficient to do every day what time permits; the task can be done deliberately, and to-morrow's work and worries allowed to take care of themselves.

If each individual would live within his limitations and not demand of his body service which it cannot give readily because of its altered condition, life would be happier and more useful.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

The Cunningham brothers, William and Matthew, kept stoves, hardware, tinware, etc., in the building later given to the village by Mr. John Cunningham, to be used as a public library.

Robt. Graydon's general store and post office with residence on the corner of Queen and Pearl Streets, was destroyed by fire in June, 1909.

Interesting stories are told of the days when the Streetsville fair was held on Main Street, where the monument now stands, with exhibits of cattle, horses, grain, etc., and horse races as the main attraction, and ending up with a gathering of the clans with plenty of liquor to help celebrate.

Streetsville has improved in a great many ways since those times, but with the coming of the railway and the closing of the woollen mills at Barberton, and the discontinuence of a number of the industries, then in existence, it has not improved numerically.

PORT CREDIT

A debenture by-law providing for $13,000 on credit of tax arrears, which total $26,000, was given two readings by Port Credit council last night. By statute municipal councils are allowed to issue debentures for one half of the tax arrears. The tax rate will be struck this week, it was announced.

Following the meeting members of council went in a body to Clark Hall to witness the presentation of life-saving cirtificates to three local boys, Sam Joyce, Kenneth Trotter and Billy Clancy. Major-General Cawthra-Elliott made the awards.

An automobile stolen Sunday night from J.J. Willeton, Humberview Blvd., Toronto, was found undamaged, abandoned in a ditch on the Mississauga Rd., by Chief Telfer Wilson yesterday.

Here and There

Forty British sportsmen will make up five parties which have arranged to fish trout and salmon on the Miramichi River, N.B., during 1932, according to announcement by the provincial director of information and tourist travel.

Canada shipped more than 5,000,000 pairs of rubber and rubber-soled boots and shoes valued at approximately $4,408,100 to more than 80 countries during 1931, according to information given out by the Dominion Department of Trade and Commerce.

Travelling Canadian Pacific across the Dominion from Detroit and visiting Niagara Falls, Toronto, Ottawa, Montreal and Saint John prior to sailing by S.S. Melita for their home countries, eight European Ford Motor dealers were lavishly entertained at all cities they stopped at.

S.S. Montclare, the ship that inaugurated Canadian Pacific ocean passenger service at Halifax this winter after a lapse of twenty years, saluted the port with a shrill blast of her whistle Good Friday evening when she ended her last visit to Maritime ports for the 1931-1932 season.

Scotland will send an official Trade Mission ship to Canada this spring with a view to developing closer business relations with the Dominion. Over a hundred Scottish firms have already booked space on the ship which has been fitted out for the purpose by the Corporation of Glasgow.

Her Majesty, Queen Mary, and her two sons, the Duke of York and Prince George, showed great interest in the Canadian Industries section at the British Industries Fair at Olympia, London, on the occasion of their visit. The Royal party was received by Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, High Commissioner for Canada.

The highest Canadian mountain ski ascent was made in March when Russell H. Bennett of Minneapolis, Clifford White of Banff, and Joe Weiss of Basher, accomplished the unprecedented feat of climbing to the peak of the Snow Dome, centre of the vast Columbia ice fields. The peak is over 11,000 feet above sea level.

Bargain rates are forecast for western lines of the Canadian Pacific Railway, said C. B. Foster, passenger traffic manager of the railway, on his recent arrival in Winnipeg after an official visit to the Pacific Coast. The successful experiment in popular low rates excursions in Eastern Canada this year has invited consideration of extension of the project to the West, he added.

In continuance of its policy of inter-city visits between the major centres of population in Eastern Canada, the Canadian Pacific Railway will on April 8 operate one of the most ambitious of these projects by running a round trip excursion from Toronto to Montreal at a cost below one-fourth of that of the ordinary return fare. There is every indication of heavy participation in the excursion.

All Canada, as well as many interested mining men in far distant lands, will have an opportunity of listening to the speech of His Excellency the Governor-General, the Earl of Bessborough, to be delivered at the annual banquet of the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy at Montreal Thursday evening, April 7. It will be broadcast over 21 stations from Halifax to Vancouver over the lines of the Communications Department of the Canadian Pacific Railway. (833)

Smile, Symbol That Has Never Changed Meaning

A mile seems a steady, dependable measure, 5,280 feet long as we learned in school, a fine old Latin word meaning the equivalent of a thousand paces. But a learned English colonel, writing in the Geographical Journal, points out that a mile means whatever it is held to mean, and very little more. In 1344 Dover was 12 miles from Canterbury; in 1633 the same Dover was 15¼ miles from the same Canterbury; the mile had changed. And a widely traveled Englishman, writing in 1617, noted that "five Italian miles, or three French, or two and a halfe English, make one Dutch mile, and that one Dutch mile and a halfe makes a mile of Sweitzerland. . . . Even in England the miles seeme, and indeed are more short, neere London, where the ways are faire and plaine . . . but towards the North and in some particular places of England, the miles are longer."

So when we read old English travel books a mile may be a mile, or two miles, or hardly a quarter of a mile. But then, as a matter of fact, almost all words are like that. They do not mean precisely the same thing in the Twentieth century as in the Sixteenth, or in England as in America. The only symbol which seems to survive the centuries and transoceanic transplantings without change is a smile. That is understood across all the boundaries of space and time.

Many and Varied Uses for Humble "Hen Fruit"

An egg, an albuminous egg, though to most of us just a filler or a spiller, is a whole day's work for the hen. Egged on by insistent demand for a market, the editor of the National Poultry Journal lists a surprising number of its uses, aside from its use as an interior decoration. Eggs, he points out, are used extensively in the manufacture of imitation ivory, drugs, ice cream, adhesives, pigment fixers, printer's ink and glue; for tanning, bookbinding, cleaning of fine leathers and gloves, sizing paper, art varnishes for photographs, cards and paintings, dyeing textiles; and in addition to their use by bakers, makers of candy, pastries, mayonnaise and salad dressing, they are indispensable in the preparation of films for your camera. Even the antiques, though not extensively collected, are, instead of being wasted, used for fertilizer. And they are used (we really ought not to tell you this) for—Listen!—clarifying wine. May the hen's son never set! He won't!—Pathfinder Magazine.

Saar Valley Mines

Under the terms of the peace treaty between Germany and the allies the mines of the Saar valley were given to France as compensation for the destruction of her northern mines during the World war and as part payment of her reparations. French occupation was to hold until reparations were completed. The districts containing the mines were detached from Germany and formed into the Saar territory. An international governing commission, responsible to the League of Nations, was formed for 15 years, consisting of five members—one French, one native (non-French), one British, one Czechoslovak one Finnish. In a few years a plebiscite vote is to be taken and final disposition made by decision of the League of Nations.

Big Map of Argentina

There has been recently placed on exhibition in the library of a Buenos Aires newspaper a giant relief map of Argentina, just completed after 20 years of work by Pablo Fonticalli, an Italian who emigrated to Argentina as a lad. Eight years were consumed in the preliminary work of laying out the map and 12 years were spent in exploration and study to revise it and make it accurate in every detail. The map is on a scale of 1 to 500,000 and is 24 feet by 12 and is complete in the most minute particulars. The maker of the map explored the foothills and ranges of the Andes in order to get accurate information of land which had never before been trodden by humans. In this rough work he was greatly aided by his wife, who accompanied him.

Scotch Cure for Witches

Fisherfolk of the little village of Burghead, on Moray Firth, Scotland, have again held the ceremony of "burning the claire," a holdover from medieval times. While some continue the old Scottish custom in a spirit of merry making, the majority of the people are superstitious and believe that witches will refrain from sneaking down their chimneys for a whole year if the claire is burned. This ceremony is the pouring of casks of tar on the ruins of a Roman altar setting fire to it, then a dance by the villagers around the roaring flames.

Gains Seventeen Pounds

Anyone seeing Mary would find it hard to believe that this smiling young woman was a consumptive, indeed, for Mary this word "was" is the best part of the whole story, for she fully believes that she is just about "cured" and ready to go back to work. "Why, in just three months they put nearly seventeen pounds weight on me," says she, with a hint of Irish brogue, "and me that weak when I came in that I had to be carried on a stretcher."

Mary has been in the Toronto Hospital for Consumptives for several months, but such is the skill of the doctors, such the result of good food, rest and careful nursing, that she again meets the world with a smile, and counts the days to the time when she will be able to work once more and help in her mother's support.

A great work this, that cares for many hundreds of the consumptive poor who otherwise would have to accept the hardships and uncertainties of being tended at home. Will you please help such as Mary to get well? Your subscription will be gratefully acknowledged if sent to Mr. A. E. Ames, 223 College Street, Toronto.

COMMUNITY CLUB

The last meeting was held at the home of Mrs. N. S. McCracken, April 6. Owing to weather and road conditions there weren't as many present as usual. The roll call was answered by a short story from everyone, of the first thing remembered as a child.

The main feature of the meeting was the planing and finishing a quilt, which we hope to complete at the next meeting. Mrs. W. Steen gave a short talk on the history of Toronto and Hamilton of a hundred years ago. The quartette sang several selections and was much enjoyed by all.

Mrs. McCracken then served the club's lunch, assisted by Mrs. W. Atkinson and Mrs. W. Leslie.

The next meeting will be Wednesday, April 20, at 2.30, at the home of Mrs. Robert Coulson. Members please come prepared to sew.

Nearly a Fire

Last Sunday morning about nine o'clock, smoke was seen coming from the Sash Factory by a citizen who phoned Reeve Hope. Mr. Hope was not long reaching his factory. As he opened the door it caused a draft and flames burst out from a pile of smouldering shavings. Quick work with fire extinguishers put out the blaze. It was not necessary to call out the fire brigade.

The former sash factory was destroyed by fire 8 years ago, on July 30, and its a lucky thing for the company and the village that the plant was saved on Sunday.

Mr. Hope says prospects for a good season in sash and doors are bright.

Induction of Rev. R. Cameron

A very large number of people witnessed the ordination and induction Tuesday evening of Rev. Ross K. Cameron as pastor of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Streetsville.

Rev. G.M. Dunn, Moderator, had charge of the ceremony. Rev. W.T. McCree preached the sermon. Rev. Mr. Dunn addressed questions to Mr. Cameron, and Rev. Dr. J. Wilson addressed words of exhortation to him. Rev. Mr. McFall spoke to the congregation and told them of their duty to their minister.

Rev. Mr. Dunn said everybody rejoices in the selection of Mr Camer on and he should feel honored upon being called to a Church like Saint Andrew's, being practically in the shadow of his old home.

After the ceremony the new minister and his wife were introduced to the congregation and friends.

Mr. Joseph Johnston of Toronto favored with vocal selections in good voice both during the ceremony and at the after meeting.

The ladies furnished an abundant supply of refreshments in the base ment, which were enjoyed by a very large number. Among the speakers at the banquet were—Messrs John Weylie W.A. Hardy, Revs. Stewart, McFall, Mustard, Cameron, and the Moderator, Rev. Mr. Dunn, who said he wrote his entrance at Streetsville High School, preached his first sermon at Malton Sunday morning and his second at Streetsville in the evening.

Almost overcome by smoke, Mrs. H. Mullins, invalid mother of Mrs. Albert Dennison, was carried out of the Dennison home yesterday. Mrs. Mullins, who is in her 85th year, was cared for by neighbors while Port Credit Fire Brigade, under Chief W. Newman, subdued the blaze.

The fire, attributed to defective wiring, destroyed the roof and partially gutted the interior, damage being estimated at $500.

Whether or not pheasants are becoming afflicted with the hitch-hiking craze, is a question being given consideration by motorists frequenting the Lake Shore Highway.

One old cock pheasant was seen a few miles east of Oakville, taking quite an interest in the cars streaming past. Standing well out upon the edge, he would stare inquiringly at each one approaching. As it swerved to avoid killing him and rushed past, inches away, he would shake his head and cock his eye down the road to watch for the next.

Presentation to Mrs. J. P. Beattie

After about a year's suffering and undergoing a serious operation in the hospital, hovering between life and death for many weeks, Mrs. John Beattie, we are pleased to say, is able to meet with her friends again. On Sunday, April 24th, the home of her son-in-law and daughter Lorena, Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Maines, a happy family re-union day was spent, rejoicing that she was regaining health and also to celebrate her birthday.

On Monday night, at the home of her sister-in-law, Mrs. Swackhamer, friends from Toronto, Brampton, Hornby, Palermo and Streetsville, numbering about seventy, met to rejoice with her and to express their love in a substantial way with a well-filled purse of gold.

Mr. Swackhammer, son of the hostess, and nephew of Mrs. Beattie, read the following address, Mr. A. Gettes making the presentation.

The Address

Dear Mrs. Beattie:

Our dear, kind friend, so good and true, to-night we all rejoice with you. Last year you suffered so much pain, thank God! you are with us once again, and now, you know, we're all sincere.

To show our love for you this year we all join in the earnest prayer, you will be free from pain and care. Now, on your fifty-seventh birthday, we come together here to say, part of our love to you is told when we present this purse of gold. And may rich blessing now descend on you and yours, our dear, kind friend.

Signed on behalf of your friends.

Mrs. Beattie was almost overcome by this unexpected kindness but with remarkable well chosen words, thanked them for the kind words and generous gift, and also for so much kindness shown to her during her sickness. And to Mrs. Swackhammer and Mr. Gettes for she said a kind thought starts somewhere and they were given the credit for the start of this celebration.

An excellent birthday dinner was then served which everyone enjoyed with exceeding great joy. Mrs. Beattie cut the birthday cake.

The old time and modern dances were enjoyed by all who participated in them, and also by the onlookers.

The Jones family orchestra from Palermo were liberal with excellent music, Mr. Hiller acting floor manager.

In the wee small hours before the company dispersed, all joined hands in a circle with Mr. and Mrs. Beattie in the centre and sang, accompanied by the orchestra, Auld Lange Syne and they are jolly good fellows.

The happy event is now in past history and all were soon on their homeward journey.

UNITED CHURCH NOTES

CLOSING MEETING

The Y. P. meeting held in the United Church on Monday evening brought to a splendid close the meetings for this season. The president, Jim Steen, was in charge of the opening. Winifred Turney was in the chair during the Devotional Exercises. The Scripture was read by Bill Lines.

A new feature of these meetings during the past year, which has proved a splendid success has been the regular discussion of currents events. The leader, Mrs. McArthur has created considerable interest in this topic. Those taking part in current events at this meeting were Edna Stevens, Margaret Cook, Lena Rutledge and Lawrence Dolby.

Following the Current Events Lawrence Dolby was called upon to act as chairman for the remainder of the programme. Solos were rendered by Misses Alice Steen and Ruth Ross and Graydon Clipperton. A very good impersonation of the famous "Amos n' Andy" was given by Harry Johnson and Graydon Clipperton. At each of the preceding meetings a surprise, in some form of game or contes,t proved interesting as a closing number. At this meeting a spelling match gave all a chance to test their ability in this line. The result was a tie.

After the meeting a social half hour was spent, the serving of a dainty lunch adding greatly to the sociability.

There is an occasional case of mumps in the village.

Everybody should remember that Daylight Saving Time goes into effect in Streetsville this Sunday morning, the same time as Toronto.

OBITUARY

Mrs. M. A. Bamford

After an illness of ten days Mary A. Street, relict of the late William Bamford, passed peacefully away at the family residence, Mill street, Listowell, shortly after four o'clock on Sunday afternoon, April 17.

Mrs. Bamford was in her eighty-fourth year and was born in Streetsville on October 5, 1848. She was a daughter of the late Timothy and Margret Street. On October 13, 1871, she was married to Mr. William Bamford and they continued their residence in Streetsville until 1882 when they came to Listowel. Mrs. Bamford has resided here continuously since that time. As the result of an accident received while at his work in Bramford Bros. planing mill Mr. Bramford died in December, 1894.

While in streetsville the late Mrs. Bamford was an acitve member of Trinity Anglican Church. Upon coming to Listowel her activities continued in Christ Church where for many years she taught in the Sunday School and was also an active member of the various church organizations. She was a great lover of flowers and many of her happiest moments were spent with her flowers in the flower garden and in her home. Her long life was one of unselfishness. Whether members of her own family, other relatives or friends or neighbors required assistance she was always present to give the wanted help and her assistance in many homes of sickness has been a source of blessing. Her children were always her first thought and she considered no sacrifice too great on their behalf. She was all that a mother could be or that a friend or neighbor should be, and her passing will be mourned not only by her family, but also by a large circle of friends.

Left to mourn her loss are her only daughter, Mrs. G. S. Dundas, Markdale, who was constantly with her during her sickness; five sons, Alfred, London; Arthur, Windsor; Victor, Listowel, and Norman and Beverly, at home, one sister, Mrs. H. F. Staley and one brother, Mr. A. Street, Streetsville. Two sons predeceased her, Heber J., killed in action in the Great War, and Ivan, who died in infancy. There are also several grandchildren and great-grand-children.

The funeral took place on Wednesday afternoon. A private service was held at the home at two o'clock, followed by a service at Christ Church. The beautiful Anglican burial service was conducted by the rector, Rev. Herbert Naylor, assisted by Rev. R. J. W. Perry, rector of Trinity Church, Streetsville. The rector's discourse was particularly fitting. Not only was it comforting to the bereaved but also a beautiful tribute to mothers. His text was taken from Proverbs 31: 27 and 28, "She looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness. Her children arise up and call her blessed." The five sons and a grandson, Mr. Elton Bamford, Detriot, were the pall bearers. Interment was made at Fairview cemetry. Listowell Standard.

COOKSVILLE

Worried for some time by financial worries, John E. Bell, 55, married, market gardener, Cliff Road shot himself through the head with a sawed-off .22 rifle. He died in the Toronto General Hospital.

Bell police say left the house about 6.30 a.m., saying he was not feeling well. About an hour later, breakfast ready, Albert, one of his sons, found him at the rear of the root house. By his side was the gun.

Bell is survived by his widow and three sons, Albert, George and Russell.

Mrs. E. Forrester, Toronto, was guest speaker at a meeting of the Cooksville United Church Women's Missionary Society held yesterday under the presidency of Miss E. Readman in the church parlors. Other items of the program were given by Mrs. J. Smith, Miss Violet Harris, Mrs. R. Pickett, Mrs. J. F. Day. Members of the Bethesda and Meadowvale societies were entertained.

Dismisses Assault Charge

In Toronto Township Police Court yesterday, Magistrate E. J. Pallett dismissed a charge of assault brought by John Walker against Mrs. C. H. Dellow, Lakeview, and assessed the costs against the plaintiff. Benjamin Whamond, Lakeview, was fined $10 and costs for theft of a trailer from the property of Holmes and Holmes. Robert Haldi, a Swiss, paid $2 and costs for peddling without a license.

The Aztec Mystrey

A Thrilling Story of the Old West

BY MURRAY LEINSTER

SYNOPSIS.

Because the courts have refused to recognize his claim to the Aztec mine, Benny Holman takes to holding up the company's payroll. Moleville is divided in its opinion since the coming of Janet Laurier, owner of the mine.

Janet offers a reward. The sheriff believes in Sonny's innocence of ore thefts and the two try to capture Garcia's band, a group of desperadoes they believe guilty of the ore stealing.

The sheriff is severely wounded in the fight. Sonny steals back into Moleville at night to reconnoitre.

CHAPTER VI.

Sonny reconnoitered carefully, so that a little traveling clock was just striking the half hour when Janet Laurier, staring miserably before her with an unread book in her hand, heard a noise and looked up with a gasp to see him gazing down at her with his hat in his hand.

"Ma'am,' " he said soberly, "the sheriff bein' kind of shot up, an' you bein' the nex' most likely person to be interested, I thought I'd kinda come an' talk over this here ore stealing business with yuh."

Janet's hands had clenched in involuntary terror. Now, though, while they continued to tremble in spite of all her will power, she managed to keep nearly all trace of fear out of her voice. "I suppose," she said coldly, "that though you haven't mentioned it, you'll shoot me if I call for help?"

Sonny frowned thoughtfully at her. He suddenly tossed his gun at her feet. "Does that look like it, ma'am?" A drawl crept into his voice as she regarded him with an unvarying hostility. "I come here, ma'am, to talk about ore stealin'. Unless you plug me, ma'am, I'm going to tell you some mighty disconcertin' facts."

She picked up the revolver and her courage returned. "If this is your only weapon," she demanded, "can you tell me any reason why I shouldn't hold you here and call for help?"

"Some folks," drawled Sonny, would admire you for it, ma'am. Go ahead." He regarded her grimly.

Her eyes wavered. "You may tell me what you wish," she said evenly, after an instant. "Of course I needn't believe it."

"No, ma'am, you needn't." Sonny's drawl was pronounced, a sure sign that he was not altogether calm. "But after all, there ain't any reason for you an' me to hate each other. We kinda disagree about who owns the Aztec. I believe we're goin' to keep on disagreein'. But we might as well fight fair."

The girl clenched her fists. "I'm going to fight you with any weapon I can find!" she cried fiercely. "I offered a reward of a thousand dollars for you yesterday, dead or alive!"

"An' I'm here, ma'am," drawled Sonny, an' yuh got my gun, an' I can get up an' walk outer this house any time I like, because yuh can't pull the trigger on me, ma'am."

She stared at him with flaming eyes. Her hand closed about the revolver. She tried to lift it—and could not. Then she cried passionately, "I hate you! I hate you!"

"You would, ma'am," agreed Sonny gently. "I don't know why 'tis you feel like you got to hol' on to this here mine which you know belongs to me by honesty."

She bit her lip. "You're calling me a thief?"

"Lordy, no, ma'am!" protested Sonny. "You're a lady, ma'am, an' in yore own mind yuh got some reason for actin' like yuh are. But I'm just sayin'." and there was more than a hint of amusement in his drawl. "I'm just sayin', ma'am, that I don't like to see nobody but me steal from the Aztec. You don't like nobody at all to steal from it. I come here to offer to help to stop the ore stealin'."

There was a tiny noise outside. Sonny stopped short. "What's that, ma'am?" he asked quietly.

"What?"

The noise came again, and Sonny's face grew cold. "I'm hearin' some mighty curious noises." The drawl was even more noticeable than ever before. "Did you have some trick way of sendin' for help that I didn't know about?"

Small, confused sounds came from outside the bungalow. Stealthy noises. As if men were gathering secretly for a sudden rush for some deadly purpose.

The knob of the door was tried gently. Sonny whirled, then turned back with his mouth a grim line. "Dead or alive, ma'am, you said," he said softly. "I rek'n you're goin' to pay out that there reward for dead meat, ma'am. I'll take my gun."

The telephone gave a single "Tinckck!" and was silent. It was strangely loud in the stillness.

Janet's face became a mask of terror. She clutched the gun tightly. "Oh-h-h!" She caught at her self-control with a terrible effort. "Put up your hands!" she cried desperately. "I will shoot this time! I see it all! You were to talk to me until your confederates came."

She snatched at the telephone by her elbow. She put the receiver to her ear. "Hello! Hello! The sheriff's office!"

Sonny moved toward her, his face grim. "Gimme my gun, ma'am."

"The line's dead!" she wailed suddenly. "You cut the wire! Stand back or I'll shoot!"

And suddenly the light went out. One instant they were facing each other. Sonny grim, Janet terror-stricken. The next instant both were blotted out by cool, velvety darkness. A chair clattered to the floor as the girl sprang to her feet.

"Ma'am," drawled Sonny in the blackness, "I rek'n there's more to this than meets the eye. Who-all is doin' this ore stealin'—they might be right anxious for you not to start investigatin' too close."

He heard a clicking noise in the blackness. Her teeth chattering. "I —I'll shoot!" she gasped.

A door opened softly somewhere. The tag end of a sibilant whisper came through the opening. Sonny drew a quick breath and leaned forward. "Ma'am," he whispered desperately, "they're Garcia's Mexicans! Gimme my gun, ma'am! It's the ore stealin' bunch, with Tilford backin' 'em! For Gawd's sake gimme my gun!" His hand touched her shoulder. He groped desperately for the gun.

Bang! It went off with a deafening explosion. Its flame seared Sonny's forehead. For an instant he was vividly outlined by the flash of the explosion. Then blank darkness fell once more. Then the clatter of metal on the flooring and a strange cry from the girl.

"El diablo!" snapped a snarling voice. "Queeck! She 'as dropped eet. Take her! Queeck!"

A beam of light darted out from a flashlight. It showed Janet, shrunk into a corner, staring in voiceless horror at the floor before her. But there was nothing on the floor. Nothing. She collapsed suddenly into a dead faint.

"Bueno!" said the same snarling voice. "Carry her, Jose. Now to our 'orses. Make haste!"

There was a rushing of small, lithe figures. A fumbling to pick up the girl's unconscious form. Crowding, hustling men in darkness with a fugitive gleam of light from a flashlight playing here and there.

"Steal notheeng!" ordered the snarling voice. "The mujer is the theeng. Come now, prisa!"

There was a sudden muffled crack in the blackness. It was just such a sound as a man's fist will make when it strikes accurately on the point of another man's jaw. But it was followed by half whispered curses in Spanish against the devil who had placed a chair for a man to stumble over.

The little swarm of men crowded out of the house. Horses were run up for them to mount. They flung themselves into the saddles and spurred swiftly away, with the limp figure of a girl carried in their leader's arms.

The lights of the mine flickered between the houses as the little knot of horsemen rode swiftly away from the bungalow. Behind them the tinny music from a dancehall came thinly through the air, robbed of all gaiety by the silence of the mountains. The adobe walls on either side of the riding men sent back the muffled thuddings of their horses' hoofs in the soft dust. It was, to all seeming, a singularly successful raid. Men riding singly into town, gathering at an appointed place, a sudden swoop, and then running for the open with only one shot fired and a muffled scream uttered.

From the midst of the racing horsemen a shrill whistle sounded suddenly. The leader cursed savagely, commanding silence. He bore a girl's unconscious figure across his horse before him. He dug his heels into the animal's sides and increased the pace.

From the darkness then came quick hoofbeats. A horse in mad pursuit. One of the riding men jerked around and shot crazily into the darkness.

"Fool!" snarled the leader. "Stop eet!"

They pounded on. The hoofbeats in pursuit kept on. The swarthy figures gazed behind, and could make out nothing in the obscurity. The houses ceased abruptly. There was so far no chase save by the solitary animal whose thudding gallop they could hear.

France may have a goodly supply of gold but Georges Carpentier evidently is lacking in this commodity. The former European boxing champion is in New York planning a comeback.

Sincerity

If feeling does not prompt, in vain you strive;
If from the soul the language does not come,
By its own impulse, to impel the hearts
Of hearers, with communicated power,
In vain you strive—in vain you study earnestly.
Toil on for ever: piece together fragments;
Cook up your broken scraps of sentences,
And blow, with puffing breath, a struggling light,
Glimmering confusedly now, now cold in ashes;
Startle the school-boys with your metaphors;
And, if such food may suit your appetite,
Win the vain wonder of applauding Children!
But never hope to stir the hearts of men,
And mould the souls of many into one.
By words which come not native from the heart!

—From Goethe's "Faust." Translated by John Anster.

Britain's Occupied House Said to be 1,110 Years Old

England's oldest inhabited house has been established as the Fighting Cocks Inn at St. Albans. Part of it is believed to be 1,100 years old. Although the upper portion was built at the beginning of the seventeenth century the basement is of much earlier date and is believed to have been part of a bonthouse belonging to a monastery built about the year 795. The inn is also known as the Round House, although it is octagonal in shape.

Legal records show that in the two and fortieth year of the reign of Queen Elizabeth (1600) one, Humphrey Leeke, did grant unto Thomas Preston "a pightle of grounde in or near St. Albones . . . for the full term of one hundred and one years under the yearly rent of twopence." On this the Round House was built.

"I wonder why we always feel more cheerful as spring draws near?"

"I don't know, unless it's because by that time our holiday cigars are all smoked and our Christmas neckties worn out."

Diversified Farming In the Dominion

Further evidence of greater diversity in farming in Western Canada is given in a review by Mr. J. M. McKay, General Agricultural Agent, Western Lines, Canadian Pacific Railway, Winnipeg. The output of creamery butter in the three Prairie Provinces during 1931 totalled 2,88,425 pounds compared with 47,424,201 pounds in 1930. Manitoba's production was 21,078,073 pounds for 1931 compared with 15,786,896 in the previous year; Saskatchewan, 18,960,362 pounds compared with 13,920,561 pounds; and Alberta, 22,650,000 pounds against 17,716,744 pounds in 1930. Poultry and eggs also showed increased production last year.

Apples, the principal crop of British Columbia, proved a good yield in 1931, with excellent quality in most areas. Other fruit and vegetable crops, while showing smaller production in some cases than in the previous year, were generally of good quality and harvested under favourable conditions. The movement of apples in bulk, mostly to the Prairie Provinces, was a new feature in the marketing of the 1931 crop.

Livestock sales at the principal Canadian markets showed the number of cattle to be 646,442 last year compared with 606,489 in 1930; calves were 307,082 compared with 311,756; hogs 1,084,582 compared with 904,439. Sheep figures for 1931 were 527,102 against 493,645 in 1930; and horses 68,575 compared with 83,691 in 1930.

It will be noted that the number of cattle passing through the various yards showed a substantial increase. The number of calves decreased, indicating that the heifer calves were being held for breeding purposes. Hogs and sheep, it will be observed, showed a substantial increase.

Due to cooperation of the Dominion and Provincial Governments and stockmen in the Prairie Provinces and British Columbia, an encouraging movement of cattle to Great Britain was accomplished last year, states Mr. McKay, the total number of animals exported being approximately 27,000 compared with 5,400 in 1930. In order to retain this market, considerably more winter feeding is being carried on than usual in Alberta and Saskatchewan during the present winter, and it is felt that there will be an increase of properly finished livestock available for the May and June markets in Great Britain.

Livestock, generally, in the West, entered the winter in good condition. During a large part of the season plenty of feed has been available in the open.

Tape Worm in Lamb

The Tape Worm is the first of the host of parasites, infesting sheep, to become established in the young lambs. The effect of the presence of one tapeworm in a lamb may not be noticed, but if the intestines become filled with them, as is often the case, it is serious for the lamb. The tape worm variety infesting lambs grows very quickly. Lambs only 21 days old have been known to harbor tapeworms eight feet long. Heavily infested lambs do not thrive, but remain small, thin and rough wooled. If there are any lambs in the flock that do not do well, watch the droppings closely for small pieces of ripened tape worm. If such are noticed on the droppings, then we know that the worm must be in the intestine of the lamb from which the droppings came. If this tell tale evidence is noticed it is time to get busy, and give the lamb the protection it needs. To prepare the lamb for treatment, starve for 6 hours. The dose may then be administered, but fasting should continue for a further period of two hours, before the lamb is again placed with the mother. See bulletin 337, Ontario Department of Agriculture.

Dosing to clear tape worms from lambs should be repeated weekly for three weeks, in order to get them all. This tape worm infesting lambs has a thin treatdlike neck, which may break and leave the head attached to the intestine, to grow again at the rate of 10 inches a day. A change of grazing ground is always desirable, to reduce the chance of reinfestation.

Cave-Honeycombed Village Abandoned By Inhabitants

Santo Stefano, Italy. — Complete abandonment of the 2000-year-old town of 2400 inhabitants was ordered by the Premier, Signor Benito Mussolini, following the collapse of its central district into ancient caverns by which it is undermined.

The Premier's order was issued after experts found that the partially wrecked town rests on volcanic rock honeycombed with caverns. Il Duce has ordered a new Villa Santo Stefano to be built a few miles away on a safe site.

Evacuation of houses still standing here has been ordered for the earliest possible moment and arrangements are being made to house the people in other villages until the Government builds the new city.

Smiles

How many smiles, I wonder,
Are smiled to hide a tear,
If lips ye could look under,
The beating heart could hear?
I would not chide the weeping,
But let me praise the brave,
Their smiles forever keeping,
Like flowers on a grave.

Oh, let me praise the smiling,
The brave, the brave, indeed,
The cares of men beguiling
When theirs the greater need.
When life is all behind them
They face the life ahead,
And smiling you will find them
On ev'ry road you tread.

Who looks for consolation
But little ever had
From wealth or joy or station—
Go seek it from the sad!
The courage of the stoic
Has nothing but a sneer—
They are the most heroic
Who smile to hide a tear.

—Douglas Malloch.

Early Evening in April

A drift of fragrance down a lane of spring;
Peach trees and pear trees spill their pink and white;
The lavender mountains loom, and mutely fling
Bold arms to clasp and quell the sunset light,—
An April spirit haunts the evening air,
Wistful and delicate and debonair.

—Richard Burton, in "The Carpenter Lad and Other Poems."

Patience

Most of us think of Patience as merely waiting, but it is not a state of active expectation, preparing for the thing that is to happen?

A match is about the only thing that becomes useful when it flares up. And even a match goes out soon after.

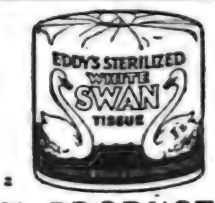
"No repairs in 22 years," says home owner



"Visitors are delighted with the noiseless operation of my doors," says a home owner of Monongah, West Virginia. "The locks and hinges have been in active service 22 years, and during this time I haven't spent a cent for repairs. I've never used anything but 3-in-One Oil."

Many housewives who pride themselves on the spotless appearance of their homes are careless about the lubrication of hinges and locks. Try a few drops of 3-in-One Oil today and see how quickly it brings out rust, dirt and queaks. For 3-in-One, a blend of animal, mineral and vegetable oils, is distinctly different from ordinary oil: it cleans and protects as well as lubricates.

For 35 years 3-in-One has been recognized as the best oil for sewing machines, vacuum cleaners, lawn mowers, hinges and general household lubrication. Insist on 3-in-One Oil. . . good stores everywhere. For your protection look for the trade mark "3-in-One" printed in Red on every package.

WITH THE LONE SCOUTS

New Troops

This week we have to record the formation of two new Regular Scout Troops at King City and at Cannington. These Troops commenced operations as Lone Scout Patrols, and for some time have been doing very successful work in that capacity. The number of boys in those districts, however, who are interested in Scouting, has grown so large, that steps were taken to locate a local Scoutmaster and form Regular Troops.

Thus, whilst we are sorry to lose them from the ranks of the Lone Scouts, we congratulate the members of the new King and 1st Cannington Troops on their inauguration, and wish them every success and lots of Good Scouting.

A Good Turn in Ham and Eggs

Close to 900 dozen eggs were collected as their Special Easter Relief good turn by the Scouts of St. Johns district, Que., and distributed on a basis of 6 eggs per person to needy families. Eight hams also were distributed, and other foodstuffs. Scouts in other places put on similar Easter Relief campaigns.

Boy Scout Apple Day

On April 1st the Boy Scouts of Toronto sold Ontario apples in the streets of that city for the purpose of raising funds to help the Scout Financial Campaign which was at that time in operation. The Scouts on that day sold some 200,000 apples and realized the sum of roughly $5,400, which is considered to be a highly creditable effort. We hear that Oshawa and Owen Sound are also intending to try the experiment for their own funds, and we wish the Scout Authorities in those centres every success.

Steps are being taken to reserve a special date each year for the sale of Ontario apples by Scouts, on the streets throughout the Province, to be known as "Boy Scout Apple Day."

Toronto's Mayor on Scouting

"We would have fewer misfits in the world to-day if all boys had the advantage of Scout life," declared Mayor W. J. Stewart of Toronto recently. "The boy who has been a Scout becomes a man with definite, developed capabilities, who does not walk the streets looking for pick and shovel or routine office work." The mayor's son Billy is a Scout.

This Week's Scout Law—5. A Scout Is Courteous.

The first Scout Law states that a Scout's honour is to be trusted, and in our experience we have found that where a person is honorable it usually follows that they are courteous.

Courteousness is cheap! It costs nothing to be polite and it is probably easier to be polite than it is to be boorish and rude.

But the result of being courteous is very much more far reaching than if one is the reverse. The average person has not much time to waste on people who cannot even be civil in their speech or civilized in their actions, whereas one who is polite and courteous at all times is held in the very highest esteem by all who know him.

Therefore a Scout is courteous, and in being so he not only lifts himself in the estimation of his fellows, but also he adds to the prestige of the organization to which he belongs.

Lone Scout Camp

Preparations for the Lone Scout Camp have been tentatively commenced, and all Lonies who intend to be present should notify Lone Scout Headquarters as soon as possible. The Camp will be held at Ebor Park near Brantford, from July the 4th to 16th inclusive, and the cost of the full period will be $10.00, not more. Scouts will provide their own transportation to and from the camp. This is a splendid opportunity to obtain excellent Scout Training under experienced leaders, so make up your mind to be there, and start saving your nickels now.

Choosing a Vocation

Lone Scouts throughout the Province will be interested to know that a series of radio talks, lasting 15 minutes each, is now being given each week day, except Saturday, from 6.15 to 6.30 p.m., Eastern Standard Time, over CFCA, CJGC, CKCO, CFCH, and CKPR. These talks are arranged by the Vocational Dept. of the Western High School of Commerce, Toronto, and will last until June 8th next. Practically every career possible is covered by these short talks, and some of the most prominent business and professional men in Canada are amongst the speakers. We can recommend Lonies to listen to these talks.

There is lots of room in Lone Scouting for boys who are unable to be members of Regular Scout Troops, because of the location of their homes. If you are interested in Lone Scouting, write to The Lone Scout Dept., Boy Scouts Association, 330 Bay Street, Toronto, Ont., an dthey will be glad to send you all particulars.—"Lone E."

Five Methods of Irrigation Used On Western Farms

Five methods are generally followed in applying irrigation water in farms and ranches of the West, according to a booklet recently issued by the Bureau of Reclamation. The scheme to be followed depends principally upon the topography, the character of the surface soil and subsoil, the kind of crop to be irrigated and the quantity of water to be used.

In the flooding method, field laterals are run out from the farm-head ditch at intervals of seventy-five to 100 feet, usually on a small grade. By means of canvas dams placed at frequent intervals, the water is turned out of the laterals and spread over the field. The border method consists of the division of the field into narrow strips by means of low levees about six inches high and five or six feet wide, spaced from twenty to 100 feet apart. It is adapted to ands having a gentle slope.

The corrugation method consists of running small furrows, four to six inches deep and sixteen to forty-eight inches apart, down the line of steepest slope, and turning into each furrow a small quantity of water and letting it thoroughly wet the soil. The furrow method comprises a number of small furrows starting at the head ditch and running down the slope for from 300 to 1,200 feet. Each furrow is a small irrigation ditch.

The basin and dike method is best adapted to very flat lands where it is possible to inclose a field with a low dike just high enough to retain the depth of water required.

Spring Wind

O full-voiced herald of immaculate spring,
With clarion gladness striking every tree
To answering rapture, as a resonant sea
Fills rock-bound shores with thunders echoing—
O thou, each beat of whose tempestuous wing
Shakes the long winter-sleep from hill and lea,
And rouses with loud reckless jubilant glee
The birds that have not dared as yet to sing:

O wind that comest with prophetic cries,
Hast thou indeed beheld the face that is
The joy of poets and the glory of birds—
Spring's face itself: hast thou 'neath bluer skies
Met the warm lips that are the gates of bliss,
And heard June's leaf-like murmur of sweet words?

Sunday School Lesson

May 1. Lesson V—Isaac and His Wells—Genesis 26: 12-25. Golden Text—A soft answer turneth away wrath: but grievous words stir up anger.—Proverbs 15: 1.

ANALYSIS.

I. GOD AND PROSPERITY, vs. 12-14.
II. ENVY AND MEEKNESS, vs. 15-22.
III. GOD'S PROMISE, vs. 23-25.

INTRODUCTION—If one may judge from the meagre records of his life, Isaac was the least conspicuous of the three patriarchs. For the most part he appears either with his father, Abraham, or with his son, Jacob. The story before us is the only narrative where the interest centres solely upon him. On account of famine he had gone to live in Gerar, situated somewhere in the border country between the land of Canaan and the land of the Philistines, v. 1. His life there was filled with the difficulties and strife commonly experienced by people living in a border country. Under these trying circumstances he showed the spirit of forbearance which he had learned from the example of his father, Abraham. Strachan writes of him, "We see in him the familiar type of the great man's son who is overshadowed by his father's greatness. His position was made too easy, his path in life too smooth. Everything was found for him. His parents planned for him, Eliezer wooed for him, Esau hunted for him and the land almost of its own accord yielded its increase for him. The result of all this kindness was that he was lacking in the qualities of a strong manhood." None the less to the Israelites he ranked as a national type and ideal.

I. GOD AND PROSPERITY, vs. 12-14.

Verse 12 gives two reasons for Isaac's prosperity—his own industry and God's blessing. His work in agriculture was all the more praiseworthy when the traditions of his family are considered. His father, Abraham, to judge from his numerous migrations with his flocks and herds, was obviously a Bedouin. Now apart from raising flocks and herds the Bedouin does not ordinarily follow agriculture. In fact today the Bedouin despises the hard-working peasant who tills the soil. So in sowing the land Isaac was probably departing from his family traditions. Rich harvests followed his sowing. In interpreting prosperity the Hebrew mind refused to find in mere human efforts a sufficient explanation. So after stating in v. 12 that Isaac sowed in that land, the statement is immediately added, "and the Lord blessed him." God, and no other, is the real hero in all these stories. Verses 13 stresses the gradual way in which Isaac accumulated possessions. No hesitation is shown in calling him great, because he was a man of much wealth. Wealth was viewed as contributing to fulness of life. Its use was to serve Isaac in doing the will of God; it was for this that God gave it. Not the denial of life, but its manifold satisfaction, and fulness was the ideal of ancient Israel.

II. ENVY AND MEEKNESS, vs. 15-22.

At Gerar, in the valley of Gerar, and at Sitnah, the Philistine herdmen disputed the possession of the wells with Isaac's herdmen. To the nomad, wells are all-important. They create value for his real estate; they insure an ample water supply for his flocks and herds. In abandoning these wells each time the Philistines claimed them, Isaac was therefore, turning his back upon real values. Yet in doing so he displayed his greatness. Three features of his greatness stand out. First, he sat easy toward worldy possessions. He could acquire them; but he could also give them up. He was their master, and not their servant. Secondly, he was a lover of peace. When strife appeared, Isaac disappeared. As in the cas of Abraham with Lot, Isaac won peace with the Philistines by separation. Thirdly, in giving in to his foes he showed his meekness. "Nothing can be saner or sweeter than this ancient tale with its apparent moral for those who think that the strongest thing is to retaliate, to assert every claim, to cede no possible advantage."

III. GOD'S PROMISE, vs. 23-25.

In retiring from the Philistines Isaac took a northerly course which brought him eventually to Beersheba. This is the most southerly town in Palestine, lying close to the desert which stretches between Palestine and Egypt. Here God appeared to him. Frequently in the stories of the patriarchs God appeared after they had performed worthy deeds. In this way they had assurance of God's approval. The promise made to Abraham was renewed to Isaac. Abraham is called "my servant." Thus the promise is linked to obedience and the fruits of obedience are reaped by future generations. Isaac made his home in Beersheba. His life there is described briefly in v. 25. It included religion, family life, and industry—altar, tent, and wells.

A Way of Life

To love, to feel, to think, to care,
To other people's burdens bear,
To take the way the Master trod
Is to fulfill the mind of God.

To walk with courage and unbowed,
When loss and sorrows round us crowd,
To cast out fear and hate, to cease,
From useless strivings, this is peace.

To know a loving care has planned
The things so hard to understand,
That what has happened is the best,
To trust, to hope, to pray, to rest.

—Beatrice Macdougall in "Lift Up Your Hearts."

An Early Spring Garden

Every gardener, I suppose, has his—or her—favorite moment of the spring. I think mine is that warm day, as near the first of April as possible, when I take off my coat, roll up my sleeves to feel the sun on my arms, and plant the first row of early peas. Generally the sweet peas have already been planted, but that is done in a trench dug the autumn before, and lacks, for me, the thrill of forking the still, sticky soil, getting out the reel of garden twine, and sowing the "eating peas," as we know them hereabouts. . . .

Another moment, sometimes my favorite, is when the wall fountain is turned on, and the water gushes from the lips of my marble mask, splashes into a shallow basin and fills it, and then goes twinkling down its tiny runway between beds of iris and forget-me-nots and narcissus, and begins to fill the pool. . . . Spring never seems quite to have come to the garden until the fountain is gushing, until the runway twinkles and flashes between the rising iris spears, and in the night silence the steady tinkle of falling water sings us once more to sleep. . .

The wildflower nooks in the garden are of course the most charming spots in spring. Crocuses, daffodils, hyacinths, tulips are all right. I've not been able to afford too many, nor even enough, of them. But they haven't the shy charm, the woodland and vernal lure, of the wildflowers, the little native closeoms brought into the garden from the world about and made to dwell at peace with their showy and more urban sisters. From the first bloodroot and hepaticas, to the lavender-pink spikes of the showy orchids and the stately cardinal flowers, and finally the asters, I fear I watch with greater pride and more delight the blossoming of my wild-flowers scattered through the garden than I do the display of cultivated perennials. There are even little clumps of Quaker ladies in the lawn which we carefully mow around, leaving them undisturbed till their season is over.—Walter Prichard Eaton, in "A Bucolic Attitude."

Summer Glory

From the mouth of Exe to the mouth of Eeign the coast is uninteresting. Such beauty as it once possessed has been destroyed by the railway. . . . But inland these discontents are soon forgotten; there amid tilth and pasture, gentle hills and leafy hollows of rural Devon, the eye rests and . . . . is soothed. By lanes innumerable, deep between banks of fern and flower; by paths along the bramble-edge of scented meadows; by the secret windings of copse and brake and stream-worn valley—a way lies upward to the long ridge of Haldon, where breezes sing among the pines, or sweep rustling through gorse and bracken. Mile after mile of rustic loveliness, ever and anon the sea-limits blue beyond grassy slopes. White farms dozing beneath their thatch in harvest sunshine; hamlets forsaken save by women and children, by dogs and cats and poultry, the laborers afield. Here grow the tall foxgloves, bending a purple head in the heat of noon; here the great bells of the convolvulus hang thick from lofty hedges, massing their pink and white against dark green leafage; here amid shadowed underground trail the long fronds of lustrous harts-tongue; wherever the eye falls, profusion of summer's glory. Here, in many a nook, carpeted with softest turf, canopied with tangle of leaf and bloom, solitude is safe from all intrusion? unless it be that of flitting bird, or of some timid wild thing that rustles for a moment and is gone. From dawn to midnight, as from midnight to dawn, one who would be alone with nature might count upon the security of these bosks and dells.—George Glasing, in "In the Year of Jubilee."

Canadian Geologist Is Awarded Medal

London—The Council of the Royal Geographical Society has awarded its Victoria medal to Dr. Arthur Philomen Coleman, professor emeritus of geology at the University of Toronto, for his extensive contributions to the geography and geology of Canada.

Watkins, leader of a British meteorological and exploration party into Greenland last year, was awarded the Founders' medal and the Duke of Spoleto was awarded the Patrons' medal for his work as leader of an assault on Karakoram, a peak in the Himalayas, in 1929.

The Council also awarded the back grant to Hugh Clutterbuck, leader of last year's Oxford University Hudson Straits expedition. One of Clutterbuck's men, Christopher J. D'Aeth, died of exposure on Akpatok Island in Ungava Bay, Quebec.

Prof. A. P. Coleman, who is 70 years old, has done extensive exploration and geological work in the Canadian Rockies, in Labrador and in Ontario For many years he has occupied a position as one of Canada's greatest teachers of the two sciences he made his life work.

In the Glare of the Footlights

"Aaron Slick from PunkinCrick"—will be seen at TrinityChurch Parish Hall on Wed. May 11th. This is a three act play and one that would draw a laugh from a fence post. There is not a dull moment during the play

The story is built around a lone widow woman who owns a farm but wants to sell out and move to the city. The prospective purchaser knowing there is supposed to be oil on the farm, tries to get it for almost nothing, but is defeated in his purpose by Aaron Slick, who is in love with the widow.

There is also a beautiful cabaret scene in the last act which will delight the audience. Taken as a complete evening performance this play is recommended to old and young. Don't miss it. Get your tickets early as the hall will only seat about 300.

As an additional feature of the evening we have had the greatest good fortune to secure the services of one of the foremost Radio stars Mr. Tom Hamilton, who sings over station CFRB. Don't forget the date, May 11, 1932. Admission 25

This is a very inspiring gathering of a great body of Missionary women, doing a great work at home and in foreign lands.

The choir concert is scheduled to take place on May 11th. A very splendid play is being prepared by our competent artists and an evening of entertainment of the usual high merit is assured. An entertainer of high quality is also to take part and the orchestra, which has won much favor, will be a leading feature. We are greatly indebted to our very faithful and efficient choir for their regular services, Sunday by Sunday, and on special occasions. Our services are always bright, hearty and devotional.

They will attend the great gathering of girls, Friday, May 6th, in St. Anne's Parish House, Toronto. This is always a meeting brim full of enthusiasm with young life. In addition to the ordinary business, special features will be, presentation of awards for missionary competitions. Fire Chief William Newman suffered nasty face lacerations while fighting a fire which broke out to-night at the home of Alexander Ferguson, Toronto Street, and attributed to an overheated stove in the kitchen. Mr. and Mrs. Ferguson were out at the time of the blaze, attending a church meeting, and the alarm was given by J. Hall, their next door neighbour. No estimate of the damage has yet been made.

Volunteer firemen here ceased to worry about grass fires and such things last night. Friends and neighbours by the score assembled in the Clarke Memorial Hall for a big time. It was the occasion of the firemen's dance and euchre and over 400 were in attendance. The proceeds of the affair went to the Port Credit Welfare Committee, as a contribution to direct relief.

Dick Barr won the lucky draw, becoming the possessor of an electric clock. The New Harmony Orchestra, Brampton, provided the music.

No Real Evidence That Reveals Origin of Golf

The only facts definitely established concerning the game of golf are that the game, in some primitive form, was played in Holland at an early date and that it was developed in Scotland before the middle of the Fifteenth century into a popular game. An act of the Scottish parliament in 1457 was directed against the playing of this sport, as interfering with the important practice of archery. Old Dutch paintings show that the Dutch used posts instead of holes in playing their "Kolf" or "Kolfje." This name is derived from a word signifying "small club." James IV of Scotland played the game about the year 1500 and made it a royal as well as ancient game. There are other claims about the origin of golf that are not so well substantiated. One is that it was played by the Chinese as early as 1100 B. C.; another is that it was played in Ireland in the time of St. Patrick. Another claims that the Roman game of "pagania," played with a crooked stick and a leather ball stuffed with feathers, resembled golf. A game called bandy-ball or cambuca, played in England since Edward III's reign, has also been mentioned in this connection, though it appears to be more like hockey. A legendary origin of the game is that a Scottish shepherd, tending sheep on a stony hillside, found amusement in striking the stones with his shepherd's crook.

Deadly Tarantula Easy Prey of "Killer" Wasp

Some insects are very ferocious. The tarantulas, as Rene Bache points out, spin no webs, but rely upon their strength and agility for the capture of their victims, the latter including an occasional mouse or ground-nesting bird; and their homes are burrows, usually in the side of a clay bank, lined with silk. The door of the tarantula's house is set on a strong silken spring, and shuts with a snap when the owner has entered or comes out.

At home the tarantula is perfectly safe; the entrance of the burrow being so camouflaged as to escape even scrutinizing observation, but on its walks abroad, the giant spider is always in danger of attack by the Killer, which is a species of wasp. Against this wasp it has no adequate means of defense. Constantly turning this way and that, to face the enemy, it is inevitably taken, sooner or later, and stabbed with the Killer's envenomed lance, and paralyzed. The duel invariably ends with the death or total disablement, of the tarantula, in whose body the Killer lays its eggs, in order that the baby wasps, when they are hatched, shall have food to eat.

Town of the Ugly Duckling

Lovers of the tales of Hans Christian Andersen will probably agree that his story of the "Ugly Duckling" is one of his finest. What more natural, therefore, when in Denmark, after you have visited his home at Odense, to journey to Kjoge, and when there seek out the old and interesting castle of Gisselfeld, where the story teller often stayed. Here the Ugly Duckling first saw the light and not far away is the castle of Bergentved, where the swan was hailed by the children. Although Kjoge is best known today for its bacon and sausage, the visitor will find it a splendid old town with a church of the Thirteenth century named for Santa Claus and everywhere old castle homesteads beside the sea which will make it a scenic memory for years.

Rises From the Water

For a short period each year the ancient ruins of Philae, in the Nile, are to be seen. It is in the early winter and many tourists visit the place at this time. Then the water rises and the Nile buries the lovely island of ruins and temples beneath its waters. Much ancient beauty has gone, but anyone who looks on its ruins today can see what a lovely spot it was in the days of ancient Egypt. The villages and palms have gone, as modern need has changed the dashing cataract into a reservoir, but the damage done to Philae is slight, the sculptures are still clear on the walls and columns in spite of their annual drenching.

Most Deadly Plant

Discovery of the most deadly plant in the world, a small quantity of which was said to be sufficient to kill thousands of persons, has been reported from Pretoria, South Africa. The discovery was made by a botanist, who named the plant Adenia. One ten-thousandth of a grain was reported as sufficient to kill an adult. The poison is not traceable after death. Railway workers in the interior died after they inadvertently tasted the plant. A botanist and two natives were overcome by the fumes of the plant when they sliced a bulb, reports said.

Land Bismarck Forgot

On your way to Austria, which should never be omitted from a European tour, stop a while at Liechtenstein, "the country that Bismarck forgot," in the reorganization of Europe. You can make a special trip there if you are staying near Lake Constance, by going to Bregenz, thence to Feldkirch and Vaduz. Its political life is almost play, for its prince pays nearly all its expenses and crime and poverty are almost unknown. Winter hardly touches it and spring comes early.—Boston Herald.

Clean-Up Week

The Sanitary Inspector is giving the citizens the usual notice to clean up their premises before the first day of May. Everybody should take a pride in their premises and clean up and paint up. Remove the accumulations of the winter season, plant some flowers and keep your place looking nice and tidy all the time. Visitors always remark how nice some of our citizens keep their homes and when they see some lawns that look like a place in the backwoods they say, "Well, who lives there?" —I thought so!

Now that we have a good paved road leading into our town we are going to have more people than ever passing through, and all should endeavor to have their property at its best. Good homes and pretty lawns help to advertise the town. How about yours?

Wakeful restless CHILD needs Castoria

WE can never be sure just what makes an infant restless, but the remedy can always be the same. Good old Castoria! There's comfort in every drop of this pure vegetable preparation, and not the slightest harm in its frequent use. As often as Baby has a fretful spell, is feverish, or cries and can't sleep, let Castoria soothe and quiet him. Sometimes it's a touch of colic. Other times it's constipation. Or diarrhea—a condition that should always be checked promptly. Just keep Castoria handy, and give it promptly. Relief will follow very promptly; if it doesn't you should call a physician.

All through babyhood, Castoria should be a mother's standby; and a wise mother continues it in more liberal doses as a child grows up.

Readily obtained at any drug-store, the genuine easily identified by the Chas. H. Fletcher signature and the name Castoria on the wrapper like this:

White Collar Morale

A noteworthy experiment has just been successfully concluded in Montreal. It has been demonstrated that there is a real demand for adult education and intellectual stimulus amongst the white-collar unemployed in this city. The Department of Extra-Mural Relations at McGill offered three regular lecture courses of seven weeks' duration without fee to the unemployed. The response was little short of astounding. Those in charge agreed that if as many as forty or fifty attended regularly the experiment would be well justified. Actually an average of one hundred and fifty attended the historical and literary lectures and eighty odd followed the medical course. —Montreal Star.

British Speed

The flight of Mr. J. A. Mollison, remarkable young Scotsman, from England to Cape Town, 6,300 miles in the astonishing time of four days 17½ hours, surpassing the previous record by 15 hours, has demonstrated again, in the words of the Air Minister's congratulory message, "What British airplanes, engines and pilots can do." He has actually brought the South African city nearer in time to London than was Edinburgh a century ago. An even more notable achievement is in prospect.—Mail and Empire (Toronto).

'Tis a Mad World

The United States with nearly all the gold in the world —with fifteen hundred million dollars of free gold above the minimum reserve—is so beset with anxieties that there is even talk of her going off the gold standard, although, officially, it is denied as ridiculous.

The other extraordinary thing is put into words by the New Statesman and Nation (London) when it says: "At present the Bank of England is hard put to it to stop the £ soaring back to something like parity."

When one considers the enormous sacrifices made by the Bank of England and the British government to hold the £ at par and cling to the gold standard as if the very life of the nation depended on it, the average man must be puzzled to hear that the Bank of England is deserately seeking to save the £ from the disaster of getting back to par.

A similar puzzle presents itself when one considers the hard and desperate efforts the United States has made to grasp all the gold she could lay her hands on, only to find at present that a surplus of hundreds of millions of it is an embarrassment, and with gold by the ton it may be deemed expedient for the dollar to fall below par.

The rest of the world cannot take this gold from the United States, but what if the rest of the world, being deficient in gold, should decide to get along without this metal? — Toronto Star.

THE EMPIRE

Empire Co-operation

Rightly or wrongly, the British people feel that they have suffered from their generosity towards the rest of the world. Imperial sentiment is strong in Great Britain, and it has been kept well in the foreground, but the driving force which has brought about a radical change of policy has arisen from the grave situation of British trade and from the necessity for doing something for millions of unemployed men and women. Far-seeing men perceive in the promotion of Imperial trade a great ideal which will incidentally and inevitably promote the welfare of Great Britain.—Melbourne Argus.

New Zealand Population

However unfavorable present conditions may appear, it would be absurd to suppose that, in normal conditions, the Dominion is incapable of sustaining a more rapid growth of population than its own natural increase. The absorption of those now unemployed must precede the renewal of immigration, and when that phase has been completed, there will be a more reasonable attitude toward new settlers from overseas, for the Labour Party has abandoned its former hostility and latterly has been proclaiming the advantages of increasing the population to provide a larger domestic demand for New Zealand products.—Auckland Weekly News.

Triumph of Economy

Few more remarkable statements can ever have been made than Sir Josiah Stamp's almost sedate account of how he saved the greater part of over four and a half million pounds in the working expenses of the L.M.S. It is evident that some people regarded his methods at first with some irreverent merriment; they were held to be an example of "statistics run mad." That is really not so very extraordinary. It would not have occurred to the average man that the supervision of what Sir Josiah calls the "vast machine" which we know as a railway company would naturally include a keen interest in glass-lined milk tanks, in cast iron chairs, in drawing paper, in pins for office use, in various kinds of soaps, and in the life of carriage washing brushes. But Sir Josiah studied the minute to some purpose; and undeniably he has the laugh on his critics.—London News-Chronicle.

Indian Disorders

Congress is the political organ of orthodox Hinduism. Orthodox Hinduism is the heir of 4,000 years of a static social system; we are the exponents of a brummagen democracy; and the older civilization distrusts the younger. How deep this aversion goes few Englishmen can fathom unless they have lived with it. It is far greater than any racial animosity, any religious odium, in our Western experience. It is based on the conviction that our democratic practice, if forced upon Inda, would mean an end to the sanctity of the family, the confusion of righteousness with impurity; the overthrow of an ordering of human life which is divine in its origin. If any of us felt equally strongly about a political creed which is being pressed upon us, the odds are that we should be just as vehement as Congress in resisting it.—Lord Meston in the Nineteenth Century (London).

Germany Struggles to Her Feet

Germany's spinal cord is and remains her middle class. It was their treason to progressive ideals in the hey-day of the country's commercial prosperity which made possible the anachronism of the Bismarckian Empire. Since the war their children have suffered for it, with a vengeance! For the salent feature of the post-war regime in Germany is the "proletarianization" of the bulk of her middle class. Economic stress would in any case have meant for them, as in England and other highly industrialized countries, a very much more modest existence; the lunatic inflation period, together with the chronic crisis, has definitely reduced them to the proletarian ranks. It is difficult for English people who have not lived in Germany during these years to realize the demoralizing effect of such experiences. At the best, the effect must be to destroy any faith in the values which we take as a matter of course. —W. Horsfall Carter in the Fortnightly Review (London).

OTHER OPINIONS

Laughing Stock of World

Out of a total of 285 kidnappings within the last three years in these United States, only seventy are recorded as achieving any convictions whatsoever. California stands third on the list of states with high kidnapping records. In three years California has had twenty-eight kidnapping cases, three of which resulted in murder. But there were only four convictions. By all means increase the penalties, but not until we have increased the vigilance of the police, the judges and the juries. We have too many impotent penalties now that are a laughing stock of the underworld.—San Francisco Argonaut.

Canada's Fur Business

Canada keeps a sharp eye on its industries. Fifteen years ago the muff helped to sustain its fur industry; it passed out of fashion with long skirts and high shoes. Now, in its less voluminous forms, it shows signs of regaining favor. The modern muff limited to about twenty-two inches around, a serious come down from the pillow muffs of a short time ago. In 1920 Canada made 420 muffs valued at $6,938. Furs must struggle against various other materials nowadays in muff making. In 1930 the Canadian fur-goods industry amounted to $15,733,768. Women's coats and jackets, stoles, scarves, cuffs and collars accounted for $12,516,231 of this sum; men's fur-lined gloves and fur coats brought only $243,497. Robes, gloves, hats and coat shells brought the total up to the recorded figures. The British Isles took the major share of the fur exports of Canada in 1930, the United States running second. — New York Sun.

Effect of British Tariff

The Port of Baltimore Bulletin notes that a large chemical company of this city has leased space in Toronto "and will commence production in the Canadian factory" to supply export business, 'especially to British Empire countries." No reference is made to the new British tariff, which has been brought into being largely as a reply to other nations' policies. But it may be safely assumed that if products of the company could be shipped from Baltimore without paying burdensome impost duties this would be done.—Baltimore Sun.

Security of Family Farm

America needs the stability and security of an agriculture made up of family farms. In a properly managed economic system corporation farming might perhaps be useful, but until society learns better how to direct its present complex economic machine there will be little gain in making it more complex. Instead of industrializing the United States in the sense of replacing the family farms with large corporation farms, we need to find some means to give to the city family some of the stability and security that is the heritage of agriculture.—From The Christian Science Monitor.

Disastrous Train Wreck At Sherbrooke, Que.

Week-End Accidents and Fires Take Toll in Ontario

Three Dead, Thirteen Injured in Provincial Centres

UNKNOWN PERISHES

Motor accidents and fires took two lives in Ontario centres over the week-end and injured 13 persons.

A third life was lost when an 82-year-old Cornwall man was killed by a train.

A Saturday midnight accident near London injured five persons, while six were hurt in an automobile-truck collision near Hamilton.

An unidentified man lost his life in a Port Arthur waterfront fire, while a Fonthill woman and a Brantford man were seriously burned in dwelling blazes.

Man Killed by Train

Cornwall.—While walking along the C.P.R. tracks a short distance east of the local depot on Saturday afternoon, Timothy Linnie, an aged resident of the town, was struck by the 5 p.m. passenger train bound for Montreal, and died from his injuries in the Hotel Dieu Hospital at 8 p.m. His head and chest were badly crushed and both legs were broken. He was born in Lachine, Que., 82 years ago, and most of his life had been spent in Cornwall. He was a shoemaker by trade, but had also worked on the local canal and at farming at different times. His wife died five years ago, and surviving are five sons and four daughters. Dr. C. J. Hamilton, coroner, was notified and will hold an inquest.

Unknown is Cremated

Port Arthur.—The charred remains of an unidentified man were found following a fire which burned a shack on the north waterfront here Sunday. The police say the body may be that of Bert Larson, an itinerant and occasional laborer who was known to have been occupying the place.

Car Kills Youth

Exeter.—Struck by an automobile Saturday night, on his way to Exeter, Frederick Triebner, 19, was instantly killed. He was a son of John Triebner, Hay township farmer. The car was driven by Percy Elsie of Grand Bend. A coroner's jury has been empanelled and an inquest was opened and adjourned.

Fonthill Woman Burned

St. Catharines.—Her body, arms and face severely burned, Mrs. N. Carrick, 72, of R.R. 1, Fonthill, is in St. Catharines General Hospital in a critical condition. Mrs. Carrick was alone in her home Sunday afternoon when her clothing caught fire from a kitchen stove. Members of the family, hearing her cries, rushed indoors and found her clothing a mass of flames. Before the fire could be extinguished she received burns which it is feared may result in her death.

Crash Injures Five

London, Ont.—Five persons were injured, one seriously, shortly after midnight Saturday, when their car is said by the police to have swerved into a culvert on the Kilworth Road and crashed into the abutment of the Kilworth bridge.

The injured are Ellwood Zavitz, Detroit, driver of the car, body bruises and shock; his sister, Miss Viola Zavitz, Detroit, facial cuts and abrasions; Mrs. Margaret Matheson, Komoka, severe head injuries, a deep gash on the head and facial cuts; Max Gray of Poplar Hill, body bruises and abrasions, and Martin Lumbey, also of Poplar Hill, cuts and bruises.

World Conference Held To Discuss Education

Paris—For the first time, directors of higher education from Italy, France, Great Britain, Hungary, Prussia and the United States have met at the International Institute of Intellectual Co-operation to discuss important questions in the organization and functioning of university systems. Future conferences of this this sort will deal with agreements concerning university exchanges and will endeavor to find a solution to the problem of overcrowding, both in universities and in the liberal professions

The British Preference

Calgary Herald: It is evident that the overseas dominions will have to make concessions in order to enjoy a preferential position in the British market. The fact may as well be recognized at the outset, because outside nations such as Argentina are prepared to go a long way to hold their share of the world's greatest buying market. If Canada, Australia and other overseas dominions insist on continuing their policy of maintaining high tariff walls against British goods, they may soon find themselves without the existing British preference.

Brazil to Abolish Tank Corps

Rio De Janeiro—The Brazilian Army is to abandon its tank corps. A dozen tanks of French make purchased ten years ago from salvaged war stock, are to be scrapped.

Hard-Pressed Perth Farmers Allowed Leeway on Notes

Perth, W. Aust.—Through the Farmers' Debts Adjustment Act, provision is made to protect the farmer who is heavily encumbered with promissory notes given in payment for machinery and supplies prior to the passing of this measure. The act permits the cancellation of the notes of those unable to pay and allows one-fourth of the total amount of them to be charged against each coming year's crop.

In many cases machinery firms have been very lenient toward farmers in not pressing for payments due, but carrying over debts, thereby allowing provision for seeding time and utilization of the land which might have remained uncultivated had severe methods been adopted.

New Zealand Signs Trade Agreement

Five Cents a Pound Tariff on Butter Set by Canada

RAW WOOL IS FREE

Ottawa.—Canada and New Zealand, it was reported on Sunday, have signed a trade agreement. The pact was executed on behalf of the two sister Dominions during the week-end, it is understood. An official announcement of the terms of the agreement is expected to be made within the next 48 hours when certain arrangements have been completed. In the meantime, no official confirmation is available.

The agreement gives Canada, it is understood, considerable concessions under the British preference to exports of this country, largely manufactured. The duty on butter coming into Canada from New Zealand, it is reported, will be five cents per pound. This rate is similar to the duty on Australian butter. Imports of New Zealand wool will likely be on the free list under the British preference.

The agreement is fully expected to be tabled in the House of Commons this session. Parliamentary approval will probably be given to the pact before prorogation next month.

In May, 1925, it will be recalled, Canada and Australia entered into a trade agreement. The provisions of the treaty were extended shortly afterwards to New Zealand by order-in-Council. On May 1, 1930, notice was given to New Zealand that this arrangement would be cancelled on November 1 of that year.

Negotiations towards a trade treaty have been under way for some time between Canada and New Zealand. In December last, Hon. H. H. Stevens, Canadian Minister of Trade and Commerce, and Hon. Downie Stewart, New Zealand Minister of Customs, conferred in Honolulu on the subject.

Pension Act To Be Probed By Government and Veterans

Name Joint Committee to Report on Changes; Legislation Next Year—Recommendations to be Presented to Government Before February 1

Ottawa.—Establishment of a joint committee, one section of which will be appointed by the Government and the other by the associated veterans' organizations, has been decided upon by the Government to enquire into the weakness of the present pension act and discover what amendments may be necessary thereto. This emerged Sunday from the conference between the cabinet and representatives of the associated veterans.

The committee will report to the Government at the conclusion of its investigations and necessary legislation will be placed before Parliament at the next session. In the interim every effort will be made by the Government to improve the administration of the act and to expedite decisions being made.

The foregoing conclusions were incorporated in an exchange of letters between Hon. Murray MacLaren, Minister of Pensions, and Major John S. Roper, Dominion president of the Canadian Legion, over the week-end. Writing to the veterans' executive the minister said:

LENGTH OF OPERATION.

"Under the amendments to the Pension Act of 1930, the pension tribunal has operated for only 18 months and the pension appeal court for 15 months. When the legislation of 1930 was passed, it was suggested that it should at least have a fair trial before further amendments were made. The Government is of the opinion that it can hardly be said that the time it has been in operation has afforded a real opportunity to test its effectiveness. Every effort will be made to improve the administration of the act and to expedite decisions being made. Our information warrants the belief that, when parliament again meets, we should be in a position to definitely determine the weakness of the present act and desire that every effort should be made to ascertain what amendments may be necessary.

"The Government will be pleased to refer the whole matter to a committee of the associated veterans' organizations, in conjunction with a committee appointed by the Government, the report to be presented to the Government before the first of, say, February, 1932."

EX-SOLDIERS' COMPLAINTS.

Replying to this, the letter of Major Roper, pointing to the complaints among ex-soldiers, says:

"On investigation, these complaints resolve themselves into three major classes, viz.:

"(a) The congestion of cases in the board of pension commissioners for Canada, and the pension appeal court;

"(b) The length of time it takes to get a final decision;

"(c) The unnecessary appealing of cases by commission counsel."

Commenting on the proposal for a joint committee of enquiry, the communication continues:

"After taking into consideration the statements made by the Government to the associated veterans yesterday (Saturday) and having due regard to the times through which Canada is passing, the associated veterans while realizing the necessity of immediate remedial action, have come to the conclusion that they should accept this proposition, provided that the report is made to the Government when complete, and any necessary legislation evolving from the same is presented to the next session of Parliament."

URGES PROMPT ACTION.

Major Roper urged that no time be lost in the naming of the committee.

While no official statement in that connection has been issued by the associated veterans, it is understood on good authority that the ex-soldiers' representatives will be Colonel W. G. H. Wood, Quebec, president of the Army and Navy Veterans of Canada; Captain E. C. Baker, M.C., of the Sir Arthur C. Pearson Club for Blinded Soldiers and Sailors; Brig.-General Alex. Ross, Yorkton, Sask., vice-president of the Canadian Legion; J. R. Bowler, general secretary of the Canadian Legion, and Major Roper, Dominion president of the Canadian Legion.

Overhead traffic lights are brought into the range of vision of the motorist by means of an accessory like a periscope that attaches to the windshield. It consists of two mirrors, one plane and the other convex, which are mounted on a wire support that in turn is attached to a rubber vacuum cap. The mirrors reflect the overhead lights, says "Popular Mechanics Magazine," the convex mirror covering a wide angle, so that the lights usually are seen regardless of where the car stops.

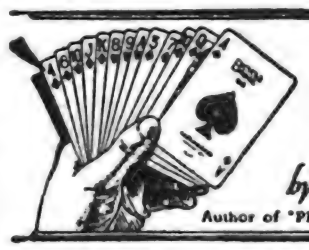
CARTER'S LITTLE PILLS

The Greatest Asset on the Farm



We were in quest of a story on farm conditions as we piloted our gasoline buggy up the well-kept driveway to Cloverdale Farm.

The telephone summoned the farmer who had just introduced us to his oldest son. "Get the truck out, George," said the father as he came into the sitting room. We can load that syrup right now. Tom Caldwell over at the village will give us today's price if we deliver by sundown."

As the son left the house, his father sat down and we had a fine chat. "You no doubt heard me speaking at the telephone and what I told my son just now," said he. "Well, I have had a good run of maple syrup this spring. The quotations over the radio today sounded low so I immediately called up some dealers in the towns around here telling them I had 100 gallons and my price; they said they would let me know. That telephone call was from Tom Caldwell over at Springville saying to bring the syrup over at once. As you can see for yourself, we are trying to keep pace with the times here in all departments of the work.

"The biggest thing of all on the farm today is to take advantage quickly of the opportunities we hear about and the telephone enables us to do this very thing—it is worth many times its cost."

How to play Bridge AUCTION and CONTRACT

by Wynne Ferguson

Author of "PRACTICAL AUCTION BRIDGE"

ARTICLE No. 20

"Don't judge by results" is a mighty good slogan and one that should be applied at all times. Most players are apt to judge by results at Auction or Contract, rather than by analysis, and there is nothing more harmful if a player really and sincerely wishes to improve his game. Sound bidding is based on probabilities, not upon certainties. If you or any player at the table fails to make his bid, analyze the hand before deciding whether the bid was good or bad. Be sure of your facts before you criticize.

Many a bid that is defeated several tricks saves a game or rubber and may, therefore, have been perfectly justifiable. Anything can happen to a hand, even to the strongest. There is practically no hand that you will ever hold which in a high bid cannot be defeated by a freak distribution of the other cards. Learn to analyze the various hands that come up for discussion and you will soon determine whether or not your bids or those of your fellow-players are sound.

During an evening's play there probably will be several hands that will puzzle you, and those are the hands that you should note and ponder over. One of the greatest players of the day owes his skill to his study of such tactics. After every game, he would study over his mistakes and those of the other players and try to figure out the proper plays and bids in each instance. All of us haven't his patience, but it's a great system if tried out even with only a few hands an evening.

Hand No. 1

Hearts—J, 10, 6
Clubs—8, 7, 5, 2
Diamonds—K, J, 10
Spades—10, 3, 3

Hearts—A, Q, 8, 2	Y	Hearts—K, 9, 5, 4, 3
Clubs—J, 6	A B	Clubs—none
Diamonds—A, 4, 3	Z	Diamonds—9, 8
Spades—A, K, J, 5		Spades—Q, 9, 7, 6, 4, 2

Hearts—7
Clubs—A, K, Q, 10, 9, 4, 3
Diamonds—Q, 7, 6, 5, 2
Spades—none

No score, first game. B dealt and passed and Z bid clubs.

This is a perfect example of a preemptive or shut-out bid at either Auction or Contract. Z's strength was confined to the minor suits and he was right in trying to shut out a bid by his opponents. A, with apparently four sure tricks, doubled and all passed. B should have bid five spades, but his hand was so weak that he failed to do so. As a result, Z made five clubs doubled, losing only one heart and one diamond.

An analysis and study of this hand will be worth while.

Hand No. 2

Hearts—K, 10, 7
Clubs—A, K, Q, 4
Diamonds—A, K, Q, 3
Spades—8, 3

Hearts—Q, J, 5	Y	Hearts—A, 8, 4
Clubs—J, 7	A B	Clubs—10, 6, 2
Diamonds—J, 8	Z	Diamonds—10, 6, 4
Spades—K, Q, J, 9, 5, 2		Spades—10, 7, 6, 4

Hearts—9, 6, 3, 2
Clubs—9, 8, 5, 3
Diamonds—9, 7, 5, 2
Spades—A

Auction Bidding

No score, first game. Y dealt and bid one no trump, B and Z passed and A bid two spades. Y doubled, B passed and Z bid three hearts. All passed and A opened the king of spades, which Z won with the ace. He then led the deuce of hearts, A played the jack, Y the king and B won the trick with the ace. B now led a spade and Z discarded the deuce of diamonds. This was a very smart play as it enabled Z to win the game as all he had to lose was one more heart trick. This hand is a perfect example of the wonderful results obtained by use of the informatory double. A close study of this hand, of the various plays and bids, will not only be interesting, but also very instructive.

Contract Bidding

Y should bid two diamonds and Z should bid two no trump, the minimum response. A should pass and Y should now bid three clubs. Z should now bid four diamonds and Y should bid five diamonds. It should be evident that Y Z can make game at diamonds as they should lose only two heart tricks.

Hand No. 3

Hearts—A, Q, J
Clubs—K, 6, 2
Diamonds—J, 10, 4
Spades—Q, 10, 7, 4

Hearts—4, 3, 2	Y	Hearts—10, 9, 8, 5
Clubs—10, 7, 5	A B	Clubs—Q, 9, 8, 4
Diamonds—A, K, 9, 8, 6	Z	Diamonds—3, 2
Spades—8, 2		Spades—J, 5, 3

Hearts—E, 7, 5
Clubs—A, J, 3
Diamonds—8, 7, 5
Spades—A, K, 9, 6

Auction Bidding

No score, first game. Z dealt and elected to bid one no trump. All passed and A proceeded to lead diamonds, winning the first five tricks. This hand is interesting because, if Z had bid spades instead of no trump, he could have made game. It looks like a better chance for game at no trump, however; so Z's bid cannot be justifiably criticized. A made a good play by refusing to bid diamonds, having the lead at no trump. If he had bid the diamonds, Z would then have bid the spades and gone game. The lesson to learn from A's tactics is: Don't overbid no trump on your right if you have a set-up suit or one that will set up in one round and a sure card of re-entry. To bid under such conditions shows the no trump bidder the danger spot of his hand and often drives him to another and game bid, as in this example.

Contract Bidding:

Z should bid one spade. One of the lessons learned by Contract players, as distinguished from Auction players, is to prefer a suit bid to no trump if the suit is in any way a sound bid. In this instance the spade suit is a sound bid and, therefore, preferred to the no trump. A should bid two diamonds, and Y should bid three spades. B must pass and Z should bid four spades, which can be made against any defense.

As previously mentioned, the foregoing hands were selected during one evening's play and illustrate the writer's suggestions as to study of hands. If players would analyze even one hand a night, they would be surprised at the good results obtained.

Scientist Declares World Is Like Soap Bubble

London, England.—The universe was described recently by Sir James Jeans, eminent scientist, as being like a vast soap bubble, or a huge balloon, constantly expanding and exploding.

The stars and planets, under his newest conception of the universe, Sir James said, are like tiny specks on the surface of the balloon. As the baloon expands, the objects in space are constantly moving away from each other at terrific speed.

Sir James credited Prof. Albert E. Einstein with opening up a new vision of the universe with his theory of relativity. This new development of the Einstein theory, he said, was the sixth and latest great milestone in the whole history of science.

Device Grouping Dust Particles Proposed for Crime Detection

London—The detection of crime by the analysis of dust is the newest study by European criminologists and Scotland Yard is soon to be asked to test a device introduced by an American electric carpet-sweeping concern.

This device automatically separates different sizes of dust particles and other impurities that may be present on clothes and other articles and thus makes possible scientific comparison with dust and conditions characteristic with a given location. Its inventors assert that its use will enable detectives to secure evidence as to places which a suspected person has visited.

"When Eliza Comes to Stay"

As Played by St. Andrew's Y. P. S. in Streetsville

On April 20, in the Prince of Wales Theatre, the play, "Eliza Comes to Stay," was presented by St. Andrew's Dramatic Club under the direction of Mr Harold Hunter. Extra chairs were placed in every available place. A great many were disappointed when they found out for once the large hall was too small for the large number of people anxious to hear this much-talked-of play. This play had been presented in many places in London England, and had always received popular recognition every time—and it did not lose its popularity when presented by the following artists in Streetsville that night.

Herbert, the butler, Allan Couse; porter, Mac Gibson; Mrs. Allaway, the nurse, Mrs. H. W. Couse; Honourable Sandy Verrall, S. Edmund Wolfe; Alexander Verrall, his uncle, Clifford Robertson; Lady Pennybroke, Sandy's aunt, Reba V. Wylie; Vera Lawrence, his fiancee, Mrs. F. Maas; Montague, Jordan, his friend, Floyd Marlatt; Eliza Vandam, Cora M. Woodruff.

Scene—Living room in Hon Sandy Verall's apartment, London England. (The same throughout).

Act I., Sandy's Legacy; Act II, One week later; Act III., One month later.

"When the Presbyterian Young People presented their play
Giving the reason why Eliza was going to stay
The Theatre was filled before the play started
Many couldn't get in and were awfully downhearted.
Mr. Hunter, the director, expressed their delight
To present their play to so many that night.

We are all actors in this world's busy room
But the last act in a play is a bride and a groom
And because Eliza was a bride in that play
That is the reason they allowed her to stay
When she appeared in the first act that night
With her hat, hair, and dress, she was surely a fright.

If she was a baby or a grown up, dressed dandy
It would have been a different proposition for Sandy
He would cherish and love her in discharging his duty
But it made such a difference when she was nt a beauty
Just to think those old clothes would change every plan
But it is just like that with every man.

All the plans for the blue eyed beauty, we needn't rehearse,
Sandy thought she was a baby when engaging a nurse
Teddy bears, and dolls, he bought for the child,
To cherish, and love her, poor Sandy was wild,
But his resolutions, and spirits, the first week were sagging,
For her chatter, and love making to him was so nagging.

Between acts vocal selections were given by Mr. A. Munro, a singer of repute from Toronto, accompanied by Miss Dowsley on the piano. He was encored repeatedly.

Second Act

Sandy was so worried when Eliza would stay
Then he ordered his porter to pack up, and he went away
One thing we notice in this world's busy show
That some don't worry too much, if we want to go
When Vera Lawrence forgot him, Sandy thought it so funny
To marry his uncle Verrall, just because he had money.

Then Montague Jordan his friend, came every day
And the Blue Bells of Scotland he taught Eliza to play
But this music annoyed an old fellow below
And said she must stop piano playing or else she must go
Then she told Lady Pennybroke she could solve that riddle
She would stop the piano; and get a nice little fiddle.

Ther poor Eliza; was soon into more trouble,
When Montague Jorden wanted to hitch with her double
Then she asked Lady Pennybroke for her advice
She loved Sandy so much, for he was so nice
Lady Pennybroke said, now bid that love adieu
For Sandy loves Vera, and he doesn't love you.

Act Three

When Sandy returned and heard his uncle and Vera had married
And saw Eliza's picture, and for him she had tarried
Then Sandy looked back on this strange affair
And through it all he hadn't a share
For Eliza and Montague were going to join forces
And he was waiting to take her out for lunch courses.

Then Eliza appeared the very same way
The way she appeared in the first act in the play
Then Montague thought, I will turn her down flat
I wouldn't be seen with a dowdy like that
Then she said this is all the world's goods I have got
It was with Sandy's money all the rest had been bought

Sandy said, your dresses are no use to me
Go and change your dress and then we will see
She soon returned looking handsome and true,
And said, I must leave you, to paddle my own canoe
Sandy exclaimed, "I love you, I want you to stay,"
So that was the end of this wonderful play.

Mr. Hunter, please try a play in real life
There were five men in that play all in need of a wife,
Are these men stubborn, or are they just shy,
When great opportunities they are letting slip by
If an Eliza took charge, like that one in the play
They would just be like Sandy and all act that way.

We know all their hearts are just on the latch
Then try your skill, at making a match.
They want love like Eliza's, not like Vera's for money,
For life without love, is robbed of its honey,
So if love like Eliza's, on their pathway will stray,
You may bet your last dollar she will not get away.

GRANT FLEMING, M.D. — ASSOCIATE SECRETARY

EVERYBODY'S WORK

To mediaeval man, epidemics of disease were mysteries, coming from whence no one knew, appearing for no obvious reason, and then disappearing. It is not to be wondered at then that man looked to the realm of the supernatural for an explanation.

As long as the cause of any disease is unknown and its method of spread remains hidden, we can do but little to control the disease. But as soon as the cause and mode of transmission have been discovered, we are on the road to exterminating that particular disease, provided its prevention is accepted as everybody's work.

There are few diseases which, because they are usually spread by water, milk or food, can be controlled by sanitary measures requiring but little of the individual excepting money to employ workers and to install sanitary plants. Such is not the case, however, with most of the preventable diseases. They require, if success is to be achieved, not only financial support, but active participation by all in the effort to prevent.

There has been a considerable increase in the average expectancy of life, and it is stated that it could be further increased by twenty years if we were to make full use of the knowledge we possess. This might be expressed in other words by saying that we ourselves cut short our lives by our failure to apply what we know to ourselves.

It is well to realize that in general, this is our own fault. Your doctor cannot apply this knowledge for you. Your Health Department cannot do it for you. You must do it for yourself; the responsibility rests on you alone.

The human body has great powers of adaptability, and so it is able to meet many conditions of living. A mere existence is not, however, our aim in life, nor is it an objective that is worth striving for. So the argument that people can survive without paying attention to their habits of life is not a valid one. If such attention will bring a fuller life, secure a larger measure of happiness and provide better service to mankind, is it not worth the effort?

It is true that much which has been taught in the name of health has little or nothing to do with health. The appeal to health has been overdone; when you are urged to do this or that for the sake of health, you may well ask why, and if the explanation is not reasonable and cannot be supported by scientific evidence, you have a right to reject it. That is, however, no reason why you should disregard health teaching which is founded on scientific knowledge, the practice of which is essential to your well-being.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

Religious and Secular Stories That Parallel

All the great religions have stories that parallel each other in some degree. For instance, Jephthah, one of the judges of Israel, made a remarkable vow before he marched against the Ammonites, that if he proved victorious he would offer to the Lord the first living thing which should come to meet him on his return. This happened to be his only daughter, whom he sacrificed to fulfill his rash vow. The history of Jephthah is contained in the second book of Judges. Idomeneus, in Homeric legend, king of Crete, succeeded his father Deucalion on the throne, and accompanied the Greeks to the Trojan war with a fleet of 90 ships. During this war he rendered himself famous by his valor. While returning, he made a vow to Neptune in a dangerous tempest that if he escaped he would offer to the god whatever living creature first presented itself to his eye on the Cretan shore. This was his son, who came to congratulate him on his safe return. Idomeneus redeemed his promise, but the inhumanity of this sacrifice rendered him so odious to his subjects that he was exiled from his country.—Montreal Family Herald.

Insignia of Royalty in Ancient Egyptian Tomb

A tomb discovered near Cairo, by Prof. Selim Hassan, containing a mummy adorned with a gold crown and a complete set of jewelry, is perhaps the only tomb in this area untouched by thieves. The gold crown was 24 inches in circumference. It was kept in position by two gold lotus flowers, joined by a chalcedony. Each flower was topped by a bird with a long beak, named in hieroglyphics "Yakhu." In the middle of the crown in front was a disk studded with colored stones set in another lotus flower. The large necklace was composed of 50 pieces of gold in the shape of some insects threaded on a gold string. Gold bracelets having the form of the hieroglyphic letter "N"; a number of silver bracelets—it is believed that this is the first time silver bracelets have been discovered in a tomb of the fourth dynasty—and two pure gold anklets also were found.

Curiosity From the Bog

Uncovering the bog at Ballaghan, in the county of Shercock, Ireland, a curious bit of wood carving was brought to light which is perplexing the archeologists and scientists of Ireland and England. The specimen is evidently of great age, 500 years at least, and probably much more. It is about 3 feet in length and represents a woman, but the arms are missing, and it is the work of a skilled carver. There are some curious inscriptions upon it which are legible. The specimen has been placed on exhibition at the Dublin museum with the hope that some student may offer some explanation of the origin and use.

No Tennessee Pygmies

The existence of a pygmy race in Tennessee is believed to be a fallacy by modern ethnologists. The story owes its origin to the discovery in the early half of the Nineteenth century of numerous small stone coffins containing skeletons, the largest of which measured 24 inches in length and 9 inches in depth. These were assumed to be the remains of a race of pygmies. However, they have proved to be in many cases the skeletons of children. Those of adults were deprived of flesh according to the common custom in the mound region, then disjointed and the bones packed into a very small space.

Hens Busy

The treasurer of the Ladies Aid society of a Greensburg church made a deposit for her organization in a Greensburg bank recently. At the deposit window she spoke to the teller, whom she knew.

The deposit was a considerable one for a church organization and as she passed in the money she said: "Here's the aid money."

The teller understood her to say, "Here's the egg money." Then came the break.

"Well, it looks as though the old hens have been laying pretty good lately," was his comment.—Indianapolis News.

Matching Shade

At a soiree Dumas was wearing the ribbon of a certain order, having recently been made a commandant, and an envious friend remarked upon it.

"My dear fellow," he said, "that cordon is a wretched color! One would think it was your woolen vest that was showing!"

"Oh, no, my dear d'E——," replied Duman with a smile, "you're mistaken; it's not a bad color; it is exactly the shade of the sour grapes in the fable."—Golden Book.

Houses Like Towns

One of those great dwelling houses which are like small towns has been opened in Vienna. It is built round grassy courtyards set with trees, and will house 5,000 people in 1,382 flats. It has cost $4,200,000. In the building are two electric laundries, two bathing establishments, two kindergartens, a dental clinic, a "mother's advice center," a library, a post office, a chemist's, and 25 other shops. The baths are heated by the steam which is electrically generated for the laundries.

Combine to Honor Railroad Veteran

W. G. Chester Serves Order Railway Conductors for Quarter Century

When W. G. (Billy) Chester, of Winnipeg, retired after twenty-five years service as general chairman of the Canadian Pacific section of the Order of Railway Conductors, something of the character that had won him the esteem of not only the men for whom he acted as chief spokesman, but of the company with which he negotiated was revealed by Grant Hall, senior vice-president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, when he said:

W. G. CHESTER

"I have been associated with Mr. Chester for many years. Never once has he broken his word. We often differed in our views, but I always knew that when he told me something, he at least was sincerely convinced that it was right."

Speak to the conductors whom he represented so well for a quarter of a century and one learns that "Billy" Chester was "a square shooter," than which in the ranks of his kind there is no prouder title.

Chester is sparing of words and always has been. Throughout his career as head of his order he has maintained the balance of a keen loyalty both to his men and to the Canadian Pacific Railway, with a realization that discipline was as important for the protection of the former as the latter. He knew how to be firm when what he thought were the rights of his men were at stake, without creating ill-feeling in the minds of company officials with whom he might be negotiating.

This is what Chester himself has to say of these relationships: "My relations with the members of the organization and with the general officers of the company have been most friendly and satisfactory and the boys on the road have always given me a fair break. I have had the same treatment from the company's officials. I have tried to reciprocate."

Mr. Chester began railroading away back in 1881, and had 25 years with the Company before entering the service of his Order.

OBITUARY

Mrs. Mary Steen

On Friday evening, April 29th, Mary Steen, widow of the late Ephraim Steen, passed away at the home of her son, Thomas, Streetsville, in her 84th year, after a short illness.

Her maiden name was Mary Ritchie, and her husband predeceased her 39 years ago. She was a Presbyterian, having joined St. Andrew's Church, by certificate, on June 16th, 1866, just 66 years ago.

The deceased was a very fine woman, a good neighbor, and her life was wrapped up in the interests of her family.

Surviving are six sons: Samuel, Frank and William, Detroit; Nathaniel, Toronto; Dolph, Galt; Thomas, Streetsville, and a married daughter in Jackson, Mich., (Bella).

The funeral took place Sunday afternoon. After a private service at the home, the remains were conveyed to St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Streetsville, where a very large number of friends and acquaintances had gathered to pay their last respects to the one they had known so well and so long.

Service was conducted by the new minister, Rev. Ross Cameron, who took for his text, St. Luke 20: 38, and spoke words of comfort to the bereaved, and referred to the sterling qualities of the deceased. He was assisted by the former pastor, Rev. W. T. McCree.

Her six sons acted as pall-bearers and interment took place in Streetsville Cemetery, beside the remains of her husband.

Held Sale of Aprons

Under the direction of Mrs. William Lambe, members of the Meadowvale United Church Ladies' Aid, held a sale of aprons and an afternoon tea in the school rooms of the church.

WORLD TELEPHONE DEVELOPMENT

World progress in communication—the development of those facilities which bring the human race into closer and closer contact—is of universal interest. Necessarily the project of collecting and assembling the data is fraught with difficulties, and must always fall short of being of the character of last minute information. In a recently published summary, made from official data by Bell System statisticians, world telephone figures are now available up to the date of January 1, 1931.

North America has 21,836,301 telephones, or 61.80% of the world total—almost twice the total of all other countries. Canada with 14.0 telephones for each 100 population comes second in telephone development to the United States which leads the world with 16.4 telephones per 100 of its inhabitants. New Zealand comes third with 10.2, followed by Denmark with 9.9, Sweden with 8.7 and Australia with 8.1 telephones per 100 inhabitants.

In Canada the telephone is used to a greater extent than in any other country. During 1930 Canadians made 264.8 telephone conversations per capita, while the United States and New Zealand with 226.0 and 208.3 were the only other countries with over 200 telephone conversations per person. Denmark with 152.2 was the leader of the European countries in conversations per capita. Canadians make 8 times more use of their telephones than the British who reported 33.1 conversations per capita and over 13 times more than the French who make 20.3 calls per capita.

Canada with 1,402,861 ranks fourth in absolute number of telephones, being led only by United States, Germany and Great Britain. But in Germany and Great Britain the number of telephones per 100 population is only 5.0 and 4.3 respectively. It is interesting to note that in Canada 82 per cent. and in United States 100 per cent. of the telephones are under private ownership and operation, while in Germany and Great Britain all telephones are operated by the government. Argentina leads South America in telephone development with 2.6 per 100 inhabitants, Japan easily leads the Asiastic countries but has only 1.4 telephones per 100 people.

In the provision of telephone facilities for cities of 50,000 people and over, Canada leads the world. With 23.7 telephones per 100 inhabitants in these communities its closest rival is the United States with 22.6. In the smaller towns and villages Canada ranks second, with 9.7 telephones per 100 people, being led only by the United States, with 12.2 telephones per 100 people. Thus the inhabitants of Canadian cities and towns of under 50,000 inhabitants are better provided with telephones than most of the larger European cities.

Ordination and Induction

Rev. Ross K. Cameron, St. Andrew's Minister

On Tuesday evening, April 26th, a very important event took place in the presence of a large congregation in Saint Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Streetsville. The occasion being the Ordination and Induction of Mr. Ross K. Cameron, B.A., as their minister. Mr. Cameron, who is a B.A. of Toronto University, took his theological training at Knox College, graduating this spring with honors. Preaching for a call during the vacancy, Mr. Cameron so impressed the congregation with his pulpit ability and his personality that when a congregational meeting was called to decide on extending a call, his name was the only one mentioned. This unanimity of opinion in answer to prayer constitutes the writer believes a "Gospel Call."

This is an age when records are made or broken as the case may be, in keeping up with the times St. Andrew's established a record of having the shortest vacancy in the one hundred and four years of their history, Mr. Cameron being the sixteenth minister to receive a call. What changes have taken place during those years, but what a tribute to the thoroughness with which Presbyterian principles had been inculcated that since then St. Andrew's has stood four square to every wind that blew.

The Ordination and Induction service of the Presbyterian Church, is very solemn and impressive. The Moderator of Toronto Presbytery, the Rev. G. M. Dunn presided, the devotional exercises according to custom being conducted by the last inducted minister in the Presbytery, in this case being our late minister, the Rev. W. T. McCree, M.A., who took for his text, Heb. 11, verses 34, 40, "And these all having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise; God having provided some better thing for us that they without us should not be made perfect." Mr. McCree showed clearly that the work and sacrifice of those who preceeded us depend for their fulfilment on our fidelity and faithfulness.

Mr. McFaul, Interim Moderator, then recited the steps leading up to the call. After which Mr. Dunn put the usual questions to Mr. Cameron prescribed for those entering the ministry of the Presbyterian Church. The two main ones being as follows Do you believe the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments to be the Word of God?; and do you believe the doctrines and government of the Presbyterian Church in Canada to be agreeable to and founded on the Word of God and do you agree to teach and mention the same? Mr. Cameron having given his assent, the Presbytery then proceeded by the laying on of hands, and ordination prayer by Mr. Dunn, to set apart Mr. Cameron to the sacred office of the ministry. Rev. James Wilson, D.D., then addressed him basing his remarks on Paul's exhortation to Timothy, "Take heed to thyself." The charge given by Dr. Wilson was very fine, he advised Mr. Cameron to care for himself physically, mentally and spiritually, he spoke of the value of pastoral visitations in order to get in close touch with his people, stressed the need of study and above all take time to be in close communion with God, and if he did this he would be in a position to "Feed the flock of God over which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseer." These words of wisdom and admonition coming from one of the fathers of the church to a young man just starting out on his life's work, were very impressive. Mr. McFaul spoke to the congregation on the need of co-operation between minister and people in order to have a successful pastorate, he was in need of their sympathy and prayers, and the encouragement which faithful attendance at public worship gives.

Mr. Dunn brought the public meeting to a close by congratulating both minister and people on the happy union that had been consummated, closing with the benediction.

The writer believes that the faith in God and man, through which the work of this historic church has been demonstrated in the past will provide ways and means for the future.

Mr. Joseph Johnston, of Toronto, contributed vocal selections during the service and at the reception. Messrs. R. H. Greig and T. H. Wilson then introduced the congregation to Mr. and Mrs. Cameron.

The social part of the evening took place in the Sunday School Room, where the ladies served a bountiful repast to the Presbytery, congregation and friends. Owing to the lateness of the hour speech making was limited. Messrs. Hardy and Weylie on behalf of the congregation thanked the members of the Presbytery for the interest they showed in St. Andrews by the large attendance, and particularly those who had taken part in the service, they also extended a warm welcome to Mr. Cameron as their minister and to Mrs. Cameron as mistress of the manse. Revs. Dunn, Steward, McFaul and Mustard also extended their congratulations and best wishes for the future. Mr. and Mrs. Cameron were then called to the platform when Miss Jeanette Couse on behalf of the ladies presented Mrs. Cameron with a bouquet of red carnations. Mr. Cameron in a few well chosen words thanked the congregation for their kind reception to Mrs. Cameron and himself. The meeting then closed by singing the Doxology and a new chapter was begun in the history of St. Andrew's.

ENGAGEMENTS

Mr. and Mrs. John R. Byers of Oakville announce the engagement of their daughter, Mary Catharine, to Hubert Alexander Brown, London, Ontario, only son of Hubert Hartfield Brown, and the late Mrs. Brown, of Toronto, the wedding to take place early in June.

ERINDALE

Fire destroyed the home of Samuel Marlatt, on the Dundas highway on April 27th. Nearly all the furniture, including many valuable antiques, and all the household belongings of the family, were lost. An overheated chimney was blamed.

According to Mr. Marlatt, his wife smelled smoke in the sitting room, and, fearing the chimney might be on fire, asked him to have a look at it. He went out and examined the building, but could see nothing wrong.

A few minutes later they smelled smoke again. This time, when he went out, he saw the whole roof was ablaze.

Calling to the family to get out of the house, Mr. Marlatt attempted to save some furniture. A few sticks of kitchen furniture were dragged out and neighbours helped to save the piano. By that time the entire house was an inferno and in a very few minutes it had burned to the ground.

A large frame building, the house had been a landmark on the Dundas highway for over 100 years, having been built in 1828 by Mr. Marlatt's grandfather. It stood at the corner of the highway and the Trafalgar town line.

The exact amount of loss has not yet been determined, but will undoubtedly run to several thousand dollars. Among the antique furniture lost, some of it dating back to the 17th century, was the furniture used by Mr. Marlatt's parents throughout their married life, stored in upstairs rooms.

Besides Mr. Marlatt and his wife, Mr. Marlatt's mother and son were in the house at the time. All escaped with nothing but the clothes they wore.

Mr. Marlatt stated that he intended to rebuild on the same site.

Reds Stage May Day Riots In Rouyn, Hamilton, Sudbury

Mob of 2,000 Rushes Sudbury Parade—Mayor Injured—Other Ontario Demonstrations Are Fiascos

Sudbury.—Citizens and Communists clashed here Sunday afternoon in the most serious May Day disturbances Sudbury has known.

Eighteen alleged Communists are in the police cells, while a number of citizens who attempted to break up the Communist parade before the police arrived are nursing cracked heads and other injuries. Most of the injuries were received from flying rocks with which the Communists' sympathizers bombarded the crowd, while others were struck by reds who flailed around them with the handles of their banners.

The clash between citizens and Communists resulted from the refusal of the reds to carry the Union Jack at the head of their parade in conformity with a civic by-law.

Mayor Injured

Among the casualties is Mayor Peter Fenton, who was struck on the head with a rock and knocked down when he leaped out of his car to assist Sergeant Leo Campeau of the municipal police force, who had been knocked semi-conscious with a rock and was being kicked and beaten as he lay on the street.

Just as Mayor Fenton struck one of Sergt. Campeau's assailants with his fist he was struck on the head with a rock. Cecil Facer, a local lawyer, went to the mayor's assistance and was struck on the arm with a club.

In the evening the Ukrainian Labor Temple and Liberty Hall (Finnish) were raided by municipal and provincial police under Chief Constable David Louden and Inspector A. H. Palmer, and papers, account books, records and Communist emblems were seized.

2-Hour Clash in Hamilton

Hamilton.—Police batons and fire hose effectively subdued several hundred Hamilton Reds who attempted to defy a police order and hold a meeting in Woodlands Park Sunday afternoon.

With a squad of policemen and firemen scattered throughout the grounds in the crowd of 10,000 persons, the Communists were given little leeway, and the smooth-working organization of the law had the situation in hand at all times.

Sixteen arrests were made. Batons were wielded in threatening fashion, but it was evident that the great majority of those present were in sympathy with the officers of the law, and as the leaders were taken into custody cheers of approval rose.

During the melee a few stones were thrown, but the police assailants were soon singled out and apprehended. Sergeant Ernest May and P. C. Coleman were hit by missiles, but they were able to continue on duty.

Mrs. Boychuk Arrested

Thorold. — With police assembled from Welland, St. Catharines and surrounding points, several attempts by Communists to hold a May Day meeting were broken up here. Five hundred people had assembled. According to Chief Constable Thomas Shelton of Thorold, the police had been forewarned that a meeting of serious nature was expected.

Mrs. John Boychuk of Thorold was placed under arrest early Sunday afternoon, but was released on bail of $50 on the understanding that the crowd disperse.

Peaceful at Port Arthur

Port Arthur.—May Day passed without any Communist troubles in Port Arthur. Members of the party held meetings indoors and outdoors, but attempted no parades.

Parade at Calgary

Calgary.—Six hundred men, practically all jobless, marched in a May Day celebration parade through Calgary streets. They marched three abreast and carried few banners, while the downtown crowd that welcomed the first day of bright sunshine in two weeks watched them from the sidewalks.

A meeting at "Red Square" concluded the celebration, which was quiet and orderly throughout.

Quiet at Vancouver

Vancouver. — May Day passed off quietly here. A meeting of some seven or eight thousand people gathered at Powell Street grounds under police permission, but dispersed after listening to a number of addresses.

Police Idle at Montreal

Montreal.—There was no May Day celebration by Communists here. Augmented police riot squads sat around district police stations all day waiting for the call that never came.

Police patrols guarded Champ de Mars, Victoria Square and other favored rallying points of the Communists, but nobody attempted to start a meeting. One group held a meeting in a hall under the watchful eyes of detectives, but the gathering was quite peaceful and the police did not interfere.

Local officers of the Communist party made no application to Director of Police Fernand Dufresne for permission to stage a May Day parade.

Quiet at Winnipeg

Winnipeg.—May Day was celebrated quietly in Winnipeg. A parade of 4,000 persons, including women and children, marched a distance of three miles through the streets of the city. Communist organizations were out in force. The parade was sanctioned by a permit issued to the United Front Conference. Crowds on the sidewalks were entertained in the singing of revolutionary songs by the marchers.

May Day Quiet In World Capitals

A demonstration against war marked May Day in London, England. Demonstrations were broken up by police when they tried to march on the Japanese embassy.

Two Communists were killed and six constables injured at Warsaw.

One fatal clash between civil guards and extremists was the only disturbance as the republic of Spain celebrated May Day with a national holiday.

Acting Premier Tunnecliffe was cut under the eye and knocked off a truck by 5,000 demonstrators at Melbourne, Australia.

From all other European and South American capitals came reports of peace. There were no barricades, no clashes between the masses and police, no storming of the strongholds of capitalism by force.

Rain in New York proved more effective than policemen's batons in dampening enthusiasm for revolt in the breasts of 70,000 marchers.

Moscow, self-labelled the defender of world peace, marked the day by a gigantic display of armed force.

Soviet Government Accepts Invitation to Congress

Ottawa—Extended an invitation to participate in the fifth Pacific science congress, scheduled to meet in Canada in 1933. Russia has accepted and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics will be represented by at least 10 official delegates. The congress sessions will be held in Vancouver and Victoria, B.C.

The notification of acceptance has been received by the National Research Council, through which the Dominion Government extended the invitation that brings the congress to this continent for the first time.

The delegates will iclude Dr. P. Schmidt, secretary of the Pacific committee of the Academy of Science of the Soviet. Papers to be delivered by the Russian scientists will deal with Pacific coast fisheries, etc. Dr. Schmidt will suggest that every member of the Pacific Science Association be requested to prepare for each branch of science a triennial plan (1934-36) of research work for presentation to the congress.

Cancerous Lung Removed Patient Makes Recovery

Toronto—For the first time in the history of surgery and the treatment of cancer, an entire lung, with a cancer in it, has been removed by the use of the knife, and the patient cured.

This was made known in an interview with Dr. A. L. Lockwood of the Lockwood Clinic here, who has just returned from the annual meeting in Ann Arbor, Mich., of the American Society of Thoracic Surgeons, where the disclosure was made.

During the society's three-day meeting, details of this extraordinary operation were revealed in detail by Dr. Edward D. Churchill, of Boston, Mass., who performed this feat of surgery. The patient's chest was lifted, and all three lobes of the right lung, the centre lobe containing the cancer, were cut entirely away.

The case occasioned great interest throughout medical and surgical circles and journals in the United States. Dr. Lockwood said. It was explained that in the past many cases of cancer had occurred where the site was deemed impossible of operation. Dr. Churchill's case, it was demonstrated, had made it clear that here was one further side of cancer which could be dealt with surgically, which in the past could not be so dealt with at all.

Orchid 45 Feet High Found in Queensland

Melbourne, Aus.—Discovery of what is claimed to be the tallest orchid in the world has been made in southern Queensland. It grows to a height of 45 feet, and bears hundreds of beautiful flowers. One spike of flowers is almost six feet in length.

The giant orchid—Galeola foliata—grows in an almost inaccessible gorge in the Macpherson Ranges. A Melbourne botanical expedition hopes to reach the spot in September.

Before the discovery of the giant 30 feet was believed to be the limit of the growth of the species.

The flowers of the orchid are golden yellow, contrasting with a white, pink-marked labellum.

There is no beautifier of complexion or form of behaviour like the wish to scatter joy and not pain around us.

No Sentiment in Business

Canada and Great Britain, if they want to extend their trade exchange, must be prepared to meet the most exacting demands of the purchaser. Nothing short of this will be of much use. Sentiment cuts an insignificant figure in business.—(Victoria Times, Lib.).

Idle Money

In February, according to an official report, Canadian deposits in savings banks were $22,000,000 more than in January. This is extraordinary. Here we are with $1,390,000,000 in our savings banks—this despite all the money absorbed by recent loans—which is $22,000,000 more than we had at the beginning of the year, yet everybody is afflicted by the psychology of hard times, and most of us are too fearful to take our money out of the banks to buy things that we need. —(Ottawa Journal.)

Trees For Protection

One of the important effects of the drought and gale-damage experience of the prairie provinces has been to stimulate tree planting enormously. Thousands of farmers, completely "blown out" in 1931, have witnessed the phenomenon of profitable crops gathered by neighbors who had the foresight to shield their farms with shelter belts of trees ten or fifteen years ago. As a consequence, shelter belts have assumed a new importance and the rate of tree planting in future will be rapidly accelerated. More than 100,000 prairie farmers already have established tree shelter about their homes and farms. —(Brandon Sun.)

Farmers' Credit

It is invariably the mortgage companies that are singled out for attention in these demands for legislation to protect the farmer. As a matter of fact, anyone who knows Western conditions knows that the mortgage companies on the whole are just as anxious to keep farmers on the land as the farmers to stay on it. Without advertising their plans at all mortgage companies are making adjustments with farmers, reducing interest rates where necessary, spreading over principal payments, paying taxes on mortgaged farms, and generally doing their utmost to aid the farmers through their difficulties. The farmers' financial difficulties arise in much the greater number of cases from taxes and short-term credits from the implement houses, oil companies, banks and casual creditors, than from mortgages.—(Winnipeg Tribune.)

It is gratifying to observe that during these admittedly hard times the citizens of Toronto did not forget the appeal of the Humane Society, whose taggers recently secured $20,000. —(The Toronto Globe.)

Better Prospects in the Prairies

There is more justification this year than for many previous years for the long-looked-for amelioration of farm conditions. Not for a long time has precipitation been more plentiful and it is anticipated that the seed-bed will be in a more satisfactory condition than for at least three years past. Every effort is being made by the Seed Commission to provide for the needs of the farmers who have been so hard hit by drought, with the result that new hope is springing up with the brightening of the prospects. (Regina Star, Cons.)

Canada and Trade

The countries which will first emerge from this unprecedented depression are those whose leaders are astute enough to see and grasp the new operations in trade and world business. That is why Canada should be on the job with respect to Russia instead of sitting around watching six million dollars of aluminum trade go to Sweden. We are letting our hard coal business go to the United States and letting wages and commodity prices go down and interest rates go up. Compared to England, the condition of this country is perfect.. Yet England, with few opportunities, is making herself the brightest spot in the world picture. (Vancouver Sun, Ind.)

THE EMPIRE

Britain's Surplus

The smallness of the surplus and the magnitude of the nation's effort to achieve it point to the seriousness of the situation ahead. The limit of taxation has been reached. The limit of the Government's wage reduction has been reached. How then can we make the budget balance next year without imposing a burden that would prove ultimately disastrous? 1. By increasing production at home. 2. By developing trade with the Dominions 3. By bringing about complete Free Trade between Britain and the Colonies.—(London Daily Express, Ind. Con.)

OTHER OPINIONS

The Ottawa Conference

The plan of procedure confines the Ottawa discussions to representatives of nations under the British flag. But Ottawa is to be followed by similar negotiations between Britain and other States. Denmark, Scandinavia and Holland have low tariffs, though capable of assimilation to that policy now adopted at Westminster, and are to be next approached. Other nations may be invited to join later on. A growing world circle of mutually lowered tariffs may thus develop. Freer trade relations generally are hoped for as the eventual outcome. The whole scheme is so vast that its implications have as yet only partially been realized, though Whitehall is being kept busy working out its program. It is a hope, nevertheless, containing much that is good and much, too, that is by no means impossible of fulfilment.—(Boston Christian Science Monitor.)

U.S. Wants No More Immigrants

The tide of immigration has been turned back to the Old World for the first time since records have been kept, with the full approval of the public. It is improbable that unrestricted immigration will ever again be permitted. The United States is now a grown-up nation. It does not need vast numebrs of immigrants to develop the country. What it really needs is opportunity to digest and nationalize the excessive number of aliens who are already here.—(Washington Post.)

Immigrants and Natives

Persons who an estors came to America two or three centuries ago hardly regard themselves as colonists. Nevertheless, as many have pointed out, the only real 100 per cent. Americans are the Indians. All the rest of us are immigrants or the descendants of immigrants. A more frequent recognition of this fact might lead to greater tolerance on the part of all. —(Worcester Telegram.)

117 Doukhobors Jailed Out West

Pitched Battle With Police Follows Attempt at Parade

Nelson, B.C.—With itching powder and short lengths of garden hose as their weapons, a force of 18 British Columbia police battled 200 nude Doukhobors, members of the Sons of Freedom sect, at Thrums, 16 miles from Nelson, early Sunday, taking 117 of the demonstrators prisoners, all of whom, 33 women and 84 men, were brought here in trucks from the scene of hostilities and lauded in jail.

The milling horde of nudists fought the police savagely, turning several streams of water on the officers. Finally the police got the upper hand and herded the subdued men and women into an orchard, where they were held until the arrival of trucks to bring them here.

On Saturday a parade in the nude was held at the same spot, and passing motorists were pelted with rocks by the Doukhobors. Police rushed to the scene but all was quiet when they arrived.

One woman was injured in the melee and she is in hospital. It is believed she was trampled during the battle.

The arrested paraders will be arraigned here during the week on a charge of parading in the nude. Under an amendment to the Criminal Code last year, persons guilty of this offence are liable to three years' imprisonment.

$3,650,000 University To Be Built in Rome

Rome.—Mussolini has approved the expenditure of 70,000,000 lire ($3,650,000) for the construction of a new University of Rome. The University was founded by Pope Boniface VIII in 1303. The present buildings were inadequate for modern requirements and the increased number of students as long ago as 1870, when the Italian Government dispossessed the Popes and made Rome the capital of United Italy. Several projects have been proposed from time to time, but they all failed to be carried into effect for a variety of reasons.

The present university is in the heart of old Rome, but the new one will be built o nthe outskirts of the city on vacant ground adjacent to the Policlinico, Rome's greatest hospital. It is believed that fifteen years will be built on the outskirts of the university. The necessary funds will be provided by the government, the city of Rome and several public bodies interested in the development of the capital.

Prince of Wales Cheers Unemployed in Speech

Newcastle, England. — Sympathy for the workless was voiced by the Prince of Wales in an impromptu speech, before 300 jobless at an unemployed centre at South Wales.

During his tour of the distressed industrial district he was moved to make his speech of sympathy.

"Let me wish you the best of luck," he said. "My sympathy is with you all. I sincerely hope the employment that used to be here will come back and hard times wil not continue very much longer."

The unscheduled speech surprised and pleased the hearers, who acknowledged it with cheers.

"Much that is deplorable in the present conditions can be bettered if we have a will to better it," the Prince told a large meeting of social workers here.

"Don't let us be content with what is accomplished or dismayed at what remains to be done. Let us just look for the task nearby and be ambitious to achieve it. Let us determine tonight to bring those energies we possess to the service of our fellow men."

Prairie Province Plant Less Wheat This Year

Winnipeg, Man.—Less acreage will be seeded to wheat in the prairie provinces this year than last, according to a report on crop conditions by a railway publication. Commenting on the estimated decrease, the report gives as the reason the "necessary increase in coarse grains seeding to replenish the exhausted feed supplies for a growing livestock market."

Work on the land has been proceeding steadily and seeding has begun, says the report. The seeding season begins the last of April in northern districts generally.

Britain and the Empire

While this country cannot segregate itself from the difficulties of Europe, neither can it afford to look to Europe alone. If Europe were to collapse our efforts elsewhere would be endangered, but meanwhile we must build up for ourselves a new framework of trade outside. For the first time the economic opportunities of the Empire have a definite chance of being realized. Ottawa is the key to a new door which may open the way to a new prosperity.—(London Sunday Times, Cons.)

COMFORT for COLICKY BABIES

... THROUGH CASTORIA'S GENTLE REGULATION

The best way to prevent colic, doctors say, is to avoid gas in stomach and bowels by keeping the entire intestinal tract open, free from waste. But remember this: a tiny baby's tender little organs cannot stand harsh treatment. They must be gently urged. This is just the time Castoria can help most. Castoria, you know, is made specially for babies and children. It is a pure vegetable preparation, perfectly harmless. It contains no harsh drugs, no narcotics. For years it has helped mothers through trying times with colicky babies and children suffering with digestive upsets, colds and fever. Keep genuine Castoria on hand, with the name:

CASTORIA

How to play Bridge AUCTION and CONTRACT

by Wynne Ferguson

Author of "PRACTICAL AUCTION BRIDGE"

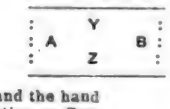
ARTICLE No. 21

The following hands have been misplayed in some way and have been sent in for criticism:

Hand No. 1

Hearts—6
Clubs—K, Q, 9, 8
Diamonds—7
Spades—A, Q, J, 9, 7, 6, 2

No score, rubber game. The hand is equally applicable either to Auction or to Contract.



Z dealt and bid four spades (a fine pre-emptive bid by the way), A doubled, Y passed and B bid five hearts. Z and now passed and Y doubled. When all passed what should Z have opened? This hand offers an excellent example of the proper opening lead after a double. If a player doubles after his partner has made a bid, he expects his partner to lead the suit he has bid. If a player has made a bid of his own and later doubles, he expects his partner to lead that suit.

In this example hand, Z has bid four spades and his partner, Y, has doubled five hearts. Under these conditions, Z should have opened his ace of spades. This opening would have set the contract one trick. Y had a singleton a spade and doubled with the expectation of a spade opening. Z, however, thought of none of these very good reasons for a spade opening. He opened the king of clubs and A B just made their bid and thus scored game and rubber. This hand is a fine example, so study it over carefully.

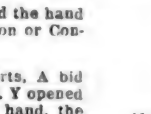
Hand No. 2

Hearts—5
Clubs—9, 8, 6, 3
Diamonds—7, 6, 2
Spades—A, K, 8, 7, 6

Hearts—K, 6, 2
Clubs—K, Q, J, 4
Diamonds—K, 8
Spades—Q, 10, 4, 2



No score, rubber game, and the hand is applicable to either Auction or Contract.

Z dealt and bid four hearts, A bid five diamonds and all passed. Y opened the king of spades and B's hand, the dummy's in this instance, was placed on the table. Z played the three of spades and A the five. Y should have reasoned somewhat as follows: "What sort of hand did Z have to justify a four-heart bid? If he had wanted a heart lead, he probably would have doubled. His four-heart bid probably consists of at least eight hearts with four honors and very little side strength. He also probably has a singleton spade and bid four hearts in the hope of shutting out a spade bid. Therefore, my best play is to lead the ace of spades and hope that Z can trump the third round of spades.

If Y had followed this line of reasoning, he would have set the contract one trick. He failed to do so, however, and led a heart at trick two, which A trumped. A then led trumps and scored game and rubber, losing only two spade tricks. This is another hand that should be carefully noted.

The play in the following hand should be easy but sometimes the easy ones are the ones that go wrong:

Hand No. 3

Hearts—K, Q, 10, 8, 4
Clubs—A, 4
Diamonds—J, 7, 6, 2
Spades—9, 5

No score, first game. The point of the hand is applicable to either Auction or Contract.

Z dealt and bid one heart, A and Y passed and B bid one spade. Z and A passed and Y bid two hearts. The final bid was four spades due to the fact that Y raised the heart bid twice more. He also doubled four spades. What should Z open?

This hand is similar to the first one in that Z has bid a suit and his partner, Y, has doubled. Under the rule set down in the analysis of that hand, Y certainly expected a heart lead by Z. Irrespective of that fact, however, Z should have led a heart in the endeavor to set up a trick in that suit before he lost his re-entry in clubs.

Instead of doing so, however, Z opened the ace of clubs and then led the four, hoping, as he said, for a ruff. This lead gave A B a game that they couldn't have scored if Z had opened the king of hearts.

Shakespeare's Choice of Words

We have a great living instance among writers, that the quality of a man's productions is not to be estimated in the inverse ratio of their quantity. I mean in the Author of Waverley, the fundity of whose pen is no less admirable than its felicity. Shakespeare is another instance of the same prodigality of genius; his materials being endlessly poured forth with no niggard or fastidious hand, and the mastery of the execution being (in many respects at least) equal to the boldness of the design.

As one example among others that I might site of the attention which he gave to his subject, it is sufficient to observe that there is scarcely a word in any of his more striking passages that can be altered for the better. If any person, for instance, is trying to recollect a favourite line, and cannot hit upon some particular expression, it is in vain to think of substituting any other so good. That in the original text is not merely the best, but it seems the only right one. I will stop to illustrate this point a little. I was at a l as the other day for the line in Henry V.

I could not recollect the word nice; I tried a number of others, such as old, grove, etc.—they would none of them do, but seemed all heavy, lumbering, or from the purpose; the word nice, on the contrary, appeared to drop into its place, and be ready to assist in paying the reverence due. Again,

Of him that hears it."

I thought, in quoting from memory, of "A jest's success," "A jest's renown," etc. I then turned to the volume, and there found the very word that of all others expressed the idea. Had Shakespeare searched through the four quarters of the globe, he could not have lighted on another to convey so exactly what he meant—a casual follow, sounding success!

I could multiply such examples, but that I am sure the reader will easily supply them himself; and they show sufficiently that Shakespeare was not (as he is often represented) a loose or clumsy writer. The bold, happy texture of his style, in which every word is prominent yet cannot be torn form its place without violence, is (one should think) the result either of vigilant pains-taking, or of unerring, intuitive perception, and not the mark of crude conceptions, or "the random, blindfold blows of ignorance."—From "Table Talk," by William Hazlitt.

The Shellfish Industry

Among Canada's growing resources are the shellfish industries, which together add several millions of dollars yearly to the Dominion's income. The most widely known, perhaps, is the lobster fishery in Atlantic waters. Scallops, also, on the East Coast provide a very considerable revenue.

In the Dominion's Pacific waters shrimps are taken in amounts of considerable value, as well as abalone. Clams, cockles, crabs, oysters and oysters and winkles are obtained from both coasts, in amounts of varying value.

New impetus has been given to the fishing industries of Canada in recent years because of emphasis on the iodine content of shellfish and the consequent virtue of the shellfish as preventives of goiter, anemia and other ills.

In literature I am fond of confining myself to the best company, which consists chiefly of my old acquaintance, with whom I am desirous of becoming more intimate; and I suspect that nine times out of ten it is more profitable, if not more agreeable, to read an old book over again than to read a new one for the first time.—T. Knowledge Is Power

Tommy was fond of squeezing tooth paste out of his shiny new tube. His mother, finding it necessary to limit the amount to the purpose in view, warned him one morning not to take too much.

Tommy—"How much may I take?"

Mother—"Oh, a little bit, about the size of a bean."

Tommy gave the tube a tremendous pinch and out shot a long ribbon of paste.

Mother—"Tommy! Do you wish to be punished? Is that the size of a bean?"

Tommy—"Sure, Mom. This is a string bean."

A woman's favorite sport is shopping for things she knows she can't afford—a man's is doing things he suspects he ought not to do. Maybe some of the flappers kiss so much now, before they're married, because they see how few mother gets. If wives and stenographers would only co-operate, no man would have a chance to get far from the dotted line between his desk and his door mat. A musician is defined as one who can hear new music and recognize the old scores it was stolen from. And even some of us who do not claim to be musicians can do that.

Little Brother—"She's been expecting you."

Nervous Suitor (beaming)—"Ah! that's good. Here's a quarter for you. How do you know she's been expecting me?"

124-Yr.-Old British Firm Makes Record Motors

London.—The makers of the engines which hold the world's land and air speed records started business 124 years ago as producers of printing machinery. Now known as the builders of Britain's Schneider Trophy, automobile and speed boat record breaking motors, the firm of D. Napier & Son was established in 1808. Within a few years its newspaper printing machinery was being extensively used in London and Ireland. A special machine for printing Bibles in rare Oriental languages, invented by D. Napier before 1830, is still in use today.

All kinds of machinery and instruments have been invented and manufactured by the company.

Automation coin weighing and sorting apparatus was perfected in 1851. Other manufactures included astronomical telescopes, guns, rolling mills, bulets, numbering machines, embossing and perforating gear for postage stamps, steam engines, tide guages, ships' compasses and centrifugal sugar machines.

The automobile enterprise was not launched until 1898, and it was a small step from the automobile motor to the airplane engine. The firm is now specializing in the production of high-speed aero engines.

MINARD'S "KING OF PAIN" LINIMENT

When PAIN Comes

WHAT many people call indigestion very often means excess acid in the stomach. The stomach nerves have been over-stimulated, and food sours. The corrective is an alkali, which neutralizes the acids instantly. And the best alkali known to medical science is Phillips' Milk of Magnesia.

One spoonful of this harmless, tasteless alkali in water neutralizes instantly many times that much acid, and the symptoms disappear at once. You will never use crude methods when once you learn the efficiency of this. Go, get a small bottle to try.

Be sure to get the genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia prescribed by physicians for 50 years in correcting excess acids. 50c a bottle—any drug store. (Made in Canada.)

A.F. & A.M.

Tuesday night was Inspection Night at River Park Lodge, A.F. & A.M., Streetsville, when about one hundred Masons were present.

Rt. Wor. Bro. Wm. Tansley, D.D.-G.M., of District A, Toronto, paid his official visit to the lodge at this meeting, and complimented Wor Bro. A. B. Bruce and his officers on the high quality of their work, in the exemplification of the first degree, when the Wor. Master had the pleasure of initiating his elder son, Reginald, into the order. This is the first time since the organization of the lodge, fifty-five years ago, that a Master of the lodge has performed the ceremony on his own son.

After lodge closed a pleasant time was spent at the banquet table with the Wor. Master presiding. Toasts were proposed and responded to as follows: "The King," God Save the King; "The Grand Lodge," proposed by Wor. Bro. W. G. Cooke, responded to by Rt. Wor. Bro. Wm. Tansley, D.-D.G.M., who like the Wor. Master, is an old railroad man, and during his address, gave the brethren a lot of information on railroads and other transportation facilities.

"Our Visitors," proposed by Wor. Bro. O. R. Church; responded to by Wor. Bro. A. McNabb, Milton; S. O. Rogers, Toronto; Knaggs, Long Branch, and Boyd, Toronto.

"The Candidate," proposed by Bro. J. W. Drennan, responded to by Bro. Reginald Bruce.

Bro. Hamilton, of Toronto, favored with vocal solos, while Wor. Bro. Gordon Jackson and Bro. W. H. Graydon assisted at the piano.

Among the visitors were members of lodges at Toronto, Cochrane, Port Credit, Elmvale, Mimico, Bridgebury, Milton, Brampton, and Bolton, England.

River Park Lodge has had many "special" nights in its long history, but this was one of the biggest and best.

OBITUARY

Dr. John Henderson

John Henderson, M.A., LL.D., veteran educationist, and one of the foremost Latin scholars in Canada, died in the Wellesley Hospital Sunday morning. He was in his eighty-seventh year.

Nearly a half-century of service to the cause of education, including twenty-five years as Principal of St. Catharines Collegiate Institute, during which time he wrote the authorized Latin textbook for Ontario high schools, was not long enough for Dr. Henderson. Ever since his retirement in 1909 he kept in touch with educational matters in the Province, and until a few months ago never refused to help young students overcome the difficulties of the language to which a great portion of his life was devoted.

Death came after a lingering illness, during which time two operations for cancer were performed. The second operation was performed a few days ago. Dr. Henderson resided in Clarkson at the home of his son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Percy Hodgetts, during the later years of his life.

Born in Selkirk, Scotland, John Henderson came to Canada with his parents when he was 9 years old. He attended public school in the Village of Chesterfield, Oxford County, where his father was Postmaster. Tutoring with Rev. William Robertson, Presbyterian minister of Chesterfield, supplemented the school education which finally resulted in his graduation from the University of Toronto with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, shortly after his twentieth birthday. At 24 John Henderson was an M.A., and Classics Master at Beamsville Collegiate. Two years later he accepted a post in St. Catharines Collegiate. From that year until his retirement in 1909, Dr. Henderson remained in St. Catharines.

Dr Henderson always cherished memories of his native land and until recently made yearly visits to Scotland. He was a Mason of many years standing, and an active member of Mississauga Lodge at Port Credit.

Scout Notes

BOY SCOUTS' CONCERT

Last Friday evening the first Streetsville Troop of Boy Scouts held their first annual concert in the Oddfellows' Hall, under the supervision of Dr. Montemurro, Scoutmaster, and Mr. Hec. Graydon, assistant. The hall was comfortably filled, and we would say that the concert was a great success. Dr. Montemurro acted as chairman and thanked those present and all others for the interest they had taken in the Boy Scout movement and for assistance rendered. The scouts participated largely in the program in choruses, instrumentals, etc., and made a real hit with their play, entitled, "The Seventh Doctor." Among those who assisted were: Mrs. R. H. Greig, Mrs. F. G. Reid, Miss M. Crozier, little Margaret Jarvis, a born reciter; Hec. Graydon and his Alfalfa Boys, and the double quartette.

This concert proves that there is plenty of good talent among the rising generation of Streetsville—all they need is the training.

Short speeches were made by Rev. R. J. W. Perry, Chaplin of the Boy Scouts; Mr. H. W. Gerhart, who gave credit to Dr. Montemurro; Rev. Mr. Perry and Messrs. Hec. Graydon, Omar Turney and Wm. A. Hardy, for the interest they had taken in the boys by helping to train them.

Among those present were Rev. Frank Vipond and a number of Boy Scouts from Toronto.

This troop of Boy Scouts was organized only last fall—six months ago, and now numbers forty-seven.

The troop is much indebted to the people of Trinity Church for the use of their spacious new Parish Hall.

The success of their first concert will be a great incentive to them to prepare for another one next winter, and we feel sure they will have the continued support of the public.

S.H.S. NOTES

The Literary Society held a meeting on Wednesday, April 27th. The program was provided by the pupils of First Form. The meeting was opened by singing "The Maple Leaf," followed by discussion of business.

Mae Treanor gave a recitation entitled, "The Bargain Sale." Rev. Perry gave a short address and presented the medals for oratory, to Alex. Dick and Lucy Schoid. A novelty orchestra composed of Kirby Burns, piano accordian; Joe Burns, Spanish guitar; Mildred Quennell, piano; and Eugene Gerhart, violin, rendered several selections which were enjoyed immensely. Eugene Gerhart recited W. H. Drummond's "Leetle Bateese." A very humorous play entitled, "April Fools," was staged by the following: John Wright, Mr. Dunbrown; Eugene Gerhart, Henry Smith; Elmer Workman, Henry Smith.

After more selections by the orchestra, the meeting adjourned with the singing of "S-m-i-l-e" and "The King."

With this meeting ends a series of programs presented by the separate forms in competition for a prize donated by our principal, Mr. McArthur. It has not yet been announced as to which is the winning form and everyone is anxiously waiting the announcement.

Sport is again beginning to take a prominent place among the activities of the school. Baseball practice has begun and a basketball court is being laid out. Mr. McArthur was manager of Ontario's champion basketball team for several years, and with the excellent material at S.H.S., he should be able to form a pretty fair team here.

May Day Celebrations
Custom of Pagan Times

May day was first dedicated to the Goddess Maie—the godess of fertility—many, many years ago. It was originally a pagan custom celebrating the return of spring. The Romans, too, as early as 238 B. C., because of a bad harvest instituted a similar custom of worship dedicated to their goddess Flora. The Roman festivities extended from April 28 to May 3 every year. This celebration was called Floralia or Floral Games.

In England during the Middle ages we find literary allusions to their May day celebrations. Very early on May day morning the girls and boys went to the woods "to fetch the flowers fresh." The expedition was called "going a-Maying."

They picked armfuls of flowers and flowering branches and returned to the village with them about sunrise with great spirit and accompaniments of horn and tabor. The windows and doors were hung with the branches and bushes were planted in the streets. A young suitor could so honor the residence of his lady love. In addition, the fairest maid of the village was crowned queen. She was throned under a floral arch and presided over the jubilation. This custom of selecting a May queen was also a relic of the Roman days.

Professor Would Take Laurels From Ericsson

Another patriotic myth has been forced to lower its colors in the face of careful historical research, writes William E. Rae in a Boston paper. The popular conceit that the United states led the rest of the world in the introduction of ironclad warships and that the dramatic combat between the Monitor and the Merrimac began this revolution in naval architecture which transformed navies the world over, receives no countenance from Prof. James Phinney Baxter, assistant professor of history at Harvard and master of the seventh house to be built under Harvard's new house plan.

"The dramatic qualities of this first fight between ironclads have led Americans ever since to exaggerate the effects of the battles of Hampton Roads," Professor Baxter says. "An examination of manuscript material in Paris, London and Washington shows clearly that France, not the United States, played the leading role in the introduction of ironclads."—Detroit News.

Governors' Conferences

The factors which brought about the establishment of the governors' conference were the growing centralization of power at Washington, the shifting, uncertain status of state's rights, and the lack of uniform laws. The first meeting was held at the White House in 1908. It was called by President Roosevelt, and the principal subject considered was the conservation of natural resources. The functions of the governors' conference are officially declared to be: Exchange of views and experiences on subjects of general importance to the people of the several states, the promotion of greater uniformity in state legislation, and the attainment of greater efficiency in state administration.

Contractor's Luck

One Nevada contractor now believes in the old saying, "Gold is where you find it." He took a job for removing old timbers from an abandoned mine; the work proved more difficult than expected and it appeared he was going to lose money on the contract. Removing a section of logging from an old drift, two sacks of ore tumbled out, apparently concealed there by a "high-grader" in the boom days. The ore was some of the richest found in the region and the contractor says his contract turned out to be one of the most profitable he ever had.

Sunshine All Day

At Aix-les-Bains there is to be seen a strange-looking building which has somewhat the appearance of a rather substantially constructed pagoda with an airplane perched upon its top. It is a scheme for the benefit of invalids who visit the place for its health-restoring qualities. The upper part of the building revolves in order that the persons in it may secure the greatest possible amount of sunshine. If the sun shines, the invalids occupying the rooms are enabled to get the benefit of its rays for the entire day.

Flares Keep Off Poachers

At the fish hatcheries of the West "mother" fish, kept in the rearing ponds are caught and stripped of their eggs during spawning season. The eggs, millions of them, are placed in glass jars, about 8,000 to the quart, and water at an even temperature runs through these constantly for from 90 to 120 days. The infant fish are returned to the pools and carefully reared to planting size. The pools are watched night and day, often by "bomb" or flare lights, to guard against poachers and to attract insects.

No Time to Waste

The insurance office was rung up by a very excited woman.

"I want to insure my house," she said. "Can I do it over the 'phone?"

"I'm afraid not. Perhaps we'd better send a man along."

"I've got to do it immediately, I tell you," came the frantic voice. "The place is on fire!"

Lacrosse Notes

Streetsville young men have organized a lacrosse team and are deep in the mysteries of the game. They have a vision of a lacrosse League with small towns and feel sure they can give a good account of themselves. They deserve credit for their ambition and should be encouraged by the villagers.

The officers elected at their first meeting are as follows——
Hon. Pres., Reeve Hope.
President, Mr. C.P.McArthur
Vice Pres., H.C.Gill
Manager, C.R. Evans
Sec.Treas., G. Clipperton
Coach, J.H. Nixon

The boys are out practising twice a week and will soon know how to handle themselves in a game. All they need is a box to play in because (as you doubtless know) this is going to be box lacrosse.

Castoria... for CHILDREN'S ailments

ARE you prepared to render first aid and quick comfort the moment your youngster has an upset of any sort? Could you do the right thing —immediately—though the emergency came without warning—perhaps tonight? Castoria is a mother's standby at such times. There is nothing like it in emergencies, and nothing better for everyday use. For a sudden attack of colic, or for the gentle relief of constipation; to allay a feverish spell, or to soothe a fretful baby that can't sleep. This pure vegetable preparation is always ready to ease an ailing youngster. It is just as harmless as the recipe on the wrapper reads. If you see Chas. H. Fletcher's signature, it is genuine Castoria. It is harmless to the smallest infant; doctors will tell you so.

You can tell from the formula on the wrapper how mild it is, and how good for little systems. But continue with Castoria until a child is grown.

The Aztec Mystery

A Thrilling Story of the Old West

BY MURRAY LEINSTER

SYNOPSIS.

Because the courts refuse to recognize his claim to the Aztec mine, Sonny Holman holds up the company's payroll. Janet Laurier who holds legal title to the mine, offers a reward for his capture. The Sheriff believes in Sonny's innocence and the two try to capture Garcias band, a group of desperadoes guilty of the ore stealing.

The sheriff is severely wounded and Sonny steals back into Molleville to reconnoiter. Janet is kidnapped by Garcia's band.

They rode on. The town was far behind. One mile, and sagebrush and range grass only surrounded them. Two miles. The path they had taken began to rise slightly, slanting upward toward the hille.

They swung into the climbing trail of the stage road, and two figures dropped behind as the cavalcade clattered into the little box canyon of the red stones. They drew into the shadows and dismounted. Starlight glittered momentarily on polished metal, rifle barrels of weapons withdrawn from saddle sheaths. The rest of the horsemen sped on. The metallic clatter of shod hoofs on stones ceased abruptly, and there was again the almost inaudible thudding of horses galloping over soft ground.

The two sentries nodded, grinning faintly. The horse that had followed them was drawing near. They saw sparks struck from its iron shoes by stones in the road.

"I will throw dice, Pedro," murmured a voice in Spanish, "for the saddle of this man."

"We will see him against the sky," replied the other tranquilly. "Shoot him from the saddle and gamble for horse and saddle both."

"Bueno." The first of the pair bent to his rifle, sighting along the barrel.

From the galloping men far ahead a second shrill whistle sounded urgently. The running horse leaped forward madly into the narrow opening of the canyon. The two men in ambush raised their rifles sharply. Then one of them gasped. "Madre de Dios! No hay hombre! There is no man!"

Clearly outlined against the starlit sky, for one photographic instant they saw the horse in mid-air. He was saddled and bridled. His mane and tail flowed splendidly, making a magnificent silhouette of horseflesh against a gem studded background. But he was utterly riderless, though he had followed the retreating raiders with the forthright and purposeful stride of an avenger.

The two rifles went off in panicky haste. The horse sped on down the canyon after the cavalcade to which the two sentries belonged. They heard his hoofbeats. Staring after him in superstitious terror, they again saw sparks struck from his iron shoes. Then the two sentries flung themselves upon their own mounts and fled as fast and as far as their horses would carry them.

The cavalcade itself went on swiftly and serenely. Garcia, in the lead, was grinning. Miles back he had felt a little stirring in the burden his horse carried. He had seen Janet's eyes open and felt her stifled shudder of horror. Then, too, a little later he felt her hand creep with desperate stealth to the revolver in his holster. Garcia had slipped his own hand over hers then, and closed upon it with a smoothly cruel grip that crushed her fingers and wrenched from her a grasp of pain. Then he released her.

She lay quiesent, shivering, after that. No word was exchanged between them. He could see her face as a pale oval in the starlight. His own features were obliterated by the shadow under the wide brim of his sombrero. But he felt her loathing and her terror as if they had been tangible things.

They rode, it semed, toward a blank wall of rock that rose to the heavens. They checked their horses and suddenly a deeper blackness loomed before them. Single file, they walked their mounts into a narrow cleft where dampness clung, and the rough walls seemed almost rasping against the horses' sides. For minutes they progressed slowly. Sometimes the way was narrow. Sometimes it widened to a breadth of yards. Once they seemed almost in a cavern, save that the sounds of their progress reverberated upward and were lost instead of re-echoing hollowly from a rocky roof. The way narrowed once more and suddenly ended. They were in the open again.

The opening, though, was no great canyon, or even a little valley. It was a pocket, a roughly circular pit with walls two hundred feet high, like the tubular crater of some long extinct volcano, or like the depression that might result if the roof of a monster cavern suddenly collapsed. This was, as a matter of fact, probably the origin of the place. There were ten acres or less in the enclosure and sparse shrubbery here and there among the stones.

Most of this had to be guessed at in the darkness. The only illumination came from two or three fires burning smokily under a ledge of rock which formed a natural roof at one side. A few crouching figures moved about among these fires and the smell of cooking spread pungently through the night.

"Take her," said Garcia curtly in Spanish to a folowed who had dismounted before him. "Take her to my hut."

She was slipped to the ground and caught in the greasy arms of a Mexican who grinned at her. She had closed her eyes and her pallor, visible even in the ruddy firelight, made it seem that she was still unconscious. The man who carried her licked his lips gloatingly. Another called mockingly to him. He paused to allow the other man to gaze upon her face and comment admiringly upon her beauty. Then he began to shoulder his way toward an adobe enclosure rising from the ground to the lodge which formed its roof.

A sharp challenge sounded. There were guards where the pasage ended, as where it began. A horse came proudly through the opening and stood staring among the moving figures in the firelight. A magnificent horse. A tall, and black, and sleek stallion with a silver mounted bridle and an ornamental saddle on his back. The horse was riderless.

A moment's silence. Then, "That ees Gunpowder," muttered Garcia, frowning. "An' we're that caballo ees, that Sonny 'Olman ees not far away."

He hurried to the entrance to give orders for doubled guards and to supervise the capture of the animal. He was delayed for perhaps ten minutes before he was reassured that the dreadful Sonny Holman was not with his horse this time. Then Garcia hurried to the hut that was reserved for himself. The worried frown returned to his forehead now and then as he went across the little enclosure, but he was smiling when he paused an instant beside a fire, and again when he opened the door and steped into the hut in which he had ordered Janet placed.

He preened himself as he swaggered in the tawdry, candle-lighted room. Garcia was not a bad looking man. His eyes were a trifle too close together, and perhaps he was inclined to stoutness, an inclination only his hard riding kept down. But in his gold embroidered jacket and bullion trimmed sombrero, with a silken sash about his waist and his cartridge belt elaborately ornamented with silver, he was a figure to make many a Mexican maiden's heart beat faster.

He bowed low, with an elaborate politeness and an ironic solicitude. "Senorita, I 'ope you weel enjoy your leetle stay 'ere."

Janet was shrunk against the wall, clutching her hands tightly to keep back the sickened horror she felt at his expression. Garcia smiled in mocking satisfaction. It was always more pleasant to deal with a woman in stark terror. That she might loathe him did not matter at all.

"Thees," said Garcia suavely, "thees ees our 'ouse, senorita. I 'ope, some day, to geev' you a better one, together weeth jewels to mek' you look more—mas hermosa than even now."

He smiled as the horror in her eyes deepened and she gasped.

"I 'ave time for onlee a kees—now," he said pleasantly. "I 'ave yet to geev' my orders for the night. Then I weel return to you. But—the kees, please!"

He took one step toward her. She shrank back still further, putting out her hands in terror. "G—go away—"

Garcia smiled, and caught her arms suddenly in a viselike grip. "It weel be wise," he purred, "for you to kees me varry nicelee, Janeet. Consider, W'en I am tired of you, you would not like me to geev' you to my hombres. They would beat you eef you angered them. But eef you are vairy nice to me, Janeet, I—"

He was drawing her closer to him. She fought him in voiceless terror. There was a sudden cool breath in the hut, and the soft sound as of a door being very quietly closed.

"Carramba!" snarled Garcia savagely. "You weel kees me or I br-reak your arm—so!"

As he twisted her wrist cruelly and her lips parted to scream, a soft, purring drawl filled the room. "Yuh' hangin' over hell by yuh eyelashes, Garcia," said Sonny's voice, infinitely cold and as deadly as death itself. "If yuh move, you'll drop in."

Dickens' Individuality Needed Declares English Novelist

London—Britain needs the novels of Charles Dickens even more in the present machine age than it did in less enlightened Victorian times, said Mr. J. B. Priestley, well-known English novelist, at the 120th anniversary celebrations here of the birth of Pickwick's author.

Everything in a Dickens novel—even the chairs and the sofas—was alive with intense individuality, so often lacking in modern fiction, said Mr. Priestley. This wonderful quality was even more important today in a world which, though better and saner, was becoming more and more machinelike in its way of living.

"The world that Dickens saw and walked about in has almost vanished," continued Mr. Priestley, "but the world he created goes on and on and more and more people find their way into it."

What the automobile has taught women about household lubrication

Experience with motor cars has taught women that moving parts must be protected against wear by a film of oil. Many of them haven't learned, however, that moving parts of sewing machines, vacuum cleaners, lawn mowers, washers, and other mechanical devices must also be protected against dirt and rust.

3-in-One Oil not only lubricates; it also cleans and protects. It is different from all others, because it is a scientific blend of three high grade oils — animal, mineral and vegetable. 3-in-One is the oil you should use on mechanical equipment if you want best results.

Don't risk your expensive household devices using oil that does only half the job. Insist on the old reliable 3-in-One. It costs little more to buy and much less to use. At good stores everywhere. For your protection, look for the trade-mark "3-in-One" printed in Red on every package.

Edinburgh To-day

AULD REEKIE IN SPRINGTIME.

In the spring of the year, when the longing to spend one's leisure out of doors is specially insistent, Edinburgh citizens are fortunate. Not only have they the Gardens, now starred with flowers, which form a green sweep from the south side of Princes street down into the hollow which was once the Nor' Loch and up again to the Castle Rock, but they are surrounded by hills which combine ease of access with a sense of remoteness from city life delightfully refreshing to the town dweller. Every week-end, parties of young people make their way up to the Pentland Hills where, after a short climb, they might easily imagine themselves in the heart of the Highlands, and where they can play the ancient game of golf over fields beside the Swanston home of Robert Louis Stevenson. The tree is still shown beside the little burn in a fold of the hill, where he used to sit and write, all Edinburgh pread below him. Closer to the city are other hills, and actually adjoining the famous Royal Mile, which runs from the Castle to the Palace of Holyrood House, is the King's Park, where rise in rugged grandeur Salisbury Crags—Scott's favorite walk—and that lion-shaped guardian of the capital, Arthur's Seat.

SCOTT LOVERS PLAN MEMORIAL.

Edinburgh expects to celebrate the centenary of Sir Walter Scott, which falls on September 21 this year, in a worthy manner. In appealing for £5,000, the Centenary Committee announces its intention of making the foundation of a Lectureship in Scottish Literature at the University of Edinburgh its principal project. In thus establishing a lasting memorial to one who did more, perhaps, than any other to make the past of Scotland live again in poetry and story, the committee is carrying on the Scott tradition in a way that he himself might well have chosen. The Gothic monument in stone to his memory in Princes street, beloved by many, earns its full meed of criticism from its modern architect and artist. It dates, as a living lectureship will not. To mark the centenary, other plans are afoot to bring Scott's works and the memory of the great-hearted man himself more vividly before the public. A masque of scenes from the Waverley Novels is in contemplation for the month of June, and there is to be an exhibition of pictures and manuscript of interest to Scott lovers in the National Gallery in July. School children will take part in a pageant, and there will also be a service in St. Giles' Cathedral and a ceremony at Dryburgh Abbey, in Scott's own Border country. A commemorative volume by Prof. H. J. C. Grierson is on its way.

WELCOMING THE STRANGER.

Edinburgh has always attracted the student from other lands, and the Scots have their own ways of making them welcome. One of these is through the medium of the Edinburgh International Club which, though mainly intended for students, is open to men and women of all nationalities upon election. Between thirty and forty races have been represented in the club during the past session. The roll call of countries is a feature of the club meetings, and vigorous handclapping greets the nationals of each country in turn, as they rise from their seats in answer to the call. From time to time, members of one country or another entertain the club in their own characteristic fashion. So there have been a Chinese evening with Chinese music and recitations, an English evening with English folk dances done is costume, and a Welsh evening with rare Welsh singers to provide the concert. Country dancing and community singing help to break the ice, and no effort is spared to make the young people, who are often birds of passage, feel at home in a strange land, and to show them the best side of Scottish home life during their stay in Edinburgh. It is hoped eventually to establish an International House, to act as the headquarters of the club and as a clearing house for other international bodies in the city.

CLASSICS FIND MANY READERS.

An analysis of what Edinburgh reads, as shown by the books taken out of Edinburgh public libraries, reveals that 50 per cent. of the total books circulated are books for study and information and volumes of standard literature. The remainder are fiction and juvenile books of a good general quality. The number of registered borrowers is around 146,300. E. A. Savage, chief librarian, recently denied the statements sometimes made to the effect that the works of famous authors are not read, or read frequently. All the evidence, he finds, is against this, and the works of the great authors are never out of print. Of Ruskin an exception is made. He is less read than formerly. George Eliot's Warwickshire tales retain their popularity, and the Trollope novel is now re-established. Mr. Savage reports, in fact, that most of the outstanding works in English literature are sure of a steady circulation, partly among those who have read them before, and largely among those growing up to appreciate them. The interest in translations of foreign masterpieces is maintained. The Edinburgh public libraries are arranged on the modern open shelf system, and readers have the advantage of handling any number of books, and of seeing them grouped according to subject, before making their choice.

FISHWIVES ADD NOTE OF COLOR.

In days when national costumes are fast disappearing, it is interesting to see the Newhaven fishwives on the streets of Edinburgh, wearing their timehonored striped petticoats and shawls, and carrying on their backs the creel, or deep fish basket, secured by means of a broad leather strap which passes across the forehead. Their rough woolen coats of navy blue form close-fitting bodices and wide skirts that open in front to show the striped petticoats, and they wear thick woolen stockings and stout shoes. On festive occasions, the sober blue of everyday wear gives way to gayer colorings, and many shawls of Paisley pattern are handed down from mother to daughter for generations and kept as heirlooms. The fishwife's outfit is part of her stock in trade, and there is no loubt that it has its value. Few housewives would buy fish from a stranger at the door unless she wore the traditional fishwife's costume, which is a guarantee of fine "haddy" and "caller herrin'" "fresh frae the Forth."—The Christian Science Monitor.

Talkies Foster Languages In Swedish Capital

Stockholm—International broadcasting and talking films have proved pewerful incentives to the study of foreign languages in Sweden. English is by far the most popular among them. One reason for this is the desire to keep in close contact with the doings of many friends and relatives who have emigrated to America. The other reason for the growing interest in the tongue of Shakespeare is that the majority of talking pictures shown in Sweden are in the English language. But besides the languages whose obvious usefulness makes them the natural object of linguistic pursuits there is a fair demand for courses in Italian, Spanish and Dutch at the Stockholm university. Italian is being studied chiefly by art and music devotees, while Spanish has a distinctiy commercial appeal for young people who are planning to explore the resources of Latin America. The Stockholm section of the Workmen's Educational Association has sixtythree English study circles with 934 participants, as well as several classes in German and French. That this interest in languages is steady as well as keen is best proved by the fact that these courses last three years and are conducted by most competent teachers.

Our Weekly Scout Law—No. 6

"A Scout is a Friend of Animals."

Of course he is! We have just held a Lone Scout Dog Show, and every entrant had to state why he particularly liked his own dog. Quite a lot of them stated that the reason is because "my dog likes me!"

The majority of animals can be tamed, some much more easily than others, and they all respond to kindness. No wild animal will attack a man on sight, unless it is desperately hungry, or else it is afraid for its young ones, or some other unusual reason.

Gig game hunters will tell you that lions and tigers in their wild state will practically always do their best to avoid meeting a man.

Quite a few animals are capable of showing very genuine affection for human beings, and many a dog, cat, horse, monkey, etc., has proved this. And, too, we have known some animals who show a lot more intelligence than some humans we have met!

So the animals are our friends if we will permit them to be so, and it is our duty to protect them as much as we can.

For this reason Scouts are taught that they should not hunt just for the sake of killing, but only for the purpose of obtaining food. That they should not destroy birds' nests, or take their eggs. A very much better idea, and one which provides a lot more fun, and is incidentally more difficult and requires a greater knowledge of the art of "stalking" (at which every Scout should be proficient), is to "hunt" birds and animals with a camera, and keep your collection of trophies in a snap-shot album!

So, Lonies, always be a friend to animals, and when you hear someone discoursing on the uselessness or badness of a certain animal, you can always find something good about it, if you think a moment.

New Prairie Pheasants Thrive

Some little time ago a number of Mongolian and Ring-necked pheasants were distributed in Southern Alberta, and Calgary Scouts have been watching for them on their various hikes. The Scouts have been able to report to the Fish and Game Association that the birds are in fine condition, and apparently finding suitable food in the kini-kinik and Juniper berries and grain picked up in the stubble fields.

A report has also been received that those pheasants liberated in the Glenmore district which were distributed by the clearing of timber and bush for the new reservoir have found refuge along the Elbow River and Fish Creek, on the Sarcee Reserve.

Junior Forest Wardens

A suggestion has been placed before the Dominion Headquarters of the Boy Scouts Association that the Lone Scouts throughout Canada should co-operate with the Forestry Association by undertaking the duties of Junior Forest Wardens.

The duties of these Wardens are to boost the protection of forests and trees, and to encourage the planting of trees in suitable spots, for reforestation, wind breaks, etc., to help in the location and extinguishing of forest fires, and to assist in the prevention of these fires, by the supervision of camping sites where hikers and campers are liable to cause a fire through neglect.

In addition to this the Wardens interest themselves in the preservation of wild life, fish and animals, in their locality.

Each Warden is given a certificate and a badge of office, and further particulars will be circulated to the Lonies at a later date.

Hospital Operation Removes Gloom

Camp

Don't forget the Lone Scout Camp, July 4th to 11th, at Ebor Park, near Brantford. This is your biggest opportunity of the year to meet your brother Lonies and your Scoutmaster. Send in your reservation at once.

Interested boys who would like to receive particulars of how to become a Lone Scout should write to The Lone Scout Department, Boy Scouts Association, 330 Bay Street, Toronto 2.

They will be glad to send you full information, and you will be under no obligation.—"Lone E."

Sunday School Lesson

ANALYSIS.

May 8. Lesson VI—Esau Sells His Birthright (Temperance Lesson)—Genesis 25: 27-34. Golden Text—Every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things. 1 Corinthians 9: 25.

I. CONTRASTED TYPES, vs. 27, 28.
II. A FOOLISH BARGAIN, vs. 29-33.
III. A PROFANE PERSON, v. 34.

INTRODUCTION—Jacob was the third of the patriarchs, and, like Abraham and Isaac, was regarded as a national hero. To us it may seem strange that the people of Israel found in Jacob one of their ideals. He was cunning, selfish and always had his eye on the main chance. Various considerations, however, should be kept in mind. For one thing Jacob was not a Christian, and it is unfair to measure him by Christian standards. He was a primitive nomad, though touched by the spirit of God, and destined to serve God's purpose. Some of his own countrymen, especially in later generations, were aware of his grave defects. See Hosea, chap. 12. Paul also was so conscious of his shortcomings that he drew the conclusion that God chose him for some other reason than that of human merit, Romans 9: 10-14. It is just possible, therefore, that the Israelite people regarded Jacob as a national type in which they saw their own character reflected, rather than as an example always to be followed. His character stands in strong contrast to that of Esau. The two brothers are presented as rivals. The Bible never glosses over the fact that even brothers, springing from the same parents, may be divided by bitterest strife where one would expect only love. Such rivalry is weirdly fascinating because it is so true to life.

I. CONTRASTED TYPES, vs. 27, 28.

Jacob and Esau chose different occupations. Their choice revealed at the outset the natural bent of their dispositions, which their vocations, once chosen, tended to confirm. Esau was a hunter; Jacob was a shepherd. Jacob is called a "plain" man; the Hebrew word here suggests that his was a settled mode of life. Esau loved the open spaces, with the exhilaration of the chase; Jacob preferred his tent, and his flocsk and herds. The hunter slays the animals which he takes in the chase; the shepherd keeps and tends his animals. The hunter often comes home exhausted, and unsuccessful in the hunt; the shepherd has always something to eat. If the hunter has enough to eat today, he does not think of tomorrow and its needs; the shepherd is accustomed to think not only of today, but of tomorrow, and of the day after. Thus Esau's decision to sell his birthright (vs. 32, 33) was simply the compression of his mode of life into a single act.

II. A FOOLISH BARGAIN, vs. 29-33.

The figure of Esau, the hunter, returning home tired and hungry, and ready to seize the nearest food at hand, is depicted with great dramatic power. He points to the dish prepared by Jacob, and asks for "the red, the red—this here," and in asking for it he indicates that he is ready to "swallow" it. Why doesn't he call the dish by its name—lentils? Because in his great impatience he does not take the time to examine the contents of the dish; he merely notices its red color. In the Hebrew there is at this point a clever word-play. The Hebrew word for "red" is "adom"; Esau's other name is Edom, and he is regarded as the father of the Edomites, 36: 8, 19. Esau is all impulse. This is shown in v. 32, when he says, "Behold, I am going to die!" Jacob, on the other hand, is crafty and farseeing. He uses the situation for his own advantage. He thinks of the day when his father will die and Esau will become the head of the house through the law of the birthright. According to the Hebrew view, the firstborn, whether of man or of animals, was the finest of the offspring. Preference also was shown to the eldest son of the Hebrew family. When the father died, the family possessions were left undivided, and the eldest son stepped into the father's place. He became the lord of his brothers; they paid him such homage as was fitting to his position, 27: 29. Esau's is, therefore, a great advantage. But Jacob now plans to win by his wits, and for a trifling consideration, the advantage that has been denied him by nature. Doubtless Jacob is mean and ungenerous in taking advantage of his brother's impetuous nature. None the less, Esau's decision to part with his birthright is ultimately his own responsibility. Jacob insists upon ratifying the bargain with an oath. For it is characteristic of the crafty man, that he does not readily trust other men. When Esau gives his oath, the bargain is closed for good and all. He has renounced for all time his claim to the birthright.

III. A PROFANE PERSON, v. 34.

The scene closes with Esau in a jaunty, light-hearted mood. He has eaten and drunk. His appetite is satisfied and he is well content. The writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews (12: 16) calls him a "profane person." The late A. B. Davidson says of him.: "Passionate, impatient, impulsive, incapable of looking before him, refusing to estimate the worth of anything which does not immediately appeal to his senses, preferring the animal to the spiritual, he is rightly called a 'profane person'." There does not seem to be much choice between the two brothers, for in this incident both have played an unworthy part. "Deep reflections," says MacFadyen, "convinces us that Jacob is essentially the bigger man of the two, and that in him there are larger possibilities for good. Esau is the creature of the moment, governed by his immediate needs and impulses and incapable of taking long views; Jacob can take the future into account; he lives and works and schemes for that. Esau's actions are determined by his appetites, Jacob's by his ambitions."

Women of To-day Successfully Fight Cancer of Breast Menace

There is no better sign of the average high intelligence of the women of this country and no better evidence of the value of publicity of correct information in the daily press than the change that has taken place in the status of cancer of the breast today as compared with thirty years before in the decade between 1800 and 1900.

Before 1900 and since 1890 the operative treatment for cancer of the breast was perfected. Yet, during that decade, in the best clinics of civilized countries throughout the world the actual incidence of cancer among every hundred women entering the clinic complaining of some trouble in the breast was eighty. Today in a number of clinics in this country, in localities where there has been publicity through the daily press for seventeen years, the incidence of cancer has fallen from eighty to seventeen, the hopeless cases of cancer from more than fifty to less than five per cent., and the actual five year cures have risen from less than ten to more than sixty per cent. This tremendous change for the better has nothing to do with the improvement in surgery or the advent of radiation (x-ray or radium). But it cannot be accomplished unless the diagnosis, the surgery and the irradiation are of the best that can be obtained anywhere.

The enlightened woman should have no fear of cancer of the breast, if she reports for an examination the moment she observed anything unusual in the breast or nipple, or in the region of the armpit or axilla. It is safer to pay attention to anything unusual, no matter how insignificant—pain without a lump, a lump without pain, any change in the nipple, any irritation, any discharge from the nipple, pulling in of the nipple, anything that can be felt in the breast, like a cake, or something that could not be felt before; any lump under the armpit. Go at once to your family physician and request a thorough examination. If you are properly educated, you will have selected your medical adviser, your breast will have been examined at the last periodic examination and your personal physician will be familiar with the normal condition of your breast. In a large number of cases of this kind your selected family physician will be able to decide that the condition of the breast which has attracted your attention has no relation to cancer, and, except for irritations of the nipple, no treatment is necessary. In a certain portion of the cases the general practitioner, after examining your breast will decide that it is safer for you to be studied by a specialist. In a group of one hundred women who seek an examination the moment they are warned and, after being examined by one or both doctors, the chances are that seventy-five per cent or more will require no operation or irradiation. From the standpoint of greatest safety and protection, a number will be requested to return for a second examination. Among this enlightened group of women properly examined, in about twenty-five per cent. there will be a definite lump and a simple operation in a hospital will become necessary. In lumps of this kind it is impossible to detect the presence of cancer by any method of examination previous to operation. Do not consent to any form of blood test for cancer or preliminary treatment with any serum, for protection against cancer. Your surgeon should tell you before the operation that there are just two kinds of lumps. In one you remove the lump only and save the breast. In the other you remove the breast by the complete operation as the best protection against a return and the best assurance of a permanent cure. In addition, in some instances it is a good plan after operation to have protective irradiation with x-rays or radium.

Women who have borne children should be best protected, because they will become familiar with the value of periodic examination before and after the birth of their children. They will be instructed as to the absolute necessity for protection against cancer of the cervix to submit to periodic pelvis examinations, and at this time the physician should examine the breasts and give them the correct information that every woman should have about the care of her breast and nipples.

Publicity in regard to the breast, the skin and the mouth is giving evidence of its value in many of the clinics of this country today, and is the chief reason for these articles.

Germany Helps Jobless Build Suburban Homes

Berlin.—Plans for the construction of 16,000 wooden houses in the suburbs of industrial cities have been announced by the federal commissioner for suburban settlements.

The houses with furniture and equipment are to cost a total of $11,425,000, an average of $714. Construction will be of wood and each of the houses is to consist of a living room, a large bedroom, two small bedrooms, stable, cellar, and sheds for storage of tools and feed.

Each settler will be required to give his own work in the construction of his house. The project is intended largely for the assistance of the unemployed.

Cambridge Buys Land To Preserve Beauty

Cambridge, Eng.—Another step in the process of preserving Cambridge from the possibilities of future industrial or commercial exploitation has been taken in the purchase by the Cambridge Preservation Society of 230 acres of the Coton Manor Farm, situated to the southwest of this town.

The society now owns 613 acres in the vicinity, largely owing to the generosity of the Pilgrim Trust, which considers that it is "of national importance to preserve as far as it is still possible the beauty and dignity of the settings of our ancient universities."

Boldness

It is better by a noble boldness to run the risk of being subject to half of the evils which we anticipate, than to remain in cowardly listlessness for fear of what may happen.—Herodotus.

Oak Tree 1,200 Years Old

Douen.—An unusual oak tree, containing two chapels within its huge trunk, will celebrate its 1,200th year of existence on July 2, at the village of Allouville-Belefosse, near here. Nine men with their arms extended are barely able to encircle the base of the tree. Of course, its exact age is lost in the mists of history, but experts declare it must be approximately 1,200 years old.

In the first chapel is a statue of the Virgin presented by the Empress Eugenie during the Second French Empire. An elegant wooden stairway surrounds the oak and leads to the second chapel which is known as La Chapelle du Calvaire. It is related that the tree was visited by Charles II. of England, and also by Louis XV.

He—"What do you think your father would say if I asked him for your hand now?"

She—"Now's the very best time. He's just paid $100.00 for my new outfit and he'd let anyone have me that asks."

$40 profit from one Telephone Call

The local dealer had offered Jim Ross a price for his fat steers, but Jim was canny. He thought he ought to get a better price.

So he telephoned in to the stockyards — and found that beef had gone up two cents. He took his steers in that day and made $40 extra profit. The telephone call cost him 35 cents.

No wonder Jim said to his wife that night when he got home for a late supper: "It's lucky we've kept our telephone."

A GOOD HEART

It was not until 1628 that Harvey published his discovery of the circulation of the blood. Previous to that time, the function of the heart was not understood. It was known to be an important organ, and was credited with being the centre of some of our emotions. We retain in our language such expressions as "a broken heart" and "from the bottom of my heart" which are evidence of the old belief.

The heart is an essential organ. Upon its smooth running and its capacity to meet the demands thrown upon it, depends much of our ability to work, play and enjoy the activities of life.

Damage to the heart leads to a curtailment of activity; progressing further, it may cause pain and bring the sufferer to the point where he becomes dependent upon others as a result of no longer being able to do his share of work.

It is obviously desirable to prevent damage of the heart. To do so, means that we prevent suffering and keep the individual fit to work and to be self-supporting, which means that a good heart is a great asset.

The heart is made up of several parts, and each part may be damaged in more than one way. There are numerous conditions which may lead to heart disease, but there are a few oustanding or principal causes to which attention is directed.

The chief cause of heart disease in early life is acute rheumatism. Growing pains and chorea or St. Vitus dance are apparently due to the infection which causes rheumatism. It seems that the germ of rheumatism may gain entrance through infected tonsils, and so it is a responsibility of parents to see that the mouths and throats of their children are kept in a healthy state.

Improper habits of living lead to the earlier breaking down of the essential organs of the body. The adult who eats too much, who sleeps too little and who exercises little or not at all, throws a strain on such organs as his heart, and this brings about a premature old age.

Reasonable attention to the few simple fundamentals of healthy living and the avoidance of over-indulgences is the part of wisdom and affords a means of prevention.

A damaged heart must be protected if it is not to become worse. The activities of life must be limited and kept within the capacity of the damaged organ. If this is done, the heart will be, in most cases, equal to the demands which are thrown upon it.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

Here and There

Exports of Canadian wheat during the month of March totalled 9,920,634 bushels, of which only 71,288 bushels were routed through United States Atlantic seaboard ports.

Canada's butter exports to the British Isles and other countries totalled 10,680,000 pounds in 1931, as compared with only 1,180,400 pounds in 1930.

Canada's bread and bakery products industry showed production to a value of $73,594,894 during 1930, through 2,698 establishments of which 1,071 are located in Ontario and 868 in Quebec.

March was the year's best month, to date, for pig iron production in Canada, with a total of 17,989 tons, at a rate of 580 tons per day, as compared with 362 tons per day in February and 332 in January.

W. G. Chester, dean of Canadian railroad veterans, has just retired, in Winnipeg, after 25 years in the service of the Canadian Pacific Railway and another 25 with the Brotherhood of Railway Conductors.

Excursions run by the Canadian Pacific Railway between various points in Eastern Canada have met with unqualified success. To date, some 17,000 persons have been carried on visits and holidays, over different week-ends, by this means.

The 1931 census shows 728,244 occupied farms in Canada, or 17,154 more than were shown when the count was taken in 1921. Quebec, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia are responsible for the increase, with the last-named in the lead.

Navigation opened in Montreal on April 18, with the Canadian Pacific freighter Beaverburn the first trans-Atlantic ship in port. Her master Captain E. Landy, receiving the gold-headed cane, presented annually by the Harbor Commissioners, for this exploit.

Passenger honors in the trans-Atlantic service also fell to the Canadian Pacific, when the liner Montclare docked on the afternoon of Tuesday, April 19, as the first passenger ship to arrive in Montreal. Thus the C. P. R. claims double honors for the 1932 season.

Liverpool witnessed an unique event on April 5, when 750 British boys and girls disembarked from the Canadian Pacific liner Montrose, after a special cruise in the Mediterranean. A great London daily newspaper has offered prizes for the best essays written on the trip.

Some weird stories have been told of feline sagacity, but the open record would appear to be held by a Siamese cat, which "stowed away" on the Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Britain, when she left England to go to New York to begin her world cruise last winter. Pussy finally deigned to show herself when the ship was half-way through her long trip. The Empress got a rousing welcome in New York when her trip was over, and the much-travelled cat was delivered to its owner, in the Southern States. (837)

A WEEK IN FAIRYLAND

Nobody ever entirely loses that childhood illusion of a land which surpasses in loveliness, surprises and happiness anything that the mind is capable of envisaging; the land of make-believe, which everyone hopes may someday become a reality. It is not too much to say that the glorious Rockies, Canada's great holiday territory, renowned throughout the world, are as close to this elusive dreamland as anything that mortal man is likely to discover. Special arrangements for the coming season now bring a week in this modern fairyland well within the reach of the average traveller, with Banff and Lake Louise, on the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, as base-points and a wide range of every varying scenery and cosy bungalow camps beyond. The "six-and-a-half days' tour" has already become a slogan among those planning their summer vacation, embracing, as it does, not only the two famous hotels at Banff and Lake Louise, but such well known points of interest and beauty as Johnston Canyon; Moraine Lake and the immortal Valley of the Ten Peaks; the Lakes in the Clouds; the Plain of the Six Glaciers; the Great Divide; Wapta Lake Bungalow Camp; Yoho Valley and Bungalow Camp; Takakkaw Falls; the historic Kicking Horse; Mount Stephen; Emerald Lake and the wonders of the great mountains near Field, B.C. Easily reached from all points by Canadian Pacific Railway, main line points are linked with the camps in the inner mountains by the Brewster Transport Company, past masters in comfort and conveyance for the traveller in the valleys and passes of the mighty Rockies. Automobile drives, trail rides and hikes combine with bright entertainment in the evenings to make the holiday something to be remembered for a lifetime.

Errors That Got Away From the Proofreader

Under the heading of typographical errors, in "The Handy Book of Literary Curiosities," written by William S. Walsh and published by J. B. Lippincott company in 1893, there are some facts which might be labeled "In extenuation of Larry the Linotyper." They apparently prove that Larry's sins of nowadays are venial compared with some of those of former times.

Here are some examples, with what should have been printed indicated in some cases:

"The distinguished traveler died in the richness of sin." (In the interior of Asia.)

"She was a lady whose manners would alarm a drowning man." (Adorn a drawing room.)

"Links, bonds and stripes for the violent kind of specters." (Lines, bands and striae in the violet part of spectra.)

"Drunkenness is jolly." (Drunkenness is folly.)

"Sir Robert Peel and a party of fiends were shooting pheasants in Ireland."

"Woman—without her man—is a brute."

"He enters on his head, his helmet on his feet, sandals on his brow, there was a cloud in his right hand, his faithful sword in his eye, and angry glare he sat down."

"The body was taken to Hell for interment." (Hull for interment.)

Part of a woman's complaint to a Buffalo newspaper read: "Wherever I refer to my honored countrymen as 'white males' I am reported as having addressed them as 'white mules.' All these are very good jokes if credited to the printer's devil, but not to those who represent an unpopular idea and carefully weigh their words."

Efficacy of Prayers Measured by Numbers

The devout people of Tibet, and that is almost the entire population, spend much time and ingenuity in their prayers. Their prayers, to the glorification of Buddha, seem to be a race to work off the greatest possible number of prayers, and the one who has the largest number to his credit has prospects of the greatest reward. One man has the supplication carved on a board which is secured to a long pole. He spends hours every day dipping the board into the water. Every dip is a prayer. Another has a whirling windmill, which he holds aloft with the proper inscription upon it, and every revolution is a prayer. Women moving about in their ordinary pursuits carry little whirligigs which they keep in motion constantly. Every whirl is a prayer. The shoulder blades of the yak present a broad surface. These are properly inscribed and hung in groups of a dozen, from the branches of a tree overhanging a footpath. Travelers cannot get by without brushing them aside and this disturbance means several prayers. Sturdy ones climb to the mountain top and plant prayer flags at the summit.

Parade Into Fields

Bulgaria is 5,000 red-roofed villages strewn along streams, scattered in clusters over plains, straggling along the crest of hills, and all the work, order, love and sacrifice, song and prayer that fill them.

On May mornings Bulgaria is a stream of grandparents, parents and children, flocks of sheep, herds of cattle, droves of pigs and geese, all pouring forth from their appointed places. Mother carry babies in tiny hammocks on their backs, and on reaching the fields hang them to the flowering branches of leafy trees or to shaded tripods. If the journey is long, donkeys carry the swaddled infants in saddlebags.

Old and New

In Europe modernism and medievalism have a way of living side by side in the same city, each unconscious and uncomprehending of the other. This is seen to the best advantage at Mentone on the Riviera. The centuries have not changed this medieval city. Time seems to have woven it into a tapestry of venerable cathedrals, moss-covered houses and primitive little pathways, they unknowingly or generously call streets, and all that Old Mentone knows of Young Mentone is that she comes at certain times of the year with her manifestations of wealth and gayety to live in the luxurious hotels and spacious villas, a terra incognito to her neighbor.

Reason for Postmarks

Postmarks were first placed on envelopes as an official marking. Later they were used to cancel the postage stamps and give place and time of mailing. The post office department says that the records of the department do not show when the postmark was first used. As early as 1798 the postal laws and regulations required the postmasters to mark letters deposited in their offices for mailing with the name of the office. This mark might be either stamped or written. Up to 1840 in some cases written postmarks were still in use.

Conceit

No matter how good you may think you are, it is the judgment of others that establishes your value. It is right to be self-confident to a degree, but not beyond that degree. In the long run it pays to take your job—not yourself—seriously.—Grit.

DECISIONS RESPECTING NEWSPAPERS.

Court decisions respecting newspaper subscriptions are very clear. Any person who takes a paper regularly from the post office, whether in his name or another's or whether he has subscribed or not, is responsible for payment. If a person orders his paper discontinued he must pay all arrears or the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made, and then collect the whole amount, whether the paper is taken or not. The courts have decided that refusing to take newspapers or periodicals from the post office or removing and leaving them unpaid, is prima facie evidence of intention of fraud.

It cost John Kelley, of Malton, $16.25 for driving a motor car recklessly. The alternative was ten days in jail. He forfeited his liquor permit.

Dr. Norman M. Heggie died at Jacksonville, Florida, on May 8th. He was a son of the late Dr. David Heggie, of Brampton, and a brother of Dr. W. C. Heggie, Toronto.

A number of our villagers attended the funeral service of Mrs. Mary Hustler, mother of Mrs. Sol Cordingly, on Monday evening at 8 o'clock. The service was conducted by her minister, the Rev. G. H. Purchase, assisted by Rev. Boyd, of Norval. The remains were borne, on Tuesday morning, by motor to a cemetery near Petrolia, Ont., to rest beside her husband, who passed on some years ago.

The Streetsville Alfalfa Boys, a very competent organization of musicians, gave a splendid entertainment at the "fourth degree" of the Port Credit Royal Arch Masons last Friday night, playing and singing popular pieces. These young men are very popular and are receiving numerous calls. The orchestra consists of Messrs. Hec. Graydon, Herm and Lloyd McClintock, King Hollingshead, Fred and Geo. Buckingham, Joe and Kirby Burns.

United Church

A capacity audience enjoyed Mother's Day Service in the United Church, on Sunday morning, the choir loft was filled with members of the C.G.I.T. group and a number of boys belonging to the Intermediate classes of the Sunday School, who sang effectively under the leadership of Mrs. C. H. Falconer. A beautiful selection was rendered by a large number belonging to the Primary Department, under the superintendency of Mrs. J. D. Steen, and Mrs. John Speers. The Mothers' day message by the minister, Mr. Purchase, was very appropriate, who based his remarks on the words found in Solomon's Song, Chapter three, verse eleven, "Behold King Solomon with the crown wherewith his mother crowned him."

NOMINATION MEETING

A meeting of the duly qualified electors of the village of Streetsville will be held at the Town Hall tomorrow, Friday evening, May 13th, at seven-thirty, for the purpose of nominating and electing a person to fill the vacancy in the council caused by the resignation of John W. Drennan. It is hardly expected that there will be a contest, but you never can tell what might happen in Streetsville.

J. W. DRENNAN, NEW CLERK

On Monday, at a special meeting, the village council appointed Mr. John W. Drennan, ex-councillor, as clerk and Treasurer of the Village of Streetsville, duties to commence at once.

LAKEVIEW

While walking home along the Toronto-Hamilton Highway Sunday morning, Lawrence Berkeley, Northmount Avenue, Lakeview, was struck by a hit-and-run motorist, and left unconscious on the side of the road. Some time after he was picked up by T. Smith, 20 Keele Street, Toronto, who saw him as he was driving by. After regaining consciousness Berkeley was able to give his address, and was conveyed to his home. Questioned as to the accident, he was unable to give the police any information as to the car which struck him. He sustained body injuries, which necessitated medical attention, but his condition is not serious.

Leaving his breakfast cooking on the stove, William Wright, Shore Drive, Stop 11, Lake Shore Road, went out to his garage for a minute and returned to find the house in flames. He was the only member of the family at home at the time.

Port Credit firemen, under Chief W. Newman, answered the call but were unable to save the five-roomed frame building which was destroyed. They prevented the fire from spreading to adjoining houses, however. Loss is estimated at $3,000.

COW'S HORN DATED 1836

Walking on the Usher Stevenson farm, Trafalgar Township, John McSparron picked up a cow's horn, which closer examination showed to be an old powder horn. Pictures of guns, birds, fish and flowers were scratched on the horn by some sharp instrument. The date, 1836, is also shown, and the initials "R. McK."

TO-DAY WAS RED CROSS DAY

Red Cross Day was observed throughout the Empire today, the birthday of Florence Nightingale, who inspired the founding of the society. In addition relief work was being carried on. More than 6,000 ex-service men had been lodged and fed in the society's hostels. Clothing and other relief had been furnished to 70,000 people.

The Meaning of Culture

Not many years ago I happened to notice the review of one of my books in some weekly periodical. The writer sneered at me for travelling round Europe with a portmanteau full of culture on my back. This made me reflect. What does the reviewer mean by culture? What is it I am supposed to stagger under like a pedler's pack? And then, what do I mean by culture? How do I value the wares I carry on my shoulders? Reflection convinced me that the reviewer and myself held different opinions about what we both call culture.

It is probable that when people use this word, nowadays, it signifies for them some knowledge of history and literature, intelligence refined by considerable reading, and a susceptibility to the beauties of art and nature. But words which have been overworked, or which have passed into the jargon of cliques, are apt to acquire a secondary and degraded meaning with the general public. And this has been the case with culture. All the good things it implies in common parlance are understood to be alloyed with pedantry, affectation, aesthetical priggishness.

It is believed that the cultured person, like the dilettante of a previous century, will rave about the Correggiosity of Correggio, the symbolic depth of Botticelli, the preciousness of Ruskin's insight into Tintoretto. Or, if he does not take that line, he may be expected to possess a multifarious store of knowledge about all periods of all the arts and literatures, and to be perpetually parading this knowledge in and out of season.

The last sort of stuff is, probably, what my reviewer accused me of hawking over Europe. But this, I am certain, is not what I mean when I talk of culture.

Judged by the etymology of the word, culture is not a natural gift. It implies tillage of the soil, artificial improvement of qualities supplied by nature. It is clearly, then, something acquired, as the lovelinesses of the garden rose are developed from the briar, or the "savage-tasted drupe" becomes "the suave plum" by cultivation. In the full width of its meaning, when applied to human beings, culture is the raising of faculties—physical, mental, emotional, and moral—to their highest excellence by training. In a particular sense, and in order to distinguish culture from education, it implies that this training has been consciously carried on by the individual. Education educes or draws forth faculties. Culture improves, refines, and enlarges them, when they have been brought out. Finally, although moral and physical qualities are susceptible of both education and culture, yet it is commonly understood, when we use these terms, that we are thinking of the intellectual faculties. This is specially the case with culture.

I will therefore define culture, for the purpose of this discussion, as the raising of previously educated intellectual faculties to their highest potency by the conscious effort of their possessors.

In its most generalized significance, culture may be identified with self-effectuation. Men of true culture, as distinguished from that false thing which usurps the name, may possess diverse intellectual temperaments, and reach widely separated points of vantage. But they agree in this, that each has acquired freedom from bondage to cliques and schools.—From "In the Key of Blue and Other Prose Essays," by John Addington Symonds.

Soybeans

Soybeans Can be Grown for Hay or for Seed

(Experimental Farm Note)

For hay the usual method of planting is to drill solid, using the ordinary grain drill. This will requre about 1½ to 2 bushels of seed per acre, depending upon the variety and the size of seed.

Soybeans make an excellent emergency hay crop in the event of clover or alfalfa failure and under average conditions should yield from 1½ to 2½ tons of hay per acre, depending, of course, upon the variety used and the locality. The crop should be cut for hay when the seeds in the pods are about half formed.

Soybean hay has a feeding value equal to alfalfa hay.

For seed the crop can be drilled solid, although it is usual to plant in rows about 28 to 30 inches apart. The grain drill can be used and the width of rows adjusted by covering the feed cups not in use. The plants in the rows should be about 3 inches apart and this rate of planting requires about 30 pounds (½ bushel) of seed per acre.

Cultivation should commence just as the beans are coming through the ground, using spike tooth harrow. This will destroy freshly germinated weeds and break any crust which may have formed. Row cultivation should be frequent enough to keep down weeds. This is essential for the production of a good seed crop.

Southwestern Ontario is especially suitable for soybean seed production. In this district, at the Dominion Experimental Station, Harrow, several of the varieties tested have averaged over 30 bushels of seed per acre over a six-year period.

Varieties recommended are A. K. and-Early Korean for extreme Southwestern Ontario; O.A.C. No. 211 and Manchu for Western Ontario generally, and Mardarin for Eastern Ontario and districts with similar conditions.

Generally speaking soybeans should be planted about the middle of May or when danger from frost is over. Inoculate the seed with the proper culture if planting the crop for the first time.

Light Waves in Iron May Explain Strength

Washington.—The strength of iron, a group of scientists was told, may be caused by a peculiar kind of light wave within the dark, dense metal.

Dr. Francis Bitter, of the Westinghouse Company, described his discovery of these light waves before the American Physical Society. He said they are forms of radiation by which atoms in metal exchange energy, and by which they are closely tied together.

Scientists long have known that atoms in iron are lined up in regular ranks and columns like soldiers. Now Dr. Bitter has found that the atom-soldiers apparently also "keep in step" as they move about, and that their different "uniforms" or magnetic properties are distributed with regularity through the ranks. Atoms behaving in much the same way, may explain the strength of other metals that can be magnetized, such as nickel and cobalt, and perhaps some little-understood characteristics of liquids, gelatines and even living cells.

When the secret of strength in metals and other substances becomes fully understood, he predicted, it will be possible for scientists to produce and increase that strength as they desire.

The Aztec Mystery.

A Thrilling Story of the Old West

BY MURRAY LEINSTER

SYNOPSIS.

Because the courts refuse to recognize his claim to the Aztec mine, Sonny Holman holds up the company's payroll. Janet Laurier, who holds legal title to the mine, offers a reward for his capture. The sheriff believes in Sonny's innocence and the two try to capture Garcia's band, a group of desperadoes guilty of stealing ore. The sheriff is severely wounded. Sonny returns to Moleville to reconnoitre. Janet is kidnapped by Garcia's men. Sonny follows them and breaks into Garcia's hut.

CHAPTER VIII.

Garcia was frozen by the very first word. At the end he turned his head stiffly. Sonny, deathly pale, stood inside the door with his hand over his holster. He nodded grimly.

"Don't yell, Garcia," he added softly. "I rid back with yuh from Miss Laurier's house. I thought y' might have some kinda unpleasant notions in yuh' head. One o' these days I'm goin' to take a gun an' let some sunlight an' air into yuh skull. It's full of right morbid matter now, an' there ain't anything like sunlight for unhealthy conditions anywheres."

He moved slowly forward and took the gun from Garcia's belt. He tossed it meditatively in his left hand, his eyes never leaving Garcia's ashen face.

"Yes, suh!" he drawled. "Yuh sure were knockin' on the doors o' hell. Why, damn yuh," he panted in sudden searing passion, "the only reason yuh' alive jus' now is b'cause I lef' my gun in Miss Laurier's house! By Gawd, Garcia—"

Garcia's eyes flickered swiftly to Sonny Holman's side. And the holster was empty. Sonny flung his hand wide, then tossed Garcia's weapon into it and pressed the muzzle deep into Garcia's ribs. "That shot in her house," he raged, "was her shootin' at me, not you-all. Yuh got my gun then, only yuh didn't know it. But now I got yours, an' youh' goin' to call yuh gang off an' ride with us along t' Moleville so's she gets there safe. Understan', Garcia? I'm fair achin' for a excuse t' pull this trigger!"

Garcia grinned a sudden ghastly grin, just such a grin as a man might find upon his face when reprieved upon the gallows. "But Mees Laurier," he said, and his voice gained confidence as he spoke until at the end it was a triumphant snarl, "Mees Laurier tried to tel' that peestol from me and I brought 'er 'ere. An' I thought eet would be amuseeng to let 'er try once more to keel me weeth eet. So—eet ees empty!"

On the word a knife flashed into his hand and he was grappling savagely with Sonny. Janet gasped once. Then she saw that Sonny had the knife-bearing wrist in a grip of iron, while he cocked and pulled the trigger of the useless silver mounted weapon the full six times. The empty little clickings came swiftly. The whole half dozen had sounded before Garcia was clawing at Sonny's eyes, to gouge them out, at the same time that he brought his right knee up viciously.

Sonny flung himself back at the same time that he struck upward with the muzzle of the useless gun. The weapon struck shatteringly upon Garcia's jaw. He reeled backward, the knife clattering to the floor. And Sonny bored in, with death in his eyes and face.

Janet screamed suddenly at the deadly purpose in Sonny's every movement. She knew she was to see a man killed deliberately before her eyes. And Sonny jerked his gaze from Garcia just long enough for the Mexican to stagger to the door, which flew open from his weight. He reeled outside, calling thickly to his followers. They leaped up, grabbed at their weapons in panic-stricken haste, and bullets flew wildly over Sonny's head and into the adobe of the hut walls.

He snatched the door shut and his fingers went swiftly to his own belt. Shells tumbled into his hands. He broke Garcia's gun and prepared to thrust them in.

"Ma'am," he drawled, "you sure yelled at the wrong time then. I thought somebody'd reached in an' grabbed yuh. I'd 'a' had Garcia tryin' to work up an alibi for the recordin' angel!"

"You—you'd have killed him in cold blood!"

"Hot blood, ma'am." Sonny looked down at the shells and the revolver in his hands. "I'd say my blood was right hot just then, ma'am. An' it'd ha' been right useful to have him curled up on the floor yonder just now. Right useful."

"You see, ma'am," he drawled after an instant, "his gun's a .38, an' all my shells are .45's. So I can't shoot no more'n a snowbird, an' I rek'n I'll need to do some shootin' before long. Yes, ma'am, you sure yelled at the wrong time."

A bullet crashed through the door beside him and a tiny red stain began to spread on his shoulder. More bullets followed the first through the door. Garcia's men were raking the whole interior of the cabin with rifle bullets through the doorway. It would be only a matter of minutes before the place would be filled with shrieking lead—only a matter of Garcia's followers recovering their nerve and settling down to the business of killing the unseen pair inside.

"Get down on the floor, ma'am," said Sonny sharply. "Maybe yuh'll dodge some bullets thataway. No use gettin' killed—yet."

The last word was clipped and grim. Sonny was searching the room desperately for a weapon. A chest against the wall caught his eye. He tore up the cover and plunged his arms inside, tearing out the contents recklessly. They were clothes, mostly, and a motley array of trinkets far more gaudy than valuable.

Sonny sprang up with a muttered exclamation and rushed to an improvised desk. He rummaged through the drawers in feverish haste.

"He's like to have a gun somewheres about," he said coldly over his shoulder. "Or some .38 shells anyhow. He's just plain got to, ma'am! He's got to!"

A buttoned holster made him give a little cry of delight. He jerked it out—and groaned. It was feather light. Empty.

"But I tell yuh," he cried suddenly, "there's got t' be somethin'! I can't let 'em get to yuh again, ma'am! I can't!"

He stood upright in the dimly candle lit room, his hands clenched, darting looks of sheer desperation all about him. Bullets splintered through the door and shrieked across the open space, spattering to molten lead against the rock of the further wall. The candle flickered wildly as the wind of a bullet close beside it nearly snuffed it out.

"I got to do something," he panted desperately. "Somethin'—" His hands flew up to his throat suddenly. He wheeled half way around and fell crashing to the floor. "Yell, ma'am," he ordered in a strange clarity. "Yell as loud as yuh can!"

He writhed an instant or two, drawing his legs beneath him in a convulsive movement as of agony. Then he was still.

Janet sobbed. Explosions sounded without and there were splintering noises at the door. Tiny shrieks, infinitely short, ended in smashings. Once a projectile battered itself into a hopeless slug and wheezed erratically through the clear space to break a cheap mirror and fall to the floor amid the tinkling fragments.

Janet, sobbing in terror and perhaps in something else, crawled toward Sonny's motionless figure. The knife Garcia had dropped was clutched firmly in his hand. Janet reached for it and Sonny turned his head, his face contorted.

To a person of experience in such matters, there is a world of difference between a woman's scream of terror and her scream of pain. Garcia, nursing his jaw and vengefully directing his riflemen, knew a great deal about women's screams. He waved for the firing to cease and as the guns were still he smiled pleasantly.

He motioned a man forward. The Mexican crept up under the shelter of the adobe walls. He peered timorously through one of the lower bullet holes. Then he turned a grinning face to his leader.

"El hombre es muerto."

Garcia cursed. He would have preferred for Sonny not to be quite dead. But the smile returned a moment later. If he could not wreak revenge upon Sonny, at least there was the woman Sonny had essayed to defend.

"Buenos pues," he snarled, "breeng 'er here."

Men thrust the door open with the muzzles of their rifles and entered timorously. Sonny lay in a crumpled heap, while Janet gazed down at him, then up at the grinning Mexicans in the ultimate of terror.

"Ha, queridita," said the first man mockingly, and translated for Janet's benefit. "Little sweetheart, your darleeng ees waiting!"

He kicked indifferently at Sonny as he moved to seize Janet. And very, very suddenly he yelled and collapsed to the floor. Sonny had seized the kicking foot and jerked it savagely. His legs, doubled under him, shot him upright as the Mexican fell. The knife he had held he discarded as he saw a chance to seize the high-grader's rifle.

British Empire Trade

By Walter Runciman.

In any efforts we make to extend the trade of the British Empire, we are not going to try to do so on a basis which would make us exclusive, that is to say, which shut us off from the rest of the world.

Do not let us put out of our minds the outlook of the Dominions themselves. You cannot imagine Canada, for instance, wishing to shut off her trade from the United States of America. She will, we trust, continue to extend preferences which are already given to individual traders, merchants, manufacturers and producers alike in this country. But we must not imagine that she is going to have nothing more to do with the United tSates of America any more than it means that we are going to have nothing to do with the foreign countries in which we have most excellent and welcome customers.

We must proceed by stages, and we have chosen the course of making our position secure in this country first. That we have already done. The next stage is to make sure that we can extend our traffic within the confines of the British Empire. That we hope to do, and ultimately to extend our trade along freer channels throughout the whole world.

ALL THINGS ARE POSSIBLE.

Nothing too bad to be incurable; nothing too good to be hoped for; nothing too high to be attempted; nothing so precious that we cannot afford to give it away. Yet, even that. For there is that within the hero which is so rich that he can afford to give his very life away and be none the poorer.

Best oil cheapest in home, says factory sup't.

"The last thing we'd try to economize on," says the superintendent of a large eastern factory, "is lubricating oil. By using cheap oil we could 'save' hundreds of dollars each year—but it would cost us thousands of dollars for repairs, replacements and lessened efficiency of equipment."

The same is true in the home. If all housewives knew what factory men know about lubrication, few of them would use anything but 3-in-One Oil for their expensive sewing machines, vacuum cleaners, electric fans, lawn mowers, washers, and other household devices. 3-in-One, a blend of mineral, vegetable and animal oils, is the best oil for household use, for it cleans and protects as well as lubricates.

Ask for the old reliable 3-in-One Oil at good drug, grocery, hardware, department and general stores. For your protection, look for the trade mark "3-in-One" printed in Red on every package.

WITH THE LONE SCOUTS

King's Scout

Most Lone Scouts look forward to the day when they will be entitled to wear the coveted King's Scout Badge on his arm, and it is indeed an achievement for which any Lonie may well deserve hearty congratulation, as it is no easy task for a boy to work steadily over a long period of time for the most part alone, and reach this high rank in Scouting.

It is therefore with great pleasure that we record the fact that two brothers, Lone Scouts Robert and Albert Passmore, of Hensall, have successfully passed the requirements for the King's Scout Badge, and we know that all the Lone Scouts of Ontario will heartily congratulate them.

The Dog Show

We are glad to be able to report that this "show" was most successful and a full list of the prize winners is published in the April number of "On Lone Scout Trails," which has been mailed to all Lonies.

The prize winner in the 1st Class was Bruce Isaac of Lucan, Ont., for the best essay describing his dog.

In Class Two the winner of the first prize was Ronald Sage, of Ingersoll, for the best written and composed essay.

We publish herewith the winning essays and offer our congratulations to all the prizewinners:

Bruce Isaacs

I have decided to enter my dog in your dog show because I think he is the most wonderful dog in the world and I wouldn't trade him for all the pedigreed dogs in the world.

The breed of my little dog is a fox-terrier and he is about one foot six inches in height.

He is all white from tail to head and he is three years old. He is a good worker and can pull me around in the sleigh and he can also hunt cattle and he is not a bad watch-dog for a little pup. My little dog cannot perform any tricks, but I love him just the same. I like my dog because he and I are the very best of pals and he will do anything for me.

My dog is the father of six lovely pups. My brother, who is twenty-three, has one of his little daughters.

Ronald Sage's Essay
"Skippy"

Skippy is a collie. Although he lays no claim to being a thoroughbred, it is easily seen that he is a very fine specimen of his race.

To say the least, Skippy is handsome. He has a very fine coat of long silky hair and this on his tail is like a waving plume. In color he is a beautiful brown with a large white patch on his chest. He is magnificently built, having a long, intelligent looking nose, thick, sturdy legs; a very aristocratic tail and a deep, finely curved chest. Skippy is not very big, being just about a year old, but he gives promise of being a wonderful dog, doing credit to his clan, the Collie.

Last fall we sold our cattle, but before that Skippy showed that he had the makings of a fine cattle dog and he was only a pup then. He is a born "heeler," which means that he goes after the cows' heels, that is the sign of a good cattle dog. He loves to hunt rats and mice. Our granary and barn are full of these pests and Skippy is always ready for a hunt and has caught rats seven or eight inches in length.

Skippy has been hardly old enough to be taught tricks, but he will "speak" for his dinner, fetch a stick, climb into a chair and sit up and so on. He also loves the water and in summer he has a great time in the creek.

Why do I love him? Why does any boy love his dog? Because he is a friend, a faithful companion who loves and will follow anywhere, who asks nothing but your love. Such is Skippy.

This Week's Scout Law—No. 7—"A Scout obeys orders of his parents, patrol leader, or Scoutmaster, without question.

This is a very important law, as without its aid it would be impossible for the Boy Scouts Association to carry on efficiently. Whatever the organization, whether it be a business, club, church, army, or anything else where a number of people congregate, if law and order is to be maintained, someone must be the leader and undertake the responsibility, and unless the others are prepared to accept his instructions the organization proved unsuccessful.

The very foundation of our home life is the fact that children "honor their father and mother," and if they were allowed to do as they please from the day of their birth, our nation would soon sink into oblivion.

Further, it is a well known and universally recognized fact that no person can successfully act as a leader and give orders unless they themselves have first learned to obey. How else can they understand the position of those under them?

Therefore to be a successful Scout it is necessary to learn obedience, so that as time passes and the opportunities arise, you can become a successful leader of your fellow Scouts, and take your place in later life as a leader amongst your fellow men.

There is room in the ranks of the Lone Scouts of Ontario for many more boys of Scout age. If you are unable to join an ordinary Scout Troop, and are between the ages of 12-18 inclusive, why not be a Lone Scout?

Write for particulars, which willl be gladly sent to you, to The Boy Scouts Association, Lone Scout Department, 330 Bay Street, Toronto 2.—"Lone E."

Canada Built 12,600 Dwellings During 1931

Detailed reports from more than fifty Canadian cities show that 10,750 permits for dwellings (including houses and apartments and, in many cases, repairs and alterations), estimated to cost $47,000,000, were issued in 1931; this compares with 12,600 residential permits in 1930 whose total value was $53,000,000. The average estimated cost of a dwelling in 1931 was $4,324, as compared with $4,200 in 1930. The increase in value can probably be attributed to a larger proportion of apartment houses in the total for residential building.

Infirmities

They that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of those that art weak, and not to please themselves. There's a text wants no candle to show't; it shines by its own light. It's plain enough you get into the wrong road in this life if you run after this and that only for the sake o' making things easy and pleasant to yourself. A pig may poke his nose into the trough, and think o' nothing outside it; but, if you've got a man's heart and soul in you, you can't be easy a-making your own bed and leaving the rest to lie on the stones. Nay, nay, I'll never slip my neck out o' the yoke, and leave the load to be drawn by the weak uns. — George Eliot.

Sunday School Lesson

May 15. Lesson VII—Jacob at Bethel—Genesis 28: 10-7. Golden Text—I am with thee, and will keep thee in all places whither thou goest. —Genesis 28: 15.

I. THE REVEALING DREAM, vs. 10-12.
II. DIVINE ENCOURAGEMENT, vs. 13-15.
III. JACOB'S REVERENCE, vs. 16, 17.

INTRODUCTION—Jacob had committed two major offences against his brother, Esau. For a mere trifle he had secured his birthright (Exodus 25: 27-34); and he had stolen from Isaac the blessing that properly belonged to Esau, 27: 1-40. By taking these mean and crafty advantages of his brother, he had aroused Esau's hatred, 27: 41. Esau vowed that revenge would be him upon Isaac's death. Thus Jacob's position was seriously jeopardized in the home. Once again, as in all the stories of the patriarchs, strife was avoided by isolation and separation. Jacob must leave home. There was a further reason for his leaving home, in that the time had now come for him to marry, and his mother was anxious for him to take a wife from among her own relatives in Haran, who were Arameans living in Mesopotamia, 27: 43-46. Up to now his record had been bad. He had proved himself selfish, crafty and devoid of fraternal sympathy. God, however, has his own way of dealing with a wrong-doer, and of fashioning him for future service and greatness.

I. THE REVEALING DREAM, vs. 10-12.

Alone and on foot Jacob set out on his journey, a fugitive from his brother's hatred and revenge. The journey from his home in Beersheba to Bethel must have occupied at least two or three days. Arriving at Bethel at sundown, when all good Hebrews retired, he decided to halt for the night, and sought out a great boulder for his head-piece. Nightfall, solitude, and a troubled conscience,—what a setting for the dream that followed! Here Dr. Lynn Harold Hough offers a valuable suggestion. He points out that Freud, the psychoanalyst, claims that dreams are the occasions upon which our suppressed desires leap up from the subconscious mind and play the part denied them in real life. Freud thinks, however, that it is invariably our evil desires that emerge in dreams. Dr. Hough suggests that it may very possibly be that our good desires also come to the surface in our dreams. It is interesting to interpret Jacob's dream in this way. Bad though he was, pet there was a core of goodness in him to which God could appeal. For God cannot grant a revelation of himself unless there is a soul capable of appreciating it. The medium of revelation here was a dream. The men of Israel thought that very frequently God used dreams to communicate his secrets. Jacob's was one of the most beautiful and majestic dreams ever conceived. It was all the more impressive in that it unfolded at first in complete silence. With its foot resting on the earth, a ladder—suggested, it may be, by the rocky ledges of the Bethel mountain-side, or bythe rainbow—stretched up to heaven. Heaven, therefore, could not be very far away. The ladder was astir with a great traffic. Up and down it moved the angels of God, for they were not as yet thought of as having wings. Heaven, according to Hebrew thought, is not an empty and depopulated place, but filled with living and ministering spirits. The Hebrew mind projected personality out into the unseen world. The angels were regarded simply as agents of God, who received and fulfilled important commissions from him.

II. DIVINE ENCOURAGEMENT, vs. 13-15.

In the incident of the birthright, Jacob had shown a keen eye for the future, but with all the weight of his sinful past, could he hope for a bright future? This aptitude in Jacob for taking account of the future, God now quickened and turned to his own great purposes. There are two phases to God's promise of the future. The one has to do with Jacob's personal fortunes. Lonely sinner though he was, yet he was assured that God's watchful care would be over him in all his wanderings, and that he would be brought back in safety to his own land. The other feature of the promise has to do with Jacob's offspring. It is to be very numerous, and is compared with the dust, which was a current proverb for great numbers. An old Rabbinic commentary on Genesis quaintly suggests that the reason for this recurring promise of a numerous progeny is that each Israelite bears ideally the image of God.

III. JACOB'S REVERENCE, vs. 16, 17.

A feeling of profound reverence swept over Jacob on awakening. This fear of the Lord is not only the beginning of wisdom, but it is the root of all genuine religion. It rises up naturally in men when they are confronted with God in all his majestic holiness—all that separates him from this creaturely world. In Jacob's day, however, it was thought that God's holiness was communicated to the place where he appeared. A peculiar sanctity attaches to a place where men have encountered God. So Jacob said, "How dreadful is this place!" Bethel he recognized as a God-haunted place, a veritable house of God as its name suggests. Here a door opens into heaven, which is not far away. It is little wonder that later Bethel developed into a famous sanctuary.

SELF-RELIANCE.

To repose calmly on the thought which is deepest in our bosoms, and be unmoved if the world will not accept it.—F. W. Robertson.

American Traffic System Fails to Please Paris

Paris—First experiments conducted in Paris with New York's system of synchronized traffic regulation resulted in a complete traffic jam in exactly twenty minutes. But Prefect of Police Jean Chiappe, who superintended the test is not convinced that the system is impractical. He thinks that it will work better when the public has been accustomed to it.

The experiment was tried in the most congested district of Paris, between the Portes Saint Martin and Saint Denis, and where the Boulevard Sebastopol crosses the Grands Boulevards. Electric signals mere installed so that when traffic was stopped on the Grands Boulevards, that from the Porte Saint Denis and Porte Saint Martin entered simultaneously. A few seconds later the cross traffic from the Boulevard Sebastopol was also admitted automatically. Then automatically all transverse streets were closed by the signals and traffic over four blocks on the Grands Boulevards was kept moving for three minutes.

For a short time it seemed as though the system was working properly without the interference of the traffic police, but soon confusion developed and in twenty minutes circulation was completely stopped, with cars unable to move in any direction. It took the police half an hour to restore order under the old billy club system of direction.

Other experiments will be tried and if they attain the results Mr. Chiappe desires, the entire Grand Boulevard system from the Church of the Madeleine to the Place de la Bastille will be placed under synchronized traffic regulation.

Twentieth Century Inventions Drawing Empire Together

London—Radio broadcasting, aviation and movies, are being utilized to weld the British empire more closely together, economically, politically and sentimentally.

The last imperial conference decided that steps should be taken to encourage British empire broadcasts. As a result the British Broadcasting Corporation is building a special short wave station at Daventry which will be in operation by 1933.

Meanwhile experimental programs and broadcast from the Chelmsford short wave station, the most important features of which are British news bulletins.

Programs from Daventry will be practically continuous thoughout 24 hours.

Steady progress is being made in empire air routes. A weekly mail and passenger air service has been in operation between Britain and India for four years. An 11-day mail air service between Croydon and Capetown was inaugurated recently.

While broadcasting and aviation are doing their bit, British film producers are experiencing difficulties in capturing even a small share of the empire market.

Wear on Steering Spindle

The car owner with enough interest to keep the front wheel bearings tightened should remember that weakness in the steering spindles often is confused with bearing looseness. After the wheel has been jacked up and before shaking it from side to side it is a good idea to stick a screwdriver in the top of the spindle bushing to compensate for possible play at that point.

New Mosque for London

London—A new mosque is to be built in the northwest district of London. The architect is Sir Brumwell Thomas, well known as the designer of the Dunkirk War Memorial, Belfast City Hall, and other public works. One of the richest Indian princes has already subscribed £60,000 toward the cost.

WISDOM AND VIRTUE.

To sit still and contemplate—to remember the faces of women without desire to be pleased by the deeds of great men without envy, to be everything and everywhere in sympathy, and yet content to remain where and what you are, is not this to know both wisdom and virtue, and to dwell with happiness.

Protect the Colts

Colts Become Worm Infected at Pasture

Many young colts do not do well, if they are worm infested. And they are sure to be infested if they run with other infested horses. Most of the horses that we see killed for fox meat are worm infested to some degree. The colt being particularly susceptible to worm infestation, during the first few months of its life, should be given some protection against these pests, which may become serious enough to cause death of the colt. The start should be made with the brood mare and the other horses; treat these or have them treated with a suitable worm expeller. This done the source of infection will be cut off and the pastures will be relatively safe for the colts when they arrive. Infection takes place through wormy horses scattering the worm eggs over the pasture field in the faeces, so if the mare is free of worms the owner will have little to worry about, and the colt will grow well and be free from attacks of verminous colic. Verminous colic is serious and may cause the death of the colt. Better prevent worm infestation, so that the colts will not experience this trouble. The colt that is free of worms and bot grubs is more likely to thrive and grow well than the neglected colt that depends on no management at all. Change the pasture ground frequently during the summer, keep them away from wormy horses, and have them treated with a carbon disulphide capsule when they come into winter quarters.

Trade and the Empire

.. By Stanley Baldwin

One of the interesting results already of our departure from the free trade policy has been a certain influx of foreign manufacturing business. That tendency has been rather exaggerated in the press, but it is a real movement, and I would remind you that we in England have owed a good deal in the past to some of those importantions of new manufactures.

We brought weaving, a typically British industry today, from the Flemings. It was the French Hugue nots who taught us how to make silk; and so it is today that we find the toymaker from Nuremberg, the clockmakers from the Black Country; the perfumery and toilet accessories made in Paris are coming over to be made in this country, and also the finest kinds of ladies' stockings from Saxony.

Those are industries that will be valuable to us because they will not only provide work to meet the demands of our own customers at home but they will broaden our equipment for competitive orders coming from abroad, and increasing. I hope, our exports and trade.

Perhaps the most important thing is this, that at last there are no more arguments about whether a tariff is a good thing or a bad. We are at last going to put these economic theories to the test of experience, and we shall know, instead of arguing about, the results by the time four years hence or more this government renders up its mandate to the people.

A Happy Man

To awaken each morning with a smile brightening my face; to greet the day with reverence for the opportunities it contains; to approach my work with a clean mind to hold ever before me, even in the doing of little things ,the Ultimate Purpose toward which I am working; to meet men and women with laughter on my lips and love in my heart; to be gentle, kind, and courteous through all the hours; to approach the night with weariness that ever woos sleep and the joy that comes from work well done—this is how I desire to waste wisely my days.—From Fiery Grains.

Humility

Humility becomes all, it is Christ like, for none were ever so humble as He. It gains the respect of all. It will never let us down. It will help us to overcome the difficulties of life, and we cannot fall, for God is on our side.—Martin.

BESSBOROUGH AWARDS HIGHEST SCOUT HONORS

Featuring the opening session of the annual meeting of the Boy Scouts' Association of Canada, the badge of the Silver Wolf, the highest honorary decoration of scouting, was presented by His Excellency the Governor-General, as Chief Scout for Canada, to Gerald H. Brown; Col. R. J. Birdwhistle and Major A. A. Pinard of Ottawa.

Reports on training, fire prevention, first-aid and public service work revealed that the widespread co-operation of Scout troops in unemployment relief work included the collection in large quantities of clothing and foodstuffs, and the assistance in the operation of relief hostels of the Red Cross and other organizations.

Reforestation and conservation work included the planting of 180,000 young trees by Scouts in Ontario and Nova Scotia areas. Christmas gifts directly or by mail to more than 75,000 children in the Dominion of Canada were supplied by the Scout toy shops. The mailed gifts were largely sent to the families of settlers in the burned-out areas of Saskatchewan and Alberta.

The total of all study badges passed, including those aimed to discover vocation, was 18,148 last year. Twenty-nine Scouts were awarded medals by the Dominion Medal Board for outstanding acts of gallantry or service in cases of emergency last year.

The Association reports a membership of 58,500 Scouts and leaders throughout the Dominion.

The Boy Scouts of Canada honored Dr. James W. Robertson, late chief commissioner of the Scouts Association, when a bronze tablet to commemorate his outstanding work in the movement, was unveiled at Dominion headquarters in the presence of a distinguished gathering.

Tribute to the service of the late Dr. Robertson was paid by Rt. Rev. J. C. Roper, Bishop of Ottawa, for many years an associate of Dr. Robertson on the Canadian General Council, the governing body of the Scout Association.

TORONTO TP. COUNCIL

The question of a deed to W. Frank Oliver, Toronto, for a portion of the Lake Shore Road, Clarkson, was reopened at Saturday's meeting of Toronto Township Council. Mr. Oliver owns a summer cottage on the Lake Shore road and the cottage has been situated for some years on a strip, 12 feet in width, of the Lake Shore road allowance. Mr. Oliver pointed out to council that he has spent $2,000 in cribs to protect the shore line at that point. Had the cribs not been placed there, he claims, the cottage and the road itself would have been washed away.

E. A. Orr, Clarkson, owner of property in the neighborhood, objected to the giving of a deed to the portion of the road allowance upon which Oliver's house encroaches, on the grounds that the road would be made narrower, with detrimental results to his own and adjacent properties. Council agreed to defer decision on the question for at least two weeks.

Mrs. Eva Duff, an employe of the township offices, was appointed tax collector of the township, and will handle the reception of current taxes at the offices. The Cooksville United Church paid off $1,250 of the principal of a mortgage held by the township. The loan was extended the church by the township following the reconstruction of the church, which was damaged by a thunderstorm some years ago.

Capt. G. Coenegrachts asked council for road work near his fox farm, and for the placing of a sign giving the name of the street. He asked that no sign giving the location of his farm be erected, however, for about 200 Sunday visitors have flocked in upon him to see the foxes.

D. H. McCannell, of the firm of Robertson, Robinson, McCannell and Dick, now auditing the township books, reported that the discrepancy between the figures of his company and the figures of A. S. Thomas Brampton, had grown to approximately $7,000. He said that there was no sign of malfeasance in connection with the discrepancy. The audit will not be complete, he added, for another six weeks, although four men are now at work upon the books.

EVERY MAN AN INVENTOR

Well-Known Canadian Expert Tells of Unique Inventions.

Every man at some time or another during his life time is an inventor, is the claim of E. N. Featherstonhaugh, well-known Canadian patent solicitor. But some of them don't know it, he says.

This patent solicitor whose father has been in the business half a century has many curios. One of them is a fly electrocutor invented by an Albertan. It can be used for any insect venturing between two electrically-charged screens attached to wooden frames. The unwary fly goes in. There is a short circuit and another spider has been cheated out of his breakfast.

Mothers need not worry any more about infants who show a tendency to swallow their thumb. A device has been created by a Toronto man to correct this. It has been registered at Ottawa. It is a guard fitting over the thumb and attached to the wrist.

Another inventor hopes to give impetus to aeronautics, by a series of pontoons 1,500 feet in the air anchored to steel towers by cables. These pontoons are wires which will store energy for electrically-driven airplanes.

Another brain-wave may result in bigger and better fish stories. This man has constructed a school of artificial minnows to trap fish. These are nickelled or gilded to reflect a light to the bottom. The fish sleeping peacefully sub-aqua are attracted by the light and dash to the top. Delighted to see such fat little minnows ready for their breakfast, they grab fat tails concealing sharp hooks and Mr. Fish is caught cold.

A machine that can go four ways is the fond hope of another inventor. By means of twisted spring-like rudder attached to the top of the craft, it is hoped to make it go up or down, frontwards or backwards. There is no record yet of any trial flight.

DAVID'S WALL FOUND?

Engineers Repairing Sewers Discover Wall In Jerusalem.

What is believed to be part of the wall of ancient Jerusalem, dating back to 1000 B.C., was discovered by British and Palestinian engineers. While repairing an old Roman sewer inside the old city of Jerusalem they came across a line of huge stones 30 feet underground.

Some time ago it was found necessary to reconstruct the old Roman sewer which passes near the Mosque of Omar and empties into the Valley of Kedron because the dilapidated condition of the sewer endangers the houses above it. In the course of excavations by the sewer repairers many archaelogical discoveries were made, including an old Roman road, jars and coins.

While nearing the end of a 250-foot stretch of sewer to-day the engineers struck firm rock and bit by bit uncovered a wall of stones, each about four feet by two feet. Tunnels cut through the wall allowed the passage of ancient sewers. The Department of Antiquities believes the wall belongs to the Jerusalem of David's time.

After Jerusalem's capture by David the town first became distinguished as a stronghold. Its first wall, built by David and Solomon, inclosed the old part of the town, now the suburb of Zion. Much of it probably was destroyed by Egyptian, Arabian and Philistine tribes in their raids upon the city and by the earthquake in the time of King Uzziah.

TREES FOR PRAIRIES.

Planting Scheme to Cover Whole Treeless Parts of Saskatchewan.

A tree-planting plan on a large scale, which will extend over a period of ten years, has been inaugurated. The scheme, which will embrace the whole treeless part of Saskatchewan is to be started at once, and will entail the planting of over 100 acres of caragana seed on Government nurseries and institutional farms for the purpose of growing seedlings for free distribution among farmers of the province. It is estimated, between 5,000,000 and 8,000,000 seedlings will shortly be ready for distribution, and these will be given out subject to certain conditions necessary to the growth of a good hedge.

The caragana is easy to grow, drouth resisting, and very difficult to kill once properly established. In ten years the seedlings properly planted and cultivated, will grow into an ornamental hedge 12 feet high and 10 feet wide, and eventually to a height of 18 or 20 feet. Besides making an efficient windbreak, which will prevent soil drifting to a great extent and also assist in the cultivation of various fruits, the hedge will act as a moisture retainer. The planting of other varieties of trees such as maple, ash, willow, poplar, and cottonwood, will be carried on as before.

FAMOUS HOME SAVED.

Englishman Purchases Byron's Home Presented to Nation.

Lord Byron's famous home at Newstead, in England, has been presented to the city of Nottingham by Sir Julian Cahn. The present owner of Newstead, C. I. Frazer, also handed over to the city the furniture at Newstead Abbey, which originally belonged to the Byron family.

Newstead was steeped in historical associations long before the time of the poet. The abbey, an Augustinian priory, was founded by Henry I. in penance for the murder by Henry's knights of Thomas A. Becket in Canterbury Cathedral.

After the dissolution of the monasteries the despoiled abbey was bought by Sir John Byron from Henry VIII. for $4,000.

Dangerous Relic Found.

A live aerial torpedo, 18 inches long and of German type, believed to have been lying unnoticed since the great war, was recently found in a pile of rubbish in the boiler room of a hotel at Tinton, England.

Anglicans Gave Good Concert

The Parish Hall at TrinityChurch was crowded last night with people anxious to see the play, 'Aaron Slick of Punkin Crick' as put on by young people of the church, under auspices of the Choir. The principal acters were : Misses Isabel Crozier, Edith Drennan, Dorothy Graydon and Bea Quennell, Messrs. Arthur Arch, Albert Quennell and Verne Steggall. The play was given in three acts and the actors performed their parts exceptionally well.

In addition to the play there were mirth-provoking selections by that greatest of all comedians, Mr. Tom Hamilton, who kept the audience roaring with every number.

Mr. Hamilton made a great hit with his Scotch songs and specially pleased the Scotch people in the audience.

The Streetsville Alfalfa Boys and Miss Mary Crozier contributed splendidly to the musical part of the programme, and Mr. James Bailey acted as chairman.

Trinity Church certainly has some splendid material for producing concert programmes. We don't think there is anything to equal it in the cities, and we hope to hear of them making a tour of Canada soon.

The new curtains set off the stage to perfection and make a wonderful improvement in the Parish Hall. It has been found that with the large number of people that come to this hall for entertainment, the spacious building is too small and it won't be long until an extension will have to be erected.

LET US SMILE

Teacher—We borrowed our numerals from the Arabs, our calendar from the Romans and our banking from the Italians. Can anyone think of other examples?

Charlie—Our lawnmower from the Smiths, our phonograph from Browns and a pair of steps from Miss Jones.

Big Motor Meet

Mr. Bert Dawson is making big improvements at Peel Park, our new Summer Resort. The British Empire Motor Club will hold their annual meet here on the 24th May when hundreds of motorcycles will be here and races will be held. They are all British riders and British machines. The track will be put into good condition and everything will be in readiness for the grand opening on the 24th. Everybody will be coming to Streetsville that day.

Mr. W. J. McMillan and family have moved from Toronto to their summer home a little north of the village limits.

Mrs. R. K. Cameron will be at home at The Manse, Wednesday afternoon, May 18th, from 3 to 6 o'clock. Mr. Cameron will receive with Mrs. Cameron in the evening.

The new sign board at the south entrance to the village reads, as you leave town, "Welcome to Streetsville." That might mean the same as saying to a guest, "Here's your Hat." There's a funny side to most everything.

Castoria... for CHILDREN'S ailments

ARE you prepared to render first aid and quick comfort the moment your youngster has an upset of any sort? Could you do the right thing —immediately—though the emergency came without warning—perhaps tonight? Castoria is a mother's standby at such times. There is nothing like it in emergencies, and nothing better for everyday use. For a sudden attack of colic, or for the gentle relief of constipation; to allay a feverish spell, or to soothe a fretful baby that can't sleep. This pure vegetable preparation is always ready to ease an ailing youngster. It is just as harmless as the recipe on the wrapper reads. If you see Chas. H. Fletcher's signature, it is geniune Castoria. It is harmless to the smallest infant; doctors will tell you so.
You can tell from the formula on the wrapper how mild it is, and how good for little systems. But continue with Castoria until a child is grown.

Reckless Driving

Twenty-nine people were killed in automobile accidents on the highways of the province in March. The number will probably be larger for the month of April. As traffic increases during the summer the fatalities will also increase, judged from the experience of past years.

Most of these fatal accidents have been and will be due to reckless and careless driving. In no sphere of human activity is recklessness and carelessness so lightly condoned or visited with such trifling punishment, despite the great danger to human life that is involved.

Severe penalties and severe punishment are the only means of protection for the public against those who refuse to obey the laws and drive with caution and consideration. If every careless driver responsible for an accident were made to suffer exemplary punishment in keeping with the serious consequences of his offence there would be a rapid and substantial decline in the number of highway accidents and fatalities.

Suspension of driving licenses for longer periods than are now imposed in the case of recklessness and drunkenness at the wheel of a car would go a long way toward effective prevention. Permanent cancellation would, in fact, not be too drastic or more than the public interest requires in some cases.—Toronto Star.

Prescribing For Listeners

The amusing feature, however, is the attempt of witnesses at Ottawa to tell the committee the kind of programs the radio listener wants to hear. Does the radio listener really know himself? Isn't it a fact that he is all over the dial in the course of an evening, and that one evening his taste differs from another evening? The fan who wants Amos 'n' Andy may also be an appreciative listener of the grand opera programs from New York. He may take on a medley of old-time jigs and a lecture on the gold standard in the same evening and enjoy them both. In the middle of it all he may wish to learn the result of a hockey match at Winnipeg or Regina. We would like to see the Solomon who is able to say with certainty what a radio program should be made up of to please everybody. He would be such a wise bird that he should be put to work on the unemployment problem.—Regina Leader Post.

Back to the Land

Where an unemployed man is anxious to get busy on the land, he should be encouraged in all possible ways. Given access to suitable land, a willing man, with some initial help, might easily be placed in a position where he could lift himself by his own productive exertion out of the mire of unemployment. Not to give such a man his chance at a time like this is little short of a crime, and it is in this light that the question should now be looked at by the City Council and the other responsible official bodies. Unemployment is striking into a new phase in Winnipeg, and the most strenuous and intelligent measures will have to be adopted to cope with it, and there should be no delay in getting such measures started. — Winnipeg Free Press.

Fortunes in the Making

We have a communication from a well-known New York financial man, who recalls that the world outlook has been much blacker at certain crises in the past than it is to-day.

Dealing specially with conditions on this continent, our correspondent says everyone's income has suffered in the past two years, but in nine cases out of ten it has not suffered enough to interfere with food or comfort. Instead of crying about paper losses and making things worse by continually talking about them, people should be thankful to be alive and well. Untold numbers are out of work, are suffering and desperate, but compared with many parts of the world Canada knows nothing of poverty. "If your business is good, say so. If not, say nothing. The overworked word, psychology, plays a large part to-day in the public attitude. People are waiting now for someone else to make times better, instead of working hard and making them better themselves. They compare commodity and stock prices today with those at the 1929 peak. They refuse to take advantage of the wonderful opportunities afforded by the break in prices. They say they are waiting for business to be good before buying anything, or doing anything constructive themselves. They hesitate to buy securities at a fraction of 1929 prices, but with equally good future prospects."

We certainly do not think of fostering any fresh speculative campaign, but on the other hand the present is the time for courage instead of fear; for work instead of for whining; for sane saving, sane spending and sane investing. New fortunes are in the making. A few wise ones know it and are taking advantage of the situation. —"Toronto Mail and Empire.

Farmers in the Chatham area are being urged to grow soy beans. But the trouble with Canada to-day is that there are too many soys and not enough laughs.—Toronto Star.

Just as the 1932 wheat crop peeps through the Alberta soil France discovers the need of more Canadian wheat. Which is an excellent form of balance.—Toronto Globe.

THE EMPIRE

Britain and Europe

We in this country are part of Europe. We may regret that we are part of Europe. We may wish that the Atlantic was narrower and the Straits of Dover wider. But sentiment cannot alter geography. Not all that can be said or done at Ottawa will add one foot to the Straits of Dover.—Manchester Guardian.

Nationalism and the World

The world collectively condemns tariffs; the nations individually insist on keeping them. The world collectively says that reparations and international debts are ruinous; the nations individually protest that they cannot abandon their claims. The world collectively says that it is being ruined by armaments; the nations individually fight stubbornly to maintain their own armaments. All these things are linked together in the great world controversy. We are getting to the point when this quarrel must be composed or the system we call "capitalism" will break down. And yet by a queer paradox it is in most countries the capitalists, or at least the rich and well-to-do, who are most ardent in the defence of nationalist economies and national armaments. If between them they kill the capitalist system, it will be they themselves who will have done it.—J. A. Spender in the London News-Chronicle (Lib.)

OTHER OPINIONS

More British Protection

While neither the United States nor any other nation that trades heavily with the United Kingdom can do other than regret that the British are making the entry of foreign products into their country increasingly difficult, the fact stands out that they have definite purposes to achieve. Furthermore, they believe that the attainment of those objectives warrants the means to accomplish them. However unfortunate it may be for the rest of the world, one can hardly disregard the fact that the British are only emulating the example given them by the suffering nations. — Providence Journal.

Crisis Still to Come

If there is no actual starvation anywhere — even Chicago reports that "food is adequate and no one is suffering from cold"—there is everywhere misery and want. More and more workers have exhausted their savings; available relief funds are running low. Spring and Summer may bring seasonal improvement in industrial conditions in some localities, as in Detroit, but no one expects it to solve the problem of relief. From the viewpoint of the welfare workers the real crisis is still to come.—New York Times.

World Prices

While prices of world commodities have been tumbling for the last two years, the British trade unions have nailed their wages and hours to the wall, and refused to lower them an inch. This is called maintaining the standard of living. Other countries fail to recognize the right of the British artisan to a higher standard of living than themselves; they lengthen their hours and lower their wages to suit the changed conditions of the world markets, which, consequently, they snatch from under our noses.—A Truthful Tory in Truth (London).

Education in England

English education is very much alive. There are still dull patches in it, of course, but, go where you will, you are never far from a school which is showing strong power of adaptation to the new needs of the community. Three times before in history English education has flushed with renewed energy: first under Alfred, next at the time of the Reformation, and last in the early years of Queen Victoria. But never till now has it been free from the cramping influences of poverty. To-day it is well furnished and free in its choice of methods of work. Thes teachers are at liberty to try new ways of teaching; to get into the open air; to use other tools than the pen. A school needs space, zest and freedom if it is rightly to train those who a few years hence will make or mar the tone and temper of town and village, of factory, shop and farm. Not all the schools have yet made full use of their new opportunities. But England is now dotted over with good examples of the new education.—The Master of University College, Oxford, in the Spectator (London).

Britain Favors Canadian Bacon

First Quarter of 1932 Shows Export Increase of 257 Per Cent.

Ottawa. — That Canada is rapidly moving forward toward the recapturing of her share in the British market for bacon and ham is indicated by the statistics of export of these commodities to Great Britain for the first quarter of the calendar year, in the opinion of Hon. H. H. Stevens. During the three months the total exportation to Great Britain amounted to 56,480,000 pounds, as compared wih 15,821,000 pounds for the corresponding period of last year, or an increase of 40,659,000 pounds. The percentage of increase is therefore approximately 257 per cent.

"In addition, it is interesting to note," a statement issued by the Minister of Trade and Commerce says, "that during the months of February and March Canada exported direct for the first time to the Irish Free State 13,342,000 pounds of bacon and ham. And the Irish Free State has in the past been regarded (with Denmark) as a serious competitor with Canada in the British market for these particular products."

Total exports of bacon and ham, to all countries, for the first quarter year amounted to 77,526,000 pounds, as compared with only 20,052,000 pounds in the first three months of 1931, an increase of nearly 400 per cent.

Exports to Britain

To Great Britain alone during the first three months of 1932, Canada exported more bacon and ham than were exported during the entire 12 months of 1928. During the latter year less than nine per cent. of Britain's imports of bacon were supplied from within the Empire and only 14 per cent. of the ham.

Efforts on the part of the department of trade and commerce, through exhibitions and publicity in Great Britain designed to popularize Canadian products, including bacon and ham, coupled with educational efforts on the part of the department of agriculture to show to the farmer that standard of quality and continuity of supply are prime requisites in securing and retaining the British market, are regarded by the minister as being largely responsible for the increase in the British demand for Canadian hog products. "The measure of success that has been achieved through advertised quality," says the minister, "is apparently now being achieved in the production field."

Oakville Starts War On Mosquito Pests

Oakville.—This center is preparing early this year in a campaign to eradicate the buzzing of the ever present biting pest, the mosquito. A good supply of oil has arrived and Town Foreman James Jackson will superintend the spraying of breeding grounds. This will be done by means of watering cans.

George Jacobs, chairman of the committee, has been in communication with the agricultural department at Ottawa and with the committee that has been carrying on a campaign for the last four years in Orillia. The mixture used in the spray is composed of road-oil and kerosene in the proportion of nine to one.

Men are now engaged in transplanting the hardwood seedlings, including elm, maple, butternut and ash varieties received from the government, on the plot of ground next to the old fair grounds.

These young trees made fine growth last season. They are being planted in rows four feet apart and at intervals of 30 inches, where they will remain until ready for transplanting on the streets for shade trees.

5½C Replaces 4B As Leading Size

This ideal size for women went by the board when a foot beauty contest, held in connection with the boot and shoe men's convention, was won by Marjorie Devoe here. She was awarded the honors for the most beautiful foot by a group of writers and artists.

Miss Devoe, it appears, wears a 5½C shoe when she isn't bare-footed. She won out of a group of 30 girls, the prettiest in the musical shows of the metropolis.

French Statesman Dies Senator G. D. Robertson Ill

Labor Leaders Both Stricken After Dinner—Canadian Reported Recovering—Probe is Ordered

Geneva.—On last Thursday, when President Doumer of France was assassinated, Albert Thomas, internationally famed French Labor statesman, and Senator Gideon D. Robertson, noted Canadian Labor statesman, dined together here.

Senator Robertson collapsed while the meal was in progress, his illness first being diagnosed as nervous collapse and later as apoplexy. He is in a nursing home and is said to be recovering.

Mr. Thomas, his companion, left for Paris to vote and pay his respects at the bier of President Doumer; Sunday, staggering into a Paris cafe, he too collapsed, and died soon after in a taxicab on his way to a hospital.

Probe Ordered

Physicians diagnosed his case as one of natural causes, but because of his eminence as president of the International Labor Bureau, a searching and determined investigation has been ordered.

Mr. Thomas directed the International Labor Bureau from the day of its origin; formerly he was minister of munitions in the French Government during the Great War. He was 53 years old.

His death shocked international circles in Geneva, where he was regarded as a tireless worker for the improvement of the lot of the working man.

Ottawa is Reassured

Ottawa.—Senator Gideon D. Robertson, former Conservative Minister of Labor, who took ill in Geneva on Thursday, is resting quietly and will probably be able to return to Canada within a few weeks. Advice to this effect reached Prime Minister R. B. Bennett Sunday.

Heading the Canadian delegation to the International Labor Conference which opened in Geneva on April 6, Senator Robertson sailed from Saint John the latter part of March. He was elected president of the conference at its sittings. Dr. W. A. Riddell, Canadian advisory officer to the League of Nations at Geneva, represented the Dominion Goverment with Senator Robertson. Tom Moore, president of the Trades and Labor Congress, was the delegate for the workmen; while Melville White, Toronto, was the representative of the employers.

Senator Robertson, who entered the administration of Premier Bennett following the general election of July 28, suffered a breakdown in November last. For two months he recuperated in Ottawa, and in the third week in January sailed for the West Indies for his health. Due to ill-health, Senator Robertson forwarded his resignation as Minister of Labor to the Prime Minister. On his return at the end of February he attended several sittings of the Senate before leaving for Geneva.

Called to Senate

Senator Robertson was called to the Senate on Jan. 20, 1917. He was made minister without portfolio in the Dominion cabinet in October, 1917. One year later, Senator Robertson was apponted Minister of Labor and held that pointed Ministed of Labor and held that Conservative Government following the general elections of Dec. 6, 1921.

Born on Aug. 26, 1874, at Watford, Ont., Senator Robertson has been associated with labor all his life. He entered the railway service in 1893 as a telegrapher, and in 1908 was unanimously elected by his fellow employees on the Canadian Pacific Railway as general chairman of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers. In January, 1914, Senator Robertson was appointed deputy president of the organization; and in 1915 was made vice-president and has served continuously in that capacity. He served as mediator in many important labor disputes, and was a member of the Dominion tariff inquiry commission of 1920.

$3,000,000 Fire Now in Hand

Million Gallons of Water an Hour Poured into Port Alfred Pulpwood Pile

Port Alfred, Que.—The installation over the week-end of new and powerful pumps to aid the dredge General Montcalm and other fire fighting apparatus, has at last brought the fire which has been blazing in a huge pile of pulpwood here under what is hoped to be final control. The wood, consisting of 250,000 cords, valued at $3,000,000, has been burning since Friday, April 29.

The quantity of wood which can be saved will be very small, however, even should the fire be completely extinguished within the next few days. The loss to the Consolidated Paper Company is covered by insurance.

All danger to the nearby mill of the Port Alfred Paper Company, a subsidiary of Consolidated Paper, was believed over Sunday. A small part of the pile situated at the end nearest the mill may be saved, it was estimated. Well over three-quarters of the wood has been destroyed.

It was calculated that the automatic pumps of the dredge, together with other equipment, was throwing a million gallons of water on the roaring mass of flames each hour. If no accident occurred it was believed that Monday would see the worst of the fire over. There will, however, be many days' work ahead to extinguish it thoroughly.

The staff of men working around the blaze at present numbers 650 men, divided into day and night shifts of 325 each. A large number of them were patrolling all the nearby sections of the village ensuring that no sparks or embers started other fires. Fortunately the wind has been in the general direction of Ha Ha Bay for several days.

Sales to Britain Show Increase

Canada's Trade Balance $68,441,080 Favorable—U.S. Adverse Cut

Ottawa.—During the 12 months ending March, Canada had a favorable balance of trade with the United Kingdom of $68,441,080, according to a summary of trade just published by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. Trade with the United States showed an unfavorable balance of $107,199,736. The latter was a decrease of $113,284,208 from the previous 12 months.

In the fiscal year 1931-32, Canada exported to the countries of the British Empire domestic products to the value of $218,829,262 and imports from the Empire were valued at $147,825,833, a favorable balance to the Dominion of $70,994,429.

Canadian exports of domestic products to foreign countries, the bureau adds, were $357,524,940 and imports from these countries $430,691,911, an unfavorable balance of $73,167,870.

Prince of Wales Says "Visit Canada Now"

The English magazine "Canada" carries in large type on its front cover an impressive invitation to British business men to visit this Dominion and learn at first hand of its great attractions and immense material potentialities. Our contemporary quotes the Prince of Wales as saying: "Step right over and see Canada for yourself. Remember it takes only six days across the Atlantic and only a few more to reach the Rockies and the Pacific coast. And if your business cannot spare you remember there are such things as business holidays."

It adds: "If you want Canadian trade visit the Dominion now. The Ottawa Conference will widen the opportunities for intra-Empire trade. The possibilities can only be properly investigated on the spot. Combine business with pleasure and make business contacts in the exhilarating air and sunshine of Canada."

In thus linking up the benefits of travel in Canada with the forthcoming Imperial Economic Conference at Ottawa it is stated that our Prime Minister is arranging for a tour of Canada by all those delegates to the Conference who can spare time for the trip, which will take place after the sessions of the Conference are over. Those who have the time will traverse the whole Dominion from coast to coast and others will see those sections in which they are most interested. Our contemporary adds that "no one can travel across Canada without being impressed by its vast extent, its magnificent scenery, and its rich resources, both actual and potential, as well as by the progressiveness and vigor of its people. It is an experience, moreover, that inevitably quickens Imperial consciousness in a visitor from overseas and increases his pride in the greatness of the Empire. We hope that many others besides the delegates from the Mother Country and the other Dominions will find it possible to make the 'grand tour' of Canada this Summer, either for business or for pleasure."

Nothing could be better from the Canadian standpoint than this prospective post-Conference tour. It will afford Canada an opportunity to exhibit the country and its attractions to the delegates and visitors from other parts of the Empire. The acquaintanceships, and even friendships, which will develop from personal contacts should prove a powerful factor in stimulating increased intra-Empire trade in accordance with the decisions of the Conference.

Whisky Imports Down in Canada for the Year

Ottawa.—A large decrease in the importation of whisky into Canada during the last fiscal year, is reported in a trade summary issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

During the fiscal year 1931-32, the whisky imports were valued at $15,673,061. This compared with $21,478,527 the year before. The total importation of alcoholic beverages in 1931-32 was $25,929,380.

HE NEVER SAT DOWN TO EAT

Lived on Eggs and Milk for Years

Now "Can Eat Anything" Thanks to Kruschen

A good appetite is usually a sign of good health. And a poor appetite is a sure sign that something is wrong somewhere. If you do not eat your meals and enjoy them, without any unpleasant after-effects, read this letter. The treatment that put this man right would surely be good for you, too:—

"I have much pleasure to be able to inform you that by regularly taking Kruschen Salts I regained my appetite, and have been completely released from pains which I had suffered in body and limbs.

"For years I disliked all eating, especially solid food. I never sat down at table during meals, and lived on milk and two eggs daily. One month ago, I started to take Kruschen Salts, and now I can eat anything with the greatest appetite."—J. F. D.

There are six salts in Kruschen, and every one of them is necessary to perfect health. If you lead a strenuous life in the open air, if every organ in your body performs its functions perfectly, if your diet is exactly balanced, then you can extract from the food you eat and the air you breathe all that is necessary to keep you fit. But if you spend the greater part of your life indoors, if you cannot get all the fresh air and exercise you need, if your eliminating organs don't do their work easily, naturally, and regularly, if your diet is not exactly what it should be, if you wake unrefreshed, eat without appetite, work without zest, and play without enjoyment—Kruschen is what you need, and Kruschen will put you right.

Kruschen sweetens and cleanses your blood, sets your internal machinery working smoothly, sends you out into sunshine or shower with the same cheery readiness for the day's work or the day's play.

Kruschen Salts is obtainable at all Drug Stores at 45c. and 75c. per bottle.

Students' Air Rates Cut

COLOR.

Men in general experience a great joy in color. The eye needs it as much as it does light. Let any one recall the refreshing sensation one experiences when on a gloomy day the sun shines out on a particular spot on the landscape and makes the colors of it visible. That healing powers were ascribed to colored precious stones may have arisen out of the deep feeling of this inexpressible pleasure.—Goethe.

How to play Bridge
AUCTION and CONTRACT
by Wynne Ferguson
Author of "PRACTICAL AUCTION BRIDGE"

ARTICLE No. 22

There is still one point in Auction and Contract that is undecided, one on which the experts di gree, and that is: When should the partner of the dealer take out the latter's no trump bid with a bid of two hearts or two spades? As one of my fellow authors has said: "It is the thorniest question of latter day bidding."

Every writer on the game seems to have a different opinion so that it is not surprising that the average player has difficulty in deciding what to do in this situation. The writer has frequently stated that, in his opinion, partner should take out freely with any five-card heart or spade suit, provided the hand contains at least one quick trick. Of course, with any greater strength, the take-out is obligatory; for example, with six or more hearts or spades, all writers agree that a take-out is obligatory. If the original no trump bidder cannot help the major suit bid, he should either bid two no trump or show his own suit, if he has one; otherwise, he should pass and let his partner struggle along with the major suit bid.

The object of all bidding, both at Auction and Contract, is to find a bid that will go game, and the best way to accomplish this purpose is to show a five-card major suit whenever possible. Experience has shown that a hand that will go game at no trump will nearly always go game if hearts or spades are trumps and there is a five-card major suit in either hand. On the other hand, there are many hands that will score game in hearts or spades that are not game hands in no trump.

For these rather evident reasons, the writer advocates free take-outs of partner's no trump with major suit bids. From then on it is up to the original no trump bidder to use his judgment as to whether he should try for game at the major suit or go on with his no trump.

An English writer who doesn't believe in the American informatory double, says that one way to settle the question of a take-out of partner's no trump is to adopt the following convention: "When the take-out is from weakness, say: 'I bid two hearts' and, when from strength, say: 'I make it two hearts'." This is, of course, the English idea of humor and a more or less severe criticism of the informatory double. In England they don't entirely approve of the double, nor do they consider it a fair convention. Needless to say, we will continue to believe in the informatory double and not adopt the English suggestion as to the take-out.

	Hearts—J, 8, 6, 3, 2 Clubs—J, 3, 2 Diamonds—K, 8, 4 Spades—K, 8
Hearts—9, 7 Clubs—9, 7, 6 Diamonds—J, 7, 6 Spades—J, 6, 5, 3, 2	Y A B Z	Hearts—K, Q, 5 Clubs—K, Q, 8 Diamonds—A, 5, 2 Spades—Q, 10, 9, 4
	Hearts—A, 10, 4 Clubs—A, 10, 5, 4 Diamonds—Q, 10, 9, 3 Spades—A, 7

Auction Bidding:

No score, first game. Z dealt and bid one no trump and A passed. If Y bids two hearts, Y Z will score game but, if he passes, A will open his spades and Y Z will only score one or two odd at no trump. It is a good example of the value of a free take-out.

Contract Bidding:

Y should bid two hearts and, if B passes, Z should bid three hearts. Y's hand doesn't justify a rebid, so the hand will be played at three hearts. There are many such hands at Contract where a fortunate distribution of the cards enable the declarer to score a game that cannot be contracted for in the bidding.

Problem

Hearts—9, 8, 3 : Y :
Clubs—A, Q, 7, 6 : A B :
Diamonds—Q, J, 9, 7, 6 : Z :
Spades—A

No score; Z dealt and bid one spade. What should A now bid with the foregoing hand at either Auction or Contract?

A has the choice of one of three bids: (1) an informatory double of one spade; (2) a bid of two diamonds; (3) a bid of one no trump. It seems to the writer that an informatory double with this hand is bad practice. It is too strong a hand to play at a minor suit and not strong enough to play at hearts. For the same reason, the two-diamond bid should not be made. It takes a great deal of strength in partner's hand to make game in diamonds but very little to make game possible in no trump. The no trump bid seems the best bid with this hand for it offers the best chance for game at either Auction or Contract.

Nervous Indigestion

Troubled for Years, Mrs. John Machon Thanks Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Permanent Relief

Soon Saw A Great Change

"For many years I had been troubled with indigestion and my nerves," writes Mrs. John Machon, Calumet, Que. "I suffered constantly. I tried many remedies, but without gaining any relief. I was unable to get any rest. I got a box of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to give them a trial. I soon saw a great change. Now I can go to bed and have a good night's rest, and am able to do a day's work with any one. All I have to thank for it is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I would not be without them in the house."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are remarkably effective in cases like the above, because they create new rich blood which supplies to the nerves the very elements they need. Equally effective for all run-down and anaemic conditions. Try them. At your druggist's, 50c a package.

Biting

I bit him. Not, as you many think,
Beneath the influence of drink,
Nor yet in madness, rage or hate,
Or any other frantic state;
But after calm deliberation,
With neither haste nor hesitation.
I simply took his finger tip
And gave it a decided nip;
And, unperturbed by shame or pride,
I claim that I was justified,
As I can prove, I hope, to you.
I ask, what is a chap to do
When Father rubs his great fat thumb
Around a tiny infant's gum
To see if his first tooth is through?
I ask you, what's a chap to do?
I bit him.

Enjoying Scenery

To enjoy scenery you should ramble amidst it; let the feelings which it gives rise mingle with other thoughts; look round upon it in intervals of reading; and not go to it as one goes to see the lions fed at a fair. The beautiful is not to be stared at, but to be lived with. I have no pleasure from books which equals that of reading over for the hundredth time great productions which I almost know by heart; and it is just the same with scenery.—From "Diary of Lord Macaulay."

We Mothers Know

"Peace," they have said,
Through the sad profit of our pain
We grieve till time is gone,
We shall not learn to build again
The bricks of Babylon—
Our sons are dead.

Stilled are the guns,
Good will, they say, shall heal, shall bless
The lands now, year by year,
But though the merciful possess
The earth, they shall not hear
Our little sons.

They were our friends;
Our thought, our breath, our blood we gave
To make them so;
They bought us peace, and in the grave
Is all the peace they know,
To make amends.

Leaders and lords,
Who in your pride decree that thus
Or thus shall scores be paid,
An age is building when with us your reckoning shall be made,
Who have no swords.

We mothers know:
By the world's hearths we sit and dream;
Again we watch them die;
They willed the peace that you blaspheme,
And, though you still deny,
It shall be so.

—John Drinkwater.

Owl Laffs

The London Spectator says that speaking aloud what's on your mind is the cause of longevity. Most women outlive their husbands.

Willie—"Did Thomas A. Edison make the first talking machine, daddy?"

Daddy—"No, son. God made the first one but Edison made the first one that could be shut off."

Husbands Don't Matter

If a married woman eats onions you can be pretty sure she's still in love with her husband.

Nothing dries quicker than the tears of a hypocrite.

A scientist says: "Kissing is the result of two sets of emotional cellular vibrations which attract each other and become harmoniously merged into a rich chord of contact." A good many people have enjoyed kissing without knowing what it was all about.

Sam—"How does he get his hair cut?"

A woman may be expert at picking a frock that wont fade, wear out or run, but, apparently, is not always so lucky when she picks out a husband.

Old Lady—"Wasn't it you to whom I gave a bottle of Elderberry Wine last week?"

Hobo—"Yes'm. I've come back to see if youll sell me a case."

Spinach has come in for another blow from a doctor, who insists it's good food for rabbits only. That, however, will not discourage thousands who reason that it tastes so bad it must be healthful.

A wise husband never quarrels with her husband until after pay day. The old men are looking so young these days that they all seem to die before their time. People who are too old to learn have outlived their usefulness. Just how far you get in life depends on whether your vehicle is the wishbone, the jawbone, or the backbone. A politician thinks of the next election, a statesman of the next generation. Unfortunately a girl doesn't seem to appreciate her late husband until too late. A lot of time is wasted trying to think up ways to save it. Marriages are very much the same after the excitement wears off.

First New Bride—"Do you still believe that the stork carries 'em?"

Second Newly Wed—"Oh, no, they come in airplanes now—an airplane means one—duoplane means two—triplane means three."

First New Bride—"Oh, dear me. I must hurry home."

Second Newly Wed—"But Why?"

First New Bride—"A Zeppelin just flew over my house."

Mother's Songs

Oh, sing the songs we loved to hear you sing
When we were bairnies prattling at your knee—
The songs that made us happier 'mid our glee,
And ever fondly to our memories cling.
Your gentle voice, still musically sweet,
Has charms to soothe the heart, and dry the tear;
Then sing them softly, sweetly, mother dear,
And we will listen, gladly, at your feet.
With moistened eyes, and heart in childhood's home,
The mother sings the songs of of other years;
And scenes where long ago 'twas hers to roam
Gladden her sight tho' seen thro' gathering tears—
The thatch-roofed cot, the stream, the glen, the mill,
Though distant far, are with the singer still.
She hears her father's kindly voice, and sees
Her mother's loving smile, as sunshine bright;
She listens to her brother's laughter light,
As hand-in-hand they roam the daisied leas.
And once again she sits within the bowers—
The Village May Queen—crowned with blushing bowers.

Too much acid makes the stomach and intestines sour. Alkali kills acid instantly. The best form is Phillips' Milk of Magnesia, because one harmless dose neutralizes many times its volume in acid. For 50 years the standard with physicians everywhere.

Take a spoonful in water and your unhappy condition will probably end in five minutes. Then you will always know what to do. Crude and harmful methods will never appeal to you. Get prove this for your own sake. It may save a great many disagreeable hours.

Be sure to get the genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia prescribed by physicians in correcting excess acidity.

"I'll see if Ella can come"

The very day visitors were coming, Bob Emery's wife caught a bad chill. She tried to keep going, but it was obvious that she would have to go to bed.

"Now don't worry," Bob said, "Ella's only 30 miles away. I'll just get her on the telephone and see if she can't come and help us out."

A few minutes later they had Ella's cheery promise. Once more, in an emergency, Long Distance had proved quick, dependable — and surprisingly inexpensive.

GRANT FLEMING, M.D. — ASSOCIATE SECRETARY

A PERSONAL MATTER

The progress which has been achieved during recent years in the conquest of disease has been made possible through the accumulation of scientific knowledge concerning the cause or manner of spread of certain diseases.

Diseases such as typhoid fever and cholera are practically non-existent where water and milk supplies are safeguarded. Proper diet banishes scurvey and rickets. We have available the means whereby we can be successfully armed against smallpox and diphtheria. The application of our knowledge of infant care has reduced infant mortality.

There are many diseases concerning the cause of which we know little or nothing, and we are therefore unable to prevent or to control them. We do know, however, how to treat some of these diseases successfully and so reduce the number of deaths which they cause. In general, it may be said that such treatment must be given early in the course of the disease if it is to be of real value.

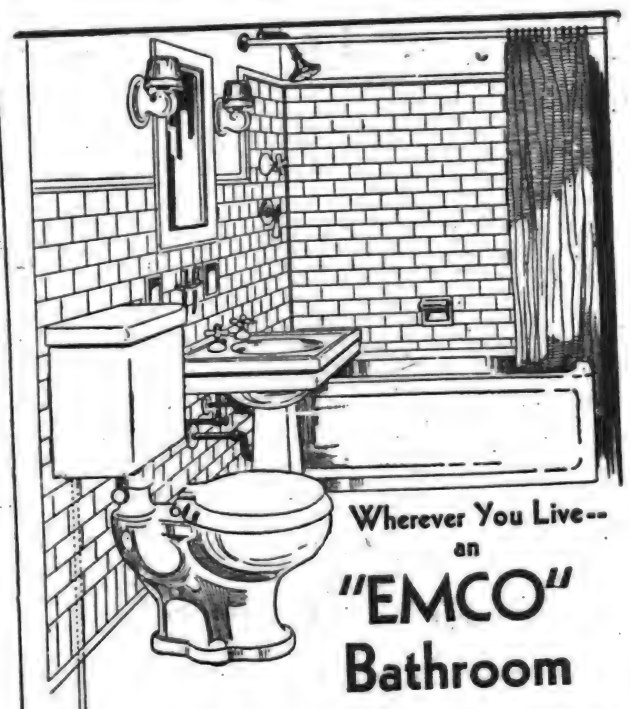
Diseases which cannot be prevented but which can be cured by early adequate treatment are entirely a personal matter. It rests with the individual to secure the treatment required early in the disease. It is necessary for each one to have a sufficient understanding of these diseases because they are a personal matter, purely individual diseases.

We notice that appendicitis takes an unnecessary toll of human lives year after year. The reason for this is failure to secure early treatment. The pain in the abdomen caused by appendicitis, is not considered to be of any significance, and, worst of all, it is often treated with a laxative which leads to disaster.

Cancer is another disease which, in many cases could be cured if treated early. It is because we fail to pay attention to sores which do not heal, to persistent or growing lumps, to unusual discharges or bleedings, or to chronic indigestion, that cancer cases so often come too late to the doctor's attention.

Pain is a danger signal, and pain should never be disregarded. Appendicitis causes pain, but cancer, (and this is the most important point) does not, as a rule, cause pain in its early stages, at the time when it may be cured by proper treatment.

It is obvious that the responsibility in such cases rests with the individual. Neither the public health department nor the medical profession can take the responsibility over. It is a personal matter, first and last.



Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

BUDDHISM'S RECRUIT

Former British M.P. and Suspected Spy Becomes Buddhist Priest In China.

Because he believes that "Christianity is bankrupt," Ignatius Trebitsch Lincoln, who gained wide notoriety during the war as a suspected international spy, has entered a monastery at Paohaushan as a Chinese Buddhist monk and started a crusade for Buddhist missionary work in the United States and Europe. Lincoln was at one time a member of the British House of Commons.

Lincoln, who has taken the name of Chao Kung, formally entered the priesthood by having twelve wound scars, symbolical of the Buddhist wheel of life, burned into his scalp with tiny wafers of incense and charcoal. Preparations for his ordination in the monastery included kneeling on a stone floor for days.

"The imperative need of Chinese Buddhism is to send missionaries to the United States and Europe to spread the doctrines of Buddha," said Lincoln. "The self-abnegation of Buddhism is the only antidote against the grasping greed and gross materialism of Western countries.

"I was a Christian at one time but I have found a consolation in Buddhism that Christianity could never afford me."

A FEW INTERESTING FACTS.

Booklet Shows That Torontonians Are Heavy Drinkers.

The fact that the drinking water is tested hourly in Toronto by the Department of Public Health, and is found to be uniformly pure and potable, is among the interesting facts in the Toronto Bureau of Municipal Research booklet, "Toronto at a Glance," which, among other things, states that Toronto's annual consumption of water is 28,317,000,000 imperial gallons.

The marked increase in water transportation that entered the harbor of the Queen City is indicative of an increasing prosperity to come from the new harbor, Welland Canal, and the great number of new industries located on harbor lands.

Of the three bells in the City Hall tower that strike the quarter, half and hours, the hour bell weighs 11,648 pounds, and the other two 3,339 and 1,904 respectively. Total cost of the City Hall, clock and bells, did not exceed $2,500,000.

THE MOUNTIES' SLOGAN.

The world famous tradition that the Mounties always "get their man," was an invention of American moving picture producers, Col. Cortlandt Starnes, former head of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, admits. "We got them if we could," Col. Starnes said, but added that the personnel of the Mounties now was equal to that of its earlier days when it earned international fame for its exploits.

DECISIONS RESPECTING NEWSPAPERS

Court decisions respecting newspaper subscriptions are very clear. Any person who takes a paper regularly from the post office, whether in his name or another's or whether he has subscribed or not, is responsible for payment. If a person orders his paper discontinued he must pay all arrears or the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made, and then collect the whole amount, whether the paper is taken or not. The courts have decided that refusing to take newspapers or periodicals from the post office or removing and leaving them unpaid, is prima facie evidence of intention of fraud.

M.G., announced the forming of a Militia Flying Unit in Toronto.

COOKSVILLE

Dedicates New Organ

A new double manual organ was opened and dedicated by the Rev. C. S. Jones, in Cooksville United Church Sunday. Mrs. Carol Rooke, Toronto, presided at the organ during the two services. Both junior and senior choirs of the church took part in the services, under the direction of Mrs. A. H. McFadden and E. M. Dillon.

AVOID HASTY JUDGMENT

We should be deliberate in judgment, candid in consideration, charitable in construction, moderate in condemnation. If you feel moved to criticize a brother, suppose you see him first. Talk over the matter in question and discover his viewpoint. Probably it is a different angle from that which presented itself to you. Perhaps, after all, it is the right angle, and you may be spared the ignominy of doing him an injustice. Perhaps he can tell you things you did not know. On the other hand, perhaps you can enlighten him and lead him to see the error of his way. How much better to convince and reform him, than to convict and destroy. At any rate, it is a satisfaction to be sure you are right before you go ahead.

PUPIL OUTSTANDING

IN MUSIC, ORATORY

High standing in the Halton Musical Festival was secured by Muriel Smith, twelve-year-old Public school pupil of Palermo Village, who won the first prize for piano solo for girls twelve ears old and under, and also took second place in the girls' open solo, vocal. Muriel was the gold medalist in vocal work at the same festival three years ago. Her accomplishments are varied, as last fall she won the championship of Halton County School Fair oratory and later came third in an inter-county oratorical contest at Guelph.

BRAMPTON

The annual decoration service of the Golden Star Lodge, I.O.O.F., Brampton, was attended by Oddfellows of Canton No. 7, Toronto, under Captain W. Workman, Lieutenant F. Kendall and Ensign G. McDonald, as well as lodge members from Orangeville, Georgetown, Milton and Streetsville. Thirty graves were decorated by the Oddfellows under Noble Grand H. G. Heatley and Chaplain H. Denny, and five graves by the Rebekahs, who were led by Mrs. A. Budd, Noble Grand. The Peel and Dufferin band, headed the parade to the cemetery, under the direction of J. J. Buckle. The committee in charge of the service consisted of W. Coates, Wm. Haines, Ernest Wilson, C. Core and J. Hay. W. Coates and Wm. Haines acted as marshals.

Members of the lodge paraded to Grace United Church in the evening, where they were welcomed by Rev. J. D. Parks, pastor of the church.

Motorists appearing in Peel County Police Court on Saturday charged with offences on information laid by the late Highway Traffic Officer Charles Hefferon pleaded guilty almost to a man, out of respect for his fairness and judgment. A typical comment was that of J. A. Armstrong, Brampton, charged with speeding, who when asked if he pleaded guilty simply replied "Of course I am. How much?"

POWER OFF

Owing to the large dynamo at the power plant going out of business Monday afternoon, Streetsville has been without power since and may be until Sunday. This is the second time the same thing has happened, and it makes it very inconvenient for all concerned. It may cost about $300 to repair the damage. You never miss the lights until the power goes off.

SAVES HIS FAMILY FROM FIERY DEATH

Clarkson — Breaking out in the home of Alfred Folkes, Station Road, fire which threatened the lives of the family did $2,000 damage. Awakened by smoke, Folkes carried his wife and Olga, their eight-year-old daughter, to safety, climbing along a garage roof and shed.

Folkes said that when he and his wife were awakened by smoke, they attempted to make their way down the stairs, but found it impossible, so he opened a window and aided the two to safety.

A neighbor, William Fasken, called Port Credit fire brigade and helped Mr. Folkes remove his car from the garage and save some of the furniture.

Cause of the blaze is unknown. A grandfather clock, a family heirloom, was among the objects destroyed. Insurance covers part of the total loss.

COMMUNITY CLUB

The last meeting was at the home of Mrs. M. Williamson. The programme consisted of several readings, all touching on "Mothers' Day. Several garments were made for a needy family, after which the hostess served the club lunch, assisted by Mrs. Jack Miller.

The next meeting will be May 25th, at the home of Mrs. Jack Miller. Persons wishing blankets to be sure and bring your woollens. Money to be sent with order.

TAKES 60-DAY TERM IN LIEU OF FINE

William Holdenby, New Toronto, elected to spend 60 days in Peel County Jail at Brampton in lieu of payment of a fine of $50 and costs for creating a disturbance, imposed by Magistrate L. J. C. Bull in Peel County Police Court yesterday. On May 8th, Holdenby went to the home of C. W. Campbell, former Reeve of Port Credit, entered the house, and assaulted Campbell, who said in court that Holdenby struck him in the face with a can of peas. The assault is said to have arisen from a dispute concerning damage done at a dance in Port Credit in April.

Mrs. Jacob Dolmage is spending several days with a niece near Orangeville.

Mrs. McArthur and Mrs. Hal Couse, with their children, spent a happy day recently with Rev. and Mrs. McCree and family, of Toronto.

Mrs. Bond, of Victoria Street, is visiting her sister in Toronto.

Alec Wallace has returned to the village after an absence of four weeks in the Toronto General Hospital. Alec is much improved in health and expects to be back to normal within a very short time.

The editors of local newspapers are often blamed for partiality in their notices for churches, societies and even families, when the fact is the parties most interested are the ones to blame. The local newspaper does not possess a sufficient number of reporters to send to every church service in the range of its circulation, and it must needs depends upon some person to send in the news. Many pastors or leaders of the congregation do this and their items are gladly printed. Many societies appoint one of their members to attend to this important work.

The Aztec Mystery

A Thrilling Story of the Old West

BY MURRAY LEINSTER

SYNOPSIS.

Because the courts had refused to recognize his claim to the Aztec mine, Sonny Holman holds up the company's payroll. Janet Laurier, who holds legal title to the mine, offers a reward for his capture. The sheriff believes in Sonny. The two try to capture Garcia's band, a group of desperadoes guilty of ore stealing.

The sheriff is severely wounded. Janet is kidnapped by Garcia's band. Sonny follows. He prevents Garcia from harming Janet and then is rushed by the Mexicans.

CHAPTER NINE.

He did not raise the weapon, but fired from the hip and flung the clubbed gun squarely in the face of a second man. A revolver, jerked in haste from a greasy belt, flew through the air and Sonny was on his feet, a smoking six-gun in his hand while he rushed the men who were crowding into the entrance.

It was a slaughter. A dead man rising to deal out death. The men who had crowded into the hut screamed and fought to be out again as bullets ripped into their bodies. One man fired, and one only. The flash of his weapon scorched Sonny's hair. Then he was trampled underfoot by the raging mass of those who fled. Superstitious terror was added to surprise, and it was no more than thirty seconds from Sonny's first movement to the instant he stood blazing savagely through the doorway at the fleeing figures.

The candle had been overthrown and extinguished, and the flaring fires outside allowed Sonny a few excellent targets. But he had not time to waste on such matters. He was snatching at dropped weapons and emptying them. He seized a rifle and by the feel of it it was a Winchester. He stuck a revolver haphazard into his belt and snapped: "Come on now, ma'am. We ain't got a burglar's chance, but—"

There was no answer. He turned and seized Janet's arm. Dragging her swiftly and none too tenderly behind him, he flung out of the hut and into the shadows. Somewhere a rifle went off, but it was in haste, and the man who had fired it fled.

A shrill whistle sounded. Sonny was plunging across the pocket in the hills. Garcia's voice was heard, screaming epithets at his followers, frantic with rage. Sonny halted and turned. He sent two bullets toward the voice.

"No chance t' get him now," he muttered.

Hoofbeats raced up. Gunpowder loomed in the darkness, his velvety hide glowing a faint crimson from the firelight a hundred yards away. The sound of his breathing was harsh and labored. Sonny flung Janet to his bare back. "What they done?" He cursed suddenly, deeply and savagely. A rope was tighly wound about Gunpowder's neck, drawn skilfully so that to breathe was torment for the stallion. It was a little Mexican trick to subdue an animal too fiery for taming otherwise.

Sonny's fingers struggled with the knot. It came loose and he vaulted up. "Hold on to me, ma'am." He half sobbed in rage. "Treatin' my hoss like that— Move, Gunpowder!"

The big black horse leaped forward. He ran for the opening of the passage that led to the outer world. Figures stirred against the black stone of the cliffs. Sonny fired grimly. Guns went off in terror-stricken haste and men fled. The shooting and the panic and the obvious disorganization of Garcia's plans had been bad for the nerves of the sentries. The whole gang, able to beat off Sonny and the sheriff as well in the open and after warning, was milling in half superstitious panic, ready to shoot at anything, but much more inclined to pray to otherwise neglected saints.

The rasping walls of the passageway sped past the two on the horse.

"Hol' fast, ma'am," drawled Sonny. "I'm goin' to use a li'l strategy. These greasers ought to be ready to run anyhow, now."

And he began to laugh at the top of his voice as the saddleless and unbridled horse ran through utter blackness with stones and damp foulness on either side. The walls echoed the laugh weirdly, so that it sounded unearthly and insane. To the guards at the outer end, the voice was that of a mad devil riding from the bowels of the earth, screeching commands to his cohorts of demons.

They came out into the open, and the only sound to tell of the watchers at the end of the tunnel was the sound of one man running away and another hysterically babbling prayers.

And Gunpowder bounded away with the two upon his back. Dark shapes loomed up on either side, disclosed themselves as boulders instead of more menacing things, and disappeared in the blackness behind. The sky above the cliff-tops grew vaguely lighter. The soft earth on which the stallion's hoofs had thudded, now changed to rock on which he clattered loudly. He swung into the stage road, running proudly with his double burden, with small stones rattling away from beneath his feet.

Then they were in the valley bottom. Far and away the lights about the mine enclosure glittered. The full moon was declining to the west and faint streaks were appearing above the tops of the distant mountains. A sudden freshness seemed to fill the air.

Sonny allowed Gunpowder to relax. "I rek'n," he said meditatively, "we'll get down to Moleville in about a hour, ma'am."

Janet's voice, when she managed to speak, was strangely oppressed. "Are we going to Moleville?"

"Sonny turned his head in astonishment. "Where else, ma'am?"

"I thought—" Janet swallowed something, and said coldly: "I thought since Garcia did not carry out the kidnapping as you had planned to have him do, that you might try to carry me off yourself."

Sonny whistled in blank amazement. "Lordy, ma'am!" he protested. "If a good reputation shines up in your sight like a snow-covered mountain, then the opinion yuh got of me looks like a coal mine! Howcome, lady, you figure me like that? An' if so," he was irreverently amused, "an' if yuh do, why ain't yuh scared?"

"Because," said Janet desperately, "I've got the revolver out of your belt, and it is pressing against your back. And I know enough about you now not to mind shooting."

Sonny was silent for nearly half a minute. Then he smiled wryly. Then he grinned. And then he began to laugh.

He laughed while Gunpowder trotted sedately toward Moleville, and the night wind rustled in the mesquite brush, going away over the hills to make room for the dawn breezes, and a jackrabbit started up out of its sleep between Gunpowder's hoofs and scurried away into nowhere. Janet was still, and a hard lump pressed against Sonny's ribs seemed to waver a little.

"Well then," said Sonny soberly, when he had stopped at last, "supposin' we kinda ignore this here—uh—interlude, an' carry on where we was when we was interrupted."

"I'm only concerned with getting back to Moleville," said Janet in a strangled voice.

"Yes'm," agreed Sonny, "but if it ain't too impolite, I'd like to remark that short of hoofin' it I don't see how yuh can help listenin' to me. I want to talk about that ore stealin'. I'd kinda like to explain how it's bein' done."

"I know how it has been done," said Janet. "Mr. Tilford told me today."

Sonny stared blankly before him. "He did?" He paused, and drawled: "Right accommodatin', he is, tellin' yuh how the Aztec's been looted. I just found out myself."

"But I know," Janet assured him, keeping her voice even with an effort. "A Mexican ore-wagon driver came to him today. You, with that Garcia, have forced the wagon drivers to pick out and fling over for you sacks of high grade ore out of every wagon-load taken to the railroad."

"Gosh!" said Sonny musingly. "I sure didn't think he'd tell yuh that. Part of it's the truth."

"You thought Mr. Tilford was afraid, like the Mexicans," she flared. "He isn't. He laid your whole plan before me as he learned it today. And knowing that you and those others are working together."

Sonny grinned dryly. "Yes'm?"

"I understand what has happened! You induced the sheriff to go where you knew your confederates were waiting for you! You took a man who mistakenly believed in your decency, if not your honesty, and you had him killed!"

Sonny's grin vanished. His whole figure grew stiff. "Go on, ma'am," he drawled. "I'm gettin' an earful."

The Beginning

All in a moment, years ago,
The boy I was became a man.
Suddenly my life began,
I saw the world before me—So
That plowman by his horses stands
Sweating on the first hill's brow,
Having left the riverlands
Furrowed in the vale below,
And sees a mountainside to plow,
Barren rock to blunt his share,
Thunder hanging in the air,
And the black peak above him, bare,
Waiting now.

MOTHER

Mother! How many delightful associations cluster around that word! The innocent smiles of infancy, the play of boyhood, and the happiest hours of riper years! When my heart aches, and my limbs are weary travelling the thorny path of life, I sit down on some mossy stone, and, closing my eyes on real scenes, send my spirit back to the days of early life. I feel afresh my infant joys and sorrows, till my spirit recovers its tone and is willing to pursue its journey. But in all those reminiscences my mother rises: if I seat myself upon my cushion, it is at her side; if I sing, it is to her ear; if I walk the walls or the meadows, my little hand is in my mother's, and my little feet keep company with hers; when my heart bounds with its best joy, it is because at the performance of some task, or at the recitation of some verses, I received a present from her hand. There is no velvet so soft as a mother's lap, no rose so lovely as her smile, no path so flowery as that imprinted by her footsteps.—Bishop Thomson.

In The Garden

Pick Out Flowers To Suit

Even if our flower garden is small or shaded or contains poor soil, we should not be discouraged. After all, there is something that will fit in and do well and it is this adapting of our garden to meet our own individual conditions that adds so much pleasure to the hobby. In permanently shaded quarters, that is where there is shade from some building or fence the year round, tuberous rooted Begonias, Pansies and wild flowers will do well. In fact, they prefer this location to any other. In partial shade, Clarkia, Annual Larkspur, Lupine, Nicotine, Phlox and Verbena should be grown. On poor soil, Portulaca is a favorite, as well as Alyssum, Sweet-scented Stocks, Linum, Calendula, Calliopsis, Sunflowers, Schizanthus, Salpiglossis, Marigolds, Petunias and many others. These will also more successfully resist dry weather than most others. For cutting purposes, we have a very long list to choose from, but should include Gypsophila (Baby's Breath), useful for making up bouquets, Salpiglossis, Sweet Pea, Zinnias, Cosmos, Asters, Marigolds and Scabiosa. If we prize fragrance, we should include Stocks, Nicotine, Mignonette, Alyssum, Sweet Sultan and Verbena. In the evening, particularly, a few of these will fill the whole garden with a delightful odour. There are several hardy annuals which can be picked with long stems just before the bloom opens and dried for winter bouquets. These include the Straw Flower, Statice, Acroclinium, Rhodanthe and many others.

Dahlias and Gladiolus

Dahlias and Gladiolus should not be planted until danger from frost is about over. As they are planted fairly deep and it will be a week at least before the first shoots appear, they will stand a little frost when first set out, but not after they really begin to grow. There is nothing to be gained anyway from too early planting, as there is not much growth with these things before the first of June. The Gladiolus prefers rich, open soil and a location where there will be some partial shade in the middle of the day. Most flowers thrive best in this way because if exposed to the full sun during the whole day the blooms will soon fade. These bulbs, or more correctly speaking, corms, should not be planted in the same place year after year, but should be moved around to prevent disease. For decorative effect plant in clumps of one variety, like Tulips, with eight to a dozen in each clump. In this case the corms should be spaced eight inches apart but only four inches if grown in rows. Plant from two to thre inches deep, the lighter the soil the deeper the planting. Cultivate freely until flower buds begin to form and water if necessary. New corms will be formed during the growing season and these, together with the Dahlias tubers, should be lifted after the foilage dies down and stored away in a frost proof cellar. Dahlias will grow in heavier soil than is best for Gladiolus, but if very clayey loosen up with ashes, leaves or coarse manure. Lay the tubers on their sides from three to six inches deep, depending on the kind of soil, and provide stakes for the taller growing varieties. Make sure that there is a sprout on each tuber. If you want tall plants, trim off side shoots and train main stem to stake. In any case, it is well to nip off a few of the flower buds which start opening in late July and continue until frost, so that blooms will be of larger size.

Best Way to Handle Tomatoes

Tomatoes are another thing which should not be set out until danger from frost is over. Get good, stout plants of the variety wanted and selecting a dull day or evening to prevent wilting, set out from eighteen inches to two feet apart. It is well to water and add a pinch of some quickly available fertilizer like nitrate of soda, about as much as would go on a quarter, when transplanting. This should not be allowed to come in contact with the plant or roots, however. It is a good plan to dissolve in water and apply fertilizer in this way. Fix stout six-foot stakes close to each plant, and as growth starts, nip off all side shoots and train to single main stem, which should be tied at foot intervals, loosely, to the stake. When plant reaches top of stake, nip off the main stem, and it may also be advisable to trim off part of the leaves to induce early ripening. Tomatoes staked in this way are earlier and cleaner than if allowed to sprawl on the ground where they also take up more room. Tomatoes prefer loam soil, and during early growth they must be cultivated at least once a week.

Muskrats Live With Beavers

Most beaver lodges furnish winter shelter for a family of muskrats as well as for their beaver tenants. It is believed that the muskrats do not share the actual living quarters of the beavers, but make small nests for themselves within the outer walls of the lodge.

Cheap Steel Houses Shown in Germany

Museum Gets Historic Flying Boat—Other Notes

Berlin.—At the instigation of the Reich's Ministry of Finance a number of small houses of various types were recently shown in a village on the outskirts of Berlin. The houses are intended as patterns of cheap and practical dwellings for workmen. Those finding most favor are built of steel plates, each plate being one meter by 2¼ meters in size. The edges of the plates are turned over to a depth of three inches, thus forming shallow boxes which are screwed together. Placed on end the "box bricks" are then filled with concrete and form weatherproof walls. So simple is the construction that it is said a small house of this kind with two or three rooms can be erected by three men without any previous knowledge in eight hours and at a cost of 2300 marks, which will decrease with the demand. The houses can be painted any color desired.

Munich.—The German Museum in Munich has just received a valuable addition to the already large number of varied and interesting exhibits which are contained in its Aviation Department — namely, the famous "Whale" flying boat, D-1422. This machine is only seven years old, but it has a history which few airplanes or flying machines can match. Built in 1925, at the Dorner Metal Construction Works at Friedrichshfen, it was used the following year by Amundsen in his daring flight to the north pole. In 1927, the flying boat was completely overhauled and reconditioned, and was employed by Capt. F. T. Courtney, British pilot, in an unsuccessful attempt to cross the Atlantic from Portugal to South America. After this, it served Wolfgang von Gronau in his antarctic explorations and first flight from Germany via Iceland and Greenland to New York. The flying boat was presented to the German Museum (Deutsches Museum) by the Dornier Company, and, despite the wear and tear of the past years, it was found possible to fly it from Friedrichshafen, and to make a safe landing at the Munich Flying Port, where heavy snow was encountered in place of the water on which this type of machine is intended to land.

Learning Made Easy

A children's club of unique character has been founded in Berlin. Here the children of all ages, primarily school children, may do what they please and not what they must. At first, they are all a bit at a loss, but soon begin to feel at home in the club. Some begin French or English conversations; others start modeling with clay and there is a sculptor present who can help them; young girls discover a sudden pleasure for crochet work. Some of the children ask a question and one of the adults present discusses it with all seriousness. Soon a little circle has gathered which listens with rapt interest. When the children realize that everything is permitted that they would like to do, they begin to learn without even knowing it.

Tips For Travelers

Maps give a traveler very one-sided information, especially when he is traveling for sight-seeing, recreation, amusement. They show him where there are mountains, rivers, lakes, the sea, but nothing about the people, their art, customs and history. Guidebooks are very practical as they contain all the important information. But this is given in the somewhat laborious way of the printed word. One reads pages upon pages and then turns to a map, or the other way about. The ideal, so it seems, would be a combination of map and information. Then the traveler could trace his way across a country and read all about it at the same time and choose with greater ease those spots which appeal to him most. The idea itself is not new. Quite an amusing attempt along this line has been made by M. Geisenheimer and M. Bertina in the Frankfurter Zeitung where they recently published "a view of northern Italy." Here one sees mountains as mountains, the sea is dotted with sailboats, the principal buildings of the important towns are shown in a few amusing sketches. The information given is concise and entertaining, often drawing the visitor's attention to minor but nevertheless important details. Here are lovely mosaic pictures and polite cabmen; this little town is quite Italian with a marble cathedral, and mark the silk scarfs, one reads. Verona has this description: You must get out here. One of the most lovely Venetian cities. History! Art! Happy people. In the summer operas in the arena. Romeo and Juliet!" We even learn that Gerhart Hauptmann, the great German author, may be seen promenading in Rapallo in the spring, a piece of information no guidebook would contain—let alone an ordinary map.

Co-eds in Germany

Since the war, the number of women students at German universities has increased five times, the number of men students only 50 per cent. Since 1925 the number of women students has trebled. To-day about 22,000 women are studying in Germany, or about 16 per cent. of the total number of students. About half of the women students at Prussian universities, roughly 5000, were preparing for teachers' positions at higher schools last year. At present 1900 women teachers are being employed at the Prussian higher schools.

You should know this about oil, says mechanic

The proper oiling of household devices presents a problem different from any other form of lubrication. Sewing machines, vacuum cleaners, lawn mowers, the electric motors of washers, fans, refrigerators and simple devices have a tendency to collect dirt and rust when not in service. Consequently oil intended for general household use should clean and protect as well as lubricate.

3-in-One Oil will do these three things. For, unlike ordinary oil, it is really three high quality oils in one—animal, mineral and vegetable. It penetrates quickly, cleans the metal surfaces, "stays put," reduces wear and saves repairs. It also prevents rust and tarnish.

Don't make the mistake of thinking "any kind of oil will do." Play safe; insist on 3-in-One Oil. Sold everywhere, by good grocery, hardware, drug and general stores. For your protection, look for the trade mark "3-in-One" printed in Red on every package.

The Golden Province of Canada

In the midst of a world of depression, the Gold Mining industry of Ontario has risen to a new record production. The Gold Mines of the Province in 1931 produced precious metal to the value of 43 Million Dollars, which is 20 per cent. in advance of the output for 1930, and four-fifths of the total gold production by the Dominion of Canada.

WITH THE LONE SCOUTS

New Troop

This week we are pleased to record the "birth' of a new Troop at Cannington, which is the result of a keen bunch of Lone Scouts in that town. The list of Troops organized through Lone Scout activity still mounts steadily, and although it robs us of some very enthusiastic members from the Lone Scout ranks, we are glad to say that there is always a stream of promising recruits coming along to take their places amongst us.

We certainly wish the 1st Cannington Troop all good fortune, and we hope that they have lots of fun and accomplish great things in Scouting in the future.

This Weeks Scout Law. No. 8—A Scout smiles and whistles under all difficulties.

And what does that mean? Why, simply that, where a boy can smile or whistle, there is no room for frowns and angry faces, or for grumbling or hard words.

It is a Scout's job to "make the best of things,' however bad they may appear at first sight. There is an old saying which tells us that "things are never so bad but what they might be worse," and certainly if one keeps a cheerful spirit all the time, it helps to overcome difficulties.

Happiness and cheerfulness are like epidemics—they are easily passed on to someone else. So Lonies, always try to radiate sunshine, and you will succeed in making other people feel happier too, and in these troublesome days, that is a very fine "Good Turn."

During the recent newspaper "whistling nuisance" debate Lord Baden-Powell confessed to being one. "Carrying out the Scout Law," he said, "When angry, or in difficulty, I whistle, and likewise when I am particularly enjoying life and feeling uppish. Also for me whistling provides a substitute for smoking, for, like a pipe, it gives satisfaction to me and annoyance to everybody else." Lord Baden-Powell recalled a Scout concert given at Albert Hall by Madame Melba "at which there was some excellent chorus whistling." B.-P. declared the art should not be allowed to die "because of this scarcity of tunes in modern music."

Mount Baden-Powell

One of the many unique honors conferred upon Lord Baden-Powell was the naming after him by the United States Geographical Board of a mountain in Washington, and the Board's statement: "We are more than pleased to name this American mountain peak in honor of Lord Baden-Powell, who, because of his splendid achievements in giving to the world a movement for the youth of all lands, may well be considered a world citizen."

Scouts to Check Up on Path of Eclipse

Plans are being worked out for the co-operation of Scouts and McGill scientists in checking up on the path of the sun's eclipse across Quebec on August 31. Montreal and St. Johns Scouts will establish the western edge of the path, and Scouts of Sherbrooke, Three Rivers and Quebec City the Eastern edge of "totality." In preparation Montreal Scouts will attend a lecture on the subject by Dr. A. V. Douglas of McGill University.

Growing Seeds Huge Industry

United States Heads List as Producer—Interesting History

Cleveland.—Seeds, sold in packets, seem to possess a very negative background. Actually a vast industry has sprung up in the United States, spread over the whole continent. "The raising of seeds is a specialized field all of its own," declares a nationally known seedsman, "and due to varying climatic conditions in various parts of the world, many foreign countries can produce better seed of certain plants than seedsmen in the United States. For that reason many varieties are imported from other countries.

Cabbage From Denmark

The Danes, because of their long experience and the favorable climatic conditions in Denmark, produce the best cabbage and cauliflower seed in the world. The best sweet corn seed in the world is grown by Charles Clarke, at Wakeman, Ohio.

In flowers, the best zinnias seed are raised by an Englishman just outside of Los Angeles. He has 140 acres devoted to this and other flowers. The best sweet pea seed in the world are raised at Lompoc, Calif.

After a crop of seed has been raised and cured, the seed find their way into the hands of distributors. The method in which they are tested in the distributors' plants is interesting.

Some of the larger seed companies handle from 3,000 to 5,000 different kinds and grades. Before they can be put on the market they must be tested for germination quality and to determine whether they are true to type.

The seed are wrapped in blotters, about 50 to each blotter, and placed in a germinator where the warm, moist air soon causes them to show signs of life. Periodically they are inspected and a note made on the blotter of the number sprouted. In this way can be determined the germination qualities of each lot of seed received.

Another quantity of seed from the same lot is planted in pots. The plants which grow from these seed are observed for their "true to type" qualities.

Frequently pollen from another type plant of the same species finds its way to the seed grower's lot. This pollen fertilizes his plants and the resulting seed from his crop will produce a flower or fruit with mixed characteristics of both plants. This is often observed in corn—the ears bear both white and yellow kernels.

After the seed is tested for its production qualities, it is then weighed and packed for distribution. This process is almost entirely mechanical.

A delicate scales that will divide a pound into 2,500 parts is brought into use. The seedsman determines from the cost of the seeds just how many he should include in a package to pay him. He divides a pound of seed by this scale into the required number of packages.

Then another machine is brought into play. It has a die which houds just enough seed to make up the weight determined on the scales.

Seeds are fed into a hopper above the machine and from then on filling, closing and sealing of the packages is automatic. The amount of seed in each package does not vary more than 10 per cent, above or below the set standard previously determined.

These machines can turn out 30,000 packages of seed in an 8-hour day, and large seed houses turn out from 150,000 to 240,000 a day during the rush season.

May 22, Lesson VIII—Jacob and Esau Reconciled—Genesis 33: 1-11. Golden Text—Be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you.—Ephesians 4: 32.

ANALYSIS.

I. A WRONG-DOER'S FEARS, vs. 1, 2.

II. RECONCILIATION, vs. 3-7.

III. THE TOKEN OF RECONCILIATION, vs. 8-11.

INTRODUCTION—Jacob had prospered greatly during his sojourn with Laban, his uncle. He had won two of Laban's daughters for his wives, reared a numerous family and acumulated great possessions, 29, 30. The homeland, however, beckoned him and God prompted him. So back to Canaan he came. Home-coming after years of absence is always a moving experience. But the joy of Jacob's homecoming was clouded with fear of his brother, Esau, whom he had wronged. The life of a man who lies and cheats is always haunted with fearsome spectres. How could Jacob meet Esau? He prepared to meet him, but instead met —God! God moves in a mysterious way, but never more mysteriously than on that lonely night at Peniel, when he wrestled with Jacob until the break of day, 32: 24-32. Our reconciliation with those whom we have wronged can never be complete and lasting until we have first met God.

I. A WRONG-DOER'S FEARS, vs. 1, 2.

The glory of the Bible is that it tells the downright truth abotu those who appear on its pages. None of its characters are whitewashed; none of its heroes are given an entirely clean sheet. They stand out in all their shameful faults—saints, of course, but very human saints. This must be borne in mind, or Jacob's conduct here will be unintelligible. He has met with God, and it may be said that from now on the drift and intention of his life is towards God. But the dross of his character still remains; it will take many a long, hard struggle to purge it away. He is still the sly, cunning Jacob. The approach of Esau with an escort of four hundred men has thrown him into a panic. For what purpose is Esau coming? Is he still nursing his anger? Will he slay Jacob's wives and children, and rob him of his flocks and herds? Or has he come out of good will, to welcome Jacob home? Jacob doubtless wishes to be reconciled with Esau, but he must be on his guard lest Esau should attempt to wreak revenge. Craftily, therefore, he divided his family, stationing the two handmaids with their families at the head of the procession, and the two wives with their families in the rear. Rachel, his favorite wife, was placed at the very end of the company, in the position of least danger. If Esau planned revenge he would naturally fall upon the handmaids first, in which case the wives with their families might be able to effect an escape.

II. RECONCILIATION, vs. 3-7.

Jacob himself went forward at the head of his company. When he met Esau he showed homage such as was ordinarily shown only to a king. Seven times he fell to the ground before the brother whom he had wronged. In the Tel-el-Amara tablets, written by the pre-Israelite kings of Canaan to the Pharaoh of Egypt, about B.C. 1500, some of the Canaanite kings state in their letters, "Seven and seven times fall I down at the feet of the king, my lord." Jacob's action, then, was that of a vassal before his liege-lord; such deferential courtesy as to a royal person was intended to win back the soul of Esau to him. In all this polite homage, however, Jacob was only knocking at an open door. For Esau had forgotten all, and forgiven all. His attitude here was truly noble. Swift to become angry and swift to forgive, he was a man of strong impulse. His impulsive nature showed itself in the way in which he embraced Jacob and kissed him. Jacob, the wrong-doer, showed deference as before one higher than himself, but Esau, the wronged, showed real affection. Thus these alienated brothers, long held apart, were happily knit in brotherly love again. One writer remarks, "Genesis is a book of reconciliations. Families are for a time estranged and one brother would not be sorry to see another dead. But absence makes the heart grow fonder, and evening brings all home."

III. THE TOKEN OF RECONCILIATION, vs. 8-11.

According to 32: 7, Jacob, who was traveling like a chieftain with his company, divided his people, flocks and herds into two companies and sent them ahead to meet Esau. From 32: 8, it is plain that this was a precautionary measure, based on fear of Esau. Love, however, had now cast out fear, and made the precaution useless. Therefore when Esau, in v. 8, questioned him concerning one of these companies which he had already met, Jacob seized the opportunity, and offered them as a gift. It was a token that the reconciliation was sealed and complete. Esau showed his generous nature by declining the gift; Jacob showed his humility by pressing it. He carried his courtesy so far that he compared Esau with God himself, whose face one sees only with fear and anguish. "I have enough," said Esau, v. 9. Jacob also said "I have enough," v. 11. Yet Jacob said this with a difference. He said, "Take my gift because God hath dealt graciously with me, and because I have enough." Both brothers claimed to have enough, but Jacob saw that his sufficiency was of the grace of God. For all his faults Jacob was capable of reaching a higher plane than Esau.

Soviet To Allow Open Grain Sales

Decree Permits Peasants to Set Own Prices on Markets

Moscow.—A stimulus to agriculture, more bread for individuals and an impetus to internal trade generally are predicted as a result of a decree just signed jointly by Joseph Stalin, Communist party chief, and Premier Molotoff, the powerful Government official.

Issued by the Council of Commissars and the Central Executive Committee of the party, it was displayed on the front pages of all the newspapers recently. A grain trust official remarked, "Naturally, it will make the peasants happy," for they will have more grain for their own use and will be able to barter it at bazaars.

The decree first reduces the total Government grain collections this year by about 20 per cent., thus leaving more grain in the hands of the growers, and second, it gives freedom and encouragement to collective farm members and individual peasants to sell their grain in the open markets at their own prices, not the Government fixed prices.

It is thought here that the sale of this grain will encourage the individual to manufacture such needed articles as cloth and tinware. The fact that a large amount of consumers' goods was made by petty artisans before the revolution and during the NEP (New Economic Policy) often has been neglected in attempts to explain the present goods shortage in the face of the increased factory production.

Trade Wares For Grain

Boot makers and such will now trade their wares for grain. At present it is next to impossible to get shoes unless they are made by independent cobblers, and even the peasants' sandals are scarce. In connection with this new policy of free trade, the agricultural tax will exempt profit derived from goods sold in the markets.

Under the new program the Government grain collections in the coming harvest are fixed at 18,000,000 tons, which is 4,300,000 tons below the 1931 figures. Since a greater yield is expected this year as a result of the increased acreage, there will be an unusually large quantity of grain for the peasantry.

The decree contemplates an increase in grain collections from state farms of about 1,000,000 tons, which will not make up for the reductions in other quarters. The natural-flow of bartered grain directly to consumers in town and country is expected to fill in this gap.

In recent months the peasants have been encouraged to sell their produce and manufactures, but there has been no reduction in the grain collections. The decrees form a part of a widespread campaign in industry and agriculture—initiated by M. Stalin along the lines laid down by Lenin—to create an incentive to greater individual effort.

In industry, according to the piecework system, the more a man works the more money he receives. In agriculture now it will be the same—if he plants more he will earn more by selling it in bazaars and markets.

The decree is calculated to increase efficiency and economy, since no more will grain be hidden or allowed to rot in the fields as occurred in the past when the peasant thought that if he harvested too much grain the Government would seize it.

Russian Farming Takes Big Strides

Moscow—More tractors and other agricultural machines are in the fields of Russia than ever before and last month the sown area was double that during the same period last year.

The Government's figures showed 16,106,750 acres sown as compared with 8,297,500 at the same time in 1931. This year's planting program calls for cultivation of 225,975,000 acres as compared with last year's 243,712,500.

A $20 gold piece was made to sing over a radio broadcast by drawing a violin bow across its surface. Even connoisseurs agree that it was sweet music.

Diseases of Grain In Eastern Canada

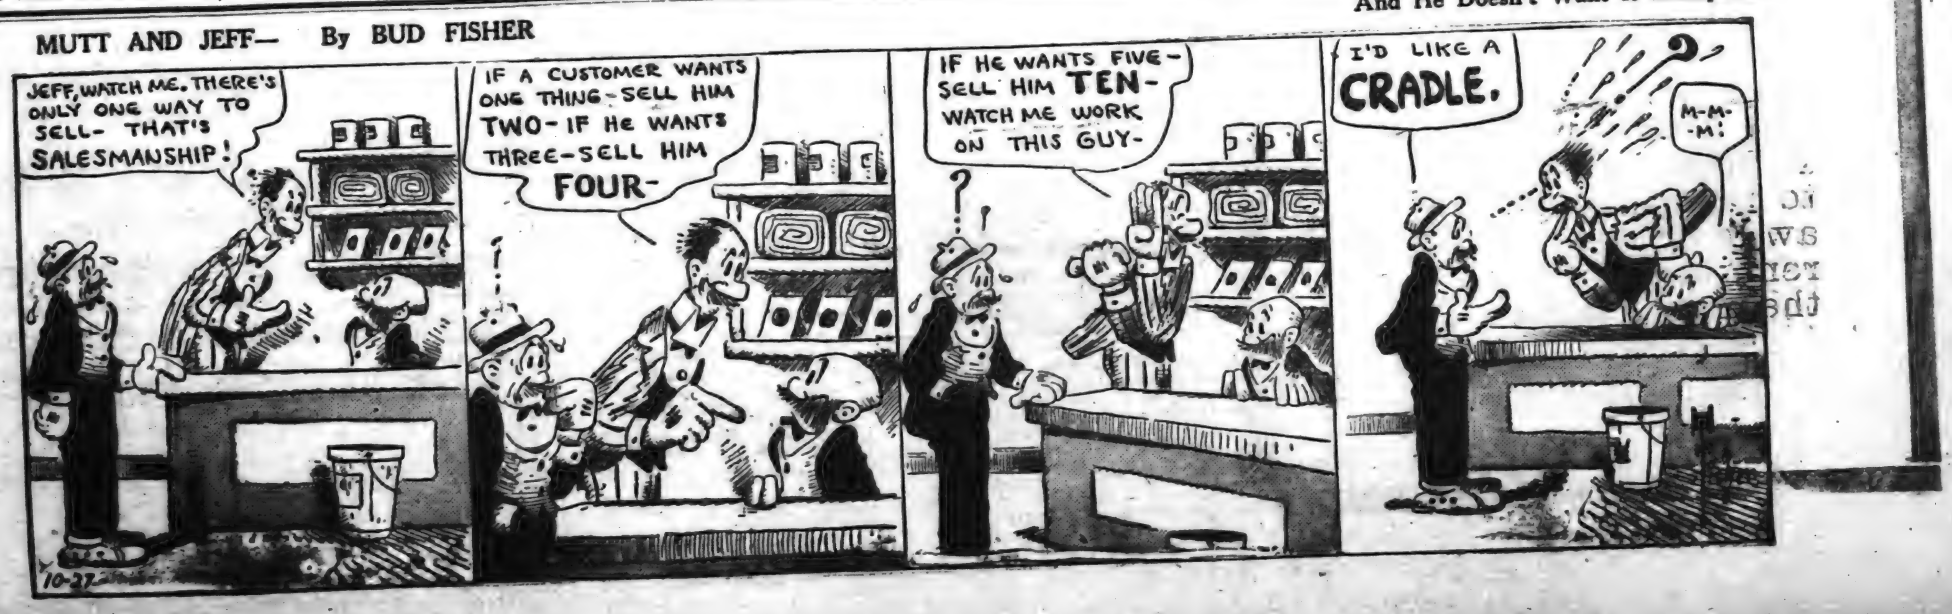
(Experimental Farm Note)

Smut diseases cause considerable losses to grain crops in Eastern Canada, being especially detrimental to oats and barley. Satisfactory methods of control of these diseases have, however, been devised by the Division of Botany of the Dominion Experimental Farms.

In seeking to control smuts, it should be understood that smut on barley is not the same as smut on wheat, and loose smut of wheat differs very greatly from burnt or stinking smut. Persons in doubt as to the identity of any particular smut disease should submit samples to the nearest Dominion Laboratory of Plant Pathology where correct diagnosis will be made and the proper control measures described.

The most up-to-date recommendations for smut control are found in Bulletin No. 81, New Series, issued by the Dominion Botanist, Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa. Treatments are given as follows: "Wheat Bunt, Loose Smut of Oats and covered Smut of barley—The solution is prepared by adding one pound of formalin to 40 gallons of water and stirring till the formalin and water are well mixed together. Since this quantity of liquid may be greater than is required for use in a single day, any desired amount may be prepared in the above proportions by adding one ounce of formalin to every 2½ gallons of water."

"The grain to be treated is placed in a pile on a clean floor, and sprinkled with formalin solution from an ordinary sprinkling can or by means of a broom. The grain is then shovelled over into another pile, the grain being mixed as thoroughly as possible to distribute the moisture. The grain is again sprinkled and shovelled over. This operation is repeated until the grain is uniformly moistened. Forty gallons of soluton will treat from 40 to 50 bushels of grain, aproximately one gallon to every bushel. The treated grain should be covered up for four hours with clean sacks or canvas."



Loose smut of Wheat and Loose smut of Barley are controlled by the hot-water treatment as follows: "First the seek is soaked in warm water (86 deg. F.) for four hours and then the swollen grain is immersed for ten minutes in water kept during this time at a constant temperature not below 122 deg. F. and not above 160 deg. F." —R. R. Hurst, Dominion Laboratory of Plant Pathology, Charlottetown, P.E.I.

Nodular Disease in Sheep

A farmer brought the intestines of a sheep, recently dead, to my office a few days ago, and asked the question, why did the sheep die. An examination of the intestine revealed many small knobs or nodules about the size of a pea, on the surface of the gut. These when cut open were found to be filled with a greenish yellow pus. Some of the nodules or little lumps had hardened and had a gritty feeling when cut across with a knife. At one point in the intestine the lumps or nodules were so large as to block the intestine, that it prevented the passage of digested food from moving along. It was due to this stoppage that the sheep died. These small pus filled lumps are caused by the young Nodular Worm, which is very common in sheep flocks of Ontario. It causes much loss through unthrift brought on by its presence in the sheep or lamb, and is frequently the cause of death, as the intestine is likely to rupture at the point where the nodules are present. The prevention of these losses consists of keeping the sheep moving to new pasture as often as possible, and giving them a lick composed of salt 10 parts, and broken tobacco leaf 1 part. The flock should have the lick before it at all times. Tobacco can be secured from those farmers that grow it, or it can be grown on your own farm, and when dry it can be pulverized by running it through a feed mill, stems and leaves. The lambs that are born very early in the season will be less infested than the lambs born out on the infested pastures.—L. S., Ont. Dept. Agriculture.

Families are for a time estranged and one brother would not be sorry to see another dead. But absence makes the heart grow fonder, and evening brings all home."

III. THE TOKEN OF RECONCILIATION, vs. 8-11.

According to 32: 7, Jacob, who was traveling like a chieftain with his company, divided his people, flocks and herds into two companies and sent them ahead to meet Esau. From 32: 8, it is plain that this was a precautionary measure, based on fear of Esau. Love, however, had now cast out fear, and made the precaution useless. Therefore when Esau, in v. 8, questioned him concerning one of these companies which he had already met, Jacob seized the opportunity, and offered them as a gift. It was a token that the reconciliation was sealed and complete. Esau showed his generous nature by declining the gift; Jacob showed his humility by pressing it. He carried his courtesy so far that he compared Esau with God himself, whose face one sees only with fear and anguish. "I have enough," said Esau, v. 9. Jacob also said "I have enough," v. 11. Yet Jacob said this with a difference. He said, "Take my gift because God hath dealt graciously with me, and because I have enough." Both brothers claimed to have enough, but Jacob saw that his sufficiency was of the grace of God. For all his faults Jacob was capable of reaching a higher plane than Esau.

Soviet To Allow Open Grain Sales

Decree Permits Peasants to Set Own Prices on Markets

Moscow.—A stimulus to agriculture, more bread for individuals and an impetus to internal trade generally are predicted as a result of a decree just signed jointly by Joseph Stalin, Communist party chief, and Premier Molotoff, the powerful Government official.

Issued by the Council of Commissars and the Central Executive Committee of the party, it was displayed on the front pages of all the newspapers recently. A grain trust official remarked, "Naturally, it will make the peasants happy," for they will have more grain for their own use and will be able to barter it at bazaars.

The decree first reduces the total Government grain collections this year by about 20 per cent., thus leaving more grain in the hands of the growers, and second, it gives freedom and encouragement to collective farm members and individual peasants to sell their grain in the open markets at their own prices, not the Government fixed prices.

It is thought here that the sale of this grain will encourage the individual to manufacture such needed articles as cloth and tinware. The fact that a large amount of consumers' goods was made by petty artisans before the revolution and during the NEP (New Economic Policy) often has been neglected in attempts to explain the present goods shortage in the face of the increased factory production.

Trade Wares For Grain

Boot makers and such will now trade their wares for grain. At present it is next to impossible to get shoes unless they are made by independent cobblers, and even the peasants' sandals are scarce. In connection with this new policy of free trade, the agricultural tax will exempt profit derived from goods sold in the markets.

Under the new program the Government grain collections in the coming harvest are fixed at 18,000,000 tons, which is 4,300,000 tons below the 1931 figures. Since a greater yield is expected this year as a result of the increased acreage, there will be an unusually large quantity of grain for the peasantry.

The decree contemplates an increase in grain collections from state farms of about 1,000,000 tons, which will not make up for the reductions in other quarters. The natural flow of bartered grain directly to consumers in town and country is expected to fill in this gap.

In recent months the peasants have been encouraged to sell their produce and manufactures, but there has been no reduction in the grain collections. The decrees form a part of a widespread campaign in industry and agriculture—initiated by M. Stalin along the lines laid down by Lenin—to create an incentive to greater individual effort.

In industry, according to the piecework system, the more a man works the more money he receives. In agriculture now it will be the same—if he plants more he will earn more by selling it in bazaars and markets.

The decree is calculated to increase efficiency and economy, since no more will grain be hidden or allowed to rot in the fields as occurred in the past when the peasant thought that if he harvested too much grain the Government would seize it.

Russian Farming Takes Big Strides

Moscow—More tractors and other agricultural machines are in the fields of Russia than ever before and last month the sown area was double that during the same period last year.

The Government's figures showed 16,106,750 acres sown as compared with 8,297,500 at the same time in 1931. This year's planting program calls for cultivation of 225,975,000 acres as compared with last year's 243,712,500.

A $20 gold piece was made to sing over a radio broadcast by drawing a violin bow across its surface. Even connoisseurs agree that it was sweet music.

Diseases of Grain In Eastern Canada

(Experimental Farm Note)

Smut diseases cause considerable losses to grain crops in Eastern Canada, being especially detrimental to oats and barley. Satisfactory methods of control of these diseases have, however, been devised by the Division of Botany of the Dominion Experimental Farms.

In seeking to control smuts, it should be understood that smut on barley is not the same as smut on wheat, and loose smut of wheat differs very greatly from burnt or stinking smut. Persons in doubt as to the identity of any particular smut disease should submit samples to the nearest Dominion Laboratory of Plant Pathology where correct diagnosis will be made and the proper control measures described.

The most up-to-date recommendations for smut control are found in Bulletin No. 81, New Series, issued by the Dominion Botanist, Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa. Treatments are given as follows: "Wheat Bunt, Loose Smut of Oats and covered Smut of barley—The solution is prepared by adding one pound of formalin to 40 gallons of water and stirring till the formalin and water are well mixed together. Since this quantity of liquid may be greater than is required for use in a single day, any desired amount may be prepared in the above proportions by adding one ounce of formalin to every 2½ gallons of water."

"The grain to be treated is placed in a pile on a clean floor, and sprinkled with formalin solution from an ordinary sprinkling can or by means of a broom. The grain is then shovelled over into another pile, the grain being mixed as thoroughly as possible to distribute the moisture. The grain is again sprinkled and shovelled over. This operation is repeated until the grain is uniformly moistened. Forty gallons of soluton will treat from 40 to 50 bushels of grain, aproximately one gallon to every bushel. The treated grain should be covered up for four hours with clean sacks or canvas."

Loose smut of Wheat and Loose smut of Barley are controlled by the hot-water treatment as follows: "First the seek is soaked in warm water (85 deg. F.) for four hours and then the swollen grain is immersed for ten minutes in water kept during this time at a constant temperature not below 123 deg. F. and not above 160 deg. F." —R. R. Hurst, Dominion Laboratory of Plant Pathology, Charlottetown, P.E.I.

Nodular Disease in Sheep

A farmer brought the intestines of a sheep, recently dead, to my office a few days ago, and asked the question, why did the sheep die. An examination of the intestine revealed many small knobs or nodules about the size of a pea, on the surface of the gut. These when cut open were found to be filled with a greenish yellow pus. Some of the nodules or little lumps had hardened and had a gritty feeling when cut across with a knife. At one point in the intestine the lumps or nodules were so large as to block the intestine, that it prevented the passage of digested food from moving along. It was due to this stoppage that the sheep died. These small pus filled lumps are caused by the young Nodular Worm, which is very common in sheep flocks of Ontario. It causes much loss through unthrift brought on by its presence in the sheep or lamb, and is frequently the cause of death, as the intestine is likely to rupture at the point where the nodules are present. The prevention of these losses consists of keeping the sheep moving to new pasture as often as possible, and giving them a lick composed of salt 10 parts, and broken tobacco leaf 1 part. The flock should have the lick before it at all times. Tobacco can be secured from those farmers that grow it, or it can be grown on your own farm, and when dry it can be pulverized by running it through a feed mill, stems and leaves. The lambs that are born very early in the season will be less infested than the lambs born out on the infested pastures.—L. S., Ont. Dept. Agriculture.

Practically an egg a day is eaten by every man, woman and child in Canada. The average per capita yearly consumption of eggs in the Dominion is 361, the highest of any country, according to an official computation.

Canada's gold production in 1931 reached the new high total of 2,682,776 ounces valued at $55,457,900. This is 27.6 per cent above the 1930 production. Of this total the province of Ontario accounted for 2,079,752 ounces valued at $42,992,288.

New Brunswick can now claim the rare distinction of producing a white squirrel. The animal was caught by Jack Felsing of Fredericton who trapped it near the village of Lincoln. It has been bought by the government and will be mounted and placed on exhibition.

Four stretches of New Brunswick trout and salmon waters were sold at the Department of Lands and Mines recently for prices totalling $8,850. These leases for a term of 10 years are on the Restigouche, Kedgwick, Matapedia and Big Sevogle Rivers and prices paid are the annual rental charges.

Daylight saving time, commencing in Quebec and Ontario provinces May 1, occasioned little confusion on Canadian Pacific travel. Travellers have nowadays learned that the railways remain on standard time and govern themselves accordingly. The railway announced a number of train time alterations prior to the introduction of daylight saving.

ELECTION CONTEST

At the nomination meeting last Friday night at the Town Hall, Messrs. S. H. Foster, James Dandie and O. R. Church were nominated for the vacancy in the council. The latter did not qualify, but the other two did, so there is a contest for the vacant seat between Messrs. Foster and Dandie. The voting will take place tomorrow, Friday, from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. D.S.T. May the best man win.

Very few electors were present at the meeting because, as a rule, not much interest is taken in a bye-election. But those who did attend heard some spirited speeches.

Mr. Foster, who was an applicant for the clerkship and treasureship, claims to have a grievance against the council. He charged Reeve Hope with underhanded work in making the appointment. Mr. Foster put in an application for the position of clerk and treasurer, stating he would do the work for $360.00 a year. He afterwards heard that Mr. J. W. Drennan had been appointed at a much higher figure, or that Mr. Drennan would be given other positions which would net him $500 per year. Mr. Foster said the reeve had promised him the position, whereupon the reeve flatly denied the statement, and some hot words between them followed. Mr. Foster claimed there was secret work going on in the council. He said he would stand for election and if elected he would see that the business of the village was conducted in a straightforward manner and above-board.

Mr. Dandie, who has been chairman of the Ratepayers' Association, resigned that office so that he could run for the vacancy, because, as he said, he had been coaxed to go into the council by his nominators. At one time he was opposed to the council spending any money on the old town hall, but since he saw the improvement that had been made he had changed his mind. He said he was opposed to moving the fire hall from the front street to a point near the town hall, and as a result of Ratepayers' Association meeting with the council this decision had been arrived at. It was Reeve Hope's idea to move the fire hall from its present location so that the village might dispose of the village "pound" to some person who would erect a respectable dwelling house on it.

Councillor Bailey had a few words to say about the work of the council and endeavored to pour oil on the troubled waters, but some went away with the same opinions as they had when they went to the meeting.

The contest for the vacancy is warming up now and, we believe, both candidates are working hard and will continue until the last vote is polled.

The council is backing Mr. Dandie, but Mr. Foster has a great host of supporters.

The nominations were received by Mr. Gordon Jackson, Returning Officer, and when the time had expired, our new clerk was appointed chairman of the meeting which followed. After the speeches by the nominees and members of the council the meeting resolved itself into a ratepayers' meeting, when Mr. J. H. Atkinson was elected to fill the position of chairman recently held by Mr. Dandie.

The voters' list, which was used at the election in January, will be used for this contest and we hope there will be no humbugging about it, like there was in January.

Everybody who has a vote should go to the poll and use their franchise.

A STUNT MAN'S JOB

Has to Defy Death In Many Forms

—Hung by One Hand From a Wire Half a Mile In Air.

Because he can balance on a roller skate at the edge of the roof of a skyscraper, and dive from a cliff into a lake without breaking anything but a record, Harvey Parry is now a technical director at one of the largest studios at Hollywood.

One of the two or three greatest stunt men in Hollywood or anywhere else, Parry has risked his life on an average of a hundred times a year for the past ten years.

"Nerves!" Parry dismissed the entire nervous system with a shrug. "What you need most for stunts is agility and an accurate eye. You have to gauge distances right or something happens."

As a professional stunt man he has been known to dive off tall buildings into a net, which in two instances was not there when he landed, and to swim apparently unswimmable rapids in mountain rivers by the aid of safety wires which, as it happened, somebody had removed before he plunged in.

The absence of the net from the spot where it should have been gave Parry a bad shakeup the first time he jumped. But after instructing the men as to the exact location for the net, he tried the jump again, from the roof of a house. When Parry, head first, was within 15 feet of the ground he saw that the net was far to his left. It's a tribute to his training as a diver that within those 15 feet he was able to somersault and land on his toes. Nevertheless, the impetus threw him over on his back with such force as to render him unconscious.

"My moment of greatest danger," Parry told an interviewer, "was five minutes long. I had done a stunt three times on the wing of an airplane. On the third attempt, the cameras caught it all right and I started back across the wing to the cabin of the ship. But I was tired, and when the plane hit an air pocket, I fell off. In dropping, I just managed to catch a wire with one hand. And there I was, my body blown straight backward by the rush of air from the propellors, hanging by one hand 2,500 feet in the air. I owe my life to Frank Clark, a cracker-jack aviator. The wire was cutting through my hand and I was set for the world's highest dive—without a parachute—when Clark tipped his plane and threw me against the side with such a bang that my feet went right through the fuselage. And then, of course, they hauled me in.

"Was I scared? You said it!"

JAP PHOTOGRAPHS SOUND.

Unusual Shadows Formed by Vibrations Photographed by Camera.

Sound and even its echo have been made visible by a camera designed by Baron Shiba in the Japanese Imperial Institute in Tokio. They are made by producing 40,000 intense flashes of light a second in front of a moving film and lens.

On being reproduced on the screen the sound was a moving shadow, behaving much like the waves that result from dropping a pebble into water. The sound was produced by an electric spark in a transparent, oily liquid. Before the sound, nothing was to be seen on the screen except a dark spot, which was the spark apparatus, and the outline of the glass vessel holding the liquid.

The effect of the spark was to compress the invisible particles in contact with it. This momentary change altered the angle of the light rays shining through them. Such an alteration ordinarily is invisible, being too rapid for the eye. But at 40,000 pictures a second, the light changes showed plainly as shadows ranging from a smoky looking line to occasional blackness. The shadow of the start always was ring-shaped, widening rapidly.

All the sounds were made in glass containers, so that when the widening ring reached the glass walls, it rebounded. This rebound also could be seen plainly. Actually it was the picture of an echo.

GHOSTS OR BIRDS.

Feathered Folk Seen In Dim Light Assume Uncanny Appearance.

Birds are responsible for more ghost stories than any other creatures of the wild.

In all parts of the world the weird cries of night birds, or their rather unearthly forms when seen, apparently double their size in the gloaming, have been the origin of superstitions.

Some time ago in Scotland there was a sensational report of a great bird that had arrived in a certain district. Those who were supposed to have seen it were interviewed, and they described it as a gigantic kind of eagle which stood six feet in height!

At the time a mist enveloped the mountains and valleys, and all these observers had seen the bird through the mist. But their stories were believed, local children were only allowed to travel under armed escort, and there was talk of closing the school.

The cry of the bird was described so well by those who had heard it that a naturalist was able to reassure the scared inhabitants. Their visitor was a harmless buzzard which had been magnified into an impossible creature by the fog and their imagination.

SPARROWS CLEAN RADIATORS.

At last the sparrow, generally regarded as a pest, is useful to mankind. Motorists, who dislike to see the front of their radiators strewn with butterflies, moths and fleas, need worry no more, for the sparrow loves such delicacies. Some have been seen perched on a radiator, pecking away at the dead insects.

Moving pictures shown in Great Britain are visited by something like 20,000,000 people every week.

Castoria... for CHILDREN'S ailments

ARE you prepared to render first aid and quick comfort the moment your youngster has an upset of any sort? Could you do the right thing —immediately—though the emergency came without warning—perhaps tonight? Castoria is a mother's standby at such times. There is nothing like it in emergencies, and nothing better for everyday use. For a sudden attack of colic, or for the gentle relief of constipation; to allay a feverish spell, or to soothe a fretful baby that can't sleep. This pure vegetable preparation is always ready to ease an ailing youngster. It is just as harmless as the recipe on the wrapper reads. If you see Chas. H. Fletcher's signature, it is geniune Castoria. It is harmless to the smallest infant; doctors will tell you so.

You can tell from the formula on the wrapper how mild it is, and how good for little systems. But continue with Castoria until a child is grown.

Ottawa's New Water Supply

Ottawa's fine new water filtration plant, set in operation officially by His Excellency the Governor-General, has more than a local interest. On a table beside him as he spoke were two glass pitchers, one filled with the original, murky Ottawa River water, the other with the crystal clear variety resulting from the new filtration process. It was the murky water at which visitors to the capital looked askance for many years, and which did not enhance the city's reputation abroad. But as the old-timers well knew there was little fault to be found with the original supply in itself. In fact the "soft" water of the Ottawa was particularly good for many household purposes. Unfortunately as the outskirts grew the river became contaminated with sewage, and thirty years or more ago typhoid began to appear in the city. An outbreak of this disease in 1911-12 resulted in the abnormal death rate of 80 per 100,000 of population, and something had to be done at once. A system of chloramine treatment was installed and the death rate dropped immediately to 15 in 1913. This improvement continued until last year there was not a single death from typhoid. The disagreeable chemical taste left by the chloramine treatment will not be found in the new sand-filtered water which is as pleasant to the palate as it is to the eye. The new plant cost $1,315,000, which will bring the capital investment of the city in its waterworks system up to $6,875,000. But Ottawa now possesses an ample supply of fine water.—Toronto Mail and Empire.

In Memoriam

"Lorne Mulloy died at Iroquis, Ontario, on February 21st. To a generation which remembered the South African War he was well known as 'Blind Trooper Mulloy.' He lost both eyes in a skirmish on the Vedt, but with indomitable pluck set himself to live down his disablites. There was no St. Dunstan's in those days to help blinded men to preserve their independence, but when some years later, he came to Balliol with a Patriotic Fund Scholarship, Mulloy could fend for himself to a wonderful extent. He had barely enough money to cover his expenses, but he managed somehow, and at once started that strenuous campaign for Imperial Preference which was the main interest of his life, and only interrupted by his work for recruiting during the Great War.

"There must be many old Oxford friends up and down the world who remember how the questions of Empire Defence, Empire Solidarity, and Empire Trade crept into his every conversation, no matter on what other subject it might have started, and he had the fluent and persuasive eloquence of his Irish ancestry.

"He has said his Nunc Dimittis just when, at long last, there is hope that the policy for which he worked during all the lean years may be carried out. It must have rejoiced his Canadian heart to know that the next imperial Conference is to meet at Ottawa."—L. K. H., in The Iroquis Post.

Members of Great Britain's Parliament will receive third-class tickets for their railway transportation in the future instead of travelling first-class. Another suggestion for the Railway Committee at Ottawa to help reduce expenses.—The Globe (Toronto).

Use of Canadian Ports

Any argument which is now advanced for the protection of workers in the industrial plants of this country can be just as soundly applied to the need of protecting and encouraging Canadian railway employess and port workers. Parliament seems to have worked itself into a position where it discriminates between different classes of Canadian workmen. Let us again emphasize the fact that all we are asking for, in insisting upon Canadin grain being handled through Canadan ports, is that the shippers of grain do exactly what railwaymen and port workers are forced to do—"Buy Canadian."—St. John Telegraph-Journal.

Toeing the Line

It is no accident that foreign correspondents in London all conspire to pipe down on British optimism. They take their tone from official London, which is plainly warning the taxpayer that, having heroically balanced the budget, he must see to it that it stays balanced. There is no substitute for revenues, the very vitamin of the body economic. While other nations are making passes at balancing their budget, John Bull keeps right on toeing the path of financial rectitude. Where other nations might be tempted to ease up, resting upon last year's laurels, John Bull keeps on plugging away. If this be "muddling through," then the rest of the world could use a little more muddling.—Montreal Star.

Canadian Coal

According to seemingly inspired report the supplementary estimates will ask Parliament to provide bounties for Canadian coal, this marketing a million more tons of Nova Scotia coal in Quebec and Eastern Ontario each year. By the same process of assistance, it is added, Alberta coal will be marketed farther east. Something like 200,000 miners will be given more work. The country, we imagine, will scarcely object. For years there has been talk about making Canada independent of the United States for its fuel, of developing our coal resources. The only way in which we can do this—apart from a prohibitive tariff on American coal—is by some such subsidy as is now proposed.—Ottawa Journal.

Motorists' Liability

The new law which has just come into effect in Nova Scotia provides that the drivers of motor vehicles, once they have been found responsible for an accident, shall have to establish their financial responsibility before they can drive again. In other words, the motorist who has, through his negligence, caused anybody to suffer personal or property damage, shall be in a position to pay those damages, whether by insurance or not, otherwise he shall not have his licence returned to him. This law, severe though it may seem, should teach motorists to drive with more caution.—La Tribune, Sherbrooke.

Gardens For the Unemployed

From the material, as well as the moral viewpoint, the cultivation of kitchen gardens in the courts and on the vacant lots is as much to be recommended and would be as beneficial now as in the days of the Great War; it would bring the comforts of the table to hundreds, nay to thousands of citizens, that it would moreover protect against the deadening anxieties which usually haunt the homes where misfortune has set foot.—La Presse, Montreal.

THE EMPIRE

A Lesson From the Dardanelles

The French proposals to help the Danubian States have aroused the same suspicions and the same hostility in Germany as were aroused in France by the German project of a few months ago by for a Customs Union with Austria. And in France the opposition of Germany to the scheme has excited the same indignation as was felt in Germany over the French opposition to the Anschluss and is ascribed to similar motives. The lesson is plain. It is not that Great Britain should disinterest herself in the affairs of Europe or slacken her efforts to bring France and Germany together in a common endeavour to get the wheels of international trade moving again. It is rather that, while continuing those efforts, she should push on more energetically than ever with the task of securing co-operation witin the Empire and that increase of prosperity which can come only through closer co-operation.—London Times.

Anglo-American Entente

In spite of surface antagonisms the people of Great Britain and the United States of America re nearer to each other in spirit than are other Great Powers. They have a common humanitarianism. They al have a common detachment from Europe, a common interest in the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, and a common destiny in the Far East.—London Daily Express.

Free State and Empire

The Irish problem becomes the intimate concern of all the Dominions. Without their consent there can be no general change—and, after all, why should Canada, Australia, New Zealand and Africa be asked to alter their constitution in order to placate a handful of Irishmen who are, perhaps, really irreconcilable? Would it not be far better to let the Irish taste that independence for which they hanker? If they don't want British citizenship, British markets, Imperial Preference, the services of British armies and fleets, the privileges of British citizenship in the Commonwealth and abroad, let them go!—Glasgow Citizen.

The New Civilization

In the nineteenth century we tried to build up a civilization on the plan of making everything depend on the possession of money. The Industrial Revolution in its early stages seemed to reflecting minds to be chiefly important for the opportunity it provided, an opportunity much richer than ever before in history, for poor men to become rich men. The most striking difference between England to-day and that England, is that to-day the poorest man can hear good music, see good pictures, read good literature. We are trying to build up a civilization on a principle different from that which characterized the civilization of the Industrial Revolution; we are trying to build up a civilization in which the want of money shall not cut people off from the pleasures and interests that make the difference between a civilized and barbarous society. Instead of dividing the world between a civilized class and a barbarous mass, and congratulating ourselves on providing opportunities for industrious and exceptional men to pass from one to the other, we are trying to create a world in which civilized pleasure is brought within reach of the community.—J. L. Hammond in the Spectator (London).

Japanese Premier Assassinated In Own Home by Revolutionists

77-Year-Old Prime Minister Brutally Shot — Spread Destruction in Tokio

Tokio.—On Sunday night military fanatics assassinated Premier Tsuyoshi Inuka in an anti-government demonstration that spread terror through the capital.

The 77-year-old, white-haired premier was shot down in his own home by six men, who demanded that he receive their leader. They brandished pistols at the servants.

"Don't shoot," said the premier, going to the door. "I'll listen to your demands."

One of the men started to speak, but their leader interrupted.

"Shoot! Shoot! he yelled.

Two men held the frail old statesman while another shot him in the head and face. He died at midnight, with his wife at his bedside.

Buildings Damaged by Bomb

The reign of terror apparently was part of an unsuccessful coup d'etat designed to put a reactionary or Fascist government in power.

The Seiyukai (government) party headquarters, the Bank of Japan, the central police headquarters and the residences of Count Makino, Lord Keeper of the Privy Seal; Foreign Minister Kenkichi Yoshibawa and Admiar Kantaro Suzuki, and Grand Chamberlain, were among the buildings damaged in a dozen bombings.

Fascist groups, which included many in military uniforms, demonstrated in various parts of the capital, firing revolvers and distributing propaganda.

One policeman died of wounds inflicted by a bomb thrown at the premier's home. Two policemen, one newspaperman and a guest of Premier Inukai were among those wounded in the demonstrations. Eighteen military men, including five officers, who led the violence and the assassination, voluntarily surrendered to the police.

Keeping Emperor Hirorito closely informed of developments, the cabinet met in urgent session. The home minister, Kisaburo Suzuki, ordered strong military precautions throughout the nation. All important buildings in Tokio were placed under military guard.

Finance Minister Korekiyo Takahashi became acting premier pending official resignation of the cabinet, which was decided upon as a result of the premier's death.

The Tokio Stock Exchange is closed on order of its governors, as a result of the assassinations. The Yokohama Silk Exchange, the Osaki Stock Exchange and other exchanges over the entire country also are closed.

Outbreak Unexpected

Although there have been evidences of widespread reactionary and Fascist activity in Japan, the outbreak on Sunday was entirely unexpected. The capital was quiet and nearby resorts were crowded by carefree crowds when the militarists began their violent demonstration, aided by crowds of civilians.

The United Press correspondent was standing near the Mitusbishi Bank when one of the four or five automobiles involved sped past. One of the occupants of the car rose and hurled a bomb in the bank. It was small and did little damage, but exploded with a terrific roar. The demonstrators apparently desired to cause terror rather than damage.

Washington Concerned

Washington. — The assassination of Premier Inukai of Japan, culminating a long series of violent and sanguinary political episodes in the Far East and Europe recently, caused deep distress to officials here.

Acting Secretary of State Castle instructed American charge d'affaires at Tokio, Edwin L. Neville: "Please express to Foreign Office on behalf of American Government and people deep sympathy with the Japanese Government and people in this hour of national bereavement.'

The attack on the Premier and accompanying violent incidents in Tokio were officially regarded here as an internal political affair of Japan, and there were no reports of anti-foreign manifstations, or of danger to Americans or the Embassy.

Developments in the capital of Japan were disquieting here to the extent that they suggested a badly strained domestic political situation.

"How do you like your wife's new radio?" "Turned off!" snapped the husband.

Canadian Wood For Box Shooks

Forest Products Laboratories Collects Data on Uses for Canada's Forest Products

The use of wood for boxes, crates, barrels, and other shipping containers provides a very large market for Canadian lumber. This market is particularly valuable in providing an outlet for a great deal of low grade and short length lumber.

Eastern Canada has not devoted the attention to the export market for box shooks which would seem justified, in view of her large resources of softwoods ordinarily suited for the manufacture of boxes. This is particularly the case with respect to boxes for the shipment of fruit and dairy produce as well as for many other purposes. Her large resources of spruce which, from the standpoint of lightness in color, strength, weight, nailing qualities, etc., is admirably suited for this class of container makes particularly attractive the possibility of getting a share of such business, especially in competition with Baltic countries, including Russia, which export tremendous quantities of shooks made of whitewood (Picea excelsa) which is very similar to Canadian spruce.

By co-operation with the Commercial Intelligence Service of the Department of Trade and Commerce, the Forest Products Laboratories of the Department of the Interior, has assembled a large number of different types of boxes from Australia, New Zealand, Great Britain, Ireland, Palestine, South Africa, the West Indies, Mexico, and other countries. These are on display in the laboratories at Ottawa, where they have been examined, the species of wood used in their construction determined, and a great amount of other data pertaining to their construction, assembled.

These may be seen at the laboratories by any person interested in the manufacture of box shooks or in the use of wood for containers. The laboratories have complete facilities for testing the relative merits of boxes of different types of construction and of different species of wood. Information regarding containers will be sent on request by the Forest Products Laboratories, Forest Service, Department of the Interior, Ottawa.

Two Lads Drown Sea Flea Upsets

William Simpson and Samuel Sloate Are Victims

Lindsay.—Flashing across Sturgeon Lake in a fast sea flea Sunday afternoon, two Toronto youths, apparently unskilled in handling the craft, threw the boat into a sudden turn, capsized it and were drowned. The tragedy was the first this year on Sturgeon Lake.

They were William Simpson, aged 22, of 895 Dundas Street East, Toronto, and Samuel Sloats, aged 20, of Simpson Avenue, Toronto, formerly of Stratford.

The two, with Harry Corlett, Simpson Avenue, Toronto, had driven to Greenhurst, on Sturgeon Lake, Sunday morning, with two sea fleas, which they intended trying out.

It is thought it was the first time the two young men had driven sea fleas. Jack Scholes, 210 Pearson Ave., Torono, was with Mrs. Nellie Smith, his sister-in-law, having lunch on the short when the fatality happened.

Saw it Sinking

"We noticed the sea flea coming up the lake at a terrific speed," Mrs Smith told a press representative. "We saw it turn suddenly and capsize. We could see it sinking. We must have been a few miles away. My brother in-law dashed to a boathouse and broke the door in with a stone. He found a leaky canoe and started out to the sea flea.

"He paddled the three or four miles to where the boat was floating with its bow in the air, but could not find the young men. He paddled to the opposite shore which was about 400 yards from the sea flea and could find no one there.

"He then paddled back to us. Harry Corlett came along in his boat, and asked us if we'd seen the other two. When we told him the boat had capsized, he said: "My God!' 'and dashed off across the lake."

Scholes notified Provincial Constable Joseph Nelson about four o'clock from Sturgeon Point. Nelson made arrangements to have searchers patrol the shore in the morning in the hope of recovering the bodies. Dragging operations were thought useless, because no one knows the exact spot where the boat capsized. Apparently it drifted some distance before Scholes got to it.

Craft Brought In

The overturned craft was brought to shore by Captain Charles Gray of Sturgeon Point and Colonel Phillips of Oshawa. The Captain stated he saw the boat at three different times during the afternoon, darting across the water. It is thought the sea flea was overturned either in the trough of the waves, or in making the turn.

The water was extremely cold, and it is thought that even if the young men had been strong swimers, they would not have been able to go far.

Distance Flyer Will Wed Amy Johnson, Famed Airatrix

London.—J. A. Mollison, British distance flyer who recently set a record between London and Cape Town, recently announced he was engaged to marry Britain's most famous airwoman, Amy Johnson.

Mollison met Miss Johnson two years ago when she completed her 15-day solo flight from London to Port Darwin, Australia.

Mollison on March 28 of this year set a record of four days 17 hours and 19 minutes for the 6,215-mile flight from England to Cape Town. At one time he held the record from England to Australia.

Miss Johnson confirmed the engagement from her London home. She said her meeting with Mollison was purely accidental. She went to South Africa for her health early this year after an appendectomy, and never dreamed of becoming engaged to Mollison before he arrived, she explained.

19 Radio Channels Added To Canadian Broadcasting

Ottawa.—Canada receives 19 more radio broadcasting channels as a result of the agreement negotiated by Hon. W. D. Herridge with the United States Government.

German Cruisers to Visit England

Portsmouth, England. — The first German naval visit to England since the war is expected to take place this Summer. A German cruiser division will come to repay the visit of the British cruisers Dorsetshire and Norfolk to Kiel last July. Already Portsmouth is making plans to receive the ships, which will be the Konigsberg or Koln and possibly the Leipzig. All three are new 6,000-ton cruisers built under Versailles treaty rules, and all bear the names of historic German fighting ships sunk by the British during the war.

25 lbs. OF FAT GONE

Rheumatism Went With it

A threefold benefit came to this woman when she lost unwanted fat.

"Up to a few months ago I was always troubled with rheumatism. My joints were getting so swollen it was misery to walk. I was then 155 lbs., which is a great deal, seeing I am only 5 ft. 2 inches in height. I thought I would try Kruschen, although I did not then believe it would reduce weight, but I thought it would perhaps ease the pain. I took half-a-teaspoonful in a tumbler of hot water each morning, and to my great delight I started to lose weight, also pain. This week I was weighed and was 130 lbs., which I think is proof positive. My friends are all asking me what I am doing to lose weight, so it is very noticeable. Also I look and feel a lot better in health."—Mrs. M. H.

The six salts in Kruschen assist the internal organs to throw off each day the wastage and poisons that encumber the system. Then, little by little, that ugly fat goes—slowly, yes—but surely. The pains of rheumatism and neuritis cease. You feel wonderfully healthy, youthful and energetic—more so than ever before in your life!

Smith.

And what he wanted to know in particular was how that ranch was paying its way. So, at last, he point blank asked the question of the host.

Traveler—"How in the world do you make a go of things at all out here?"

The Host (pointing to the hired man across the room)—"Well, you see him. It is agreed that in two years time he gets the ranch for what I owe him. Then I go to work for him until I get it back."

Operas and Beauty

By Leopold Stokowski

Opera today, while pleasing to the ear, is often a sore trial for the eye. Take Tannhauser, for example. Venus, the most beautiful woman in the world, is using her charms to tempt Tannhauser from the narrow path of virtue. But, unfortunately, the lady who plays the part happens to have eaten too much spaghetti or sauerbraten. She may sing like a nightingale but she looks like an elehant. By no stretch of the imagination could one believe for a minute that she is Venus.

Could we ask the lady to eat less spaghetti? That may be asking too much. But this is not necessary. Electricity will change her. We can take her voice and record it on a disk. Then we can select a beautiful young lady who really may be accepted by the audience for a Venus. Then we can synchronize voice and action and create a perfect illusion.

We are trying to do it now in Philadelphia. It is only an experiment, but a very hopeful one. Modern advances in sound recording now make it possible, we hope, and this is one of the many new horizons now being opened up in music.

THE SECRET

A motorist driving through Ireland was struck by the number of notices in Irish which he saw in every village.

"Tell me," he asked an old Irishman, "why do they have all these notices in this language?"

"Faith," came the reply, "I'm sure I don't know meself. You see, none of the people who can read can understand Irish, and the ones who understand Irish can't read!"—Tit-Bits.

How to play Bridge AUCTION and CONTRACT

by Wynne Ferguson

Author of "PRACTICAL AUCTION BRIDGE"

ARTICLE No. 23

Probably the most difficult thing for a player to decide is when to bid, and frequently the player will hold a hand that requires some thinking before making a bid. Sometimes you hold cards that would justify a bid from you if you knew the cards in your partner's hand, but as you are not a mind reader and your hand does not contain a thoroughly sound original bid, the best thing for you to do is to pass. Bridge is a game of high cards, aces and kings, and if you have no ace or king, no matter what other cards you hold, you should pass if it is your turn to open the bidding. If you have an ace or king and three other small cards of one suit, it is advisable to bid that suit once. It isn't much of a hand of course, but your partner must have something to shoot at. You must tell him something about your hand. You are playing a partnership game and it is your duty and part of your contract to inform your partner at your earliest opportunity the nature of your hand.

It is perfectly safe to assume that nearly all the best players play alike. There is very little difference in the play of the best players and the bidding therefore is doubly important. Make sound bids originally or pass. There is no middle course here. The original bid must have a meaning and if you bid originally without high cards, without cards that will take tricks, your bid is misleading and is known and recognized as the Boob Bid.

Practically all Auction and Contract players who have played these games for any length of time realize that it is bad policy to make a bid with a hand that is too weak to justify the bid. They realize that such bids are unsound but cannot seem to resist the temptation to bid. Their theory seems to be that the dealer runs no risk by making a weak bid because his opponents are sure to take him out. That theory would be all right if the partner of the weak bidder always could tell whether the bidder was bidding on a strong or weak hand; but that, of course, is impossible.

Players who persist in making weak bids end up by losing the confidence of their partners and as a result lose many a game and rubber that they should have won. Don't let the "bidding mania" get you or you will soon live to regret it. Lie loy when you do not hold the cards. There is a policy of masterly inactivity which, at times, is most effective. Try it out and you will be surprised at the results.

One of our correspondents has submitted the following hand for discussion:

Example Hand

	Y
A		B
	Z

Hearts—10, 4
Clubs—K, 8, 3
Diamonds—K, Q, 8, 3
Spades—K, Q, 10, 7

No score, rubber game. Z dealt and bid one spade, A two diamonds, Y two spades and B passed. What should Z now bid with the foregoing hand and why, at either Auction or Contract?

In the opinion of the writer, Z should now bid two no trump over the two spades. He knows that his spade bid is a four-card bid and that only very good support by his partner will enable him to score game. He also knows that he has a double stopper in the diamond suit which will probably be opened at no trump. For these reasons, it looks like a better chance to score game at no trump than at spades. The following are the hands held by all four players:

	Hearts—K, 9, 7, 5 Clubs—Q, 10, 9, 7, 2 Diamonds—10, 7 Spades—A, 4
Hearts—A, 8, 2 Clubs—J Diamonds—A, J, 9, 6, 5, 2 Spades—8, 6, 3	Y A B Z Hearts—10, 4 Clubs—K, 8, 3 Diamonds—K, Q, 8, 3 Spades—K, Q, 10, 7	Hearts—Q, J, 6, 3 Clubs—A, 6, 5, 4 Diamonds—4 Spades—J, 9, 5, 2

It is evident that Y Z can score at least three odd at no trump but will be unable to make game at spades. A's proper opening at spades would be the singleton club which B will win and give A a ruff. A should now lead first the ace, then a small diamond, and give B a ruff. B should now lead another club and give A another ruff. They now will make the ace of hearts so that Y Z can only make one odd at spades. It is a good example of clever inferential bidding and the good results obtainable therefrom.

Radio Problem in Spain

Madrid—Spaniards love to boo. If actors and speakers displease them, they groan and stamp. They have even forced motion pictures to be withdrawn with this adverse ballyhoo. Now the radio is proving a problem. There is no way to let a performer know his performance is not approved.

It bids fair to become even more of a problem because the government has set aside a sum for installing radios in thousands of town halls, and the number of broadcasting stations is being increased.

B.C. Sheep Ranches

An interesting financial summary of 20 British Columbia sheep ranches is given by the Economic Analyst. These ranches are all located in the southern interior of the province, where the high rolling plateau with numerous valleys and the variable climate are especially adapted to sheep raising. The ranchers, it is said, average a net return of 7.77 cents per pound for lambs sold, and 8.08 cents per pound for wool. The capital invested in the sheep ranching business yielded 1.7% interest in 1930. Receipts averaged $7.50 and expenses $6.05 per head, leaving a ranch income of $1.05 per head. Estimates by operators place their labor cost at 60 cents per head, leaving a return of 45 cents to capital. Without carefully analyzing the facts obtained by this survey, it might be concluded that these ranches had been run at a loss. Among the items of expense, however, are family labor and depreciation which are not necessarily paid in cash. The same applies to interest on capital, invested, and allowance for operator's services. Both though must be charged to the business. It should be noted also that at present very little goes to meet such non-cash items as depreciation on machinery and buildings. — Toronto Mail and Empire.

FOOD COMBINATIONS

A considerable amount of interest is evidenced at the present time in certain ideas regarding food combinations. We have come to this conclusion because of the numerous questions which are asked as to whether such food combinations as vegetables and fruits, starches and fruits or milk and fruits should be used at the same meal.

The idea that a mixture or combination of certain foods is harmful is one that is widely held. It is not limited to any particular foods, but to all sorts of food in different combinations.

There is no scientific basis or dietetic reason for these ideas. The person who says that milk should not be used with acid fruit because of the acid, ignores the fact that when food reaches the stomach it meets the digestive juices of the stomach which are acid.

The person who complains that his stomach is acid or sour does not realize that if it were not, it could not digest food, in which case, there would be something to worry about. A large percentage of our foods contain protein, fat and carbohydrate, the proportions varying in the different foods. Whether you eat them all in one food or in several different foods, makes no difference from the point of view of their digestion. As a matter of fact, it is desirable to use a wide variety of foods in order to make sure that the body receives a sufficiency of all the elements required to maintain it in a condition of good health. What we need to guard against is not food combinations, but rather omitting from the diet, milk, fresh fruits and green vegetables.

The idea of food combinations causing harm is due in part to our own indulgences. Someone gorges himself on strawberries and cream with the result that he is upset. Instead of blaming himself for overeating, he is sure that it was the combination of the strawberries with the cream that was responsible.

It is a human trait to blame anything or anybody rather than ourselves. How often is the ill effect of some failure on our own part to be moderate in eating or drinking blamed on something we ate, and as a matter of convenience, we usually select the last food used to attach the blame too. We are often so insistent on this that we will continue to protest that this or that food disagrees with us and refuse to use it again.

Use a wide variety of food. Chew food well so that it will be broken up into small pieces to which the digestive juices can readily gain access. Be moderate in the use of all foods and avoid indulgences in any one food. Continue your food combinations with the knowledge that there is no harm in such combinations.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

When Chatham was the Terminus of the Underground Rail'y

Interesting Story of Slavery Days - How the Slaves Escaped to Canada 70 Years Ago.

The first of August is a day that has a real meaning for a large number of people in the County of Kent, celebrating as it does the emancipation of the slaves, so many of whom made their way 70 or more years ago by the "underground railway" to Canada and freedom. There is a big chapter of Kent County history of the most interesting and dramatic character that remains unwritten, though all around are the evidences of the events that were going on here 70 year ago. The Wilberforce Institute at Dresden; the memories there of Rev. Josiah Henson, original of "Uncle" Tom," the visit of Osawotomie John Brown to Chatham in 1858; the visits of Harriet Tubman and others, and all the operations of the "underground railway" — these are fragments of Ontario history that when delved into will yield rich finds.

Canada had for years an interesting relation to the slavery issue, the relation of being the place of safety for all who could escape and make their way through the Northern States (where they were liable to arrest) to Canada, where the folds of the Union Jack gave absolute protection. Stories are told of escaped slaves when they first reached Canadian soil kneeled down and kissed the earth that gave them safety and protection. And well they might, for nowhere else was there security while a fugitive slave law was in operation, even in the states that were supposedly the home of freedom. It was the darkest hour of the American nation when the slave chasers of the South could seek their quarry in the streets of Boston and the law protected them.

Runaways to Canada

From the plantations of the South the slaves ran away by hundreds. Most of them were caught again by bloodhounds and armed trackers and their lot was then worse than ever. But eventually there developed one of the most remarkable organizations that this continent has known, the "underground railway," which was nothing more than a band of people here and there over the country between the South and Canada who passed escaped slaves on from one to the other and gave them shelter and aid in their flight to the North. The homes of these people were the stations and two or three points in Western Ontario, notably Chatham, Windsor and St. Catharines, were the termini of the route of escape. Hundreds made their way successfully to Canada, the journey occupying months and being fraught with constant danger not only to the escaping slaves but as well to those who sheltered them.

In the end there was a considerable settlement formed in Kent County of these people and eventually they were given grants of land near Dresden and elsewhere, where under the direction of Rev. Josiah Henson, himself an escaped slave, they showed themselves good citizens. To this day there are descendants of Rev. Mr. Henson around Dresden and in the cemetery is his monument recording his death in 1883. That his experiences were largely the basis of that epoch-making book, "Uncle Tom's Cabin," there is the testimony of Harriet Beecher Stowe herself. The escaped slaves showed their interest in their own people by giving liberal help to those escaping and by forming associations that provided money to aid in the work of assisting runaways.

When John Brown Came

The visit of John Brown to Chatham in 1858 was due to this interest on the part of the colony of the coloured people in Kent County. He had long wished to see Canada and had planned a visit as far back as 1846. Hither he had sent one of the earliest of the many refugees whom he had helped across the border, Walter Hawkins, who afterwards became bishop of the British African Church, and many a runaway slave had he assisted to the shelter and protection of the British flag.

It was in April, 1858, that he first crossed the border. He stayed at St. Catharines, Ontario, until the middle of the month, chiefly in consultation with that wonderful woman, Harriet Tubman, and sheltered in her home.

From St. Catharines Brown went to Ingersoll, Hamilton and Chatham. He also visited Toronto, holding meetings with negroes at Temperance Hall and in the residence of the late Mr. Holland, a colored man, on Queen Street West. It was during this visit to Canada that he perfected plans for a convention to be held in Chatham, the object in mind being the organizing of a force of both whites and blacks which would strike a blow in the West, where the slave power was endeavoring to extend its field of operation.

The company on arriving at Chatham stopped at a hotel kept by Mr. Barber, a colored man. While in Chatham John Brown made a profound impression upon all who saw him or became acquainted with him. Some supposed him to be a staid but modernized Quaker; others a solid business man from somewhere, and without question a philanthropist.

At the time when Brown came to Chatham to hold his convention there were nearly 50,000 of the colored folks there and the number included many of considerable ability and a number with wealth. Settlements had sprung up, farms had been bought, schools established and an intricate social organization begun. Chatham was the chief center and there were various organizations of the colored people there.

Brown's Object

Brown's object in coming to Canada was to perfect an organization that could make such a blow for the freedom of the slaves as he later struck at Harper's Ferry, Virginia, in 1859. The meetings in Chatham were held in a frame cottage on Princess Street, south of King Street, then known as the King Street High School. Some meetings were also held in the First Baptist Church, on King Street. In order to mislead the inquisitive it was pretended that the persons assembling were organizing a Masonic lodge of colored people. The important proceedings took place in No. 3 Engine House, a wooden building near McGregor's Creek, erected by Mr. Holden and other colored men. The invitations which were sent out read thus:

Chatham, Canada, May 5, 1858.
My Dear Friend:

I have called a quiet convention in this place of true friends of freedom. Your attendance is earnestly requested. Your friend,

JOHN BROWN.

At this convention, held in a little Canadian town on Saturday, May 8, were perfected plans for a movement that was designed to overthrow that which it took four years of war and hundreds of thousands of lives to overthrow. At this Chatham meeting were several of the men who afterwards participated in the bloody affair at Harper's Ferry and chief of all was John Brown himself, who was hanged by the authorities of Virginia on December, 1859. "This is a beautiful country," he said as he rode to the scaffold, but that beautiful country was scarred from end to end before the question was settled for which John Brown died. It was one of his fellow-countryman who wrote of him:

All through the conflict, up and down,
Marched Uncle Tom and Old John Brown,
One ghost, one form ideal:
And which was false and which was true,
And which was mightier of the two,
The wisest sibyl never knew,
For both alike were real.

John Brown was one of the "conductors" on the "underground railway," but an even more remarkable personage in this respect was Harriet Tubman, a colored woman born in slavery, whose death took place about twenty years ago. Rev. R. A. Ball, who was formerly pastor of the B. M. E. Church in London, Ont., and who was afterwards located in Toronto, says that when he was a lad living in St. Catharines the "underground" was in full operation and he remembers Harriet Tuoman's arrival there with two of her brothers, who had escaped through her efforts. Mr. Ball recalls that Harriet Tubman after getting a party safely over the border at Windsor or Niagara, would say to them: "Shout, shout, you are free!" Some of them would go into hysterics, so glad were they that their slavery was no more and would passionately kiss the ground that gave them freedom. Harriet is credited with having led more than 300 slaves to freedom. She was a frequent visitor in Chatham in the days of slavery and there are still people in the Maple City who remember her well. She was without education of any sort acquired from books and could not write or even relate the remarkable story of her long life. In appearance she was merely a very black and very ignorant negress, who cared more for her strange visions, some of which have come true with startling accuracy, than to attempt to recount the patient tenderness and courage that made her name beloved by many, white and black, on a score of famous battlefields and in many an army hospital.

In her veins she had the fighting blood of the Ashantee Africans, the most indomitable of all tribes, from whose ranks the American slaves were gathered. She was born on a plantation in Dorchester County, Maryland, and at the age of 13 displayed her first instinctive antagonism against the tyranny of master over slave.

In a little house in a back street two children are awaiting Mother's and Dad's return. They are being helped by a friendly organization but there can be no home for them until their parents come back.

Where are the parents? For many months they have been struggling for lost health and strength in the Toronto Hospital for Consumptives. They have benefited greatly, as so many hundreds do, from the quietness, fresh air, kindly nursing and medical attention.

"Able to walk to the dining-room for two meals a day now" is the proud boast of the husband and father. But a short time ago he could not be moved from his bed. A few months from now, who knows, he may be back again taking up the burden of the home.

Such work as this has great economic value to the community as well as opening the only way from misery and despair to hundreds of the consumptive poor. The hospital greatly needs your help. Will you please send a gift to Mr. A. E. Ames, 223 College St., Toronto.

FAMOUS JEWEL FOR SALE

Princess Mary's Husband to Sell Canning Jewel, Said to Have Been Present to a Mogul Emperor.

One of the most famous and historic jewels in the world is to be sold by its present owner, the Earl of Harewood, Princess Mary's husband.

It is the Canning jewel, and its value, intrinsically and because of its history and workmanship, is almost incalculable. Benvenuto Cellini, the sixteenth century master craftsman in gold, silver and precious stones, is said to have fashioned it for one of the Florentine Medicis, who, according to tradition, presented it to a mogul emperor of India.

EARL OF HAREWOOD

Experts have described the Canning jewel as the "supreme example of renaissance jewelry." It is set with pearls, diamonds, and rubies, and parts of it are in encrusted enamel.

It is in the form of a Triton, the torso being a large single pearl.

The jewel remained in possession of the moguls for 300 years, and when their capital, Delhi, was captured during the mutiny, it was found in the treasury of the King of Oudh and appropriated by the Indian Government. Earl Canning, the viceroy, bought it from the Government.

Eventually the jewel passed from his collection to that of his brother-in-law, the first Marquis of Clanricarde. The second marquis, who died in 1916, bequeathed it to his great-nephew, the present Earl of Harewood.

CANADA'S "WHITE COAL."

Electrical Power Used to Produce Multitude of Goods In Dominion.

A review of the electrical industry in Canada discloses the degree to which electricity is displacing other power in the Dominion. Canada's immense resources of cheap power are being turned to full account in an industrial way. Cheap electrical energy is the factor which has made possible much of the efficiency of modern methods of manufacture.

All the power utilized in the production of automobiles, clay products and rubber goods in Canada is electrical. Sugar refining, printing and publishing, and plants manufacturing hardware and tools, brass and copper products, coke and gas products, electrical apparatus and supplies have 90 per cent. electric power installations. In the long list of industries mentioned in the table of power equipment published by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, the manufacture of feed and grist is the only one which utilizes less than 50 per cent. of electric energy. Seventy per cent. of all the energy used throughout the mining industry of the country, including coal, metals and petroleum, is electrical. Manufacturing and mining have come into the electrical age.

The total installation in lumber, pulp and paper mills, 1,250,000 horse-power, far exceeds that in any other industry. The rate of expansion in non-ferrous metals and in miscellaneous uses has been most rapid.

ADVICE TO MOTORISTS.

Timely Traffic Rules Which May Prevent Numerous Accidents.

Advice to motorists pours out from all directions, but, apparently, judging from the frequency of accidents, some rules are still necessary. Here are a few from an exchange:

Look out for children. You can never tell what they will do.

Don't pass a standing trolley car. Some day the jury may call it manslaughter.

Don't speed around corners. It's a straight route to the hospital.

The fact that you had the right of way won't bring anybody back to life, least of all yourself. Use discretion.

Do not stop short without giving warning. The other fellow isn't a mind reader.

Do not back up without looking to the rear.

Do not park or pass on a curve or hill.

Slow down when approaching a cross road. It's nearly as dangerous as a railway crossing.

Be courteous to other drivers and traffic officers. Courtesy prevents accidents.

WAKING HOURS STANDARDIZED

Patients' waking hours should be standardised, according to a report filed by the special committee appointed to inquire into the matter by King Edward's Hospital Fund for London, England. Reveille in all London voluntary hospitals should be 6 a.m., says the report. The committee found that four hospitals awakened their patients between 4 and 4.30. Forty institutions did so between 5 and 5.15, while 83 chose between 5.30 and 5.45; eight between 5.30 and 6.45, and six, 7 o'clock.

DECISIONS RESPECTING NEWSPAPERS

Court decisions respecting newspaper subscriptions are very clear. Any person who takes a paper regularly from the post office, whether in his name or another's or whether he has subscribed or not, is responsible for payment. If a person orders his paper discontinued he must pay all arrears or the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made, and then collect the whole amount, whether the paper is taken or not. The courts have decided that refusing to take newspapers or periodicals from the post office or removing and leaving them unpaid, is prima facie evidence of intention of fraud.

PORT CREDIT MAN IN TROUBLE

Chris Lazarou, Macedonian, hopped about behind the counter of his Rogers Road lunch room late Saturday night, ducking wildly while Harry Gilmore, of Port Credit, heaved stool tops at his head, knocked glass soft drink globes clattering to the floor, smashed a showcase and sent pies slithering in several directions.

The heavy stool tops hit the walls over Lazarou's head, and dug chunks of plaster loose before they crashed into the crockery.

A seltzer stand was sent flying at the harassed restaurant man. Each missile was hurled with a choice accompaniment of potent language. Two customers stood frozen in a far corner.

The young man, said to have been drunk, shouldered his way out the door into the crowded street next to the Major Theatre.

Two bicycles were standing at the curb and one at a time he picked these up and flung them at the theatre crowd. Several men made a rush for him and Roy Duncan, 21, of Silverthorn Avenue, is credited with subduing him.

Detective Alfred Gray and P.C. George McKimmie, of York Township police, arrived to find Gilmore slumbering blissfully on the pavement. He was taken to the township police station and held on a charge of being drunk in a public place and doing malicious damage.

About 11.15 p.m., Gilmore and two companions entered the Rogers Lunch, 427 Rogers Road. Gilmore is said to have ordered sandwiches for all three. One of the trio ate his and walked out. A second paid for his own. Gilmore paid for his own, but because he had given the order, the proprietor asked him to pay for the other.

Gilmore refused. He offered to fight Lazarou rather than pay the other ten cents. Stella, Lazarou's wife, came out of the kitchen and started pushing Gilmore out the door. He retaliated with a shove, it is alleged, which sent her sprawling to the other side of the lunch room.

As the battle waged in other parts of the little place, with her husband behind the counter and Gilmore moving about and grabbing anything that wasn't nailed down, Mrs. Zazarou slipped out the door to phone police.

CAN. LEGION NEWS

About twenty veterans of the Great War met on Monday night in the town hall for the monthly conclave of Streetsville Post of the Canadian Legion. The business was conducted in the council chamber, at which Mr. Tracey was appointed caretaker of the memorial. Members were notified of a zone legion church parade at Acton next Sunday, and the annual zone rally in Brampton on June 10th.

Guests of the evening spoke, Past President Hill, of Brampton Post with Comrade Giles, brought greetings from our neighbors. Mr. Harold Hunter, of Christie Street Hospital, spoke on work being done and Mr. Isador Manswerger, formerly of the German army, and who faced the Canadians at Arras, but who now resides in this district, told of some of his experiences and spoke feelingly of his courteous reception by Canadian Veterans everywhere.

Following the meeting the boys adjourned to the hall, where the Alfalfa Boys ably led by Mr. Hec. Graydon, gave an excellent program and led the veterans in singing many of the old war songs. Mr. Hunter, of the Hart House Players, rendered a much appreciated monologue. At the lunch which followed, each veteran present told briefly of his enlistment, regiment and service, and thus everyone became better acquainted. The post is growing all the time. Two new members were out and more plan to join at a future meeting. Comrade Harry Lee invited the post to hold the next meeting at his home in June, and to bring the families along. The invitation was heartily accepted. The veterans are reminded again of the big zone rally in Brampton on June 10th, at 8 p.m. Keep the date open. Those wishing to attend the zone church parade at Acton on Sunday will meet at the Memorial at 2 p.m.

BRAMPTON

More People in Hospital

A sharp increase in admissions to the Peel Memorial Hospital has been noted during the past six months, according to Miss M. Jamieson, recently appointed superintendent of the hospital. Since the beginning of the fiscal year, surgical cases have numbered within 50 of the entire years preceding. Figures do not show a greater percentage of surgical cases, however, the percentage in relation to admissions remaining about the same. Temporary accommodations have been necessary at times to provide for an influx of patients.

Hon. Duncan Marshall was the featured speaker of the annual meeting of the Peel County Women's Institute, held in the Baptist church, Brampton. His address dealt with agriculture and its relation to the forthcoming Imperial Conference at Ottawa. Col. the Hon. T. L. Kennedy, Minister of Agriculture, addressed the gathering briefly, commending the work done by the Institutes in the financial crisis of the country. Miss Margaret Jamieson, recently appointed matron of the Peel Memorial Hospital, was introduced by Mrs. J. A. McBride, who reported for the hospital committee of the Institute.

Figures brought out at the meeting show that the Institute in Peel has a membership of 1,061, made up of 824 seniors and 237 juniors, divided among 18 senior branches and 8 junior branches. Two junior branches have been added during the past year, at Terra Cotta and Caledon. During the year there were 280 meetings, with an aggregate attendance of 8,350, at which 270 papers and addresses were read.

G. A. Putnam, superintendent of Women's Institute, was present, praised the work done in the county during the past year, and presented the retiring county secretary, Mrs. William McClure, with a large bouquet of roses.

Resolutions disapproved the raising of the departmental examination fee from $1 to $1.50; asked the members of Institutes, in giving opinions on any matter, to state whether they are speaking for the body which they represent, or from a personal viewpoint; suggested that pedestrians be compelled to use sidewalks where there are such along provincial highways; recommended that a reduction be made in the rates of rural telephone subscribers, and decreed that county officers should hold office for no longer than six years.

Prize-winners of the essay contest, final results of which were received from the Institutes Branch, Toronto, were: Mrs. W. Brooks, Castlemore; Mrs. Bert Lindsay, Mono Road; Mrs. J. B. Elliott, Cheltenham.

Officers elected for the ensuing year were—President, Mrs. Sam Wilson, Mono Road; South Vice-President, Mrs. I. J. Ardagh, Streetsville; Centre Vice-President, Mrs. J. M. Dolson, Snelgrove; North Vice-President, Mrs. A. B. Smith, Caledon; Secretary-treasurer, Mrs. John McCulloch, Snelgrove.

Over 250 attended, and a feature of the program was the presentation of medals by the donor, Gordon Graydon, to winners of the Peel county dramatics competition held during the winter.

Mr. Kellam spoke on "Wheat and Transportation," while Miss Ross' subject was "Canadian Citizenship." Mrs. J. M. Dolson, ex-home demonstrator for Peel, M. R. Fydell and Frank Parish were the judges.

Besides the individual awards, Ebenezer and Streetsville clubs will hold the championship shields donated by David Wilson, county clerk, for a year. Mr. Wilson made the presentations personally.

Three others competed: Miss Elsie Irvine, Brampton; Gordon Edwards, Bolton, and Wm. Lines, Streetsville.

The Aztec Mystery

A Thrilling Story of the Old West

BY MURRAY LEINSTER

SYNOPSIS.

Sonny Holman, believing he has been cheated out of ownership of the Aztec mine, holds up the mine payrolls. Janet Laurier, who holds legal title to the Aztec, offers a reward for his capture. She is kidnapped by Garcia's gang, a band of desperadoes. Sonny follows and prevents Garcia from harming the girl, then escapes with her. To his surprise, he finds that the girl suspects him of being in league with Garcia and a confederate in the k'dnapping.

CHAPTER TEN.

"You had me kidnapped, too," she said bitterly. "I've got your pistol in your back, with my finger on the trigger! Don't move! You came to my house and spied out the ground. You were ready to keep me from summoning help until your confederates came."

Sonny shifted his looted repeating rifle to his other arm and began to roll a cigaret as he rode. "I'm listenin'," he drawled. "This is right interestin'."

For the first time her tone was less than positive. "I know that much is true," she said, "because almost the first words you said to Garcia were that you had ridden back with him as you didn't trust him. I don't know whether he—intended—"

"He did, ma'am," said Sonny softly, "an' for that I am goin' to kill him."

"And so," she said coldly, "as a thief, and as the betrayer of a man who was fool enough to believe in you, and because you had me kidnapped, I'm going to take you into Moleville."

Sonny made a sudden movement. She gasped. His hand had snapped up behind him and held the revolver firmly. He pulled decisively on it, working her finger out of the trigger guard with his other hand.

"You're goin' to make me mad one o' these days," he drawled. "I'm goin' to be the one that does the takin' into Moleville, ma'am."

He put the revolver in his belt again, but before him this time. The gait of Gunpowder had not changed, nor did he cease to trot steadily toward the distant flaring lights of the little town. Sonny rode cheerfully onward, smoking the cigaret he had manufactured in the dark. When he flung it away in a trailing arc of sparks, he spoke again. "This business of bein' outside the law has its disadvantages. I got me a idea right now where bein' respectable would be right useful. I rek'n I'm goin' to reform."

There was a long pause. She seemed to be looking for a verbal trap. But he seemed to be musing not unpleasantly.

"If you do take me into Moleville safe," she offered at last, "and you promise to leave the mine alone; because of your helping me at Garcia's place I'll—"

Sonny's head tilted as he gazed meditatively up at an especially bright star. "Ma'am?"

"I'll withdraw the reward I've offered for you."

"Shucks," said Sonny easily. "That's a compliment. The last steers the Circle Bar sold was only eight cents on the hoof. You' gone an' made me, weight for weight, about the most valuable critter on the range."

She did not seem to understand.

"And I won't prosecute you if you really didn't plan to have me carried off."

"Ma'am," said Sonny dryly, "if I ever figure on carryin' you or anybody else off, 'll arrange it a whole lot better than Garcia did."

The town lights had disappeared now, and she had lost all sense of direction. Something like panic struck her. "Well," she cried desperately, "what do you want?"

"I'd kinda like, ma'am, to have my mine back."

"You shan't," she cried fiercely. "It's mine! You don't know—"

Sonny waited. Gunpowder topped a little rise and Moleville was again visible, not more than a quarter of a mile away. Janet gave a little gasp of astonishment and relief.

"I'll tell yuh," said Sonny thoughtfully. "I kinda like you, ma'am. Yuh got nerve, an' yuh got spunk an' there's other matters about yuh that I kinda admire. But I always said I wasn't goin' to marry any woman that had more money than me. An' as near as I can figure it, I got to get back the Aztec if I ever figure on proposin' to you."

Janet gasped again, but it was distinctly not with pleasure. "You—you—"

"Yes'm," said Sonny pleasantly.

"I hate you!" she raged. "You're a thief! You're a murderer! And you dare!"

"Just so, ma'am," drawled Sonny. "I rek'n Gunpowder we're ridin' on, he'd ha' called me things like that when he first met me. But Gunpowder an' me, we get along right good now."

"You're saying," she panted, "that you'll break me like a horse?"

"No, ma'am," Sonny chuckled. "Jus' to kinda domesticate yuh, ma'am. The whole process bein' one o' kindness."

The first of the adobe houses of the town appeared. Sonny spoke to Gunpowder in the private language they seemed to share. Gunpowder mended his pace a little. The bungalow appeared a little distance before them. Sonny halted Gunpowder by a word. The stallion was without either saddle or bridle.

"Our last stop, ma'am," said Sonny gravely. "This here train don't go no further. I hope you enjoyed your ride, ma'am."

He helped her to the ground. She was raging. "If you told the truth," she told him, choking with her wrath, "about not having planned this affair tonight, I thank you for helping me."

"Delighted, ma'am," drawled Sonny. "And being foolish about gratitude," she went on bitingly, "I shan't raise an alarm to have you captured at once."

"Mighty grateful, ma'am," said Sonny politely.

"But," she cried fiercely, "I'm going to fight you from now on in every way I can! There's going to be an election for sheriff. I've made Mr. Tilford promise to run, to be sure of getting on honest man in office. You won't have a chance to use him as you did your friend! And I've sent for armed guards to travel with my ore wagons! You and your friend Garcia, if you make up after tonight's disagreement, won't have the same opportunity to rob me again! And I'm going to see that you are hunted down and sent to prison for the crimes you have committed!"

Sonny, mounted on Gunpowder once more, looked down at her and grinned. "If you knew, ma'am," he drawled, "how daw-goned pretty you look when you're mad, you'd sure cultivate a irascible disposition."

She stamped her foot. "You understand," she panted angrily, "I thank you for helping me tonight, and I'm going to see you put in jail!"

"Yes, ma'am," drawled Sonny. "And you're right welcome, ma'am, an' I'm goin' down to the mine an' steal the new payroll that you had come in yesterday to make up for the one I took. Good night, ma'am, an' pleasant dreams."

He wheeled Gunpowder about and started at a breakneck gallop for the mine. Day was just breaking, but there was already a light in the mine offices, which he had seen as he rode in with Janet. And inside of two minutes he was grinning joyously at Tilford as that worthy backed away from the mine safe before the menace of a gun in Sonny Holman's hands.

Two of Tilford's guards arrived the next day. They rode into town with alkali dust thick upon them and stopped at the Roaring Zephyr, Molsville's largest and most prominent saloon, to ask for directions.

"The mine's down thataway an' right across," the bartender assured them. "Name yuh poison."

They drank, refilled their glasses and drank again. Then they turned with a clattering of spurs to go out of the place.

"Uh, gents," said the bartender, "yuh forgot somethin'."

He tapped the cash register in a manner politely suggestive. The two men paused. One was a scar-faced, sullen man who had not spoken. The other was short and very fair, with sun bleached hair and faded blue eyes of a blank expressionlessness. The faded eyes fixed themselves upon the bartender—who remembered something suddenly. He knew the falsity of the tradition that killers are men of piercing dark eyes and menacing frowns.

"What'd we forgit?" asked the man with the faded blue eyes. His voice was mild and curiously without intonation. There was no trace of expression in it.

"Why, uh, yuh didn't pay for yuh drinks," said the bartender very politely indeed. He was remembering suddenly where he had seen this man before and hoping fervently that the man would not remember.

For Baby's Bath

More than that of any other member of the family, baby's tender, delicate skin needs the greatest care and attention. The soft soothing oils in Baby's Own Soap make it specially suitable for babies, and its clinging fragrance reminds one of the roses of France which help to inspire it.

"It's best for you and Baby too"

Only one oil is good enough for household equipment, says chemist

Chemists, mechanics and lubrication experts say only one kind of oil is good enough for your expensive mechanical devices—the best. To get best results from your sewing machine, vacuum cleaner, lawn mower, washer, electric fan, refrigerator and other household appliances, you should use an oil that not only lubricates, but also cleans and protects.

3-in-One Oil is different from all others, because it is a scientific blend of animal, mineral and vegetable oils. It gives you the best properties of each. It dissolves and works out dirt, protects against rust and wear and gives the most efficient lubrication, thus eliminating unnecessary repairs and replacements.

Naturally such oil costs more to make, but it really costs less to use. Play safe; insist on 3-in-One Oil. At good stores everywhere. For your protection, look for the trade mark "3-in-One" printed in Red on every package.

"Well, madam," said the Easter boarder, as he was about to leave, "I can testify that you are one of the most honest persons I have ever met."

The landlady rubbed her hands happily.

"That is very nice of you," she said. "I always try to please."

"Yes," he went on, "your honesty is conspicuous on the very front of your house. Your sign says: 'Boarders taken in'!"

Wandering Housewives

American passport statistics show that more housewives take trips abroad than women in any other occupation. In a list of 31 classified occupations, "housewives" received 13.09 per cent. of all the passports issued in 1931. Travel writers foot the list, with only 0.83 per. cent. of passports credited to them.

Reminiscences

Gertrude Atherton tells an amusing story about her first meeting with Joaquin Miller, the Poet of the Sierras—who used to dress the part.

"It helps sell the poems, boys!' he once confided to friends at the Savage Club, in London, where he created a sensation by his picturesque appearance, "and,' he added, "it tickles the duchesses."

This in reference to the hit he had made in London drawing-rooms.

* * *

To get on with Mrs. Atherton's experience—related in her reminiscences "Adventures of a Novelist." One day, Miller called on her in San Francisco.

"He wore a black broadcloth suit, the trousers tucked into boots—with high eels!—that reached almost to the waist," she recalls. "His shirt had no collar but his neck was encircled by a lace scarf. On his head was a sombrero, which he removed with a sweeping bow as I entered, and I saw that his long hair, touching his shoulders, was gray on top, and ended in a series of stiff 'rat tails' that were dyed a bright orange."

* * *

The poet, striking an attitude, said not a word but gazed at Mrs. Atherton. She told him how glad she was to meet him. Still he uttered not a word. She rattled on, growing disconcerted by his persistent silence and his "round unwinking stare." Finally, she said tartly:

"Have you lost your voice? Suppose you say something for a change."

"He fetched a sigh that might have come from the soles of his boots," chuckles Mrs. Atherton, "and then his voice rumbled forth heavy laden with tragedy.

"'What a pity!' he groaned. 'What a pity we are both blondes!'"

Five minutes later he shot out without a word of farewell.

* * *

Joaquin Miller was not the only literary lion reduced to silence on meeting Gertrude Atherton. Later, at a reception in London, she met Thomas Hardy.

"He sat down beside me, dropped his hands on his knees, and stared into space . . . I floundered about, broaching one subject after another, but he never even glanced at me, much less made any response to my embarrassed efforts. He appeared to have fallen into a reverie, quite oblivious to his surroundings.

* * *

"Then, heaven knows how, I lighted upon cable cars in San Francisco. Abstraction fled. His face lit up. He turned to me eagerly. He asked me a hundred questions. In answered them as best I could, for it may be imagined how much I know of engineering and mechanics."

But the day was saved. A fortnight later when Mrs. Atherton again met Hardy at another reception, he no sooner caught sight of her than he was at her side, and plunged at once into "the exciting subject of cable cars in San Francisco.

* * *

"He did not get my name nor I his and we sat beside each other and were obliged to talk: we floundered about for some time trying to find a theme of common interest. Finally, how, heaven knows, we hit upon the subject of plumbing in Paris! Then he grew quite animated!"

* * *

Just after the Armistice, Mrs. Atherton ran into Lord Northcliffe, an old friend, in Paris, and during a talk with him,—"I had christened him Warwick, as he certainly had a great deal to do with the making and unmaking of Prime Ministers,"—she asked him if he "were having any trouble with Lloyd George.'

"Oh," he replied gravely, "I have to keep my hand on him. He wobbles! He wobbles!"

By the way, Mrs. Atherton describes Northcliffe as "altogether one of the most charming men I have ever met," and says that he was "the most popular of all Britons in the United States."

Mary, wife of John A. Logan, Republican nominee for the Vice-Presidency of the United States in 1884, was a beautiful woman with great poise, and by rights a "raven's-wing brunette," but she went through some sudden, severe shock connected with the death of her father. When she returned home her husband met her at the train—relates Mrs. Julia B. Foraker, in "I Would Like it Again: Memoirs of a Vivid Life."

"Goodness, Mary!" he gasped. "What has happened?"

* * *

She didn't know what he meant and he was too petrified to explain. Arrived home, the door was opened by an old servant. At the sight of Mrs. Logan she threw up her hands, gave an Irish shriek, and fled. Beginning now to be a little irritated, Mrs. Logan sought a mirror. There it was, her hair had turned white in a single mysterious moment—just the way the thing happened in novels.

"Like it, John?" she said, carelessly, to Logan, who had followed to catch her when she fainted.

Yet indeed (adds Mrs. Foraker), she must have been startled when she saw herself in the glass.

* * *

As a girl of twenty, Mrs. Foraker heard Dickens give one of his readings during his last visit here in 1868—sixty-four years ago!

"I cannot think anyone ever heard a person read with such inimitable realism and charm as this 'foreigner' (they called him that) in a black velveteen jacket," she says. "I remember the jacket and the charm, though of what the author read only the unforgettable death of Little Nell, which provoked sobs."

* * *

Mrs. Foraker—widow of the late Senator Foraker of Ohio—has, at the age of eighty-four, written as lively a book of signed reminiscences as has come out of Washington in many a day. One of her stories has Chauncey Depew, at a dinner, describing an evening spent with King Edward VII., to whom he told the story of the spinster taking her first ride on a railroad train. There was a collision; the dear, old thing found herself sitting in splinters. She straightened her "bunnit," looked 'round for her reticule, then asked innocently if the train always stopped like that?

* * *

Depew happened to mention to King Edward that Mark Twain was stopping at his hotel. Thereupon the King asked Depew to come back for dinner next night and bring Mark with him.

"And what do you think that man Clemens started off with" said Depew. "My story! My identical story of the old lady in a railroad wreck! Said he was there, too! And of course I had said I was there! How the King laughed!"

Among the treasures of Bob Sherwood, the "last of Barnum's clowns," is an autographed photograph of Eng and Chang, the "original Siamese Twins," who, with Bab, were star attractions of the Barnum Show for years.

"On the back of it," says Sherwood (in "Hold Yer Hosses!") "Eng wrote, expressing his congratulations to me that I could live my life alone. Below Chang wrote 'Them's my sentiments too'.

* * *

Bob Sherwood declares that the most interesting lady freak he ever knew (and he knew them all) was Miss Fannie Mills, "who possessed the biggest feet on earth." She was a petite blonde, with perfect features and weighed but one hundred and fifteen pounds. Instead of her face, her feet were her fortune. She wore a number thirty shoe. Three goat-skins were required to make her one pair of shoes, the same quantity usually required to make eight pairs of ladies' shoes. Their length was nineteen inches, width seven and a half inches, the circumference around the instep nineteen and a half inches.

* * *

But the freak story I like best is one Bob Sherwood tells about Captain Costentenus, "the tattooed Greek Prince."

"He was a freak in appearance," Bab yarns, "but not by nature. As his eyes were weak, I often read the Bible to him. This he seemed to enjoy greatly, although his knowledge of the Holy Writ was limited.

* * *

"One day, I was reading to him the story of Noah beginning with: 'And lo, when Noah was an hundred and twenty years old, he took unto himself a wife, who was (here I turned over two leaves which were stuck together) three hundred cubits long, fifty cubits broad, and thirty cubits high—and she was pitched within and pitched without'—a description of the ark. The old captain looked at me with blinking eyes and said:

"'Bob, women of the old time were certainly wonderfully and fearfully made'."

Rovers

Lonies all over the Province will be interested to hear of a very unique ceremony which was enacted on Saturday, May 14th, at Ebor Park, Ontario (where our Lone Scout Camp is to be held this year).

Three years ago, on May 24th, 1929, half a dozen boys who lived at Paris, Ont., were in camp at Ebor Park over the holiday week end. They were the "Wolf Patrol" of the old 1st Ontario Lone Scout Troop, and Melvin Prine was their Patrol Leader and Clifton Cassidy was his "Second."

With these Lonies at their camp was Capt. John Furminger, the present Assistant Provincial Commissioner for Lone Scouts, and Mr. Frank Irwin, the Commissioner at Provincial Headquarters, Toronto.

This was the first occasion on which a Lone Scout Camp had been held in Ontario, and the boys had a wonderful time with their Scoutmaster, Capt. Furminger.

On Saturday, May 1th, 1932, three years later, some of these boys again met at Ebor Park, this time to inaugurate their Rover Crew, and Clifton Cassidy was invested as Rover Mate, by the Assistant Provincial Commissioner for Rovers, Mr. Lionel Bishop, who was assisted by Captain Furminger.

Clifton chose Melvin Prine (his old Lone Scout Patrol Leader), as his Rover Second, and thus through all these years the link between these two lads remains unbroken.

Assistant Provincial Commissioner Frank Irwin was also present at this ceremony, and we know that all the Lonies will congratulate the Paris Rover Crew on having successfully passed through all the steps of Scouting, from Lone Scouts to the 1st Paris Troop (which they organized) and now to Rover Scouts.

We sincerely hope that many other boys who are now working as Lonies will, in the years to come, pass into the ranks of the Rover Scouts, and thus keep up their interest in Scouting after they have "grown up."

Our Weekly Scout Law—No. 9—

"A Scout is Thrifty."

What does this mean? Does it mean that a Scout should be a miser and hoard up money? Not at all!

It means that a Scout is wise, and does not waste things, but makes the very best use of them that he possibly can. And this includes a large variety of items which maybe you have not even though of.

Of course he does not waste money. He appreciates the fact that it is very hard to obtain, and to make money one must work hard. So what sense is there in wasting your hard work? A good Scout has a savings account in the bank, and tries to make it grow, and gets into the habit of putting aside a reserve which he may well fall back upon in case of need, or use to good advantage as good opportunities arise.

But money is not the only thing on which he practices thrift. A good Scout will not waste food. Nor will he willfully destroy his clothing, but take care of it, and make it last as long as possible.

Then, too, he will not waste his opportunities. He has chances to improve his education, his strength and his character, and these should be very carefully conserved, as they are his best assets in his future manhood. So he goes to school regularly and learns all he can. He exercises his body regularly and does not abuse it. He supports his church and Sunday school and their varied activities, and by his thrift in these directions builds himself up to strong and useful manhood.

Yes, Sir! A Scout is Thrifty!

Camp

Are you planning to be at our Lone Scout Camp in July? Maybe you have not passed your Tenderfoot Test, or perhaps you have no Scout Uniform. Who cares? You will be just as welcome without a uniform as with one, and we will help you to pass your Tenderfoot Test, and your Second-Class as well! So come along and have a good time with us. Remember the dates—July 4th to 16th inclusive.

Particulars of how to become a Lone Scout may be obtained from The Boy Scouts Association, Lone Scout Dept., 330 Bay Street, Toronto.—"Lone E."

British Radio Fans "Fed Up" With Crooning

A widespread rebellion is brewing against the crooning tenor on the wireless in England.

One cannot hear it now, says Robert Lynd in The News Chronicle (London) "without wishing to take up one's wireless set and throw it at the singer's head." Mr. Lynd reports:

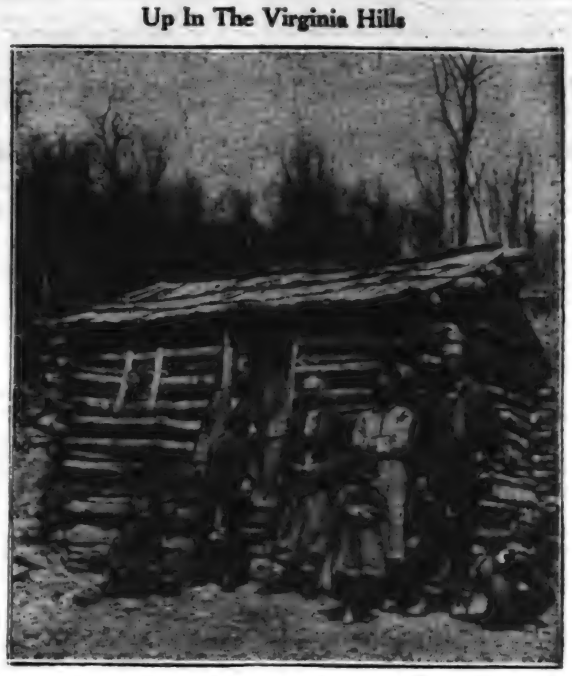
"They have so got on the nerves of the public that, at the first sound of a crooning voice on the wireless, many a listener switches the thing off and in desperation goes over to Holland to listen to a talk on the diseases of sheep, of which he does not understand a word.

"And, indeed, to listen to this crooning is like listening to the complaints of a sick animal. Possibly the singers themselves dislike the vocal affectation now in vogue, and feel rather like sick animals. And who could endure such muted caterwauling for long?

"I sometimes think that, if ogling made a noise, this would be the kind of noise it would make; and, in music as in life, a little ogling goes a long way.

"If only they would cease trying to yearn, I fancy the music would be quite enjoyable. An imitation yearn, however, is one of the most intolerable sounds within the whole range of music. Let the singers practise at 'Hearts of Oak' for a time and acquire a touch of liveliness. This will help to cheer them up, and it will cheer everybody else up, too.

"I have sometimes wondered whether it would not be better for singers of love-songs to try to keep expression altogether out of their singing. There is no more need for vocal and facial agonies in singing about love than in singing about hunting. Love is, after all, not such a ghastly business as some of these far-off singers seem to imagine.



"Men have been known to be cheerful, and even rational, in the presence of the beloved.

"A singer, however, can scarcely mention the moon or June to a pretty woman without suggesting that the combined effect of the moon and June and love has been to turn him into a complete idiot.

"I am sure, if the singers in the dance-bands would sing their choruses naturally, and without what seems to them to be expression, the revolt against them would quickly subside, and they would become as popular as ever they have been."

A professor was in the habit of letting his dog sit by his side at meals. One evening when he was dining out, a lady next him, wishing to attract his attention, gently touched his sleeve. To the consternation of all present, he mechanically transferred a bone from his plate and said, "Oh, get away. Take this out on the mat and eat it!"—Victoria Colonist.

Sunday School Lesson

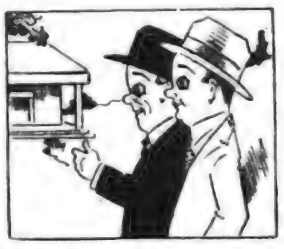
May 29. Lesson IX—Joseph the Dreamer—Genesis 37: 1-11. Golden Text—Provide things honest in the sight of all men.—Romans 12: 17.

ANALYSIS.

I. JOSEPH THE TRUTH-TELLER, vs. 1, 2.
II. JOSEPH, THE ENVIED, vs. 3, 4.
III. JOSEPH, THE DREAMER, vs. 5-11.

INTRODUCTION—The story of Joseph was one of the most priceless heritages of the Hebrew people. The account of his romantic career should be read through as a whole at one sitting. It tells of a younger member of a family, kept down at first by the envy of his brothers, and forced to face many vicissitudes and difficulties, but triumphing over them at last by dint of a faithful spirit, and brought, in the providence of God, through a surprising chain of circumstances, to a position of great elevation and responsibility. "The ruling idea," says Skinner, "is expressed in the words, 'Ye intended evil against me, but God intended it for good!' (50: 20); it is the sense of an overruling, yet imminent, divine Providence, realizing its purpose through the complex interaction of human motives, working out a result which no single actor contemplated." The story of Joseph is thus a study, on the one hand of the nature of God's providence in human affairs, and, on the other hand, of a truly regal character.

I. JOSEPH THE TRUTH-TELLER, vs. 1, 2.



Like David, Joseph spent his early years as a shepherd. While he was shepherding with his brothers, Dan and Naphtali, Gad and Asher, he saw such evil in their conduct that he was shocked. No mention is made of the precise nature of their evil conduct, but it may have been neglect of their duties as shepherds, or the secret sale of the flocks and herds entrusted to them. What was Joseph to do? His brothers may have threatened that if he did not hold his tongue they would make him suffer for it. If his heart was pure and his conscience sensitive, however, he could not keep silent. Without fear of the consequences, he brought a report of his brothers' conduct to his father. In doing so was he merely a malicious tale-bearer? No, he simply proved himself no coward, but one who set value upon truth above all else. None the less his fidelity to truth won for him the hatred of his brothers.

II. JOSEPH, THE ENVIED, vs. 3, 4.

In yet another way Joseph became the object of his brothers' hatred. Their hatred assumed the form of envy, for hatred and envy are closely akin. Joseph was Jacob's favorite son, the son of Rachel, Jacob's favorite wife, and born in Jacob's old age. To us it may seem strange that Jacob should have singled out one son from the twelve and shown him more love than the others. But the Hebrew was a man of strong feelings; he lived very largely in his emotions; and he did little to hide them. As a token of his great love, the father gave Joseph a costly garment. The garment in itself was of little consequence but in the brothers' eyes it assumed an immense significance. As a token of favoritism, they probably regarded it as a mark of their father's injustice.

III. JOSEPH, THE DREAMER, vs. 5-11.

There was a third reason for the hateful envy of the brothers. Joseph dreamed dreams which were regarded as a mark of vaulting ambition. To the ancients dreams were of immense significance. They come unsought and without human initiative. There is something eerie and mysterious about them, as though they float in upon us from another world. The distinctive feature about the Bible view of dreams is that they were related directly to God. Hebrew dream-life, like all other phases of their life, was placed deliberately under the influence of their religion. Joseph remarks (40: 8) that the interpretations of dreams "belong to God." On the whole, dreams were regarded as prophetic—a forecasting of coming events. Some bore their meaning on the surface, while others required to be interpreted. Joseph's dreams belong to the former class. The first dream seems to suggest that the family were agriculturists. It was intended, perhaps, to forecast the time when the brothers, on account of famine, would go to Egypt to buy corn, and would be forced to bow before the prime minister of Egypt—their own brother, Joseph. The second dream was still more unusual. The great heavenly bodies seemed to pause on their way and look down with smiling favor on the poor Hebrew lad. This dream might be taken as a prophecy of the high position that he would hold in the future. The dreams were of such a singular nature that Joseph could scarcely be blamed for not keeping them to himself. His brothers, on hearing them, were all the more bitter in their envy. Soon they took active steps to frustrate the fulfilment of the dreams; but the dreams came true none the less! Even the father rebuked Joseph for seeming arrogance, although secretly he seems to have had a presentiment that they were a foreshadowing of brilliant things to come. What effect had the dreams on Joseph himself? We may be sure that they were an inspiration to work and hope—and wait.

International Finance

By Gates W. McGarrah, President, Bank for International Settlement

The tidal wave of uncertainty and fear, which endangered several national currencies and some banking institutions, originated in Austria, swept quickly through Hungary and Germany, and after devastating these areas flowed onward to Britain and the Scandinavian countries, backwashing into the United States, and carried unusual demands on the American gold supply and credit system.

No such widespread effects, which extended soon to Japan also, could have occurred except for the already existing essential unity in international finance which ignores political and geographical frontiers. This interdependence is not confined to the field of finance, but penetrates much further into the whole economic structure of various countries. The indices of production, employment, trade and profits show to an astounding degree the recurrent tendencies in every country of the world.

All the evidence available leads to the conclusion that any hope that a single country may achieve prosperity part from the rest of the world indeed be based on an insecure foundation.

Highway Sign Stones In France "Cleaned Up"

Paris.—Every hundred meters of national or departmental road in France is marked by a small stone, and every thousand meters by a larger stone. The distance to, and the name of, the next large town is always printed on the larger stones. Most of these had become old and weather-beaten and the directions painted on them were often very hard to distinguish, either because the plant had faded or because the grass had grown taller than the stone itself. Recently, however, new stones have been put into place; small three-cornered ones for the hundred-meter marks and larger square ones for the kilometers. On national roads these stones are fitted with a cap of red paint, whereas on departmental roads these caps are yellow. This makes them plainly visible from a distance, and in addition small stones are tightly wedged together round them to prevent the grass from growing too close.

Aerial Photography

Notable progress has been made in Canada in the employment of oblique and vertical aerial photographs for mapping some of the little known parts of the Dominion. The Topographical Survey Branch of the Department of the Interior is the central clearing house for aerial photography in Canada, over 560,000 photographs being on file in that Branch to date.

Naturally

A fair motorist whose car had swerved across the wide village street and crashed into a plate-glass shop-window was being questioned by the traffic policeman.

"Surely, madam," said the constable, "on such a wide road as this you could have done something to prevent the accident?"

"But I did do something,' she assured him.

"I was watching, but I didn't see you do anything," he insisted.

"Oh, but, officer, surely you heard me. I screamed as loud as I could," she replied.

Found

It was the occasion of the Sunday-school's Easter holiday outing.

After tea, while the young curate in charge was arranging the sports, a young choir-boy came rushing up to him.

'Please, sir," he said breathlessly, "teacher says will you come at once—"

"What has happened?" interrupted the curate. "Why does she want me?"

"She's a mug short, sir," exclaimed the boy.

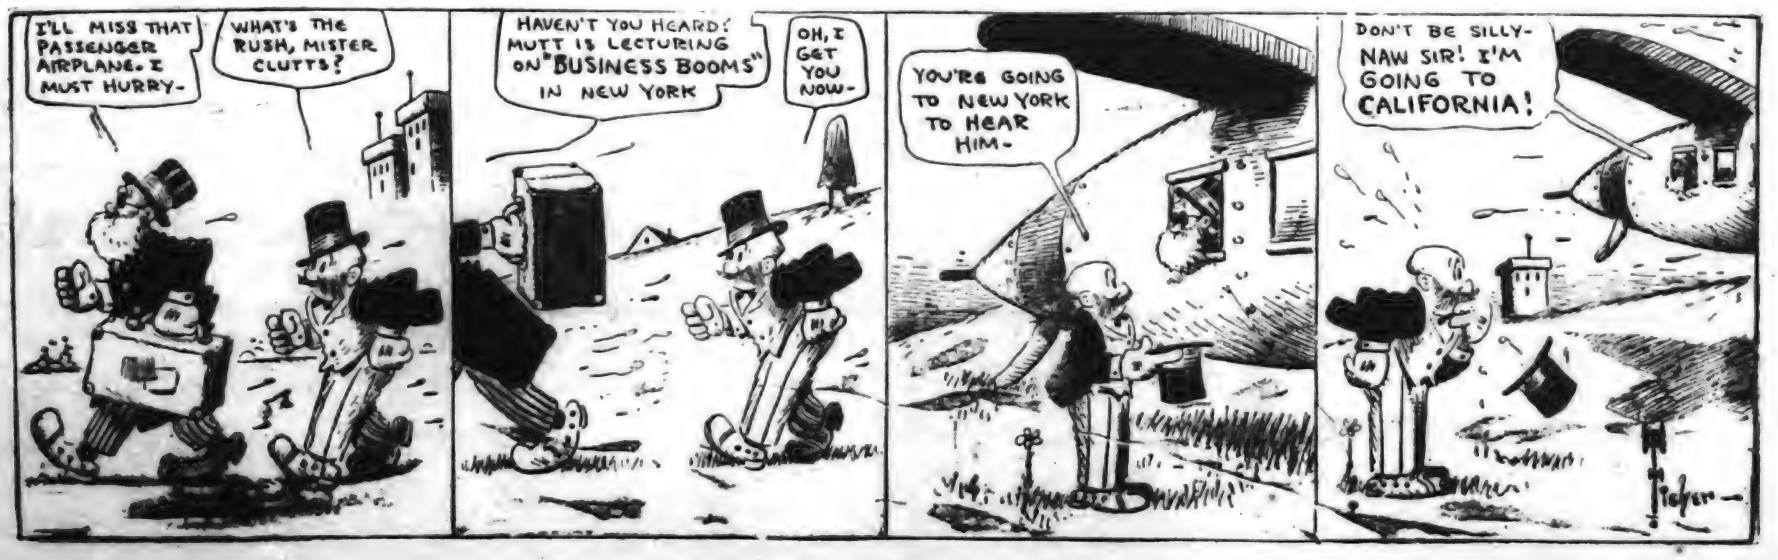
They were preparing their car for an tour through the countryside.



"By the way," said hubby in a hushed whisper, "I heard Smith and his wife quarrelling over what kind of car they should get. He wanted an open car and she wanted a saloon."

"Yes," returned his wife; "but the incident is closed now."

"Yes, and so is the car," replied hubby. "I saw her go out in it this morning."

A LITERARY MARVEL

British Novelist and Editor Produces Tremendous Volume of Writings.

That he writes one million words per year, has written one hundred and thirty novels and many plays and finds time between whiles to edit a Sunday newspaper with a million circulation was part of the explanation which Edgar Wallace made on the witness stand in London. He has offered $25,000 to anyone who can prove he has ever employed a "ghost" to write his stories, and now he offers a like sum to any one who can prove all his plots and ideas don't originate in his own mean production brain.

All this formed part of the evidence in a libel suit which Wallace brought against one Lewis Charles Goldfiam who declared Wallace cribbed a plot and dialogue from his novel "The Lucky Fool," and made of it a successful play, "The Calendar."

Goldfiam sent a letter to the newspapers and theatrical people declaring that Wallace was a "mean cribber" and one who had cribbed all he required from the "Lucky Fool" to make up "The Calendar". Wallace in his evidence, said actually he wrote "The Calendar" in four days at the request of Sir Gerald Dumaurier two years before Goldfiam's novel was published. Part of it he scribbled on the back of telegraph forms in Berlin and produced manuscript to prove it.

FLEECED OF SAVINGS

Confidence Game Worked on Toronto Shoemaker.

Nicholas Kowalski, a Toronto shoemaker, fell victim to a time-worn "con game" worked from coast to coast. Two men walked into his store. Both were well dressed, and pretended to be strangers. One of the men inquired for a Dr. Bull. He said his father had robbed the doctor of $10,000, went west, and through good luck in investments, made $100,000. Upon his death, he asked that the doctor be located and paid back the money. In the event of his not being found, the money was to be distributed in Toronto to charity.

The fiimflam trick was for each of the men to make deposits of $250 as a bond of good faith that they would help dispose of $10,000 for a reasonable cash consideration. Kowalski sought time to go to the bank and draw his money. A meeting was arranged and Kowalski handed over his $250. He was then asked to go on an errand. When he returned the two strangers were gone, and so were Kowalski's savings.

THE BOON OF HEALTH

About Half the Sickness Is Preventable, Doctor Believes.

The value of health is realized to some degree, at least, by every thinking individual. But not everybody has imagination enough to appreciate the tremendous monetary loss to the nation caused by sickness and deaths from disease. The loss to the nation represented by the deaths from preventable diseases yearly is estimated by Dr. Gordon Bates at more than a billion dollars and the loss due to sickness, of which 45 to 60 per cent. is preventable, at $300,000,000. The upkeep of our hospitals, sanitoria and asylums costs $50,000,000 yearly and the buildings and equipment involved an investment of $300,000,000.

During the four years of the great war the names of 160,000 Canadian soldiers appeared on the list of wounded, the number including some men several times. Yet on any given day across the Dominion no less than 180,000 Canadian citizens are temporarily disabled because of sickness. —From the Toronto Star.

NORMANS IN CANADA.

French and English In Dominion Have Common Origin.

Four-fifths of French-Canadians are of Norman blood, being descendants of the very Normans who in 1066 conquered Britain. Dr. Emile Vaillancourt, of the University of Caen, France, submitted this argument in a lecture at Montreal. He explained that originally there were 1,250 individuals from Normandy who took part in the conquest of Canada following the discovery by Jacques Cartier. Of this number 1,150 were men and the remainder women. They had 501 descendants in the following generation, and according to Dr. Vaillancourt, who is a noted historian, the progeny of these families from the majority of French-Canadians, or Canadiens, today. Thus, it may be said that the French and English in Canada have common origin.

PROVING OWNERSHIP.

Rooster Joins In Chorus to Convince Judge.

When a rooster under his very ears harmonized the chorus of "Old Black Joe" as Rene Dupre crooned the words, Recorder Peter F. Dodd of Detroit decided that the bird belonged to the crooner. Dupre, a negro concert singer, had gone to court to claim ownership of four fowls which, he said, had been stolen from his yard.

When the Recorder asked Dupre to prove his claim the singer bent low toward the rooster, while the three other birds, each a hen, watched attentively, and started to sing "Old Black Joe." Without any prompting the rooster blended its voice with Dupre's. Recorder Dodd gave him the four birds without asking for an encore.

Vagaries of a Flood.

When the River Usk overflowed its banks recently an attendant at the mental hospital at Abergavenny, England, caught a live trout in his room, and children picked up a large number of fish in fields after the water subsided.

Counting time is not nearly so important as making time count.—James J. Walker.

Motorcycle Meet a Big Success

About a thousand people gathered at Peel Park, Streetsville, on the 24th of May to witness the British Empire Motor Club's first annual meet. It was quite unique that they should come here that day because that was the official opening day of this splendid new Park—or Summer Resort. No prettier place could be found in all Ontario. The weather was perfect, and as one entered the Park through the main gateway and beheld the panorama before him he was enthused with the wonders of nature. The beautiful green sward glistened in the golden sunlight, a perfect race track with swift motors speeding around it, comfortable seats and tables for visitors conveniently situated in the shade of fine old elms spreading their branches out over the River Credit with its gentle flowing stream of cooling waters, beckoning to the youth and beauty of the countryside to come in and refresh themselves—with many splendid automobiles parked in the distance—all went to make one feel that this was the Park of all parks. Those who had seen it for the first time were enraptured with the scenery, and promised to come back again.

Mr. Dawson is to be congratulated on the improvements he has made in the grounds, and to show that he is truly British, he has planted a flag pole at the entrance from which a Union Jack is flown.

The motorcycle races were very interesting and lasted all afternoon. The winners were from Toronto, Oshawa, Belleville, and other places and other contestants came from as far away as Windsor and Montreal.

The proprietor has erected a refreshment booth inside the ring and is quite satisfied with his first day's receipts.

Gains Seventeen Pounds

Anyone seeing Mary would find it hard to believe that this smiling young woman was a consumptive, indeed, for Mary this word "was" is the best part of the whole story, for she fully believes that she is just about "cured" and ready to go back to work. "Why, in just three months they put nearly seventeen pounds weight on me," says she, with a hint of Irish brogue, "and me that weak when I came in that I had to be carried on a stretcher."

Mary has been in the Toronto Hospital for Consumptives for several months, but such is the skill of the doctors, such the result of food, rest and careful nursing, that she again meets the world with a smile, and counts the days to the time when she will be able to work once more and help in her mother's support.

A great work this, that cares for many hundreds of the consumptive poor who otherwise would have to accept the hardships and uncertainties of being tended at home. Will you please help such as Mary to get well? Your subscription will be gratefully acknowledged if sent to Mr. A. E. Ames, 220 College Street, Toronto.

Canada, The Empire and The World at Large

CANADA

Quid Pro Quo

Has it struck Canadians yet that, though Britain has a 20 per cent. tariff against the rest of the world, her markets to Canada, Australia and the remainder of the Dominions and Colonies of the British Empire are free? Canada maintains a high tariff against the Motherland. Britain gives free trade markets to us.—Lethbridge Herald (Lib.)

Canadian Tobacco

A. I. Phillips, chairman of one of the leading tobacco firms in Great Britain, said during the course of his address at the annual meeting of his company: "Canadian tobacco in the opinion of myself and my associates is equal to the finest raw leaf tobacco in the world. It has all the pleasing characteristics of United States Virginia tobacco." This new channel of Canadian export is clearly marked for great future development.—The Brantford Expositor.

Farmers' Co-operation

Co-operative farm movements are the salvation of the soil producer. Farmers must never forget that organization will beat disorganization every time. Unorganized, the farmer, whether he is farming fruit or wheat or poultry or animal husbandry, is a prey for every middle man, for every financial and political group that can get a toe-hold on his work and products.—Vancouver Sun.

King George

Twenty-two years ago May 16th King George ascended the throne of England. Tis reign has witnessed the most terrible of all wars, the worst of all depressions, a complete unheaval of organized forces, and more national crises than the previous hundred years together held. Throughout these twenty-two years of grave responsibility he has won for himself a place in the hearts of his own people and in the high esteem of the civilized world second to none. He has set a splendid example of a constitutional monarch labouring unceasingly for the welfare of his people, discharging his onerous duties with tact and skill, and exercising his influence ever on the side of peace, progress, prosperity and international goodwill. That he may be spared for many years yet to continue his invaluable services to Britain and the Empire was the sincere prayer of all his loyal subjects.—Montreal Star.

French Canada

The American tourist, who travels through our villages, hardly finds any difference between the country which he has left and the one which he had hoped find was new and picturesque and had something of France about it. More than this, the people who offer you a "chicken dinner" are doing all they can to adopt the universal and banal forms of international catering. It is quite conceivable that the tourist who has be attracted by the publicity given out about "French Quebec" may feel he has been deceived by a hotel like every other one he has seen on the roads of New York and of New England.—La Patrie, Montreal.

Much-Quoted Papers

With justifiable pride, the Stratford Beacon-Herald points out that it stood eighth in a list of 104 Canadian newspapers "most frequently quoted" during the three months ending with March last. It is a tribute to the daily papers in smaller centres not only that the Beacon-Herald was right on the heels of a large city paper and only one removed from the fourth Toronto paper, but that such journals as the Brantford Expositor, Woodstock Sentinel-Review, St. Thomas Times-Journal, Brockville Recorder and Times, Kitchener Record, St. Catharines Standard, Kingston Whig-Standard, Sault Ste. Marie Star, Chatham News, Guelph Mercury, Pet oro Examiner, Sudbury Star, Owen Sound Times, Oshawa Daily Times and North Bay Nugget were in the first half of the list.

It is charged frequently that the larger the newspaper the more pointless its editorials. While this cannot be said to apply as a rule to Canadian papers—this rule alway carrying its exception—it is a fact that those in secondary cities, and especially in this Province, have become notable for constructive contribution to thought on public affair. The compilations of the Dominion Press Clipping Agency show how valuable this thought is considered by contemporaries which add to their service by passing it along.—Toronto Globe.

Pay As You Go

The argument is always made that as posterity will get the benefit of improvements, posterity should help to pay for them. This is done by issuing long-term debentures. Would it not have been the part of wisdom to pay cash for everything in the city as it was built? Posterity have their own things to buy for the benefit of the community. A father would never go and deliberately leave his son a legacy of debt. Why should a city do any different? And, as a parting thought, if past councils had paid cash for their purchases, they would have been much more careful in making expenditures. —Kitchener Record.

THE EMPIRE

The Future of the Empire

The Empire has recently emerged from a great war, shaken, but intact. Profound changes have been brought about in our social and industrial fabric, and some faint hearts fear the future. Yet the Empire possesses wide spaces which may support many millions of our people, while our agricultural and mineral resources are unmatched. Given a bold plan of constructive organization of Empire resources, the future has dazzling possibilities.—Wolverhampton Express.

Every Man His Own Garden

Allotment growers in this country are producing at least $10,000,000 worth of vegetables every year. This is the estimate given by the National Allotments Society. Their figures show that every ten-rod plot grows on the average between £7 and £10 worth of vegetables, which works out at between £112 and £150 per acre. Much of this is produced on land which formerly lay fallow or derelict. In England and Wales there are to-day over a million allotments, and allowing for large numbers in Scotland and Ireland, the £10,000,000 estimate is believed to be on the conservative side.—London Evening Standard.

Optimism in Britain

Most favorable feature of the year's revenue figures is the increased yield from customs, partly due to the new tariff duties, though most of them have been in force for only a month. A new budget year opens in an atmosphere of confidence and restrained optimism. It will not be an easy year; but the back of our financial problem has been broken. Those who, in many cases at great sacrifice, have paid their taxes promptly, and those who have cheerfully submitted to "cuts," may justly claim an important share of the credit due to a splendid achievement.—London Sunday Dispatch.

Canada's Example

The representatives of the Free State cannot but gain in knowledge from contact with men who have helped to build up the Dominion countries. If we were to select examples for consideration, the principles on which Canada solved her racial problems are worthy of investigation. Some persons in this country who know nothing about Canada may look on it as an overgrown "English" colony. It is nothing of the sort. Before England acquired Canada by the fortunes of a very complicated war, it was a French colony. The French still form the largest individual racial section of the population—and they are the most loyal to the Crown. There is an Irish section, or rather two Irish sections—Northern and Southern. There are Scottish and English sections, there are Teutons and Scandinavians. One and all, they are Canadians. Canada is their country, and they have gone a long way to develop it, and they propose to go a longer way still. When we have done as much, proportionately, to develop the resources of the Free State, we shall hav done something of which to be justly proud.—Cork Examiner.

Crown Colonies and the Empire

Whatever the political ambitions of a future federated West Indies, the economic advantages of being welded within the British economic union would be too great to lose. We may aim to increase our stature as Crown Colonists, but Dominion status would not pay island colonies, which advertise themselves as the tropical orchards and sun-parlours of Great Britain. It may seem a far cry from the present increase of preference to British Colonial Empire Free Trade, or to an economic future such as we have indicated but we must not lose sight of the fact that the Chamberlain theories of pre-war days are now undergoing transition into technique and that the best economists in the Empire are engaged on hammering out that technique.—Trinidad Guardian.

Log Cabin Survives

Our national architecture was a few felled lengths of forest crudely built up with the hide and hair still on it. The log cabin was mythically, if not actually as in Lincoln's case, the incubator of our great men. And we are still likely to think of it as peculiarly an American feature, although it appears, human geographers say, wherever the same woodland circumstances prevail, or prevailed fairly recently, as to-day in parts of Russia, Sweden, Finland, and even in Switzerland and in Northern Italy. The Germans have just perfected a portable copper house that can be erected by six men in 24 hours. You can take it to the seashore or to the mountains with you almost as handily as if it were a tent. It boasts an unequalled "rationalization" in housing. But who could recuperate from the machine age in such a contraption? Not the run of Americans, certainly, who came out of the woods only day before yesterday and have the shack and the log cabin still in their blood.—New York Herald-Tribune.

The Powers and the Far East

Bread Shortage Serious in South Russia

Moscow.—The shortage of bread has become a critical problem for millions in the Ukraine, the Volga region and, to a lesser extent, Crimea and the Caucasus.

Tens of thousands of persons receive food packages, especially bread, regularly from Moscow, Leningrad and other northern cities which are better supplied. The post office in Moscow is flooded with packages addressed to cities where the bread famine is unusually sharp.

Recently the bread ration was suspended in Kiev, Odessa, Zhitomir and other Ukrainian cities, on account of the shortage.

Hot Bed Plant Growth Spurred by Electricity

Montreal.—Experimental work in connection with the heating of outside hotbeds by electricity is being tried this year by Rosario Montreuil, a truck gardener, who raises his crops at Ste. Dorothee, Que., near Montreal.

"The results so far have been very satisfactory," says Mr. Montreuil as he pointed out the hotbeds in which he had planted lettuce. He contrasted the growth of the vegetations in the heated beds with that of the unheated beds close by and stated that the lettuce had been transplanted at the same time.

Mr. Montreuil said that the installation was fairly high but that the actual operation cost has proved to be quite low. "Because it is purely an experiment, I have only a few beds so equipped" he said, "and it is really too soon to say very much about the success of the plant. It does not enable me to transplant to my hotbeds any earlier, but, as you see, it certainly makes things grow faster."

Housed in the usual outdoor frames, the apparatus consists of an electrical cable running inside throughout the entire length. From outlet boxes, placed at frequent intervals along this cable, heating elements run into the earth. Much heat is generated and is recorded by thermometers placed every ten or twelve feet.

Poison Bands Used on Trees

Urbana, Ill. — Chemically - treated bands, placed round trees, are credited with destroying between 17,000,000 and 18,000,000 codling moths that otherwise would be infesting Illinois orchards this year.

M. D. Farrar, of the State Natural History Survey, calls this comparatively new method the greatest advance in controlling the moth that has been made in five years. Spraying alone, he says, will not give complete control in heavily-infested orchards.

Record Year In Export Trade

Orders from the Continent Result of Display at British Industries

The British Industries Fair, 1932, the fourth successive Fair in which Canada has participated officially, has transcended those of previous years. Canada, says "The Canadian Export Pioneer," was represented this year at Olympia, London, and Castle Bromwich, Birmingham, by two sections comprising 5,500 and 2,800 square feet respectively, embracing in all 33 individual Canadian organizations exhibiting.

One of the outstanding features of the commercial inquiries received in the Canadian sections and the orders placed has been the very satisfactory amount of Continental business, the sum total of which, impossible to estimate at present, will reach a very substantial figure, and more than justify the costs.

The most striking business in prospect is the likelihood of an order from a Wolverhampton firm for 400 tons weekly of copper hitherto purchased from other sources.

BUILDING MATERIALS.

Probably the most active group of Canadian exhibitors has been that supplying building materials, ranging from sawn lumber, plywood, composition boards of various kinds, to seaweed buildings blankets. Surprisingly enough a number of Scandinavian inquiries likely to materialize in orders have been received. Scandinavia has hitherto, for obvious reasons, ben virtually a closed market to Canadian forest products.

Both at Olympia and at Birmingham the volume of inquiries for building materials is stated to have been enormous.

A CANADIAN CIGARETTE.

The British Industries Fair, 932, has seen the launching of two Canadian products in the British Isles of special interest to Canadian producers. For the first time in history there is upon the markets of the British Isles a cigarette manufactured from 100 per cent. Canadian tobacco.

A Canadian pipe tobacco has for nearly twelve months been available in Great Britain, but with the advent o a Canadian cigarette a new day has dawned for Canadian tobacco producers. The Canadian article is able to meet its competitors on the ground of price as well as quality.

"Sardines."

For many years the Canadian sardine has been marketed in many countries of the world. The British courts, however, have ruled that the word "sardine" cannot be used in the British Isles as applying to this product. This decision has delayed for many years the placing of this small Canadian fish before the British public. At the British Industries Fair this product was finally marketed under the name of "Fundies," so called because it is caught in the clear cold waters of the Bay of Fundy, on Canada's Atlantic seaboard.

The product, despite its handicap of coined nomenclature, has met with instantaneous success, and has been taken up with acclaim by many of the biggest retail organizations in the country.

Another improved Canadian product is wood fibre moulding, made from pulpwood and cast in mould to replace hand-carved mouldings. An initial order for 10,000 plaques of this material has been placed to form the facia of British manufactured wireless sets.

RUBBER PRODUCTS.

At Olympia a Canadian manufacturer of rubber goods has received a substantial order for advertising-balloons for Australia, a British order for 72,000 rubber garments, and an order for medical rubber gloves from one of the biggest chains of retail chemists in the country.

Other orders have been received from such widely separated countries as Denmark, Sweden, Holland, France, Spain, Egypt, and Iraq.

SEAWEED BUILDING BLANKET

One little-known Canadian product, although not entirely new on the British market, has met with a most gratifying success, viz., seaweed building blanket. These occur only in two known places in the world beds of the particular seaweed required—one in Canada and one in Sweden, in the confluence of fresh and salt water. This seaweed blanket, laminated by the kraft paper, acts as a complete sound insulator. Its iodine content renders it immune from the ravages of insects, whereas its other important valuable property, other than its insulating property, is that it is completely fireproof. It is interesting to note that the new home of the British Broadcasting Company is equipped with this product, as well as some of London's luxury hotels and apartment houses.

INQUIRIES FROM FIFTY-ONE COUNTRIES.

Both at Olympia and Birmingham there have been inquiries received from 51 different countries for a wide range of Canadian products. There are prospects of Canada securing orders for wireless sets from Scandinavia and South Africa, refrigerators from France and China, rubber fishing waders from Scotland, Norway, Iceland and Portugal, vacuum cleaners from four different Continental countries, Douglas fir doors from 11 countries, refrigerators and honey from Germany and Ecuador, and a host of other inquiries too numerous to mention.

Thus, the Canadian industrial sections of the British Industries Fair have justified their creation as valuable clearing houses for inter-Empire trade.

Fire Brigade in Finland Sets New Record

Helsingfors, Finland.—A Helsingfors fire brigade has beaten the record set up by an Indianapolis fire brigade of turning out in twenty seconds.

The Helsingfors fire chief, noting in an American fire brigade journal what had been done by Fire Engine Company No. 11 at Indianapolis, decided to see what his men could do.

An alarm was sounded, and before witnesses, who included Samuel S. Dickson, first secretary of the American Legation here, the Indianapolis record was beaten. The fire engine and tank car's rear wheels passed the engine hall threshold in exactly 11.2 seconds, the fire engine and foam producing car in 14.8 seconds, and the fire engine and ladder car in 13 seconds.

How to play Bridge

AUCTION and CONTRACT

by Wynne Ferguson

Author of "PRACTICAL AUCTION BRIDGE"

ARTICLE NO. 24

In the play of the hands at Auction and Contract there are numberless opportunities to make good plays, but the most important one of all is the winning of the trick that scores game or saves it. For example, suppose the declarer is playing spades and it is easily possible to make three odd but there is no apparent way to score game. That is the time for the declarer to do some deep thinking and endeavor to figure out some way to make game. Sometimes this can be done by mentally placing certain high cards in the opponents' hands in such a way that game is possible. At other times it can only be done by letting the opponents have the lead in the hope that they will make a mistake and thus give the declarer his only chance for game. That is what is meant by getting the trick that scores game.

On the other hand, suppose your opponents are playing the hand at spades, and it is up to you to save game. You can figure out how to take three tricks but cannot see any hope for the fourth trick. Then you should figure out in your mind what card or cards your partner must hold to make that extra trick and play accordingly. You will be surprised how often the card that you figure must be there, will be there and therefore save the game. It is on close hands of this type that the good player has such an advantage. The all-important trick of every hand is the one that either makes game or saves game; so bend all your energies and concentrate all your thought on that one trick and, if it is in the cards, don't let it get away from you.

The following hand is given as an illustration of the dealer's failure to observe this rule and of the big loss resulting.

Hearts—9, 6
Clubs—K, J, 7
Diamonds—K, 10, 8, 5, 4, 2
Spades—A, K

Hearts—A, K, J, 7 Clubs—4 Diamonds—9, 7, 6 Spades—9, 8, 7, 5, 3	Z	Hearts—Q, 10, 8, 5, 4 2 Clubs—10, 9, 8, 5, 3 Diamonds—3 Spades—4
	Hearts—3 Clubs—A, Q, 6, 2 Diamonds—A, Q, J. Spades—Q, J, 10, 6, 2

No score, rubber game. This hand is applicable either to Auction or Contract. Z dealt and bid one spade. A and Y passed and B bid two hearts, Z two spades, A three hearts, Y three spades, B four hearts, Z four spades and A doubled. All passed and A opened the king of hearts and followed with the ace of hearts. How should Z play the hand?

Solution: Z should let A hold this trick and discard a club or a diamond. By so doing, he could have made five odd in spades if A had then led either one of the other three suits, for in that case he could have taken A's trumps and his suit cards were all good. If A had led another heart at trick three, Z should have trumped in the dummy with the king and then led four rounds of trumps. He should then have led either clubs or diamonds until A made his last trump.

In this way, Z could have made four spades. If, however, he trumped the second heart trick in his hand and led two rounds of spades, his hand was hopeless and he would lose his contract by one trick. This hand shows the importance of thinking out the play of the hand and the possible cards held by opponents, even at the second trick. The minute the dummy hand was placed on the table, Z should have figured what cards A must hold to justify his double. The only excuse for the double would be at least five small trumps and the ace, king of hearts. With any less holding in trumps, A's double would have been unsound.

It is an easy hand with all the cards exposed, but not easy if they are concealed unless you stop to think and figure out how the unseen cards must lie to give you game. It is a fine illustration of the importance of playing for the all-important trick that will score game and of doing so from the very first card played.

In the following problem, try your own skill in solving before reading the solution. Then compare results and thus obtain a valuable lesson or evidence that you are pretty good, dependent upon failure or success.

Problem

Hearts—none
Clubs—A, J, 10
Diamonds—none
Spades—9

Hearts—none Clubs—Q, 6 Diamonds—J Spades—Q	Z	Hearts—none Clubs—K, 9 Diamonds—K, Q Spades—none
	Hearts—10 Clubs—4 Diamonds—A, 4 Spades—none

If hearts are trumps and Z is in the lead, how can Y, Z win all four tricks against any defense?

Solution: Z should lead the ace of diamonds and discard the ten of clubs in Y's hand. He should then lead the ten of hearts. Now A must discard either a club or a spade. He cannot discard a spade for, if he does, Y will discard the jack of clubs and his nine of spades will be good. A, therefore, is forced to discard the six of clubs and Y discards the nine of spades. B must now discard a club or a diamond. He cannot discard the king of diamonds for, if he does, Z's four of diamonds will be good. B, therefore, is forced to discard the nine of clubs. Z now leads the four of clubs and Y wins the remaining two tricks. It is a fine example of the "double squeeze."

His patient nodded.

"Yes, doctor," he replied. "I have been drinking six cups of coffee and four glasses of water each day."

The doctor gave a start of surprise.

"Coffee!" he snapped. "But coffee and water are not the same."

"They are at the cafe where I have my meals," said the patient coolly.

Vienna—Lilac City of the Continent

Those who would know the charm of the Austrian capital must visit it in the spring. It has no fine river promenades like many another European city—the Danube is too far from the center of things for that—but its awakening after winter snows is a wonderful sight. With the coming of the lilac blossom the Viennese feel that spring is really here. Day after day crowds flock to the parks to admire the blossom-laden bushes. The Rathaus Garden is another favorite place of pilgrimage with its many exotic trees and plants.

Vienna can truly be called the lilac city, for not only is the lilac blossom the indication of spring, it is also to be noted that to this city the lilac was first brought from Asia nearly three and a half centuries ago. At the corner of the Himmelpfortgasse and the Seilerstaette stood a garden, where, in 1589, the lilac first blossomed in Europe. This garden belonged to Gislenius Busbequins, Ferdinand I's Ambassador to Constantinople. He was a great lover of flowers, and to him is given the honor of having introduced both the lilac and the tulip into Europe. It is true that another kind of lilac has been found in the Carpathians, but this was much later, and this latter cannot be compared in quality to that which came from the Orient.

New German Motor Train

A double passenger train car, over 137 feet long, with its own motors and capable of a sustained speed of more than ninety-three miles an hour will be placed in service between Berlin and Hamburg some time in the coming Summer. With the going into effect of the Summer schedule, the maximum speed of the regular "FD" (non-stop) trains on the same stretch will also be increased from the present 68 1/3 to 74½ miles an hour. This has been made possible by increasing the distance from the first cautionary signal to the final signal from 700 to 1,200 meters, thus giving the brakes time to act. The new motorized car will be rounded at each end to reduce atmospheric resistance. It will have seats for 102 second-class passengers. A refreshment room will be added in the middle, in which hot and cold drinks and cold food will be served.

Cretonne covers will retain their colors if washed in bran water.

Naming Telephone Exchanges

Who names the new telephone exchanges, and why are such long names chosen?

A woman is responsible in England. She is employed by the Post Office to think out the names for new exchanges, and she has in her desk enough names to christen all Britain's new exchanges for several years to come.

It sounds an easy job, but she doesn't think so. Scarcely one per cent. of her suggested names is passed.

Owing to dialling limitations, a name must not begin with an "O," it must not sound like any other name, and its first three letters must not clash with any other first three.

After a name has been passed as fit for use it is given a complete voice test. Exchange operators test it thoroughly, and quite half the names given the test are rejected because they are hard to understand. Recently the G. P. O. decided to call an exchange Nelson, but when spoken by different people it sounded like Western, Wilson, and several other names! Even Hogarth became Cigar.

But the christener's troubles are not over even when these tests have been passed. For the local authorities in whose district the new exchange stands usually dislike all the names suggested, and a fresh list has to be thought out.

The Unkindest Cut of All

We were seated in a hammock
On a balmy night in June,
When the world was hushed in slumber

I asked one little question,
And my heatr was filled with hope,
But her answer never reached me—
For her brother cut the rope.

Most of the new crop of June graduates who expect to set the world afire will begin by lighting another cigaret.

Mike—"Pat, what in the world is the matter?"

Pat—"I just got out of the hospital. I was operated on for appendicitis."

Mike—"What does that have to do with that great lump on your head?"

Pat—"A lot. They ran out of ether."

Worst Insect Enemies Of Orchards Controlled

Geneva, N.Y.—The nature and habits of the codling moth, the apple maggot, the plum and apple curculios and the white apple leaf-hopper have been revealed and the weakness which make them vulnerable to attack by the fruit grower set forth in investigations by experts of the state agricultural experiment station here.

Many of the experiments having to do with these most formidable enemies of the fruit grower were conducted in the Hudson Valley and Lake Champlain fruit districts, principally by Dr. P. J. Chapman and O. H. Hammar. They found that "efficient control of orchard pests is gained through thorough and timely treatments applied during certain critical points in the development of these insects."

For practical reasons, they found, no more sprays should be used than are necessary to give reasonable protection, and whenever possible each treatment should be directed against one or more pests.

While an insect may increase its numbers to an abnormal degree over a wide area, they say, because of exceptionally favorable conditions, failures in controlling orchard pests or uneconomical conrol measures can usually be attributed to lack of information on pest conditions in the individual orchard.

"We can thank Long Distance for that cheque"

Old man Carrington was selling his farm and there were two fine teams for quick sale. Bill Smart didn't need them but he thought of a man he knew in the cartage business in town.

Bill called his man by Long Distance telephone that night and arranged to buy both teams for him next day on commission.

A few days later he had a nice cheque in the mail — and his telephone call cost him only 30 cents.

WHAT IS THIRST?

In a way, water may be regarded as a food, and in a similar sense, thirst may be likened to hunger. About 70 per cent of the body weight is water, so it is obvious that water is an important substance. Water has several uses in the body. It keeps the tissues soft, pliable and elastic. We know that if tissues are dried they become hard, stiff and brittle. The digested food material is dissolved into fluid as it is carried to the tissues of the body. Water is required also to assist in elimination. Perspiration which serves to regulate body temperature is in the form of water.

Almost every function of the body requires water. Without it, digestion would cease, circulation would come to an end, elimination would be checked and the control of the body temperature would be lost.

When there is a lack of water in the body, we become thirsty. We have, however, so often failed to respond to the demand or postponed doing so that the sensation has in most people become blunted and we are aware only of a marked thirst or what is really an urgent demand. It is for this reason that we cannot rely entirely upon thirst as a guide to our needs.

Thirst is simply a form of irritation which we experience when the throat becomes dry. It is a demand for fluid to which we should respond. There is no set definite amount of water which each of us should consume day by day. It depends very largely upon how much water we are getting rid of and that in turn depends upon the activity of the person and the temperature.

It is obvious that after a strenuous game or hard physical work on a hot day that a considerable amount of fluid has been lost in perspiration which will result in an increased demand of water. It may be said that many people would likely enjoy better health if they used more water. It would assist in improving their body functions particularly the elimination of wastes.

Water is water, but all water may not be safe. Contaminated water is responsible for the spread of such diseases as typhoid fever. This is a point to be kept in mind when away from the place where you know that the water is safe. It is a good practice to use water freely providing you are sure that it is pure.

Pure water is readily available in most places. Develop the habit of drinking water freely. It is quite all right to drink moderately with your meals and it is desirable to drink between meals.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

Children Left Alone

In a little house in a back street two children are awaiting Mother's and Dad's return. They are being helped by a friendly organization but there can be no home for them until their parents come back.

Where are the parents? For many months they have been struggling for lost health and strength in the Toronto Hospital for Consumptives. They have benefited greatly, as so many hundreds do, from the quietness, fresh air, kindly nursing and medical attention.

"Able to walk to the dining-room for two meals a day now" is the proud boast of the husband and father. But a short time ago he could not be moved from his bed. A few months from now, who knows, he may be back again taking up the burden of the home.

Such work as this has great economic value to the community as well as opening the only way from misery and despair to hundreds of the consumptive poor. The hospital greatly needs your help. Will you please send a gift to Mr. A. E. Ames, 223 College St., Toronto.

When Chatham was the Terminus of the Underground Rail'y

Interesting Story of Slavery Days - How the Slaves Escaped to Canada 70 Years Ago.

Roused to sudden anger at the sight of an overseer pursuing a slave with a club, she charged the man and knocked him to the ground. The enraged overseer hurled an iron weight at her, crushed her skull and inflicting an injury which resulted in fits of somnolence, to which she was subject until long after the civil war, when she finally obtained relief at the Massachusetts General Hospital.

This injury played an important part in fitting her for the struggle to come for on account of it, being unfitted for the usual work of women, she was given the task by her owner of lifting heavy barrels and drawing heavy weights. Her strength became so great after a few years at this arduous work that at the age of 19 she was a match physically for the strongest men in the neighborhood and was exhibited by her master to visitors as one of the sights of the place.

During an illness at this period of her life she became very religious, developing an almost fanatic faith, which later carried her through dangers where strong men of her race faltered.

"Sold South"

When her master died word went around the quarters that the slaves were to be "sold South," the thing most dreaded by negroes of the upper tier of Southern States. Harriet counselled the negroes to run away, but none of them had sufficient courage to follow her, and in the end she made her way to freedom alone and without compass or knowledge of the country, simply by following the Northern Star.

She obtained employment and saved all she earned. Then she disappeared and was not seen for months. She had dared to return to the land of bondage to show others the road to liberty.

Quaker Abolitionists in Philadelphia aided her. She soon had an underground railroad in working order and so perfect were her plans and so efficacious her methods that a number of years ago, when Susan B. Anthony introduced her to a woman suffrage audience in Rochester, Harriet said:

"Yes, ladies, I was de conductor of de underground railroad fo' eight years, an' I kin say w'at mos' conductors can't say—dat I nebber run my train off de track an' I nebber los' er passenger."

A Price on Her Head

It wasn't long before rewards were offered throughout Maryland and Virginia for a negro woman who was luring the slaves away from their homes. The price for the capture of Harriet Tubman, dead or alive, rose to more than $40,000; but she was never taken. She made 20 or more trips into the very heart of the country where the rewards were offered and continued her work almost without cessation until the beginning of the civil war.

On her way to attend an abolition meeting in Boston at the invitation of Gerrit Smith, she stopped off at Troy and while there fought her greatest battle. Charles Nalle, a fugitive slave and a half brother of the master who had followed him, was a captive in Troy, having fallen into the hands of officers and been remanded back to Virginia.

Harriet went immediately to the office of the United States commissioner, collecting on the way a large crowd.

When she arrived bids for the slave's purchase were already in progress. The owner offered to sell for $1,200, but when that was bid he raised the price to $1,500. A man across the street raised a window and shouted.

"Two hundred dollars for his rescue, but not a cent for his master!"

That fired the crowd. It charged ahead toward the slave with Harriet Tubman in the fore. Aided by her strength and the backing of her followers she broke through the police lines, seized the prisoner under the armpits, and began to drag him down the street.

A policeman hit her on the head with his club, and freeing one hand, she knocked him back into the crowd. Another jumped at her, but she caught him about the neck, throttled him and threw him over her shoulder.

Held to Her Captive

She was dragged down, but kept her hold on the slave. Inspired by her splendid show of spirit, the crowd massed around her and dragged her and the slave to the river, where the fugitive was thrown into a boat which pulled out. There was a continuation of the fight in a house on the other bank of the river and two men were shot, but Harriet got across in time to win the battle and the slave escaped.

At the request of Governor Andrew, of Massachusetts, she gave her services as a spy during the war. Only a little of her accomplishments as a spy is known, but in the book by Sarah H. Bradford called "Harriet, the Moses of Her People," it is related that she was often under fire and that "she led the forces through jungle and swamp, guided by an unseen hand."

John Brown, introducing Harriet Tubman to Wendell Phillips, spoke these words:

Mr. Phillips, I bring you one of the best and bravest persons on the continent, General Tubman, as we call her."

And Phillips, writing of the incident to a friend, said:

"In my opinion, there are few captains, perhaps few colonels, who have done more for the loyal cause since the war began, and few men who did before that time more for the colored race than our fearless and sagacious friend Harriet."—London Exchange.

Scout Notes

First Streetsville Troop of Boy Scouts met last night at the Soap Factory building. In spite of the thunderstorm which broke after supper, about forty scouts were present. Drills and acrobatics were indulged in and the boys performed real well. Hec Graydon and his Alfalfa Boys assisted in the program with vocal and instrumental music which is always much appreciated. Short addresses were made by the Scoutmaster, Dr. Montemurro, the Chaplain, Rev. R. J. W. Perry, and others. Ice cream, cake and candy was served and a pleasant evening spent by all. Votes of thanks were passed to the Acme Ice Cream Co., who donated the ice cream, Canada Bread Co., who donated the cakes, the ladies who served refreshments, and also the orchestra. After the closing exercises conducted by the Chaplain, and the singing of the National Anthem, the gathering dispersed.

We noticed that the boys are very obedient to their officers, are very grateful for anything the people do for them. They need more supplies now, and we know that our generous citizens will not see them want.

SCOUTS, ALERT!

The Scouts of Streetsville Troop No. One, will hold their first full-dress parade on July 1st. Donations of more equipment, hats, socks or shirts, are always welcome. Many contributions have been received to date, but we are always willing to accept more.

The Scout softball team was defeated by a Public School team last Friday by a score of 13-3, but they are not discouraged. We hope to play a return game at a nearly date.

On May 18th, Bill Hollingshead was officially installed as an instructor in the Troop. The Scouts congratulate him and will give him their very best support.

On May 24th, almost twenty scouts come to me and told me that a certain business man of our village was flying a distress flag. (Be a little more careful next time, Mr. B.) If you are in doubt as to the proper way to fly the Union Jack, ask a S-c-o-u-t.

Troop, Alert! Dismiss!

S.H.S. NOTES

A special meeting of the Literary Society was held on Monday of this week for the purpose of celebrating Empire Day. Our president being absent, John McGill took the chair. The program was opened by singing "O! Canada".

Kirby Burns favoured us with a medly of selections on the accordeon. Recitations were as follows: Bernice Temple, "Canadian Born"; Leona Durie, "My Native Land"; Eugene Gerhart, "Drake's Drum"; Lucy Scheid, "Montcalm and Wolfe"; Humorous stories were told by Homer Dunn and John Wright.

Erna and Elizabeth Bailey played a very pleasing piano duet, and Mildred Quennell rendered a piano solo.

John McGill and Ian Johnson were captains for a spelling match. John's team won the prize. Many of the (alleged) spellers made a "stew" of the word "fricassee". One pupil slipped on "Banana".

Mr. MacArthur presented 1st Form with a box of candy as a reward for supplying the best program during the year. The meeting closed with the singing of "The King."

The S.H.S. 1932 Year Book is now on sale for pupils and graduates and possibly a few others if they apply soon enough. This is a 16 page magazine and contains 4 group pictures (which alone are worth 50 cents). It only costs the public 20 cents, so speak up early for your copy.

Ian Johnson and Aubrey Pope competed in district field meet on Saturday but were slightly outclassed.

TURKEY'S STRONG MAN

Mustapha Kemal Rules With Iron Hand—Radical Changes Amaze Turks — Prove Beneficial.

The third-term bugaboo has apparently not reached the Republic of Turkey, where Mustapha Kemal has accepted another four years of the presidency, handed to him by the newly - elected Turkish Parliament without a single dissenting vote. Despite President Kemal's expressed desire for some sort of political opposition no other candidate presented himself.

Under the firm hand of the dictator, Kemal, a good deal of steady progress is noticeable to those who have been in the country during the past few years. The Ghazi, it is true, has treated unsympathetic factions with an iron hand, but a good deal of his strength has rested on a united nation, a rare thing in Turkish history, and the enthusiasm of younger elements.

Well into its seventh year as a republic, Turkey is beginning to show many signs of a national consciousness. Turkish patriotism expresses itself through pride rather than fear. While the muezzin still calls the faithful to prayer, the muezzin himself has changed. In place of the fez, or the turban, the crier from the minaret now sports a very cockney-looking cap, worn backward like a motor-cycle rider.

In outlawing the fez Mustapha Kemal showed that he understood

the Turk better than the Turk understood himself. There was no economic reason why the old red headgear should go. But the psychological effect was tremendous. The Turk, it was realized, could not think or act like a Westerner, he could not compete with a European if his trousers were baggy, his slippers comic and his headgear like that of a lodge member. So the leaders of the new state appropriately started with his head to "shake him out of his shoes."

The change from Arabic characters to the Latin alphabet made the whole nation illiterate a little over two years ago, but since then almost everyone, old and young, rich and poor, has been industriously studying his new A B C's. The problem might conceivably have been greater had the percentage of literacy been higher before 1929. At that time only 15 per cent. of the population, it is estimated, could read and write Arabic. Most of the illiterates hired a professional letter writer and reader to take care of whatever correspondence was necessary.

The difficult Arabic script is now seldom seen. Railroad stations, postcard shops, steamer names, movie posters, newspapers and magazines all use almost the same letters we do, although they depict the sounds of the old Turkish language. The advent of a new alphabet hit the newspapers hardest. Their street sales dropped almost to zero when they first appeared in characters which many of their employes could not read. They are recovering, however, largely through the active demand for reading matter, in the new medium from hundreds of newly-established primary schools throughout Turkey.

THE VALUE OF A WIFE.

Woman Assessed Like a Slave, Says Noted Judge.

Mr. Justice McCardie, who is one of England's most well-known bachelors, offered some comment on the value of a wife in divorce proceedings at the Birmingham assizes.

The judge remarked the husband had said his wife was a good housekeeper, clean and industrious. He thought it was a description one would give a domestic servant.

"In arriving at the damages you have to assess the value of a woman as you would assess the value of a slave in some eastern part of the world. To my mind it is one of the most unfortunate aspects of the divorce law in this country."

The jury awarded the petitioner in the case $485 damages.

CURLY—A DOG.

Still another evidence of the devotion of a dog to those it loves: In Alberta a little pet named Curly which had been carried in a wagon several hundred miles across country from Lesser Slave Lake to Bassano, returned under its own power to the old friends and the old home. Curly was several weeks on the way, but he knew where he wanted to go, and never faltered until he reached the familiar home scenes; and surely there must have been a boy among the magnets that drew him back.—Toronto Globe.

DECISIONS RESPECTING NEWSPAPERS

Court decisions respecting newspaper subscriptions are very clear. Any person who takes a paper regularly from the post office, whether in his name or another's or whether he has subscribed or not, is responsible for payment. If a person orders his paper discontinued he must pay all arrears or the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made, and then collect the whole amount, whether the paper is taken or not. The courts have decided that refusing to take newspapers or periodicals from the post office or removing and leaving them unpaid, is prima facie evidence of intention of fraud.

Our share has been placed at $600.00. What the benefit to the village will be, we cannot understand, as in case of fire the water at the tank is shut off. Will somebody please enlighten us?

The election here last Friday was very quiet, only 215 electors casting their vote. Five people spoiled their ballots. When the ballots were counted, Mr. Foster had 115 and Mr. Dandie 95, giving the former a majority of 20. Mr. Foster will take his seat as Councillor on Monday evening, June 6th, for the first time. The result of the contest was a great surprise to many, and even to the victor himself. Some of the boys who were cock-sure of the result, lost their bets. Never mind fellows, you can try your luck again next January.

PORT CREDIT MAN IN TROUBLE

Chris Lazarou, Macedonian, hopped about behind the counter of his Rogers Road lunch room late Saturday night, ducking wildly while Harry Gilmore, of Port Credit, heaved stool tops at his head, knocked glass soft drink globes clattering to the floor, smashed a showcase and sent pies slithering in several directions.

The heavy stool tops hit the walls over Lazarou's head, and dug chunks of plaster loose before they crashed into the crockery.

A seltzer stand was sent flying at the harassed restaurant man. Each missile was hurled with a choice accompaniment of potent language. Two customers stood frozen in a far corner.

The young man, said to have been drunk, shouldered his way out the door into the crowded street next to the Major Theatre.

Two bicycles were standing at the curb and one at a time he picked these up and flung them at the theatre crowd. Several men made a rush for him and Roy Duncan, 21, of Silverthorn Avenue, is credited with subduing him.

Detective Alfred Gray and P.C. George McKimmie, of York Township police, arrived to find Gilmore slumbering blissfully on the pavement. He was taken to the township police station and held on a charge of being drunk in a public place and doing malicious damage.

About 11.15 p.m., Gilmore and two companions entered the Rogers Lunch, 427 Rogers Road. Gilmore is said to have ordered sandwiches for all three. One of the trio ate his and walked out. A second paid for his own. Gilmore paid for his own, but because he had given the order, the proprietor asked him to pay for the other.

Gilmore refused. He offered to fight Lazarou rather than pay the other ten cents. Stella, Lazarou's wife, came out of the kitchen and started pushing Gilmore out the door. He retaliated with a shove, it is alleged, which sent her sprawling to the other side of the lunch room.

As the battle waged in other parts of the little place, with her husband behind the counter and Gilmore moving about and grabbing anything that wasn't nailed down, Mrs. Zazarou slipped out the door to phone police.

COOKSVILLE

Constable Jospeh Allen, questioned as to the possibility of identification of the body which was discovered on the beach at Clarkson on Saturday, thought that there was little likelihood that identification could be effected. He said that there was no evidence as to at what point the body entered the water and that the slips of paper found in the clothing gave no coherent evidence as to where the persons named on the slips might be found.

CAN. LEGION NEWS

About twenty veterans of the Great War met on Monday night in the town hall for the monthly conclave of Streetsville Post of the Canadian Legion. The business was conducted in the council chamber, at which Mr. Tracey was appointed caretaker of the memorial. Members were notified of a zone legion church parade at Acton next Sunday, and the annual zone rally in Brampton on June 10th.

Guests of the evening spoke, Past President Hill, of Brampton Post with Comrade Giles, brought greetings from our neighbors. Mr. Harold Hunter, of Christie Street Hospital, spoke on work being done and Mr. Isador Manswerger, formerly of the German army, and who faced the Canadians at Arras, but who now resides in this district, told of some of his experiences and spoke feelingly of his courteous reception by Canadian Veterans everywhere.

Following the meeting the boys adjourned to the hall, where the Alfalfa Boys ably led by Mr. Hec. Graydon, gave an excellent program and led the veterans in singing many of the old war songs. Mr. Hunter, of the Hart House Players, rendered a much appreciated monologue. At the lunch which followed, each veteran present told briefly of his enlistment, regiment and service, and thus everyone became better acquainted. The post is growing all the time. Two new members were out and more plan to join at a future meeting. Comrade Harry Lee invited the post to hold the next meeting at his home in June, and to bring the families along. The invitation was heartily accepted. The veterans are reminded again of the big zone rally in Brampton on June 10th, at 8 p.m. Keep the date open. Those wishing to attend the zone church parade at Acton on Sunday will meet at the Memorial at 2 p.m.

BRAMPTON

More People in Hospital

A sharp increase in admissions to the Peel Memorial Hospital has been noted during the past six months, according to Miss M. Jamieson, recently appointed superintendent of the hospital. Since the beginning of the fiscal year, surgical cases have numbered within 50 of the entire years preceding. Figures do not show a greater percentage of surgical cases, however, the percentage in relation to admissions remaining about the same. Temporary accommodations have been necessary at times to provide for an influx of patients.

Hon. Duncan Marshall was the featured speaker of the annual meeting of the Peel County Women's Institute, held in the Baptist church, Brampton. His address dealt with agriculture and its relation to the forthcoming Imperial Conference at Ottawa. Col. the Hon. T. L. Kennedy, Minister of Agriculture, addressed the gathering briefly, commending the work done by the Institutes in the financial crisis of the country. Miss Margaret Jamieson, recently appointed matron of the Peel Memorial Hospital, was introduced by Mrs. J. A. McBride, who reported for the hospital committee of the Institute.

Figures brought out at the meeting show that the Institute in Peel has a membership of 1,061, made up of 824 seniors and 237 juniors, divided among 18 senior branches and 8 junior branches. Two junior branches have been added during the past year, at Terra Cotta and Caledon. During the year there were 280 meetings, with an aggregate attendance of 8,350, at which 270 papers and addresses were read.

G. A. Putnam, superintendent of Women's Institute, was present, praised the work done in the county during the past year, and presented the retiring county secretary, Mrs. William McClure, with a large bouquet of roses.

Resolutions disapproved the raising of the departmental examination fee from $1 to $1.50; asked the members of Institutes, in giving opinions on any matter, to state whether they are speaking for the body which they represent, or from a personal viewpoint; suggested that pedestrians be compelled to use sidewalks where there are such along provincial highways; recommended that a reduction be made in the rates of rural telephone subscribers, and decreed that county officers should hold office for no longer than six years.

Prize-winners of the essay contest, final results of which were received from the Institutes Branch, Toronto, were: Mrs. W. Brooks, Castlemore; Mrs. Bert Lindsay, Mono Road; Mrs. J. B. Elliott, Cheltenham.

Officers elected for the ensuing year were—President, Mrs. Sam Wilson, Mono Road; South Vice-President, Mrs. I. J. Ardagh, Streetsville; Centre Vice-President, Mrs. J. M. Dolson, Snelgrove; North Vice-President, Mrs. A. B. Smith, Caledon; Secretary-treasurer, Mrs. John McCulloch, Snelgrove.

PUBLIC SPEAKING CONTEST

Over 250 attended, and a feature of the program was the presentation of medals by the donor, Gordon Graydon, to winners of the Peel county dramatics competition held during the winter.

Mr. Kellam spoke on "Wheat and Transportation," while Miss Ross' subject was "Canadian Citizenship." Mrs. J. M. Dolson, ex-home demonstrator for Peel, M. R. Fydell and Frank Parish were the judges.

Besides the individual awards, Ebenezer and Streetsville clubs will hold the championship shields donated by David Wilson, county clerk, for a year. Mr. Wilson made the presentations personally.

Three others competed: Miss Elsie Irvine, Brampton; Gordon Edwards, Bolton, and Wm. Lines, Streetsville.

Mrs. J. M. Dolson made the presentation of a pyrex casserole in silver frame, donated by the Peel Junior Institute, to Miss Ruth Ross, and Miss Pearle Church, the brush set, donated by Peel J.F.A., to Rankin Kellam.

A Health Skit entitled "Gym and Jerry," was given by twenty Junior Institute members.

Mr. Bill Bovaird, President Peel J.F.A., presided.

Musical selections were rendered by Barr Bros.' Orchestra, Brampton; vocal solos by Arnold Bland of Ebenezer, and Miss Wilma Hunter of Terra Cotta; piano solos by Miss Marguerite McMaster of Terra Cotta; guitar selections by Mrs. Jason Shaw of Brampton.

The election of officers of Peel J.F.A., in charge of the Agricultural Representative, Mr. J. C. Shearer, resulted as follows: President, Bill Anderson, Trinity; Vice-President, George Hostrawser, Ebenezer; Sec.-Treas., Jim Downey, Bolton.

The Aztec Mystery

A Thrilling Story of the Old West

BY MURRAY LEINSTER

SYNOPSIS.

Sonny Holman, believing he has been cheated out of ownership of the Aztec mine, holds up the mine payrolls. Janet Laurier, who holds legal title to the Aztec, offers a reward for his capture. She is kidnapped by Garcia's gang, a band of desperadoes. Sonny follows and prevents Garcia from harming the girl, then escapes with her. To his surprise, he finds that the girl suspects him of being in league with Garcia and a confederate in the kidnapping.

CHAPTER TEN.

"You had me kidnapped, too," she said bitterly. "I've got your pistol in your back, with my finger on the trigger! Don't move! You came to my house and spied out the ground. You were ready to keep me from summoning help until your confederates came."

Sonny shifted his looted repeating rifle to his other arm and began to roll a cigaret as he rode. "I'm listenin'," he drawled. "This is right interestin'."

For the first time her tone was less than positive. "I know that much is true," she said, "because almost the first words you said to Garcia were that you had ridden back with him as you didn't trust him. I don't know whether he—intended—"

"He did, ma'am," said Sonny softly, "an' for that I am goin' to kill him."

"And so," she said coldly, "as a thief, and as the betrayer of a man who was fool enough to believe in you, and because you had me kidnapped, I'm going to take you into Moleville."

Sonny made a sudden movement. She gasped. His hand had snapped up behind him and held the revolver firmly. He pulled decisively on it, working her finger out of the trigger guard with his other hand.

"You're goin' to make me mad one o' these days," he drawled. "I'm goin' to be the one that does the takin' into Moleville, ma'am."

He put the revolver in his belt again, but before him this time. The gait of Gunpowder had not changed, nor did he cease to trot steadily toward the distant flaring lights of the little town. Sonny rode cheerfully onward, smoking the cigaret he had manufactured in the dark. When he flung it away in a trailing arc of sparks, he spoke again. "This business of bein' outside the law has its disadvantages. I got me a idea right now where bein' respectable would be right useful. I rek'n I'm goin' to reform."

There was a long pause. She seemed to be looking for a verbal trap. But he seemed to be musing not unpleasantly.

"If you do take me into Moleville safe," she offered at last, "and you promise to leave the mine alone; because of your helping me at Garcia's place I'll—"

Sonny's head tilted as he gazed meditatively up at an especially bright star. "Ma'am?"

"I'll withdraw the reward I've offered for you."

"Shucks," said Sonny easily. "That's a compliment. The last steers the Circle Bar sold was only eight cents on the hoof. You' gone an' made me, weight for weight, about the most valuable critter on the range."

She did not seem to understand.

"And I won't prosecute you if you really didn't plan to have me carried off."

"Ma'am," said Sonny dryly, "if I ever figure on carryin' you or anybody else off, I'll arrange it a whole lot better than Garcia did."

The town lights had disappeared now, and she had lost all sense of direction. Something like panic struck her. "Well," she cried desperately, "what do you want?"

"I'd kinda like, ma'am, to have my mine back."

"You shan't," she cried fiercely. "It's mine! You don't know—"

Sonny waited. Gunpowder topped a little rise and Moleville was again visible, not more than a quarter of a mile away. Janet gave a little gasp of astonishment and relief.

"I'll tell yuh," said Sonny thoughtfully. "I kinda like you, ma'am. Yuh got nerve, an' yuh got spunk an' there's other matters about yuh that I kinda admire. But I always said I wasn't goin' to marry any woman that had more money than me. An' as near as I can figure it, I got to get back the Aztec if I ever figure on proposin' to you."

Janet gasped again, but it was distinctly not with pleasure. "You—you—"

"Yes'm," said Sonny pleasantly.

"I hate you!" she raged. "You're a thief! You're a murderer! And you dare!"

"Just so, ma'am," drawled Sonny. "I rek'n Gunpowder we're ridin' on, he'd ha' called me things like that when he first met me. But Gunpowder an' me, we get along right good now."

"You're saying," she panted, "that you'll break me like a horse?"

"No, ma'am," Sonny chuckled. "Jus' to kinda domesticate yuh, ma'am. The whole process bein' one o' kindness."

The first of the adobe houses of the town appeared. Sonny spoke to Gunpowder in the private language they seemed to share. Gunpowder mended his pace a little. The bungalow appeared a little distance before them. Sonny halted Gunpowder by a word. The stallion was without either saddle or bridle.

"Our last stop, ma'am," said Sonny gravely. "This here train don't go no further. I hope you enjoyed your ride, ma'am."

He helped her to the ground. She was raging. "If you told the truth," she told him, choking with her wrath, "about not having planned this affair tonight, I thank you for helping me."

"Delighted, ma'am," drawled Sonny.

"And being foolish about gratitude," she went on bitingly, "I shan't raise an alarm to have you captured at once."

"Mighty grateful, ma'am," said Sonny politely.

"But," she cried fiercely, "I'm going to fight you from now on in every way I can! There's going to be an election for sheriff. I've made Mr. Tilford promise to run, to be sure of getting on honest man in office. You won't have a chance to use him as you did your friend! And I've sent for armed guards to travel with my ore wagons! You and your friend Garcia, if you make up after tonight's disagreement, won't have the same opportunity to rob me again! And I'm going to see that you are hunted down and sent to prison for the crimes you have committed!"

Sonny, mounted on Gunpowder once more, looked down at her and grinned. "If you knew, ma'am," he drawled, "how daw-goned pretty you look when you're mad, you'd sure cultivate a irascible disposition."

She stamped her foot. "You understand," she panted angrily, "I thank you for helping me tonight, and I'm going to see you put in jail!"

"Yes, ma'am," drawled Sonny. "And you're right welcome, ma'am, an' I'm goin' down to the mine an' steal the new payroll that you had come in yesterday to make up for the one I took. Good night, ma'am, an' pleasant dreams."

He wheeled Gunpowder about and started at a breakneck gallop for the mine. Day was just breaking, but there was already a light in the mine offices, which he had seen as he rode in with Janet. And inside of two minutes he was grinning joyously at Tilford as that worthy backed away from the mine safe before the menace of a gun in Sonny Holman's hands.

Two of Tilford's guards arrived the next day. They rode into town with alkali dust thick upon them and stopped at the Roaring Zephyr, Moleville's largest and most prominent saloon, to ask for directions.

"The mine's down thataway all right across," the bartender assured them. "Name yuh poison."

They drank, refilled their glasses and drank again. Then they turned with a clattering of spurs to go out of the place.

"Uh, gents," said the bartender, "yuh forgot somethin'."

He tapped the cash register in a manner politely suggestive. The two men paused. One was a scar-faced, sullen man who had not spoken. The other was short and very fair, with sun bleached hair and faded blue eyes of a blank expressionlessness. The faded eyes fixed themselves upon the bartender—who remembered something suddenly. He knew the falsity of the tradition that killers are men of piercing dark eyes and menacing frowns.

"What'd we forgit?" asked the man with the faded blue eyes. His voice was mild and curiously without intonation. There was no trace of expression in it.

"Why, uh, yuh didn't pay for yuh drinks," said the bartender very politely indeed. He was remembering suddenly where he had seen this man before and hoping fervently that the man would not remember.

For Baby's Bath

More than that of any other member of the family, baby's tender, delicate skin needs the greatest care and attention. The soft soothing oils in Baby's Own Soap make it specially suitable for babies, and its clinging fragrance reminds one of the roses of France which help to inspire it.

"It's best for you and Baby too"

Only one oil is good enough for household equipment, says chemist

Chemists, mechanics and lubrication experts say only one kind of oil is good enough for your expensive mechanical devices—the best. To get best results from your sewing machine, vacuum cleaner, lawn mower, washer, electric fan, refrigerator and other household appliances, you should use an oil that not only lubricates, but also cleans and protects.

3-in-One Oil is different from all others, because it is a scientific blend of animal, mineral and vegetable oils. It gives you the best properties of each. It dissolves and works out dirt, protects against rust and wear and gives the most efficient lubrication, thus eliminating unnecessary repairs and replacements.

Naturally such oil costs more to make, but it really costs less to use. Play safe; insist on 3-in-One Oil. At good stores everywhere. For your protection, look for the trade mark "3-in-One" printed in Red on every package.

"Well, madam," said the Easter boarder, as he was about to leave, "I can testify that you are one of the most honest persons I have ever met."

The landlady rubbed her hands happily.

"That is very nice of you," she said. "I always try to please."

"Yes," he went on, "your honesty is conspicuous on the very front of your house. Your sign says: 'Boarders taken in'."

Reminiscences

Gertrude Atherton tells an amusing story about her first meeting with Joaquin Miller, the Poet of the Sierras—who used to dress the part.

"It helps sell the poems, boys!' he once confided to friends at the Savage Club, in London, where he created a sensation by his picturesque appearance, "and,' he added, "it tickles the duchesses."

This in reference to the hit he had made in London drawing-rooms.

• • •

To get on with Mrs. Atherton's experience—related in her reminiscences "Adventures of a Novelist." One day, Miller called on her in San Francisco.

"He wore a black broadcloth suit, the trousers tucked into boots—with high heels!—that reached almost to the waist," she recalls. "His shirt had no collar but his neck was encircled by a lace scarf. On his head was a sombrero, which he removed with a sweeping bow as I entered, and I saw that his long hair, touching his shoulders, was gray on top, and ended in a series of stiff 'rat tails' that were dyed a bright orange."

• • •

The poet, still in an attitude, said not a word but gazed at Mrs. Atherton. She told him how glad she was to meet him. Still he uttered not a word. She rattled on, growing disconcerted by his persistent silence and his "round unwinking stare." Finally, she said tartly:

"Have you lost your voice? Suppose you say something for a change."

"He fetched a sigh that might have come from the soles of his boots," chuckles Mrs. Atherton, "and then his voice rumbled forth heavy laden with tragedy.

"'What a pity!' he groaned. 'What a pity we are both blondes!'"

Five minutes later he shot out without a word of farewell.

Joaquin Miller was not the only literary lion reduced to silence on meeting Gertrude Atherton. Later, at a reception in London, she met Thomas Hardy.

"He sat down beside me, dropped his hands on his knees, and stared into space . . . I floundered about, broaching one subject after another, but he never even glanced at me, much less made any response to my embarrassed efforts. He appeared to have fallen into a reverie, quite oblivious to his surroundings.

• • •

"Then, heaven knows how, I lighted upon cable cars in San Francisco. Abstraction fled. His face lit up. He turned to me eagerly. He asked me a hundred questions. In answered them as best I could, for it may be imagined how much I know of engineering and mechanics."

But the day was saved. A fortnight later when Mrs. Atherton again met Hardy at another reception, he no sooner caught sight of her than he was at her side, and plunged at once into "the exciting subject of cable cars in San Francisco.

• • •

"He did not get my name nor I his and we sat beside each other and were obliged to talk: we floundered about for some time trying to find a theme of common interest. Finally, how, heaven knows, we hit upon the subject of plumbing in Paris! Then he grew quite animated!"

• • •

Just after the Armistice, Mrs. Atherton ran into Lord Northcliffe, an old friend, in Paris, and during a talk with him,—"I had christened him Warwick, as he certainly had a great deal to do with the making and unmaking of Prime Ministers,"—she asked him if he "were having any trouble with Lloyd George."

"Oh," he replied gravely, "I have to keep my hand on him. He wobbles! He wobbles!"

By the way, Mrs. Atherton describes Northcliffe as "altogether one of the most charming men I have ever met," and says that he was "the most popular of all Britons in the United States."

• • •

Mary, wife of John A. Logan, Republican nominee for the Vice-Presidency of the United States in 1884, was a beautiful woman with great poise, and by rights a "raven's-wing brunette," but she went through some sudden, severe shock connected with the death of her father. When she returned home her husband met her at the train—relates Mrs. Julia B. Foraker, in "I Would Like It Again: Memoirs of a Vivid Life."

"Goodness, Mary!" he gasped. "What has happened?"

• • •

She didn't know what he meant and he was too petrified to explain. Arrived home, the door was opened by an old servant. At the sight of Mrs. Logan she threw up her hands, gave an Irish shriek, and fled. Beginning now to be a little irritated, Mrs. Logan sought a mirror. There it was, her hair had turned white in a single mysterious moment—just the way the thing happened in novels.

"Like it, John?" she said, carelessly, to Logan, who had followed to catch her when she fainted.

Yet indeed (adds Mrs. Foraker), she must have been startled when she saw herself in the glass.

• • •

As a girl of twenty, Mrs. Foraker heard Dickens give one of his readings during his last visit here in 1868—sixty-four years ago!

"I cannot think anyone ever heard a person read with such inimitable realism and charm as this 'foreigner' (they called him that) in a black velveteen jacket," she says. "I remember the jacket and the charm, though of what the author read only the unforgettable death of Little Nell, which provoked sobs."

• • •

Mrs. Foraker—widow of the late Senator Foraker of Ohio—has, at the age of eighty-four, written as lively a book of signed reminiscences as has come out of Washington in many a day. One of her stories has Chauncey Depew, at a dinner, describing an evening spent with King Edward VII., to whom he told the story of the spinster taking her first ride on a railroad train. There was a collision; the dear, old thing found herself sitting in splinters. She straightened her "bunnit," looked 'round for her reticule, then asked innocently if the train always stopped like that?

• • •

Depew happened to mention to King Edward that Mark Twain was stopping at his hotel. Thereupon the King asked Depew to come back for dinner next night and bring Mark with him.

"And what do you think that man Clemens started off with" said Depew. "My story! My identical story of the old lady in a railroad wreck! Said he was there, too! And of course I had said I was there! How the King laughed!"

Among the treasures of Bob Sherwood, the "last of Barnum's clowns," is an autographed photograph of Eng and Chang, the "original Siamese Twins," who, with Bab, were star attractions of the Barnum Show for years.

"On the back of it," says Sherwood (in "Hold Yer Hosses!") "Eng wrote, expressing his congratulations to me that I could live my life alone. Below Chang wrote: 'Them's my sentiments too'."

• • •

Bob Sherwood declares that the most interesting lady freak he ever knew (and he knew them all) was Miss Fannie Mills, "who possessed the biggest feet on earth." She was a petite blonde, with perfect features and weighed but one hundred and fifteen pounds. Instead of her face, her feet were her fortune. She wore a number thirty shoe. Three goat-skins were required to make her one pair of shoes, the same quantity usually required to make eight pairs of ladies' shoes. Their length was nineteen inches, width seven and a half inches, the circumference around the instep nineteen and a half inches.

• • •

But the freak story I like best is one Bob Sherwood tells about Captain Costentenus, "the tattooed Greek Prince."

"He was a freak in appearance," Bab yarns, "but not by nature. As his eyes were weak, I often read the Bible to him. This he seemed to enjoy greatly, although his knowledge of the Holy Writ was limited.

• • •

"One day, I was reading to him the story of Noah beginning with: 'And lo, when Noah was an hundred and twenty years old, he took unto himself a wife, who was (here I turned over two leaves which were stuck together) three hundred cubits long, fifty cubits broad, and thirty cubits high—and she was pitched within and pitched without'—a description of the ark. The old captain looked at me with blinking eyes and said:

"'Bob, women of the old time were certainly wonderfully and fearfully made'."

Rovers

Lonies all over the Province will be interested to hear of a very unique ceremony which was enacted on Saturday, May 14th, at Ebor Park, Ontario (where our Lone Scout Camp is to be held this year).

Three years ago, on May 24th, 1929, half a dozen boys who lived at Paris, Ont., were in camp at Ebor Park over the holiday week end. They were the "Wolf Patrol" of the old 1st Ontario Lone Scout Troop, and Melvin Prine was their Patrol Leader and Clifton Cassidy was his "Second."

With these Lonies at their camp was Capt. John Furminger, the present Assistant Provincial Commissioner for Lone Scouts, and Mr. Frank Irwin, the Commissioner at Provincial Headquarters, Toronto.

This was the first occasion on which a Lone Scout Camp had been held in Ontario, and the boys had a wonderful time with their Scoutmaster, Capt. Furminger.

On Saturday, May 1th, 1932, three years later, some of these boys again met at Ebor Park, this time to inaugurate their Rover Crew, and Clifton Cassidy was invested as Rover Mate, by the Assistant Provincial Commissioner for Rovers, Mr. Lionel Bishop, who was assisted by Captain Furminger.

Clifton chose Melvin Prine (his old Lone Scout Patrol Leader), as his Rover Second, and thus through all these years the link between these two lads remains unbroken.

Assistant Provincial Commissioner Frank Irwin was also present at this ceremony, and we know that all the Lonies will congratulate the Paris Rover Crew on having successfully passed through all the steps of Scouting, from Lone Scouts to the 1st Paris Troop (which they organized) and now to Rover Scouts.

We sincerely hope that many other boys who are now working as Lonies will, in the years to come, pass into the ranks of the Rover Scouts, and thus keep up their interest in Scouting after they have "grown up."

Disarmament in Fiji

Once mention of the Fiji Islands called up pictures of fuzzy-haired cannibals and poisoned-arrow blowpipes. Now one hears there are 933 Fijian Boy Scouts. Doubtless the blow-pipes have been turned into harmless pea-shooters, and it is no longer considered a good turn to eat your grandmother.

Ontario Scouts Plant 100,000 Trees

100,000 young trees were planted by Scouts last year in the "Boy Scout Forest" started several years ago in waste land near Angus, Ont., under the auspices of the Ontario Forestry Branch.

Many hundreds of posters announcing the offer of the Ontario Forestry Branch to provide farmers with trees for planting have been posted this spring by Ontario Boy Scouts.

Our Weekly Scout Law—No. 9—

"A Scout Is Thrifty."

What does this mean? Does it mean that a Scout should be a miser and hoard up money? Not at all!

It means that a Scout is wise, and does not waste things, but makes the very best use of them that he possibly can. And this includes a large variety of items which maybe you have not even though of.

Of course he does not waste money. He appreciates the fact that it is very hard to obtain, and to make money one must work hard. So what sense is there in wasting your hard work? A good Scout has a savings account in the bank, and tries to make it grow, and gets into the habit of putting aside a reserve which he may well fall back upon in case of need, or use to good advantage as good opportunities arise.

But money is not the only thing on which he practices thrift. A good Scout will not waste food. Nor will he willfully destroy his clothing, but take care of it, and make it last as long as possible.

Then, too, he will not waste his opportunities. He has chances to improve his education, his strength and his character, and these should be very carefully conserved, as they are his best assets in his future manhood. So he goes to school regularly and learns all he can. He exercises his body regularly and does not abuse it. He supports his church and Sunday school and their varied activities, and by his thrift in these directions builds himself up to strong and useful manhood.

Yes, Sir! A Scout is Thrifty!

Camp

Are you planning to be at our Lone Scout Camp in July? Maybe you have not passed your Tenderfoot Test, or perhaps you have no Scout Uniform. Who cares? You will be just as welcome without a uniform as with one, and we will help you to pass your Tenderfoot Test, and your Second-Class as well! So come along and have a good time with us. Remember the dates—July 4th to 16th inclusive.

Particulars of how to become a Lone Scout may be obtained from The Boy Scouts Association, Lone Scout Dept., 330 Bay Street, Toronto.—"Lone E."

British Radio Fans "Fed Up" With Crooning

A widespread rebellion is brewing against the crooning tenor on the wireless in England.

One cannot hear it now, says Robert Lynd in The News Chronicle (London) "without wishing to take up one's wireless set and throw it at the singer's head." Mr. Lynd reports:

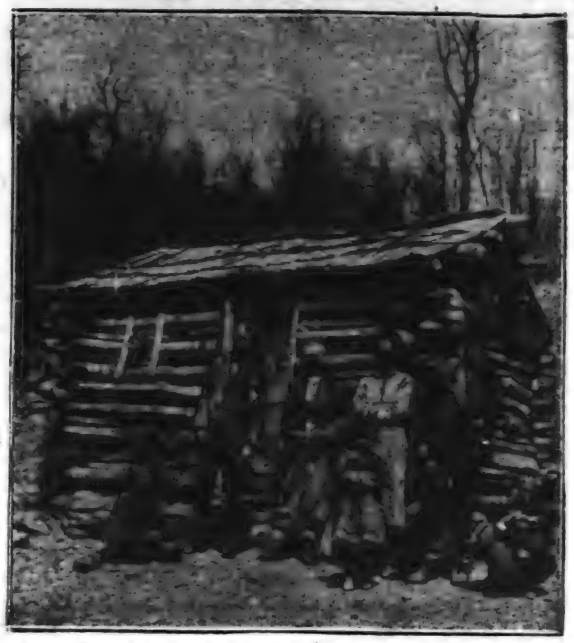
"They have so got on the nerves of the public that, at the first sound of a crooning voice on the wireless, many a listener switches the thing off and in desperation goes over to Holland to listen to a talk on the diseases of sheep, of which he does not understand a word.

"And, indeed, to listen to this crooning is like listening to the complaints of a sick animal. Possibly the singers themselves dislike the vocal affectation now in vogue, and feel rather like sick animals. And who could endure such muted caterwauling for long?

"I sometimes think that, if ogling made a noise, this would be the kind of noise it would make; and, in music as in life, a little ogling goes a long way.

"If only they would cease trying to yearn, I fancy the music would be quite enjoyable. An imitation yearn, however, is one of the most intolerable sounds within the whole range of music. Let the singers practise at 'Hearts of Oak' for a time and acquire a touch of liveliness. This will help to cheer them up, and it will cheer everybody else up, too.

"I have sometimes wondered whether it would not be better for singers of love-songs to try to keep expression altogether out of their singing. There is no more need for vocal and facial agonies in singing about love than in singing about hunting. Love is, after all, not such a ghastly business as some of these far-off singers seem to imagine.



"Men have been known to be cheerful, and even rational, in the presence of the beloved.

"A singer, however, can scarcely mention the moon or June to a pretty woman without suggesting that the combined effect of the moon and June and love has been to turn him into a complete idiot.

"I am sure, if the singers in the dance bands would sing their choruses naturally, and without what seems to them to be expression, the revolt against them would quickly subside, and they would become as popular as ever they have been."

A professor was in the habit of letting his dog sit by his side at meals. One evening when he was dining out, a lady next him, wishing to attract his attention, gently touched his sleeve. To the consternation of all present, he mechanically transferred a bone from his plate and said, "Oh, get away. Take this out on the mat and eat it!"—Victoria Colonist.

Sunday School Lesson

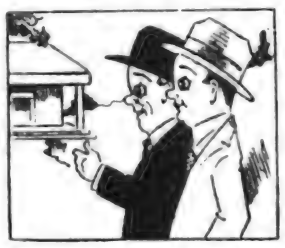
May 29. Lesson IX—Joseph the Dreamer—Genesis 37: 1-11. Golden Text—Provide things honest in the sight of all men.—Romans 12: 17.

ANALYSIS.

I. JOSEPH THE TRUTH-TELLER, vs. 1, 2.
II. JOSEPH, THE ENVIED, vs. 3, 4.
III. JOSEPH, THE DREAMER, vs. 5-11.

INTRODUCTION—The story of Joseph was one of the most priceless heritages of the Hebrew people. The account of his romantic career should be read through as a whole at one sitting. It tells of a younger member of a family, kept down at first by the envy of his brothers, and forced to face many vicissitudes and difficulties, but triumphing over them at last by dint of a faithful spirit, and brought, in the providence of God, through a surprising chain of circumstances, to a position of great elevation and responsibility. "The ruling idea," says Skinner, "is expressed in the words, 'Ye intended evil against me, but God intended it for good.' (50: 20); it is the sense of an overruling, yet imminent, divine Providence, realizing its purpose through the complex interaction of human motives, working out a result which no single actor contemplated." The story of Joseph is thus a study, on the one hand of the nature of God's providence in human affairs, and, on the other hand, of a truly regal character.

I. JOSEPH THE TRUTH-TELLER, vs. 1, 2.



Like David, Joseph spent his early years as a shepherd. While he was shepherding with his brothers, Dan and Naphtali, Gad and Asher, he saw such evil in their conduct that he was shocked. No mention is made of the precise nature of their evil conduct, but it may have been neglect of their duties as shepherds, or the secret sale of the flocks and herds entrusted to them. What was Joseph to do? His brothers may have threatened that if he did not hold his tongue they would make him suffer for it. If his heart was pure and his conscience sensitive, however, he could not keep silent. Without fear of the consequences, he brought a report of his brothers' conduct to his father. In doing so was he merely a malicious tale-bearer? No, he simply proved himself no coward, but one who set value upon truth above all else. None the less his fidelity to truth won for him the hatred of his brothers.

II. JOSEPH, THE ENVIED, vs. 3, 4.

In yet another way Joseph became the object of his brothers' hatred. Their hatred assumed the form of envy, for hatred and envy are closely akin. Joseph was Jacob's favorite son, the son of Rachel, Jacob's favorite wife, and born in Jacob's old age. To us it may seem strange that Jacob should have singled out one son from the twelve and shown him more love than the others. But the Hebrew was a man of strong feelings; he lived very largely in his emotions; and he did little to hide them. As a token of his great love, the father gave Joseph a costly garment. The garment in itself was of little consequence but in the brothers' eyes it assumed an immense significance. As a token of favoritism, they probably regarded it as a mark of their father's injustice.

III. JOSEPH, THE DREAMER, vs. 5-11.

There was a third reason for the hateful envy of the brothers. Joseph dreamed dreams which were regarded as a mark of vaulting ambition. To the ancients dreams were of immense significance. They come unsought and without human initiative. There is something eerie and mysterious about them, as though they float in upon us from another world. The distinctive feature about the Bible view of dreams is that they were related directly to God. Hebrew dream-life, like all other phases of their life, was placed deliberately under the influence of their religion. Joseph remarks (40: 8) that the interpretations of dreams "belong to God." On the whole, dreams were regarded as prophetic—a forecasting of coming events. Some bore their meaning on the surface, while others required to be interpreted. Joseph's dreams belong to the former class. The first dream seems to suggest that the family were agriculturists. It was intended, perhaps, to forecast the time when the brothers, on account of famine, would go to Egypt to buy corn, and would be forced to bow before the prime minister of Egypt—their own brother, Joseph. The second dream was still more unusual. The great heavenly bodies seemed to pause on their way and look down with smiling favor on the poor Hebrew lad. This dream might be taken as a prophecy of the high position that he would hold in the future. The dreams were of such a singular nature that Joseph could scarcely be blamed for not keeping them to himself. His brothers, on hearing them, were all the more bitter in their envy. Soon they took active steps to frustrate the fulfilment of the dreams; but the dreams came true none the less! Even the father rebuked Joseph for seeming arrogance, although secretly he seems to have had a presentiment that they were a foreshadowing of brilliant things to come. What effect had the dreams on Joseph himself? We may be sure that they were an inspiration to work and hope—and wait.

International Finance

By Gates W. McGarrah,
President, Bank for International Settlement

The tidal wave of uncertainty and fear, which endangered several national currencies and some banking institutions, originated in Austria, swept quickly through Hungary and Germany, and after devastating these areas flowed onward to Britain and the Scandinavian countries, backwashing into the United States, and carried unusual demands on the American gold supply and credit system.

No such widespread effects, which extended soon to Japan also, could have occurred except for the already existing essential unity in international finance which ignores political and geographical frontiers. This interdependence is not confined to the field of finance, but penetrates much further into the whole economic structure of various countries. The indices of production, employment, trade and profits show to an astounding degree the recurrent tendencies in every country of the world.

All the evidence available leads to the conclusion that any hope that a single country may achieve prosperity part from the rest of the world indeed be based on an insecure foundation.

Highway Sign Stones In France "Cleaned Up"

Paris.—Every hundred meters of national or departmental road in France is marked by a small stone, and every thousand meters by a larger stone. The distance to, and the name of, the next large town is always printed on the larger stones. Most of these had become old and weather-beaten and the directions painted on them were often very hard to distinguish, either because the plant had faded or because the grass had grown taller than the stone itself. Recently, however, new stones have been put into place; small three-cornered ones for the hundred-meter marks and larger square ones for the kilometers. On national roads these stones are fitted with a cap of red paint, whereas on departmental roads these caps are yellow. This makes them plainly visible from a distance, and in addition small stones are tightly wedged together round them to prevent the grass from growing too close.

Aerial Photography

Notable progress has been made in Canada in the employment of oblique and vertical aerial photographs for mapping some of the little known parts of the Dominion. The Topographical Survey Branch of the Department of the Interior is the central clearing house for aerial photography in Canada, over 560,000 photographs being on file in that Branch to date.

Naturally

A fair motorist whose car had swerved across the wide village street and crashed into a plate-glass shop-window was being questioned by the traffic policeman.

"Surely, madam," said the constable, "on such a wide road as this you could have done something to prevent the accident?"

"But I did do something," she assured him.

"I was watching, but I didn't see you do anything," he insisted.

"Oh, but, officer, surely you heard me. I screamed as loud as I could," she replied.

Found

It was the occasion of the Sunday-school's Easter holiday outing.

After tea, while the young curate in charge was arranging the sports, a young choir-boy came rushing up to him.

"Please, sir," he said breathlessly, "teacher says will you come at once—"

"What has happened?" interrupted the curate. "Why does she want me?"

"She's a mug short, sir," exclaimed the boy.

The distance to, and the name of, the next large town is always printed on the larger stones. Most of these had become old and weather-beaten and the directions painted on them were often very hard to distinguish, either because the plant had faded or because the grass had grown taller than the stone itself. Recently, however, new stones have been put into place; small three-cornered ones for the hundred-meter marks and larger square ones for the kilometers. On national roads these stones are fitted with a cap of red paint, whereas on departmental roads these caps are yellow. This makes them plainly visible from a distance, and in addition small stones are tightly wedged together round them to prevent the grass from growing too close.

Aerial Photography

Notable progress has been made in Canada in the employment of oblique and vertical aerial photographs for mapping some of the little known parts of the Dominion. The Topographical Survey Branch of the Department of the Interior is the central clearing house for aerial photography in Canada, over 560,000 photographs being on file in that Branch to date.

Naturally

A fair motorist whose car had swerved across the wide village street and crashed into a plate-glass shop-window was being questioned by the traffic policeman.

"Surely, madam," said the constable, "on such a wide road as this you could have done something to prevent the accident?"

"But I did do something," she assured him.

"I was watching, but I didn't see you do anything," he insisted.

"Oh, but, officer, surely you heard me. I screamed as loud as I could," she replied.

Found

It was the occasion of the Sunday-school's Easter holiday outing.

After tea, while the young curate in charge was arranging the sports, a young choir-boy came rushing up to him.

"Please, sir," he said breathlessly, "teacher says will you come at once—"

"What has happened?" interrupted the curate. "Why does she want me?"

"She's a mug short, sir," exclaimed the boy.

So They Say

Presumably no one feels inclined to marry on a cold and frosty morning.—W. Somerset Maugham.

The only way of catching a train I have ever discovered is to miss the train before.—K. K. Chesterton.

No man feels upon quite friendly terms with his fellow-beings when conscious that he needs a shave.—James Branch Cabell.

You can't have two stars in a home. —Ina Claire.

If any man or woman corrects your pronunciation of a word in a public place you have every right to punch him in the nose. No jury in the world will hold you guilty.—Heywood Broun.

I believe that the typewriter is a curse of modern writing. It makes it too easy and the writing is solidified in type and is hard to change when it might still be kept plastic and worked over and brought nearer to what it should be before it is cast in type.—Ernest Hemingway.

"Age—this talk of age! All ages have been good for me, and I see no reason why I should not continue to feel this way. Age depends entirely on how a woman accepts it. I have found something amusing and vital at all times in my life." — Geraldine Farrar.

"Our college students as a whole appear more mature than a generation ago, not only in scholarship but also in their outside interests and in their sense of proportionate values, which is the flower of maturity."—A Lawrence Lowell.

"To think of college graduates as men who have been through four years of intensive intellectual training is laughable."—Richard M. Bissell, Jr.

Economic conditions in our profession never have been better."—Denis O'Brien.

"It is a mistake to deride all stupidities in general. Many of them are simply the price that men pay for the possession and use of rare abilities and the high specializing which is the outstanding achievement of our age." —Walter B. Pitkin.

"I never talk about my contemporaries. . . . I used to say severe things, but the reason that I was a severe critic was I was under the delusion that if people were warned in sufficiently cutting terms they would write better. Now I know that was a delusion. Everybody writes as well as he can."—George Moore.

"The mother who has acquired a taste for child psychology is continually having to run from her child to her text-book and back again, to solve problems of which more instinctive mothers were not even aware. The infant drops his toy, and howls to have it picked up. If it is picked up, he acquires a power-complex: if it is left lying on the floor, he acquires a rage-complex. . . . The mother turns the pages frantically . . . by the time she has found it, the child is thinking of something else."—Bertrand Russell.

"The bright ones will get along without a college education. It is the slow ones who need college."—Ruth Nichols, aviatrix.

"My father whipped me frequently. He did it in rhythm and that's how I learned to whip rhythmically with the horse's stride. — Senor Guerra, great Mexican jockey.

"American men do not care about money. They care for work for work's sake."—Randolph Churchill.

"Reality is the most alluring of all courtesans, for she makes herself what you would have her at the moment. But she is no rock on which to anchor your soul, for . . . she has no existence outside your own dreams and is often no more than the reflection of your own thoughts shining upon the face of nature."—Dr. William Francis Gray Swan.

How It Closed

They were preparing their car for an tour through the countryside.

"By the way," said hubby in a hushed whisper, "I heard Smith and his wife quarrelling over what kind of car they should get. He wanted an open car and she wanted a saloon."

"Yes," returned his wife; "but the incident is closed now."

"Yes, and so is the car," replied hubby. "I saw her go out in it this morning."

A LITERARY MARVEL

British Novelist and Editor Produces Tremendous Volume of Writings.

That he writes one million words per year, has written one hundred and thirty novels and many plays and finds time between whiles to edit a Sunday newspaper with a million circulation was part of the confession which Edgar Wallace made on the witness stand in London. He has offered $25,000 to anyone who can prove he has ever employed a "ghost" to write his works, and now he offers a like sum to any one who can prove all his plots and ideas don't originate in his own mass production brain.

All this formed part of the evidence in a libel suit which Wallace brought against one Lewis Charles Gloddam who declared Wallace cribbed a plot and dialogue from his novel "The Lucky Fool," and made of it a successful play, "The Calendar."

Goldfam sent a letter to the newspapers and theatrical people declaring that Wallace was a "mean cribber" and one who had cribbed all he required from the "Lucky Fool" to make up "The Calendar". Wallace in his evidence, said actually he wrote "The Calendar" in four days at the request of Sir Gerald Dumaurier two years before Goldfam's novel was published. Part of it he scribbled on the back of telegraph forms in Berlin and produced manuscript to prove it.

FLEECED OF SAVINGS

Confidence Game Worked on Toronto Shoemaker.

Nicholas Kowalski, a Toronto shoemaker, fell victim to a time-worn "con game" worked from coast to coast. Two men walked into his store. Both were well dressed, and pretended to be strangers. One of the men inquired for a Dr. Bull. He said his father had robbed the doctor of $10,000, went west, and through good luck in investments, made $100,000. Upon his death, he asked that the doctor be located and paid back the money. In the event of his not being found, the money was to be distributed in Toronto to charity.

The flimflam trick was for each of the men to make deposits of $250 as a bond of good faith that they would help dispose of $10,000 for a reasonable cash consideration. Kowalski sought time to go to the bank and draw his money. A meeting was arranged and Kowalski handed over his $250. He was then asked to go on an errand. When he returned the two strangers were gone, and so were Kowalski's savings.

THE BOON OF HEALTH

About Half the Sickness Is Preventable, Doctor Believes.

The value of health is realized to some degree, at least, by every thinking individual. But not everybody has imagination enough to appreciate the tremendous monetary loss to the nation caused by sickness and deaths from disease. The loss to the nation represented by the deaths from preventable diseases yearly is estimated by Dr. Gordon Bates at more than a billion dollars and the loss due to sickness, of which 45 to 60 per cent. is preventable, at $300,000,000. The upkeep of our hospitals, sanitoria and asylums costs $50,000,000 yearly and the buildings and equipment involved an investment of $200,000,000.

During the four years of the great war the names of 160,000 Canadian soldiers appeared on the list of wounded, the number including some men several times. Yet on any given day across the Dominion no less than 180,000 Canadian citizens are temporarily disabled because of sickness. —From the Toronto Star.

NORMANS IN CANADA.

French and English In Dominion Have Common Origin.

Four-fifths of French-Canadians are of Norman blood, being descendants of the very Normans who in 1066 conquered Britain. Dr. Emile Vaillancourt, of the University of Caen, France, submitted this argument in a lecture at Montreal. He explained that originally there were 1,350 individuals from Normandy who took part in the conquest of Canada following the discovery by Jacques Cartier. Of this number 1,150 were men and the remainder women. They had 501 descendants in the following generation, and according to Dr. Vaillancourt, who is a noted historian, the progeny of these families form the majority of French-Canadians, or Canadiens, today. Thus, it may be said that the French and English in Canada have a common origin.

PROVING OWNERSHIP.

Rooster Joins In Chorus to Convince Judge.

When a rooster under his very ears harmonized the chorus of "Old Black Joe" as Reese Dupre crooned the words, Recorder Peter F. Dodd of Detroit decided that the bird belonged to the crooner. Dupre, a negro concert singer, had gone to court to claim ownership of four fowls which, he said, had been stolen from his yard.

When the Recorder asked Dupre to prove his claim the singer bent low toward the rooster, while the three other birds, each a hen, watched attentively, and started to sing "Old Black Joe." Without any prompting the rooster blended its voice with Dupre's. Recorder Dodd gave him the four birds without asking for an encore.

Vagaries of a Flood.

When the River Usk overflowed its banks recently an attendant at the mental hospital at Abergavenny, England, caught a live trout in his room, and children picked up a large number of fish in fields after the water subsided.

Counting time is not nearly as important as making time count.—James J. Walker.

Motorcycle Meet a Big Success

About a thousand people gathered at Peel Park, Streetsville, on the 24th of May to witness the British Empire Motor Club's first annual meet. It was quite unique that they should come here that day because that was the official opening day of this splendid new Park—or Summer Resort. No prettier place could be found in all Ontario. The weather was perfect, and as one entered the Park through the main gateway and beheld the panorama before him he was enthused with the wonders of nature. The beautiful green sward glistened in the golden sunlight, a perfect race track with swift motors speeding around it, comfortable seats and tables for visitors conveniently situated in the shade of fine old elms spreading their branches out over the River Credit with its gentle flowing stream of cooling waters, beckoning to the youth and beauty of the countryside to come in and refresh themselves—with many splendid automobiles parked in the distance—all went to make one feel that this was the Park of all parks. Those who had seen it for the first time were enraptured with the scenery, and promised to come back again.

Mr. Dawson is to be congratulated on the improvements he has made in the grounds, and to show that he is truly British, he has planted a flag pole at the entrance from which a Union Jack is flown.

The motorcycle races were very interesting and lasted all afternoon. The winners were from Toronto, Oshawa, Belleville, and other places and other contestants came from as far away as Windsor and Montreal.

The proprietor has erected a refreshment booth inside the ring and is quite satisfied with his first day's receipts.

Gains Seventeen Pounds

Anyone seeing Mary would find it hard to believe that this smiling young woman was a consumptive. Indeed, for Mary this word "was" is the best part of the whole story, for she fully believes that she is just about cured and ready to go back to work. "Why, in just three months they put nearly seventeen pounds weight on me," says she, with a hint of Irish brogue, "and me that weak when I came in that I had to be carried on a stretcher."

Mary has been in the Toronto Hospital for Consumptives for several months, but such is the skill of the doctors, such the result of good food, rest and careful nursing, that she again meets the world with a smile, and counts the days to the time when she will be able to work once more and help in her mother's support.

A great work this, that cares for many hundreds of the consumptive poor who otherwise would have to accept the hardships and uncertainties of being tended at home. Will you please help such as Mary to get well? Your subscription will be gratefully acknowledged if sent to Mr. A. E. Ames, 223 College Street, Toronto.

Canada, The Empire and The World at Large

CANADA

Quid Pro Quo

Has it struck Canadians yet that, though Britain has a 20 per cent. tariff against the rest of the world, her markets to Canada, Australia and the remainder of the Dominions and Colonies of the British Empire are free? Canada maintains a high tariff against the Motherland. Britain gives free trade markets to us.—Lethbridge Herald (Lib.)

Canadian Tobacco

A. I. Phillips, chairman of one of the leading tobacco firms in Great Britain, said during the course of his address at the annual meeting of his company: "Canadian tobacco in the opinion of myself and my associates is equal to the finest raw leaf tobacco in the world. It has all the pleasing characteristics of United States Virginia tobacco." This new channel of Canadian export is clearly marked for great future development.—The Brantford Expositor.

Farmers' Co-operation

Co-operative farm movements are the salvation of the soil producer. Farmers must never forget that organization will beat disorganization every time. Unorganized, the farmer, whether he is farming fruit or wheat or poultry or animal husbandry, is a prey for every middle man, for every financial and political group that can get a toe-hold on his work and products.—Vancouver Sun.

King George

Twenty-two years ago May 16th King George ascended the throne of England. Tis reign has witnessed the most terrible of all wars, the worst of all depressions, a complete unheaval of organized forces, and more national crises than the previous hundred years together held. Throughout these twenty-two years of grave responsibility he has won for himself a place in the hearts of his own people and in the high esteem of the civilized world second to none. He has set a splendid example of a constitutional monarch labouring unceasingly for the welfare of his people, discharging his onerous duties with tact and skill, and exercising his influence ever on the side of peace, progress, prosperity and international goodwill. That he may be spared for many years yet to continue his invaluable services to Britain and the Empire was the sincere prayer of all his loyal subjects.—Montreal Star.

French Canada

The American tourist, who travels through our villages, hardly finds any difference between the country which he has left and the one which he had hoped find was new and picturesque and had something of France about it. More than this, the people who offer you a "chicken dinner" are doing all they can to adopt the universal and banal forms of international catering. It is quite conceivable that the tourist who has be · attracted by the publicity given out about "French Quebec" may feel he has been deceived by a hotel like every other one he has seen on the roads of New York and of New England.—La Patrie, Montreal.

Much-Quoted Papers

With justifiable pride, the Stratford Beacon-Herald points out that it stood eighth in a list of 104 Canadian newspapers "most frequently quoted" during the three months ending with March last. It is a tribute to the daily papers in smaller centres not only that the Beacon-Herald was right on the heels of a large city paper and only one removed from the fourth Toronto paper, but that such journals as the Brantford Expositor, Woodstock Sentinel-Review, St. Thomas Times-Journal, Brockville Recorder and Times, Kitchener Record, —St. Catharines Standard, Kingston Whig-Standard, Sault Ste. Marie Star, Chatham News, Guelph Mercury, Pet ·oro Examiner, Sudbury Star, Owen Sound Times, Oshawa Daily Times and North Bay Nugget were in the first half of the list.

It is charged frequently that the larger the newspaper the more pointless its editorials. While this cannot be said to apply as a rule to Canadian papers—this rule alway carrying its exception—it is a fact that those in secondary cities, and especially in this Province, have become notable for constructive contribution to thought on public affair. The compilations of the Dominion Press Clipping Agency show how valuable this thought is considered by contemporaries which add to their service by passing it along.—Toronto Globe.

Pay As You Go

The argument is always made that as posterity will get the benefit of improvements, posterity should help to pay for them. This is done by issuing long-term debentures. Would it not have been the part of wisdom to pay cash for everything in the city as it was built? Posterity have their own things to buy for the benefit of the community. A father would never go and deliberately leave his son a legacy of debt. Why should a city do any different? And, as a parting thought, if past councils had paid cash for their purchases, they would have been much more careful in making expenditures. —Kitchener Record.

THE EMPIRE

The Future of the Empire

The Empire has recently emerged from a great war, shaken, but intact. Profound changes have been brought about in our social and industrial fabric, and some faint hearts fear the future. Yet the Empire possesses wide spaces which may support many millions of our people, while our agricultural and mineral resources are unmatched. Given a bold plan of constructive organization of Empire resources, the future has dazzling possibilities.—Wolverhampton Express.

Every Man His Own Garden

Allotment growers in this country are producing at least $10,000,000 worth of vegetables every year. This is the estimate given by the National Allotments Society. Their figures show that every ten-rod plot grows on the average between £7 and £10 worth of vegetables, which works out at between £112 and £150 per acre. Much of this is produced on land which formerly lay fallow or derelict. In England and Wales there are to-day over a million allotments, and allowing for large numbers in Scotand and Ireland, the £10,000,000 estimate is believed to be on the conservative side.—London Evening Standard.

Optimism in Britain

Most favorable feature of the year's revenue figures is the increased yield from customs, partly due to the new tariff duties, though most of them have been in force for only a month. A new budget year opens in an atmosphere of confidence and restrained optimism. It will not be an easy year; but the back of our financial problem has been broken. Those who, in many cases at great sacrifice, have paid their taxes promptly, and those who have cheerfully submitted to "cuts," may justly claim an important share of the credit due to a splendid achievement.—London Sunday Dispatch.

Canada's Example

The representatives of the Free State cannot but gain in knowledge from contact with men who have helped to build up the Dominion countries. If we were to select examples for consideration, the principles on which Canada solved her racial problems are worthy of investigation. Some persons in this country who know nothing about Canada may look on it as an overgrown "English" colony. It is nothing of the sort. Before England acquired Canada by the fortunes of a very complicated war, it was a French colony. The French still form the largest individual racial section of the population—and they are the most loyal to the Crown. There is an Irish section, or rather two Irish sections—Northern and Southern. There are Scottish and English sections, there are Teutons and Scandinavians. One and all, they are Canadians. Canada is their country, and they have gone a long way to develop it, and they propose to go a longer way still. When we have done as much, proportionately, to develop the resources of the Free State, we shall hav done something of which to be justly proud.—Cork Examiner.

Crown Colonies and the Empire

Whatever the political ambitions of a future federated West Indies, the economic advantages of being welded within the British economic union would be too great to lose. We may aim to increase our stature as Crown Colonists, but Dominion status would not pay island colonies, which advertise themselves as the tropical orchards and sun-parlours of Great Britain. It may seem a far cry from the present increase of preference to British Colonial Empire Free Trade, or to an economic future such as we have indicated but we must not lose sight of the fact that the Chamberlain theories of pre-war days are now undergoing transition into technique and that the best economists in the Empire are engaged on hammering out that technique.—Trinidad Guardian.

OTHER OPINIONS

Log Cabin Survives

Our national architecture was a few felled lengths of forest crudely built up with the hide and hair still on it. The log cabin was mythically, if not actually as in Lincoln's case, the incubator of our great men. And we are still likely to think of it as peculiarly an American feature, although it appears, human geographers say, wherever the same woodland circumstances prevail, or prevailed fairly recently, as to-day in parts of Russia, Sweden, Finland, and even in Switzerland and in Northern Italy. The Germans have just perfected a portable copper house that can be erected by six men in 24 hours. You can take it to the seashore or to the mountains with you almost as handily as if it were a tent. It boasts an unequalled "rationalization" in housing. But who could recuperate from the machine age in such a contraption? Not the run of Americans, certainly, who came out of the woods only day before yesterday and have the shack and the log cabin still in their blood.—New York Herald-Tribune.

The Powers and the Far East

It is always a mistake to think that there is any clash between altruism and "practical affairs." The Powers have not intervened in the Far East to uphold this or that petty theory of some dreamer's brain. Peace in the Far East is a business necessity which concerns everyone.—Hong Kong Press.

Bread Shortage Serious in South Russia

Moscow.—The shortage of bread has become a critical problem for millions in the Ukraine, the Volga region and, to a lesser extent, Crimea and the Caucasus.

Tens of thousands of persons receive food packages, especially bread, regularly from Moscow, Leningrad and other northern cities which are better supplied. The post office in Moscow is flooded with packages addressed to cities where the bread famine is unusually sharp.

Recently the bread ration was suspended in Kiev, Odessa, Zhitomir and other Ukrainian cities, on account of the shortage.

Hot Bed Plant Growth Spurred by Electricity

Montreal.—Experimental work in connection with the heating of outside hotbeds by electricity is being tried this year by Rosario Montreuil, a truck gardener, who raises his crops at Ste. Dorothee, Que., near Montreal.

"The results so far have been very satisfactory," says Mr. Montreuil as he pointed out the hotbeds in which he had planted lettuce. He contrasted the growth of the vegetations in the heated beds with that of the unheated beds close by and stated that the lettuce had been transplanted at the same time.

Mr. Montreuil said that the installation was fairly high but that the actual operation cost has proved to be quite low. "Because it is purely an experiment, I have only a few beds so equipped," he said, "and it is really too soon to say very much about the success of the plant. It does not enable me to transplant to my hotbeds any earlier, but, as you see, it certainly makes things grow faster."

Housed in the usual outdoor frames, the apparatus consists of an electrical cable running inside throughout the entire length. From outlet boxes, placed at frequent intervals along this cable, heating elements run into the earth. Much heat is generated and is recorded by thermometers placed every ten or twelve feet.

Poison Bands Used on Trees

Urbana, Ill. — Chemically · treated bands, placed round trees, are credited with destroying between 17,000,000 and 18,000,000 codling moths that otherwise would be infesting Illinois orchards this year.

M. D. Farrar, of the State Natural History Survey, calls this comparatively new method the greatest advance in controlling the moth that has been made in five years. Spraying alone, he says, will not give complete control in heavily-infested orchards.

Record Year In Export Trade

Orders from the Continent Result · of Display at British Industries

The British Industries Fair, 1932, the fourth successive Fair in which Canada has participated officially, has transcended those of previous years. Canada, says "The Canadian Export Pioneer," was represented this year at Olympia, London, and Castle Bromwich, Birmingham, by two sections comprising 5,500 and 2,800 square feet respectively, embracing in all 33 individual Canadian organizations exhibiting.

One of the outstanding features of the commercial inquiries received in the Canadian sections and the orders placed has been the very satisfactory amount of Continental business, the sum total of which, impossible to estimate at present, will reach a very substantial figure, and more than justify the costs.

The most striking business in prospect is the likelihood of an order from a Wolverhampton firm for 400 tons weekly of copper hitherto purchased from other sources.

BUILDING MATERIALS.

Probably the most active group of Canadian exhibitors has been that supplying building materials, ranging from sawn lumber, plywood, composition boards of various kinds, to seaweed buildings blankets. Surprisingly enough a number of Scandinavian inquiries likely to materialize in orders have been received. Scandinavia has hitherto, for obvious reasons, ben virtually a closed market to Canadian forest products.

Both at Olympia and at Birmingham the volume of inquiries for building materials is stated to have been enormous.

A CANADIAN CIGARETTE.

The British Industries Fair, 932, has seen the launching of two Canadian products in the British Isles of special interest to Canadian producers. For the first time in history there is upon the markets of the British Isles a cigarette manufactured from 100 per cent. Canadian tobacco.

A Canadian pipe tobacco has for nearly twelve months been available in Great Britain, but with the advent o a Canadian cigarette a new day has dawned for Canadian tobacco producers. The Canadian article is able to meet its competitors on the ground of price as well as quality.

"Sardines."

For many years the Canadian sardine has been marketed in many countries of the world. The British courts, however, have ruled that the word "sardine" cannot be used in the British Isles as applying to this product. This decision has delayed for many years the placing of this small Canadian fish before the British public. At the British Industries Fair this product was finally marketed under the name of "Fundies," so called because it is caught in the clear cold waters of the Bay of Fundy, on Canada's Atlantic seaboard.

The product, despite its handicap of coined nomenclature, has met with instantaneous success, and has been taken up with acclaim by many of the biggest retail organizations in the country.

Another improved Canadian product is wood fibre moulding, made from pulpwood and cast in mould to replace hand-carved mouldings. An initial order for 10,000 plaques of this material has been placed to form the facia of British manufactured wireless sets.

RUBBER PRODUCTS.

At Olympia a Canadian manufacturer of rubber goods has received a substantial order for advertising-balloons for Australia, a British order for 72,000 rubber garments, and an order for medical rubber gloves from one of the biggest chains of retail chemists in the country.

Other orders have been received from such widely separated countries as Denmark, Sweden, Holland, France, Spain, Egypt, and Iraq.

SEAWEED BUILDING BLANKET

One little-known Canadian product, although not entirely new on the British market, has met with a most gratifying success, viz., seaweed building blanket. These occur only in two known places in the world beds of the particular seaweed required—one in Canada and one in Sweden, in the confluence of fresh and salt water. This seaweed blanket, laminated by the kraft paper, acts as a complete sound insulator. Its iodine content renders it immune from the ravages of insects, whereas its other important valuable property, other than its insulating property, is that it is completely fireproof. It is interesting to note that the new home of the British Broadcasting Company is equipped with this product, as well as some of London's luxury hotels and apartment houses.

INQUIRIES FROM FIFTY-ONE COUNTRIES.

Both at Olympia and Birmingham there have been inquiries received from 51 different countries for a wide range of Canadian products. There are prospects of Canada securing orders for wireless sets from Scandinavia and South Africa, refrigerators from France and China, rubber fishing waders from Scotland, Norway, Iceland and Portugal, vacuum cleaners from four different Continental countries, Douglas fir doors from 11 countries, refrigerators and honey from Germany and Ecuador, and a host of other inquiries too numerous to mention.

Thus, the Canadian industrial sections of the British Industries Fair have justified their creation as valuable clearing houses for inter-Empire trade.

Fire Brigade in Finland Sets New Record

Helsingfors, Finland.—A Helsingfors fire brigade has beaten the record set up by an Indianapolis fire brigade of turning out in twenty seconds.

The fire engine and tank car's rear wheels passed the engine hall threshold in exactly 11.2 seconds, the fire engine and foam producing car in 14.8 seconds, and the fire engine and ladder car in 13 seconds

How to play Bridge AUCTION and CONTRACT

by Wynne Ferguson

Author of "PRACTICAL AUCTION BRIDGE"

ARTICLE NO. 24

In the play of the hands at Auction and Contract there are numberless opportunities to make good plays, but the most important one of all is the winning of the trick that scores game or saves it. For example, suppose the declarer is playing spades and it is easily possible to make three odd but there is no apparent way to score game. That is the time for the declarer to do some deep thinking and endeavor to figure out some way to make game. Sometimes this can be done by mentally placing certain high cards in the opponents' hands in such a way that game is possible. At other times it can only be done by letting the opponents have the lead in the hope that they will make a mistake and thus give the declarer his only chance for game. That is what is meant by getting the trick that scores game.

On the other hand, suppose your opponents are playing the hand at spades, and it is up to you to save game. You can figure out how to take three tricks but cannot see any hope for the fourth trick. Then you should figure out in your mind what card or cards your partner must hold to make that extra trick and play accordingly. You will be surprised how often the card that you figure must be there, will be there and therefore save the game. It is on close hands of this type that the good player has such an advantage. The all-important trick of every hand is the one that either makes game or saves game; so bend all your energies and concentrate all your thought on that one trick and, if it is in the cards, don't let it get away from you.

The following hand is given as an illustration of the dealer's failure to observe this rule and of the big loss resulting.

	Hearts—9, 6 Clubs—K, J, 7 Diamonds—K, 10, 8, 5, 4, 2 Spades—A, K
Hearts—A, K, J, 7 Clubs—4 Diamonds—9, 7, 6 Spades—9, 8, 7, 5, 3	Z S W A	Hearts—Q, 10, 8, 5, 4 2 Clubs—10, 9, 8, 5, 3 Diamonds—3 Spades—4
	Hearts—3 Clubs—A, Q, 6, 2 Diamonds—A, Q, J. Spades—Q, J, 10, 6, 2

No score, rubber game. This hand is applicable either to Auction or Contract. Z dealt and bid one spade. A and Y passed and B bid two hearts, Z two spades, A three hearts, Y three spades, B four hearts, Z four spades and A doubled. All passed and A opened the king of hearts and followed with the ace of hearts. How should Z play the hand?

Solution: Z should let A hold this trick and discard a club or a diamond. By so doing, he could have made five odd in spades if A had then led either one of the other three suits, for in that case he could have taken A's trumps and his suit cards were all good. If A had led another heart at trick three, Z should have trumped in the dummy with the king and then led four rounds of trumps. He should then have led either clubs or diamonds until A made his last trump.

In this way, Z could have made four spades. If, however, he trumped the second heart trick in his hand and led two rounds of spades, his hand was hopeless and he would lose his contract by one trick. This hand shows the importance of thinking out the play of the hand and the possible cards held by opponents, even at the second trick. The minute the dummy hand was placed on the table, Z should have figured what cards A must hold to justify his double. The only excuse for the double would be at least five small trumps and the ace, king of hearts. With any less holding in trumps, A's double would have been unsound.

It is an easy hand with all the cards exposed, but not easy if they are concealed unless you stop to think and figure out how the unseen cards must lie to give you game. It is a fine illustration of the importance of playing for the all-important trick that will score game and of doing so from the very first card played.

In the following problem, try your own skill in solving before reading the solution. Then compare results and thus obtain a valuable lesson or evidence that you are pretty good, dependent upon failure or success.

Problem

	Hearts—none Clubs—A, J, 10 Diamonds—none Spades—9
Hearts—none Clubs—Q, 6 Diamonds—J Spades—Q	Z S W A	Hearts—none Clubs—K, 9 Diamonds—K, Q Spades—none
	Hearts—10 Clubs—4 Diamonds—A, 4 Spades—none

If hearts are trumps and Z is in the lead, how can Y, Z win all four tricks against any defense?

Solution: Z should lead the ace of diamonds and discard the ten of clubs in Y's hand. He should then lead the ten of hearts. Now A must discard either a club or a spade. He cannot discard a spade for, if he does, Y will discard the jack of clubs and his nine of spades will be good. A, therefore, is forced to discard the six of clubs and Y discards the nine of spades. B must now discard a club or a diamond. He cannot discard the king of diamonds for, if he does, Z's four of diamonds will be good. B, therefore, is forced to discard the nine of clubs. Z now leads the four of clubs and Y wins the remaining two tricks. It is a fine example of the "double squeeze."

His patient nodded.

"Yes, doctor," he replied. "I have been drinking six cups of coffee and four glasses of water each day."

"Coffee!" he snapped. "But coffee and water are not the same."

Vienna—Lilac City of the Continent

Those who would know the charm of the Austrian capital must visit it in the spring. It has no fine river promenades like many another European city—the Danube is too far from the center of things for that—but its awakening after winter snows is a wonderful sight. With the coming of the lilac blossom the Viennese feel that spring is really here. Day after day crowds flock to the parks to admire the blossom-laden bushes. The Rathaus Garden is another favorite place of pilgrimage with its many exotic trees and plants.

Vienna can truly be called the lilac city, for not only is the lilac blossom the indication of spring, it is also to be noted that to this city the lilac was first brought from Asia nearly three and a half centuries ago. At the corner of the Himmelpfortgasse and the Seilerstaette stood a garden, where, in 1589, the lilac first blossomed in Europe. This garden belonged to Gislenius Busbequins, Ferdinand I's Ambassador to Constantinople. He was a great lover of flowers, and to him is given the honor of having introduced both the lilac and the tulip into Europe. It is true that another kind of lilac has been found in the Carpathians, but this was much later, and this latter cannot be compared in quality to that which came from the Orient.

New German Motor Train

A double passenger train car, over 137 feet long, with its own motors and capable of a sustained speed of more than ninety-three miles an hour will be placed in service between Berlin and Hamburg some time in the coming Summer. With the going into effect of the Summer schedule, the maximum speed of the regular "FD" (non-stop) trains on the same stretch will also be increased from the present 68 1/3 to 74½ miles an hour. This has been made possible by increasing the distance from the first cautionary signal to the final signal from 700 to 1,200 meters, thus giving the brakes time to act. The new motorized car will be rounded at each end to reduce atmospheric resistance. It will have seats for 102 second-class passengers. A refreshment room will be added in the middle, in which hot and cold drinks and cold food will be served.

Cretonne covers will retain their colors if washed in bran water.

Mrs. Brockhank Tells Why She Recommends Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to Women of 40 to 50

Color

Returned

"My age was 48—which every woman knows is a critical time of life—when I derived such benefits from Dr. Williams' Pink Pills," writes Mrs. Brockhank, Hamilton, Ont. "I felt so tired and depressed; could not sleep; my appetite was impaired; my skin and lips were pallid. I could not make any headway with my housework. I got discouraged, as tonic after tonic did not better my condition. My sister, a graduate nurse, advised Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. After taking a few boxes my condition greatly improved. My sleep was restful and my natural color and appetite returned."

Dr Williams' Pink Pills rebuild health by creating new blood and increasing the red blood cells, which restore the wasted tissues and revitalize the exhausted system. They remove the cause of run-down or nervous conditions. Try them. At your druggist's in the new protective glass containers. 50c a package.

Naming Telephone Exchanges

Who names the new telephone exchanges, and why are such long names chosen?

A woman is responsible in England. She is employed by the Post Office to think out the names for new exchanges, and she has in her desk enough names to christen all Britain's new exchanges for several years to come.

It sounds an easy job, but she doesn't think so. Scarcely one per cent. of her suggested names is passed.

Owing to dialling limitations, a name must not begin with an "O," it must not sound like any other name, and its first three letters must not clash with any other first three.

After a name has been passed as fit for use it is given a complete voice test. Exchange operators test it thoroughly, and quite half the names given the test are rejected because they are hard to understand. Recently the G. P. O. decided to call in exchange Nelson, but when spoken by different people it sounded like Western, Wilson, and several other names! Even Hogarth became Cigar.

But the christener's troubles are not over even when these tests have been passed. For the local authorities in whose district the new exchange stands usually dislike all the names suggested, and a fresh list has to be thought out.

There's one nice thing about June—it helps to solve the problem of what to do with old shoes. And speaking of shoes—white shoes are signs of summer. Almost white shoes are signs of last summer. The average girl prefers being a June bride to a May Queen.

The Unkindest Cut of All

We were seated in a hammock
On a balmy night in June,
When the world was hushed in slumber
'Neath the guidance of the moon.

I asked one little question,
And my heart was filled with hope,
But her answer never reached me—
For her brother cut the rope.

Most of the new crop of June graduates who expect to set the world afire will begin by lighting another cigaret.

Mike—"Pat, what in the world is the matter?"

Pat—"I just got out of the hospital. I was operated on for appendicitis."

Mike—"What does that have to do with that great lump on your head?"

Pat—"A lot. They ran out of ether."

Plain and Fancy Shots

It requires wings to be an angel. You can't get by on a pin feather. Cleanliness is next to godliness, of course, but that isn't what makes the bathing pool popular. When we have nothing to say it's best to say nothing, but few of us can do it. The baby's middle name does not amount to so much. It's the family names that ruin them. No, an insurance company was not responsible for the song "Keep the home fires burning." Be pleasant but not too pleasant. The luckiest people in the world are those who do not depend up on luck. Gas and electricity turned off when not needed would pay the family sugar bill. A word to the wise sometimes precipitates an unexpected lawsuit. A man should have a pound of common sense to each ounce of learning. Consistency takes all the pleasure out of life. The most provoking husband is one who talks indistinctly in his sleep. A man who laughs last soon gets a reputation for being dumb. The "games" that make money fast also lose money fast. Eventually every man is recognized for what he really is.

Clo—"I'm afraid to go into that dark room."

Bill—"But, dearest, I'm with you."

Clo—"That's the trouble."

Aunt Samantha Smothers of Brushville read in the paper that an Iowa girl got a husband by writing her name on an egg. And in commenting upon this, Aunt Samantha, who has been married four times, said: "Well, I always knew marriage was a shell game."

Our sincerest wish for a June bridegroom is that he will like his new boss.

Teacher—"Now, Robert, what is a niche in a church?"

Bobby—"Why, it's just the same as an itch anywhere else, only you can't scratch it as well."

If you let another decide something for you, he'll be sure to blame you and not himself if the result of his decision proves to be bad.

Anybody could get rich if he could tell the exact moment at which a piece of junk becomes an antique.

Worst Insect Enemies Of Orchards Controlled

Geneva, N.Y.—The nature and habits of the codling moth, the apple maggot, the plum and apple curculios and the white apple leaf-hopper have been revealed and the weaknesss which make them vulnerable to attack by the fruit grower set forth in investigations by experts of the state agricultural experiment station here.

Many of the experiments having to do with these most formidable enemies of the fruit grower were conducted in the Hudson Valley and Lake Champlain fruit districts, principally by Dr. P. J. Chapman and O. H. Hammer. They found that "efficient control of orchard pests is gained through thorough and timely treatments applied during certain critical points in the development of these insects."

For practical reasons, they found, no more sprays should be used than are necessary to give reasonable protection, and whenever possible each treatment should be directed against one or more pests.

While an insect may increase its numbers to an abnormal degree over a wide area, they say, because of exceptionally favorable conditions, failures in controlling orchard pests or uneconomical conrol measures can usually be attributed to lack of information on pest conditions in the individual orchard.

The fishmonger was doing his best to sell his stock.

"That's a nice bit o' fish," he said. "Best 'ome cured."

The thin-lipped woman sniffed.

"Will that suit you, madam?" put in the fish monger.

"No, it will not," she snapped. "Just you put that away and give me something what ain't been ill.

GAINED ½ lb. A WEEK

Kruschen Stopped it—Now 11 lbs. Down

"I started to take Kruschen Salts a month ago, to reduce my weight—after trying several other ways. I am pleased with the results, as from 224 lbs., I have lost 11 lbs., which I think is a move in the right direction. I feel better all round, and am hoping to get down to 168 lbs. I am 52 years of age, and 5 feet 8 inches, and was putting on weight consistently at the rate of half-a-pound per week, so you see I have cause to be thankful for Kruschen Salts."—H. W.

An over-stout person is an auto-intoxicated (or self-poisoned) person whose internal organs are failing to expel from the body the waste products of digestion. Allowed to accumulate, this waste matter is turned into layer after layer of hideous fat.

The six salts in Kruschen assist the internal organs to perform their functions properly—to throw off each day the wastage and poisons that encumber the system. Then, little by little, that ugly fat goes—slowly, yes—but surely, and you feel so wonderfully healthy, youthful, and energetic—more so than ever before in your life!

WHAT IS THIRST?

In a way, water may be regarded as a food, and in a similar sense, thirst may be likened to hunger. About 70 per cent of the body weight is water, so it is obvious that water is an important substance. Water has several uses in the body. It keeps the tissues soft, pliable and elastic. We know that if tissues are dried they become hard, stiff and brittle. The digested food material is dissolved into fluid as it is carried to the tissues of the body. Water is required also to assist in elimination. Perspiration which serves to regulate body temperature is in the form of water.

Almost every function of the body requires water. Without it, digestion would cease, circulation would come to an end, elimination would be checked and the control of the body temperature would be lost.

When there is a lack of water in the body, we become thirsty. We have, however, so often failed to respond to the demand or postponed doing so that the sensation has in most people become blunted and we are aware only of a marked thirst or what is really an urgent demand. It is for this reason that we cannot rely entirely upon thirst as a guide to our needs.

Thirst is simply a form of irritation which we experience when the throat becomes dry. It is a demand for fluid to which we should respond. There is no set definite amount of water which each of us should consume day by day. It depends very largely upon how much water we are getting rid of and that in turn depends upon the activity of the person and the temperature.

It is obvious that after a strenuous game or hard physical work on a hot day that a considerable amount of fluid has been lost in perspiration which will result in an increased demand of water. It may be said that many people would likely enjoy better health if they used more water. It would assist in improving their body functions particularly the elimination of wastes.

Water is water, but all water may not be safe. Contaminated water is responsible for the spread of such diseases as typhoid fever. This is a point to be kept in mind when away from the place where you know that the water is safe. It is a good practice to use water freely providing you are sure that it is pure.

Pure water is readily available in most places. Develop the habit of drinking water freely. It is quite all right to drink moderately with your meals and it is desirable to drink between meals.

In a little house in a back street two children are awaiting Mother's and Dad's return. They are being helped by a friendly organization but there can be no home for them until their parents come back.

Where are the parents? For many months they have been struggling for lost health and strength in the Toronto Hospital for Consumptives. They have benefited greatly, as so many hundreds do, from the quietness, fresh air, kindly nursing and medical attention.

"Able to walk to the dining-room for two meals a day now" is the proud boast of the husband and father. But a short time ago he could not be moved from his bed. A few months from now, who knows, he may be back again taking up the burden of the home.

Such work as this has great economic value to the community as well as opening the only way from misery and despair to hundreds of the consumptive poor. The hospital greatly needs your help. Will you please send a gift to Mr. A. E. Ames, 223 College St., Toronto.

When Chatham was the Terminus of the Underground Rail'y

Interesting Story of Slavery Days - How the Slaves Escaped to Canada 70 Years Ago.

Roused to sudden anger at the sight of an overseer pursuing a slave with a club, she charged the man and knocked him to the ground. The enraged overseer hurled an iron weight at her, crushed her skull and inflicting an injury which resulted in fits of somnolence, to which she was subject until long after the civil war, when she finally obtained relief at the Massachusetts General Hospital.

This injury played an important part in fitting her for the struggle to come for on account of it, being unfitted for the usual work of women, she was given the task by her owner of lifting heavy barrels and drawing heavy weights. Her strength became so great after a few years at this arduous work that at the age of 19 she was a match physically for the strongest men in the neighborhood and was exhibited by her master to visitors as one of the sights of the place.

During an illness at this period of her life she became very religious, developing an almost fanatic faith, which later carried her through dangers where strong men of her race faltered.

"Sold South"

When her master died word went around the quarters that the slaves were to be "sold South," the thing most dreaded by negroes of the upper tier of Southern States. Harriet counselled the negroes to run away, but none of them had sufficient courage to follow her, and in the end she made her way to freedom alone and without compass or knowledge of the country, simply by following the Northern Star.

She obtained employment and saved all she earned. Then she disappeared and was not seen for months. She had dared to return to the land of bondage to show others the road to liberty.

Quaker Abolitionists in Philadelphia aided her. She soon had an underground railroad in working order and so efficacious her methods that a number of years ago, when Susan B. Anthony introduced her to a woman suffrage audience in Rochester, Harriet said:

"Yes, ladies, I was de conductor of de underground railroad fo' eight years, an' I kin say w'at mos' conductors can't say—dat I nebber run my train off de track an' I nebber los' er passenger."

A Price on Her Head

It wasn't long before rewards were offered throughout Maryland and Virginia for a negro woman who was luring the slaves away from their homes. The price for the capture of Harriet Tubman, dead or alive, rose to more than $40,000; but she was never taken. She made 20 or more trips into the very heart of the country where the rewards were offered and continued her work almost without cessation until the beginning of the civil war.

On her way to attend an abolition meeting in Boston at the invitation of Gerrit Smith, she stopped off at Troy and while there fought her greatest battle. Charles Nalle, a fugitive slave and a half brother of the master who had followed him, was a captive in Troy, having fallen into the hands of officers and been remanded back to Virginia.

Harriet went immediately to the office of the United States commissioner, collecting on the way a large crowd.

When she arrived bids for the slave's purchase were already in progress. The owner offered to sell for $1,200, but when that was bid he raised the price to $1,500. A man across the street raised a window and shouted.

"Two hundred dollars for his rescue, but not a cent for his master!"

That fired the crowd. It charged ahead toward the slave with Harriet Tubman in the fore. Aided by her strength and the backing of her followers she broke through the police lines, seized the prisoner under the armpits, and began to drag him down the street.

A policeman hit her on the head with his club, and freeing one hand, she knocked him back into the crowd. Another jumped at her, but she caught him about the neck, throttled him and threw him over her shoulder.

Held to Her Captive

She was dragged down, but kept her hold on the slave. Inspired by her splendid show of spirit, the crowd massed around her and dragged her and the slave to the river, where the fugitive was thrown into a boat which pulled out. There was a continuation of the fight in a house on the other bank of the river and two men were shot, but Harriet got across in time to win the battle and the slave escaped.

At the request of Governor Andrew, of Massachusetts, she gave her services as a spy during the war. Only a little of her accomplishments as a spy is known, but in the book by Sarah H. Bradford called "Harriet, the Moses of Her People," it is related that she was often under fire and that "she led the forces through jungle and swamp, guided by an unseen hand."

John Brown, introducing Harriet Tubman to Wendell Phillips, spoke these words:

Mr. Phillips, I bring you one of the best and bravest persons on the continent, General Tubman, as we call her."

And Phillips, writing of the incident to a friend, said:

"In my opinion, there are few captains, perhaps few colonels, who have done more for the loyal cause since the war began, and few men who did before that time more for the colored race than our fearless and sagacious friend Harriet."—London Exchange.

Scout Notes

First Streetsville Troop of Boy Scouts met last night at the Soap Factory building. In spite of the thunderstorm which broke after supper, about forty scouts were present. Drills and acrobatics were indulged in and the boys performed real well. Hec Graydon and his Alfalfa Boys assisted in the program with vocal and instrumental music which is always much appreciated. Short addresses were made by the Scoutmaster, Dr. Montemurro, the Chaplain, Rev. R. J. W. Perry, and others. Ice cream, cake and candy was served and a pleasant evening spent by all. Votes of thanks were passed to the Acme Ice Cream Co., who donated the ice cream, Canada Bread Co., who donated the cakes, the ladies who served refreshments, and also the orchestra. After the closing exercises conducted by the Chaplain, and the singing of the National Anthem, the gathering dispersed.

We noticed that the boys are very obedient to their officers, are very grateful for anything the people do for them. They need more supplies now, and we know that our generous citizens will not see them want.

SCOUTS, ALERT!

The Scouts of Streetsville Troop No. One, will hold their first full-dress parade on July 1st. Donations of more equipment, hats, socks or shirts, are always welcome. Many contributions have been received to date, but we are always willing to accept more.

The Scout softball team was defeated by a Public School team last Friday by a score of 13-3, but they are not discouraged. We hope to play a return game at a nearly date.

On May 18th, Bill Hollingshead was officially installed as an instructor in the Troop. The Scouts congratulate him and will give him their very best support.

On May 24th, almost twenty scouts come to me and told me that a certain business man of our village was flying a distress flag. (Be a little more careful next time, Mr. B.) If you are in doubt as to the proper way to fly the Union Jack, ask a S-c-o-u-t. Troop, Alert! Dismiss!

S.H.S. NOTES

A special meeting of the Literary Society was held on Monday of this week for the purpose of celebrating Empire Day. Our president being absent, John McGill took the chair. The program was opened by singing "O! Canada".

Kirby Burns favoured us with a medly of selections on the accordeon. Recitations were as follows: Bernice Temple, "Canadian Born"; Leona Durie, "My Native Land"; Eugene Gerhart, "Drake's Drum"; Lucy Scheid, "Montcalm and Wolfe"; Humorous stories were told by Homer Dunn and John Wright.

Erna and Elizabeth Bailey played a very pleasing piano duet, and Mildred Quennell rendered a piano solo.

John McGill and Ian Johnson were captains for a spelling match. John's team won the prize. Many of the (alleged) spellers made a "stew" of the word "fricassee". One pupil slipped on "Banana".

Mr. MacArthur presented 1st Form with a box of candy as a reward for supplying the best program during the year. The meeting closed with the singing of "The King."

The S.H.S. 1932 Year Book is now on sale for pupils and graduates and possibly a few others if they apply soon enough. This is a 16 page magazine and contains 4 group pictures (which alone are worth 50 cents). It only costs the public 20 cents, so speak up early for your copy.

Ian Johnson and Aubrey Pope competed in district field meet on Saturday but were slightly outclassed.

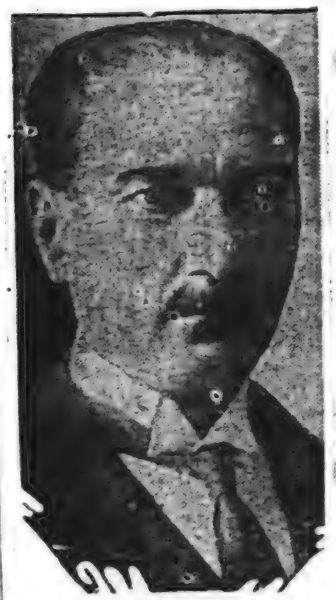
TURKEY'S STRONG MAN



Mustapha Kemal Rules With Iron Hand—Radical Changes Amaze Turks — Prove Beneficial.

The third-term bugaboo has apparently not reached the Republic of Turkey, where Mustapha Kemal has accepted another four years of the presidency, handed to him by the newly - elected Turkish Parliament without a single dissenting vote. Despite President Kemal's expressed desire for some sort of political opposition no other candidate presented himself.

Under the firm hand of the dictator, Kemal, a good deal of steady progress is noticeable to those who have been in the country during the past few years. The Ghazi, it is true, has treated unsympathetic factions with an iron hand, but a good deal of his strength has rested on a united nation, a rare thing in Turkish history, and the enthusiasm of younger elements.

Well into its seventh year as a republic, Turkey is beginning to show many signs of a national consciousness. Turkish patriotism expresses itself through pride rather than fear. While the muezzin still calls the faithful to prayer, the muezzin himself has changed. In place of the fez, or the turban, the crier from the minaret now sports a very cockney-looking cap, worn backward like a motor-cycle rider.

In outlawing the fez Mustapha Kemal showed that he understood

the Turk better than the Turk understood himself. There was no economic reason why the old red headgear should go. But the psychological effect was tremendous. The Turk, it was realized, could not think or act like a Westerner, he could not compete with a European, if his trousers were baggy, his slippers comic and his headgear like that of a lodge member. So the leaders of the new state appropriately started with his head to "shake him out of his shoes."

The change from Arabic characters to the Latin alphabet made the whole nation illiterate a little over two years ago, but since then almost everyone, old and young, rich and poor, has been industriously studying his new A B C's. The problem might conceivably have been greater had the percentage of literacy been higher before 1929. At that time only 15 per cent. of the population, it is estimated, could read and write Arabic. Most of the illiterates hired a professional letter writer and reader to take care of whatever correspondence was necessary.

The difficult Arabic script is now seldom seen. Railroad stations, postcard shops, steamer names, movie posters, newspapers and magazines all use almost the same letters we do, although they depict the sounds of the old Turkish language. The advent of a new alphabet hit the newspapers hardest. Their street sales dropped almost to zero when they first appeared in characters which many of their employes could not read. They are recovering, however, largely through the active demand for reading matter, in the new medium from hundreds of newly-established primary schools throughout Turkey.

THE VALUE OF A WIFE.

Woman Assessed Like a Slave, Says Noted Judge.

Mr. Justice McCardie, who is one of England's most well-known bachelors, offered some comment on the value of a wife in divorce proceedings at the Birmingham assizes.

The judge remarked the husband had said his wife was a good housekeeper, clean and industrious. He thought it was a description one would give a domestic servant.

"In arriving at the damages you have to assess the value of a woman as you would assess the state of a slave in some eastern part of the world. To my mind it is one of the most unfortunate aspects of the divorce law in this country."

The jury awarded the petitioner in the case $485 damages.

CURLY—A DOG.

Still another evidence of the devotion of a dog to those it loves: In Alberta a little pet named Curly which had been carried in a wagon several hundred miles across country from Lesser Slave Lake to Bassano, returned under its own power to the old friends and the old home. Curly was several weeks on the way, but he knew where he wanted to go, and never faltered until he reached the familiar home scenes; and surely there must have been a boy among the magnets that drew him back.—Toronto Globe.

DECISIONS RESPECTING NEWSPAPERS

Court decisions respecting newspaper subscriptions are very clear. Any person who takes a paper regularly from the post office, whether in his name or another's or whether he has subscribed or not, is responsible for payment. If a person orders his paper discontinued he must pay all arrears or the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made, and then collect the whole amount, whether the paper is taken or not. The courts have decided that refusing to take newspapers or periodicals from the post office or removing and leaving them unpaid, is prima facie evidence of intention of fraud.

CLARKSON

Returning home to the lakeshore ranch, which she says she bought 25 years ago, Mrs. L. Hellmer found the three houses and 75-acre fruit farm composing the property already occupied by families which she claims have just "squatted" there. When the "squatters" declined to move, Mrs. Hellmer called in the bailiffs, who are now engaged in moving them out.

Mrs. Hellmer had been absent from Clarkson for 13 years and returned without warning. When she disclosed her identity to a woman in one of her houses the woman said she had thought Mrs. Hellmer dead.

The house and farm were in very dilapidated condition, said Mrs. Hellmer, who claimed that the prnperty, once one of the show places of Ontario, used to be valued at $100,000.

No one was appointed as caretaker when the place was bought, she said.

After the death of her husband, Mrs. Hellmer went to live in the United States. She had planned to turn her property into a summer resort.

It would appear from newspaper reports of council meetings, says the Municipal World, that some councils are using the ballot system of appointing officials and deciding questions. This is contrary to The Municipal Act, section 213 (2) of which provides that no vote shall be taken by ballot or by any other method of secret voting, and every vote so taken shall be of no effect. The electors at large are entitled to know how their representatives vote on every question. Councillors who have not enough backbone to express their convictions in public should not be re-elected.

ENGAGEMENTS

Mr. Joseph Drennan, Streetsville, Ont., announces the engagement of his daughter, Edith May, to Mr. S. Edmund Wolfe, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Wolfe, of Cooksville, the marriage to take place early in June.

FOOTBALL NOTES

A large number of fans turned out to witness the game between Sheridan and the Creditvale-Streetsville "Bluebirds" Monday night at the Peel Park. The home team having the best of the play throughout both periods and deserved their win, although not by so many goals, the final score being 5-0.

It looks as though after getting off to a very poor start, losing both their first two games to Port Credit, they have at last hit their stride, winning last week's game against Lakeview 6-0. Then coming right back to win against Sheridan 5-0 makes it look as though they will be a hard team to beat from now on. The team proper is composed of the following players: Goal, H. Pickett; right fullback, W. Edwards; left fullback, Aubrey Pope; left half, C. Pope; Centre half-back, F. Burton; right half-back, A. Arch. The Forwards line is: Outside left, A. Pope; inside left, R. Riddle; centre R. Little; inside right, R. Hutchinson; outside right, H. Pind. A strong enough team to give any a battle—in my opinion.

Well, the team plays their next game on Wednesday evening against Lakeview, this being a return match, at the Peel Park. The results will be in next week's Review. So watch the paper closely and see the home team win.

The fans will likely see lots of games this summer as Georgetown and Acton are thinking of coming in The league will be composed of the following teams: Port Credit, Acton, Creditvale, Sheridan, Georgetown, Oakville, Halton Rifles.

A lot of people have been asking the question, Why do the Creditvale and Streetsville United football team call themselves the "Bluebirds"? The reason is, when the team first started this year, they naturally had to have funds and the Streetsville Creamery came right out and gave them a big donation. So in order to show their thanks they called themselves after the Creamery butter. "The Bluebird Butter" is the best, and so is the Bluebird Football Team. So let everyone come out and keep the team in proper trim by being at the games to cheer.

The club wishes to thank all the people who helped them out, making the nice sum of $50.00. More news will be in next week's paper, so be sure to get your Review and watch closely.

MANITOBA LETTER

Clanwillian, Man., May 25, 1932.

Dear Editor:

You will see by the heading of my letter we are back on the farm for a short time. And, believe, me, quite a difference; sitting by a window in the city and seeing something different every minute and to sit here and see school children pass morning and evening, and lucky if we see a car go by, which means we do not live on a highway. However, there are a good many pleasures, such as car riding to different parts of the country. Such a difference to last year—no growth last year; this year the grass is as high as at any time last year, and the wheat is just looking fine. Seeding is just about finished except green feed.

We visited at Mrs. Bailey's for the 24th. She had quite a number of her children home from Winnipeg, Eden and Brookdale. Mrs. Bailey lives in Minnedosa, so was quite a treat for grandparents, children and great grandchildren to get together.

A baseball game between Minnedosa and Stratchclaire was the only excitement. Minnedosa won. Large crowds went to Clear Water Lake. Minnedosa has a beautiful summer resort and is also the gateway to Clear Water Lake. So if by any chance any of the readers of The Review are thinking of touring, why just come to Minnedosa, then to Clear Water Lake National Park, and see all the deer, bear, beaver and buffalo, then on to Waterous in Saskatchewan and to Prince Albert Nations' Park. I am sure your time would be all too short to see all the beauty of this part of Canada. The Trans-Canada highway is finished through Manitoba.

I must tell you the old bridge in Minnedosa has been replaced by a new one, all cement, and was done as relief work. Looks rather squatty, but the four electric lights on each corner relieves it quite a lot. The official opening is to take place June 3. Quite a number of leading men will take part. There are a large number of unemployed here; quite a number came in expecting work would begin on the highways, but found no work started. We hear none will be started until after the election. There will be a lot of hard workers for the next three weeks. We will hear a lot of promises which will never be fulfilled.

Mrs. Bruce Shaver died at the St. Paul's Hospital, Saskatoon, Sask., on April 24th, her thirtieth birthday. She was buried at Asquith, Sask., near her father's home. She leaves her husband and two small children. Bruce is the third son of Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Shaver of Empire. Bruce farms near Bengough, Sask.

JOHNSTON—At Toronto General Hospital on Sunday, May 29th, Eleanor Daly, beloved wife of the late Robert Johnston, in her 74th year.

Funeral service at her late residence, Dundas Street, Cooksville, on Wednesday, June 1st, at 2 o'clock, standard time. Interment in Britannia Cemetery.

BORN

COLLINS—At Port Credit, May 30th, 1932, to Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred C. Collins (nee Mona McKay), a son (Daniel Joseph).

LACROSSE

The fans were treated to a real time Monday night having the pleasure of witnessing two different games in the evening. While the football game was on there also was a lacrosse struggle which seemed to take all the fans away from the football game and how they did root. It was a bitterly contested game, Streetsville being the better after sixty minutes were up. Malton were too slow for the boys. It seems as Jack Nixon has the makings of a real team coming on, and the way the fans yelled it is going to go over in a big way, so everybody turn out and cheer the boys on to victory, in their games. This next game will be played away from home, being a return match to Malton on Friday night. Final score for Monday's lacrosse game: Streetsville 8, Malton 5.

Teams lined up as follows: Goal, F. Haddon; defense, M. Dean, R. Wheeler; rover, V. Steggall; centre, G. Clipperton; home, W Munro, U. Bailey; alternates, R. Bruce, W. Turney, E. W. Langdon, J. Nixon, R. Evans, N. Russell.

Mr. and Mrs. Will Switzer were among the hundreds from Toronto and vicinity who took advantage of the cheap rates to Montreal over the week-end.

Voice of the Press

Canada, The Empire and the World

CANADA

Too Much Optimism

If anything could hurt the forthcoming Imperial Economic Conference it would be the raising of extravagant expectations leading to inevitable disappointment and disillusion. The warning hint dropped by Sir Charles Gordon, therefore, is timely and useful. Like other authorities, he feels a quiet optimism about the Conference, and at the same time recognizes the danger of inflated expectations. As he points out, the Conference will not revolutionize the whole trade of the Empire. Indeed, the violent wrench which comes with trade revolutions, as with other revolutions, would be most unwelcome. Instead, those who are far-sighted will look forward to laying at Ottawa the foundations for a steady and permanent increase in Imperial trade. And, there is every promise that this practical ideal will be realized.—Montreal Star.

All-Canadian Restaurant For London?

A Canadian resident in London writes to the newspaper Canada suggesting the establishment of a Canadian restaurant in the capital of the Empire as a focus point for resident and visiting Canadians. Greeks, Chinese, Italians and Russians can all repair to centres where they may meet their countrymen and eat and drink nationally. Canadians have no such amenities, and the aspersion on their initiative is no small one.

Now the gauntlet has been thrown down by a South African. Mr. Lewis Louw, a retired Cape Town hotel proprietor, has courageously braved the bristling difficulties of the situation and has just opened a South African snack bar and lounge in the Adelaide Street wing of Gatti's Restaurant. A springbok's head faces the entrance; there is a counter laden with snoek, biltong, mehos, meatjies, crayfish and other typically South African delicacies; and the selection of Dominion wines does credit to Mr. Louw's mature judgment and provides, incidentally, an unrivalled opportunity of confounding the sceptics of the Empire's viticultural abilities.

The South African community has been quick to take advantage of Mr. Louw's enterprise, and already, in addition to a regular restaurant clientele, the foundations have been laid of a South African Reunion Club, for which headquarters have been taken in the roomy premises of the first floor. "London Canadian" feels strongly that some Canadian should go and do likewise.—Toronto Mail and Empire.

Farmers in Northern Ontario may have from the government supplies of red pine and spruce trees for purposes of reforestation. Every advantage should be taken of this offer. Planting trees is not much trouble, and future generations will bless those who do such work to-day.—Toronto Globe.

"All For Each; Each For All."

In Calgary, Alberta, some seventy-five unemployed war veterans have secured premises, pooled their slim resources, and set out to maintain themselves. By concerts and other entertainments they secure funds. Barbers, cobblers, tailors, and so on, in this little community work for the benefit of all.

Commenting on this venture, the Calgary Albertan says it is doubtful that other than ex-soldiers could make it succeed. "Organization made the scheme a success. All the good will in the world would not have placed these men where they are now had they not agreed to sink their individual interests in their common interest, had they not submitted willingly to a certain discipline, and had not somebody planned and organized.'

This enterprise proves two things; the value of discipline, and that necessity remains the mother of invention. The undertaking has the advantage of appealing to popular sympathy on patriotic grounds, as it presents a definite plan for assisting the returned man; and it is well worthy of a trial in other parts of the country.—Toronto Globe.

Canada's Confidence

While Europe showed a tendency to flee from the dollar, because of the conviction its value was to decline, Americans were fleeing to this same currency and withdrawing it from circulation in commodity markets and from banks, despite the implication that money being tucked away was to be made less valuable. Such unreasoning and contradictory shifts of capital reveal the way less is demoralizing world finance. They also point to the advantage Canada has held, over almost all other countries during the course of the period of the depression through the fact that confidence of Canadians in their fiscal system and financial institutions has not been disturbed.—Toronto Telegram.

Not Wanted As Boarders

We have all we can do in Canada now to look after those who are in need of assistance without having shipments of Doukhobors thrust on us as paid boarders. Tell them plenty—and they can understand English — that they must quit their defiance at once or immediately become participants in an excursion party headed for the land from which they came, and with no return privileges.—Stratford Beacon-Herald.

THE EMPIRE

What is "British?"

A point that will have to be discussed at Ottawa is the definition of "British product. Originally, Canada, which led the way in preferential trade in the Empire, regarded as entitled to preferential treatment any article in which British material and labour represented 25 per cent. of the total value. That definition has been amended and now, not only in Canada but elsewhere, the British proportion must not be less than 50 per cent., and the danger of importation here on preferential terms of goods mainly foreign but passing as Empire products is very real. The need for uniform definitions in all parts of the Empire seems obvious.—London Times Trade Supplement.

India at Ottawa

During the week the composition of India's delegation to the Ottawa Conference has been announced, but it is impossible to feel any enthusiasm over the names. Sir Atul Chatterjee, the High Commissioner in London, is a highly competent official, but Sir George Rainy and Sir P. P. Ginwalla, two successive Presidents of the India Tariff Board, have throughout their official career been exponents of the highest and most Chinese type of Protection. Whatever the report of the delegation—and on that we are not hopeful—India possesses full fiscal autonomy. Action can only be taken on agreement, if any, reached at Ottawa through the agency of tariffs, and tariffs can only be passed by the All-India Legislature.—Calcutta Englishman.

Empire First

If the Mother Country and the Dominions go to Ottawa each expecting to reap immediate material advantages, the soreness of disappointment will be a danger to good relations. If each member goes with a spoken or unspoken cry of "For ourselves first; for the Empire second," why should any deserve to gain at all? They must put the Empire first and all these things shall be added unto them, for they are partners in the Empire; as partners, not rivals, they must discuss their business; and as partners they must claim to share the advantages that come from their discussion. As partners, yes, and partners in a family business, but business relations are the severest test of family affection. This is a caution of which we would remind, day in and day out, everyone throughout the Empire whose duty it is to make any of the preparations for Ottawa. If one of the delegates at Ottawa, thinking to do his duty by those who sent him, tries to get the better of another delegate, the rift in the family is opened.—Spectator (London).

The Bountiful Banana

Were is not for the banana we should be in a terrible position to-day. It is almost the one product in the world the producers of which are still receiving, if not prosperity prices, at any rate prices that represent a margin of profit. That is why, in spite of the depression, Jamaica has up to the present been able to carry on as successfully as she has. If we had sugar representing 50 per cent. of our exports to-day, and bananas only 20 per cent., we should be in a very precarious position indeed, with sugar at its present prices.—Kingston (Jamaica) Gleaner.

OTHER OPINIONS.

Economic Isolationism

The tariffs and quotas and embargoes that are going up everywhere would be bad enough if they were emergency measures reflecting the operations of a war mentality. But too often they are now being defended not as expedients but as a new economic dispensation. The gospel of the "self-contained" nation is preached with a vehemence which is in the main part, no doubt, the outcome of our distress. But it is mischievous, just the same, to read on every hand that every country should try to forget, to the utmost possible extent, that there is a world outside. Forget exports, forget shipping, forget foreign investments, go in for cultivating your own garden, and around it raise as high a wall as you can make.

Canadian Broadcasting

Canada's need for wave-lengths becomes obvious when the vast stretches and the many isolated regions of that country are taken into consideration. A population basis for wave-length division is hardly usable since the area to be covered is the question, not the number of people crowded into a given area. With the proposed Canadian system, more cleared channels will be needed for Canada. The Mexican side will have to be heard also. The Madrid conference, scheduled for this fall, is a logical place to iron out these difficulties. It is obvious that the United States must give up some of its wave-lengths to Canada and Mexico, which will make the present shortage of wave-lengths even more acute.—Boston Christian Science Monitor.

Auto Fatalities Show Big Decline

28 Killed in Ontario in April, Compared With 42 Year Ago

Toronto. — Automobile accidents in Ontario took toll of 28 lives in April, as compared with 24 deaths in the corresponding month of 1931, according to the monthly statistics issued by the motor vehicles branch of the Department of Highways. The same number of persons have been killed during 1932 to date as were killed in the same period in 1931, 118 deaths in each case. There were 463 persons injured last month, as compared with 540 in April, 1931. Property damage amounting to $53,242 was caused.

"The number of accidents in April is a decrease of 76, or 11.3 per cent. from the figures of the corresponding month last year, and it is noteworthy that this is the first time since the accident reporting law came into effect that a monthly total has shown anything but an increase over the corresponding figures for the previous year," the report states. "While this decrease for a single month means little in itself it is none the less encouraging."

More accidents occurred on Saturday than any other day, it is revealed. Over 90 per cent. of the vehicles were in apparently good condition at the time of the mishap. Thirteen out of the 28 persons killed were pedestrians. Of these were under 14 years of age, four of whom were playing in the street. Among the remaining 15 victims, there were two bicyclists, six drivers and seven passengers of motor vehicles.

Pedestrians again suffered heavily, 201 of the 463 injured being thus classified. Only 1.5 per cent. of the drivers involved in accidents were said to be intoxicated. Sixty-two per cent. of the accidents and 42.8 per cent. of the fatalities occurred in cities, the remainder being spread over towns, villages, King's highways, county and township roads.

Amy Johnson Meets American Aviatrix

London.—Amy Johnson, Great Britain's noted air woman, and Mrs. Amelia Earhart Putnam, trans-Atlantic flier, met last week for the first time.

Miss Johnson, accompanied by her fiancee, J. A. Mollison, famous British long distance flier, went to the United States embassy at Prince's Gate to see Mrs. Putnam. They chatted for a long time and posed for photographers in the garden of the embassy.

Miss Johnson, who has flown in record time from England to Australia alone, paid the visit at Mrs. Putnam's expressed wish. She had been visiting at the home of Mollison's parents in Scotland and flew down to London for the occasion.

Dutch Debtor Law Undergoes a Change

The Hague.—Possibility of imprisonment for debt in the Netherlands will be reduced to a minimum by a bill which the Minister of Justice has introduced. Generally speaking, imprisonment will be confined to those cases in which the debtor is able to pay.

The bill further provides for the possibility of seizing property held in safe deposit. Banks are put under obligation to allow the bailiff charged with confiscation to inspect the register of safe-deposit and further to accord him assistance in the execution of his duty.

Ireland to Keep Annuity Payments

Decision is Announced by the Minister of Industry

Cork, Ireland. The Irish Free State has halted payment of the land annuities to Great Britain, Minister of Industry and Commerce Sean Lemass announced Sunday in a political speech.

"The money is now retained here," Lemass said. "We are now going to demand that Britain repay some 30,000,000 pounds which she illegally received on account of these annuities."

The land annuities amount to about 3,000,000 pounds a year. The new Government of President Eamonn de Valera announced it would cease to pay them because the Free State was not required to make such payments under any agreement.

The British Government disputed de Valera's contention and produced documents to support its stand. The land annuities are collected from tenant farers, who are in the process of acquiring ownership of property which once belonged to wealthy landlords. The British exchequer originally financed the operation enabling the tenants to buy the land.

The next land annuities are due June 15. They are paid semi-annually.

Steel Telegraph Poles Foil Elephants and Giraffe

Giraffe-proof telegraph poles are the latest innovation in Kenya and Tanganyika territories along the Equator, writes the Johannesburg correspondent of "The San Francisco Chronicle."

The long-necked brutes, with a head reach of anything up to fifteen or twenty feet have been playing the mischief with the steel lines in those districts, where the animal is still plentiful.

Engineers in those colonies have been much troubled about the giraffe's habit of rubbing against the telegraph and telephone wires.

For this reason a series of poles extending from Mombasa inland through regions where big game is not yet gone now will be replaced by steel poles of unusual height, entirely beyond the reach even of these lofty creatures.

In Ovamboland, a wild part to the north of Southwest Africa, the union's mandated territory, there are complaints of an unusual destructiveness by elephants. They have been coming out of the bush, a continuation of the Angola wilderness, and are entering settled territory.

The result is a multitude of poles standing askew and only to be put right again at considerable cost. It is suggested that the supports should be anchored in "elephant-proof" cement, but the cost is excessive.

Toronto Flying Club Leader in Dominion

Ottawa.—Toronto Flying Club led all other light airplane clubs in the Dominion for the number of hours flown during the first quarter of 1932, according to a report issued by the civil aviation branch of the Department of National Defence. Members of the Toronto club flew 130 hours while Kitchener-Waterloo club was second with 127 hours.

Five members of the Toronto club received commercial pilots' tickets in the first quarter, while only one was issued to a club member last year. The total membership in Canadian light airplane clubs for the first quarter was 2,639, compared with 2,915 last year.

Noted Economist Outlines Problem of Dominion

Sir Josiah Stamp Points to Relation Between Tariffs and Costs

London.—According to Sir Josiah Stamp, in an address here before the Canada Club, "Canada's problem is far more than the problem of industrially developing the Dominion and securing assured markets for her exports. It is much more, at present, a question of joining in the common task of arresting the continued appreciation of gold." Sir Josiah is the famed British economist who some time ago investigated trading in wheat futures for the Canadian Government.

Costs Govern Tariffs

The task of establishing equilibrium between international tariff policies at Ottawa or elsewhere, said Sir Josiah, was inescapably bound up with comparative internal costs. These, on the other hand, underwent relative changes every day, not, it was true, in real value but in monetary expression, which was the only factor tariff systems could take heed of. Tariff discriminations, expressed in money values, might be most scientifically based upon differences of cost this year and yet become hopelessly wrong next year.

Canada's economic dependence upon world prices was greater than ever, Sir Josiah continued. It was sometimes thought her decision to adhere to some fixed relation for her currency to the New York dollar as distinct from the opposite course of adopting sterling or some intermediate level rested upon the importance to the Dominion of avoiding payment of substantial premiums on her heavy New York obligations. It had been said Canada could not possibly afford this premium or its general effect upon her credit.

Canada's Dilemma

This dilemma was more apparent than real in the opinion of Sir Josiah. Even if Canada left her present dollar standard and her internal price level rose, she would still have to pay her New York obligations, and with gold prices raised abroad for her wheat the relation between the Canadian dollar and the New York dollar would become immaterial for the purposes of payment.

Although it was important Canada should raise her internal price level for successful prosecution of her industries and the balancing of her provincial budgets, he believed the Dominion might be no more successful than England if the advantage gained by exchange depreciation continued to be offset by falling gold prices abroad.

It might well be better, Sir Josiah said, for the Dominion's internal price level to remain practically the same as at present than for it to fall continuously in relation to the price level of the United States. The United States, he stated, was far better balanced internally than Canada and consequently better able to stand price depreciation.

3,543,821 Decrease In C.N.R. Operations

Montreal.—A reduction in operating expenses of $3,543,821, which more than offset the decrease in gross revenues for the month of April, 1932, is shown in the monthly operating figures for that month issued by Canadian National Railways. The net revenue of $1,067,970 for April, 1932, shows an increase of $173,080 over the net revenue for April, 1931, and also an increase of $509,366 over the net revenue for March, 1932. The operating ratio of the Canadian National System, excluding Eastern Lines, in April, 1932, was 91 per cent. as against 94.13 per cent. in the same month of 1931.

Gross revenues of the System, excluding Eastern Lines, in April, 1932, were $11,863,038, a decrease of $3,279,741 from those of the same month of 1931. Operating expenses were $10,795,067 in April, 1932, a saving of $3,643,821 from the operating expenses of April, 1931. Net revenue for the month of April, 1932, was $1,067,970, an increase of $173,080 over the net of April, 1931, and an increase of $509,366 over the net of March, 1932.

For the four months period from January 1st, gross revenues were $45,064,388, a decrease of $11,370,281 as compared with the corresponding period of 1931. Operating expenses were $45,615,364, a reduction of $10,826,053 as compared with the four months of 1931, and net revenue was $449,023, a decrease of $544,327 from the net of the corresponding period of last year.

China Introduces Dial Into Telephone System

Shanghai.—The Chinese "hello boy," who has faithfully served telephone subscribers in the foreign settlements at Shanghai since telephones first were introduced, made his final bow recently, when the automatic system for the International Settlement and the French Concession was completed.

While Shanghai has been proud of the "hello boys"—Chinese men who could converse with subscribers in half a dozen languages—the advantages of the automatic system in a city where languages are so varied are already apparent. Chinese residents have quickly learned to use the automatic system.

Discovery Permits Quick Diagnosis Of Pneumonia

Allows Administration of Life-Saving Serum in Shorter Time

Toronto.—The recent discovery in the Connaught Laboratories here of a quick method of analysis of types of pneumonia to allow the administration of the serum particularly adapted to prevent its development was greeted by Canadian Public Health and Ontario Health officials as one of the greatest advances yet made in the fight against this disease.

Announcement of the discovery was made last week before the annual convention of health officials at the Royal York Hotel by Dr. M. H. Brown, who has been in charge of this branch of research in the Connaught Laboratories for the last three years.

Doctors stated that Dr. Brown's announcement practically means the solution of the pneumonia problem. Sera has been discovered for the various types of pneumonia within the last year or two, but their effectiveness has been hampered by the inability to quickly ascertain the type of pneumonia from which the patient suffered.

The only means of ascertaining pneumonia types is from analysis of the sputum. Formerly this process required from 18 to 36 hours, with the result the patient often had passed beyond the stage where the disease could be arrested before serum was administered.

With the Connaught Laboratory method, the type of pneumonia from which the patient suffers can be found within three or four hours after receipt of the sputum, and concentrated serum given for the particular type involved.

"When the serum is given early, the results are striking, giving a very toxic and extremely ill patient marked relief," Dr. Brown said.

For the last couple of years, Dr. Brown has also been working upon the perfection of sera for types 1 and 2, pneumonococcus, the most common cases of pneumonia. Type 3, the most virulent which is almost always fatal, has been found to respond to an enzyme which was discovered last year by a New York research expert. This was described to the meeting by Dr. Brown.

'32 World Wheat Average Exceeds Previous Year

Rome.—The International Institute of Agriculture recently estimated the 1932 world wheat average exceeds that of 1931 by 7,000,000 acres.

The Winter wheat area has decreased about 4,000,000 acres, but the increase in the acreage of Spring wheat was expected to be approximately 11,000,000.

Increases noted were: Argentina, 1,700,000 acres; Australia, 1,000,000; Russia, 1,000,000; United States, 7,000,000 acres.

The Spring wheat acreage in Canada is expected to show a decrease of nearly 1,000,000.

Italian Government restrictions on use of foreign wheat have brought a heavy decline in importations during the last 10 months.

In that period only 16,608,483 bushels were imported compared with 64,870,394 bushels for the corresponding period of the previous year.

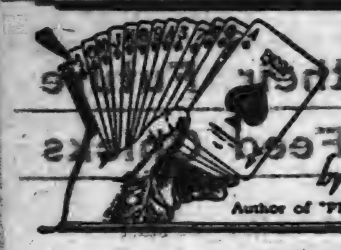
The restrictions were applied directly to milling, in the form of a fixed percentage of domestic grain which millers were obliged to use in grinding flour. The result was so successful that the home grain production area and a gradual easing of the ban has become necessary.

British Engineering Firms See Big Opening In China

London.—A group of British engineering firms with aggregate capital of £30,000,000 (certainly about $125,000,000) were said by the Express to have formed a company to assist in the industrial development of China.

They have in mind, the paper said, the "interests of the heavy engineering industry of Great Britain" as well.

The companies said they believed there were vast fields of remunerative opportunities in China awaiting exploitation, including the building of railroads, factories, bridges, harbors and similar developments.



Britain to Pay War Debt To U.S. in Ten Instalments

London.—Without prejudice to any future war debt readjustment, the British Government recently instructed its ambassador at Washington to sign an agreement with the United States in ten yearly instalments, plus four per cent. interest.

This action was in conformity with the recent request which the United States sent to its debtor nations asking for a formal agreement to cover the sum suspended during the debt holiday.

Farmers Act to Protect Frogs

How to play Bridge AUCTION and CONTRACT

by Wynne Ferguson

Author of "PRACTICAL AUCTION BRIDGE"

ARTICLE No. 25

It isn't often that a problem can arouse such interest as the following one. It has so many variations that it is almost impossible to cover them all, but the main ones have been selected and analyzed as they all contain good points of play that come up frequently enough to make the analysis well worth while. Try it out before reading the following solution:

Problem

Hearts—A, 10, 8, 2
Clubs—7, 4
Diamonds—none
Spades—6

Hearts—K, 6, 5	Y	Hearts—Q, 9, 7
Clubs—3	A B	Clubs—6
Diamonds—3, 4	Z	Diamonds—none
Spades—8		Spades—10, 7, 5

Hearts—J, 3
Clubs—5, 2
Diamonds—5
Spades—J, 9

Hearts are trumps and Z is in the lead. How can Y Z win four of the seven tricks against the best defense?

The only correct play is for Z to lead the deuce of clubs, forcing A to win the trick with the eight of clubs. A can now make any one of three leads. (1) He may lead the eight of diamonds or (2) the eight of spades or (3) the five of hearts. The eight of diamonds is A's best lead. Y should trump with the ten of hearts and B should overtrump with the Queen. B may now lead (a) the nine of hearts or (b) the five of spades or (c) the seven of hearts. If the nine of hearts, Z should cover with the jack, A with the king and Y with the ace. There are numerous variations but none present any difficulty for Y Z to make four tricks.

If, however, B leads the five of spades, Y wins the trick with the queen of spades and leads the deuce of hearts, allowing B to win the trick with the seven of hearts. B should now lead the ten of spades. Z plays the jack and A is forced either to discard or trump. If the former, Y also discards; if the latter, Y overtrumps, leads his trumps and wins the balance of the tricks. At trick three, B's best lead is the seven of hearts. Z and A should play low and Y wins the trick with the eight of hearts. Y should now lead the queen of spades and all follow. He should now lead the ace of trumps and follow with the seven of clubs, which A is forced to trump with the king of hearts. Y now wins the last trick with the deuce of hearts. The foregoing represents the solution and variations when A leads the eight of diamonds at trick two.

Suppose A leads the eight of spades at trick two. Y wins this trick with the queen of spades and should now lead the deuce of hearts. B should play the seven, Z the jack and A should win with the king. B can now make only the queen of trumps. Suppose at trick two A leads the five of hearts. Y Z can now easily win all but one heart trick. Therefore, all three possible plays by A after Z leads a club give Y Z four tricks.

On the lead of the eight of diamonds by A at trick two it Y trumps with the ten of trumps and B refuses to overtrump, Y should lead the queen of spades and then the deuce of trumps. If B plays the seven or nine of hearts, Z should play the jack and force A to win the trick with the king. In this way also Y Z win four of the seven tricks. These variations are all possible after Z makes the correct lead of the deuce of clubs and, if properly played by both sides, give Y Z four of the seven tricks.

No other lead is correct. Most of the solvers thought the five of diamonds was the correct lead allowing A to win the trick and on which Y should discard the queen of spades. This solution, however, is incorrect. A should lead the eight of clubs and follow with the eight of spades. Z wins this trick with the jack of spades. The situation is as follows:

Hearts—A, 10, 8, 2
Clubs—none
Diamonds—none

Hearts—K, 6, 5	Y	Hearts—Q, 9, 7
Clubs—none	A B	Clubs—none
Diamonds—4	Z	Diamonds—none
Spades—none		Spades—7

Hearts—J, 3
Clubs—5
Diamonds—none
Spades—9

It should be evident that A B must now win the best tricks no matter how Y Z play. By doing so, Y Z only score three tricks so the lead of a diamond at trick one by Z is clearly incorrect.

Another suggested solution that should be noted is that of the lead of the five of diamonds by Z at trick one, A play the eight and Y trump with the ten of hearts. The defense of this play is for B to overtrump with the queen and then lead the nine of hearts. An analysis of this defense will show also that Y Z can win only three tricks, thus proving that the diamond lead at trick one is incorrect whether Y discards the queen of spades or trumps with the ten of hearts.

Another solution was for Z to lead the nine of spades at trick one, forcing Y to win the trick. A lead by Y at trick two of either a trump or club will do him no good and, with this opening, Y Z can make only three tricks if A B make the proper defense. The conclusion is obvious, therefore, that the only correct opening lead by Z that will enable him and his partner to win four tricks is the deuce of clubs.

This problem has been analyzed at such great length because every variation given is tricky and interesting. The writer would suggest that each of the variations be played out and tested from every angle. It is impossible to find a better problem than this one as a test of sound, careful play.

Lost Ugly Fat

Her Husband says she Looks Five Years Younger!

There is a certain weight at which every woman looks her loveliest—not skinny underweight nor pendulous overweight, but normal weight. We find artists, doctors, theatrical producers (and husbands!) all agreed upon this point. Read what this woman of 29 says about it:—

"Having heard from a friend of mine that she had lost considerable weight since taking Kruschen Salts, I started using them in July last, when I weighed 177 lbs. I have lost weight steadily since then, and am now 159 lbs.—my normal weight. Moreover, I feel brighter and more energetic in every way. My age is 29. My husband is a very severe critic. He says I look five years younger. There is no other reason for my loss of weight except Kruschen, as I do not take any particular diet."—Mrs. S. R.

"Taken every morning, Kruschen effects a perfectly natural clearance of undigested food substances and all excessive watery waste matter. Unless this wastage is regularly expelled, Nature will eventually store it up out of the way in the form of ugly fat.

The Windmill

The green corn waving in the dale,
The ripe grass waving on the hill:
I lean across the paddock pale
And gaze upon the giddy mill.

Its hurtling sails a mighty sweep
Cut thro' the air: with rushing sound
Each strikes in fury down the steep,
Rattles, and whirls in chase around.

Besides his sacks the miller stands
On high within the open door.
A book and pencil in his hands,
His grist and meal he reckoneth o'er.

His tireless merry slave the wind
Is busy with his work today.
From whencesoe'er, he comes to grind;
He hath a will and knows the way.

He gives the creaking sails a spin,
The circling millstones faster flee,
The shuddering timbers groan within,
And down the shoot the meal runs free.

The miller giveth him no thanks,
And doth not much his work o'erlook:
He stands beside the sacks, and ranks
The figures in his dusty book.

—From "The Poetical Works of Robert Bridges."

He—"The woman I marry shall have everything money can buy."

She—"I supose that's why you are looking for a wife with money."

First Daffodil

I who have lain without a sound
In my dark coffin underground,
Now hear the stirring roots of trees,
The brown earth rising to her knees,
Unfettered now the springing sod—
Up from the pulsing soil the clod
Reaches to that forgotten blue—
A sparing light that I share, too—
For I who lay in narrow earth
Now know the miracle of birth.

Splinters

A man can never be a true gentleman in manner until he becomes a true gentleman at heart. Too many people think they are broadminded when they merely are too lazy to form an opinion. The safest way on earth to keep out of trouble is at once the simplest and the hardest. It's keeping one's mouth shut. Some girls expect a man to bring enough sunshine into their lives to give them a coat of tan. An amateur never knows how bad he is until he tries to turn professional.

"You remember when you cured my rheumatism a couple of years ago," asked the patient, "and you told me that I should avoid dampness."

"Yes, that's right," replied the doctor, approvingly.

"Well, I've come to ask you if I can take a bath."

You can always tell when a man has passed middle age. He is the one who is always telling you he never felt younger in his life.

"Are you a spinster?" said the clergyman officiating at a Lancashire wedding.

"No," replied the bride; "I am a weaver."

Just a little advance notice passed on to me:

Three [illegible] installed a new radio. Nancy listened with rapt attention to everything—music, speeches and station announcements. That night she knelt to say her "Now I lay me." At the end she paused a moment, and then said: "Tomorrow night at this same time there will be another prayer."

Bone Chewing Cows

Depletion of Mineral Reserves in the Body, One of the Factor in Milk Production Shrinkage

A cow producing an average of six gallons of milk a day for 40 weeks, will include in the milk produced 32 pounds of mineral substance. The source of the mineral substance in milk is in the mineral salts of the feed eaten. If the feed supplied to the cow during the period of no pasture do not contain sufficient mineral matter to supply the demands of milk secretion, the cow is then at a loss to continue to secrete milk in a normal amount, unless she draws on the minerals that have been incorporated in her skeleton. Of course there is a limit to this, and trouble follows when the supply of minerals runs low. Some things may happen, a reduction in milk production, a weakening of the bones, a stiffness of the joints and a loss of condition. The animal tries to offset the drain on her body by eating unnatural things, such as bones and wood. The bone and wood chewing may supply in part what the cow needs and has a craving for, usually lime and phosphorus. If the habit of bone chewing has developed in your herd of cattle, during previous years, try and offset it this year by using steamed bone flour, or any mineral mixtures containing lime and phosphorus. Cows that are already in bad shape through mineral deficiency can be returned to normal condition by the use of a tonic containing phosphoric acid, in addition to the supplemental feeding of steamed bone meal.

An Avenue of Trees

Everywhere, as we approached Portsmouth, we saw quantities of timber lying near the road, ready to be conveyed to the King's magazines. This is both a picturesque and a proper decoration of the avenues to a dockyard.

About the tenth stone we entered a corner of Bere Forest, which afforded a beautiful scene. We rode through woods of oak which were sometimes close, and sometimes open. The road, which was everywhere ample, presented us in one place with an irregular vista; in another it carried us into a lawn interspersed with trees, or of patches of wood. The whole is so beautiful a piece of nature that if it were placed in an improved scene, it might be made, with very little art, to unite with the high style of decoration.—From "Observations on the Coasts of Hampshire, Sussex and Kent," by W. Gilpin.

Hydro By-Law Big Contention

The quashing of the Hydro By Law which carried at the polls last January in Streetsville, has caused a lot of criticism and congratulation. Mr. W.C.Andrew, who entered the appeal, is being strongly condemned by some who voted for Hydro, while the opposition is giving him the glad hand on his success in having the By-Law quashed.

Reeve H. W. Hope is very much annoyed at the judgment handed out at Osgoode Hall and says another by law will be prepared for the rate payers to vote on. He is sure it will carry with a big majority, while Mr. Andrew is quite confident it will be defeated, because a lot of people who supported the by-law last time will vote against it next time.

Mr. Andrew says that the expenditure of $13,000 to make the change to Hydro at the present time when we are all suffering from the depression is unwarranted. The Hydro would cost us more in the long run, many would have new motors to buy and the Hydro don't guarantee a constant supply of power any more than the local plant does..

However, we are not going to comment on the matter—the rate payers can solve the problem for themselves. We expect another vote on the question will be taken at the same time as the regular municipal election next January.

MUSICAL RECITAL GIVEN BY PUPILS OF MISS MABEL HICKS

A large audience greeted young Streetsville and community in the United Church, on Saturday afternoon, May 28th, when the pupils of Miss Mabel Hicks put on their annual musical recital. The young performers went through their numbers very cleverly. As usual the wee tots were most appealing and many of the numbers by more mature pupils were thoroughly effective.

Their numbers were very cordially received and had it been feasible there would have been many recalls and encores. It was in fact one of the most successful recitals within the present writer's memory.

The two-hour-and-a-half program cannot be reviewed here in detail but for the present a list of the names of those who contributed to the program will be sufficient: Verna Dowling, Billy and Russell Evans, Wilma Hamilton, Betty Reed, Betty Adamson, Barbara King, Marion and Vera Steen, Jeanette Couse, Elma and Verna Sparling, Doreen Chamberlain, Jean Graydon, Maynard Redick, Miriam Perry, Mr. Harry Burton, Ruth Ross, Dorothy Durie, Norman Denny, Mildred Stephens, Jean and Ilah Featherstone, Muriel Mason, Elizabeth and Erma Bailey, Marion Lindsay, Mary Switzer, Margaret Falconer, Doris Waite, and Tannis Riches.

Too much praise cannot be accorded Miss Hicks, who week after week throughout the year, teaches arduously the large number under her musical care. Last Saturday's recital was a fitting culmination of the efficient work by Miss Hicks. Everyone feels that the community is to be congratulated that it has a lady of such high musical attainments to direct our youth in the cultivation of this most cultural art.

The writer is not an authority on music, but has a sense of appreciation of its beauty and is impressed by the progress each pupil has made during the past year. A year ago how tremblingly the beginners manipulated their wee fingers on the key board, but this year bore evidence of effective teaching and a consciousness of advanced knowledge in music. Thus reaching a stage which places them beyond being amateurs and into the realm of what may later develop into professionalism.

One voices the sentiments of all readers of The Review, that Miss Hicks and her pupils throughout this coming year may have still greater success.

BRITISH DIPLOMACY

Absence of Plan and Disposition to "Muddle Through" Is Thoroughly British, Says Chamberlain.

Writing in Foreign Affairs, Sir Austen Chamberlain disclaims any machiavellian subtlety in diplomacy. He endeavors to explain the difference between British, French and German psychology as follows:—

"The German is by nature a systematizer. He excels in organization.

SIR AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN

He likes to see where he is going, to foresee as far as may be the accidents of the route, and to be assured of good accommodation at the end of his journey 'according to plan.'

"How often did not the phrase recur during the war in German bulletins? 'The plan' was at once their security and their danger—often their most efficient instrument but sometimes their master.

"The Englishman, on the other hand, finds such systematic planning irksome and uncongenial. He submits himself to it with reluctance even when circumstances impose it on him, and, even while submitting, he distrusts the process in which he is engaged, doubts his power to pierce the mists of the future, and secretly relies on his capacity to meet emergencies as they arise.

"In difficult times there is no more common ending to a political discussion between Englishmen than the phrase: 'Well, I suppose we shall muddle through somehow.' It could never occur to a German or a Frenchman to seek consolation in such a reflection."

TAKES HIS HOUSE TO WORK.

Former Canadian Enjoys Home Comforts While on Road.

Taking their home to business is an experiment which is working out most satisfactorily for Mr. and Mrs. Jack Wylie.

Mr. Wylie, a former resident of London, Ontario, is a traveller whose territory cover the states of Florida, Georgia and North and South Carolina. In such a climate Mr. and Mrs. Wylie find no difficulty in taking their home with them as they travel, and the latter accompanies her husband on his journeys, keeping house most enjoyably in their "house car."

The travelling house is fitted most attractively, with all the needs of the small, modern home. A refrigerator simplifies the food question; there is a tiny stove and a charming "living-room," with couches, easy chairs, a handsome velvet rug and the general appearance of a small but cosy and comfortable home.

REGINA'S GREAT GROWTH.

Less than 50 years ago Regina was a boneyard. Its only industry was the shovelling and shipping of buffalo bones. In fact, the district was referred to as "Pile o' Bones." Then a tented town sprang up as newcomers visioned new life on the prairies. Tents gave way to shacks. Shacks strewn along uncertain prairie trails were then replaced by beautiful structures of brick, native stone, fine woods and cement. Straggling roads, treeless and unshaded, were straightened out. Plants, flowers shrubs and trees were made into borders for beautiful streets and boulevards. To-day, Regina is the capital of Saskatchewan, a city of parks and beautiful homes, and the distributing point for the rich farm lands to the north, south, east and west.

HELPING EYE TO SEE.

The eye, extraordinarily sensitive though it otherwise can be, experiences great difficulty in discriminating between white and nearly white substances. To this end, an instrument has been designed wherein the eye of the observer has been replaced by a photo-electric cell, which enables the instrument to measure accurately the extremely small differences between "white" surfaces. By this means differences inappreciable to the eye of even a trained observer can be detected.

COMPOSER HONORS PRINCESSES

"Nursery Suite," the most important work by Sir Edward Elgar since 1919 and dedicated to the Duchess of York and her two daughters was heard by the Duke and Duchess of York when they watched Sir Edward conducting the London Symphony Orchestra at the Kingsway Hall, London, for the making of gramophone records of the suite. The duchess enjoyed particularly one of the seven movements, "The Wagon Passes," and asked for it to be played again.

A Thriller on the Air.

Police, stopping a car near Smith Falls, Ontario, in response to a telephone call from a farmer who heard loud cries for help from the passing roadster, were invited to listen in to the final episode of a thriller coming through the loudspeaker of the portable radio set.

Castoria... for CHILDREN'S ailments

ARE you prepared to render first aid and quick comfort the moment your youngster has an upset of any sort? Could you do the right thing —immediately—though the emergency came without warning—perhaps tonight? Castoria is a mother's standby at such times. There is nothing like it in emergencies, and nothing better for everyday use. For a sudden attack of colic, or for the gentle relief of constipation; to allay a feverish spell, or to soothe a fretful baby that can't sleep. This pure vegetable preparation is always ready to ease an ailing youngster. It is just as harmless as the recipe on the wrapper reads. If you see Chas. H. Fletcher's signature, it is geniune Castoria. It is harmless to the smallest infant; doctors will tell you so.

You can tell from the formula on the wrapper how mild it is, and how good for little systems. But continue with Castoria until a child is grown.

The Aztec Mystery

A Thrilling Story of the Old West

BY MURRAY LEINSTER

SYNOPSIS.

Sonny Holman, believing he has been cheated out of ownership of the Aztec mine, holds up the mine payrolls. Janet Laurier, who holds legal title to the Aztec, offers a reward for his capture. She is kidnapped by Garcia's gang, a band of desperadoes, but Sonny follows and rescues her. To his surprise he finds that she suspects him of being in league with Garcia and a confederate in the kidnapping.

Tilford, manager of the mine, imports some guards. Two of them go into the town's biggest saloon and order drinks.

CHAPTER XI.

"Charge 'em to Tilford," said the man with the faded eyes. "He'll pay 'em if he gets ready."

"Yes, suh," said the barkeep. "I'll do that."

Sweat stood suddenly on his forehead. The man with the scarred face was fingering the holster at his hip, staring at the bartender. The man with the faded eyes was gazing at him without a trace of expression. But the blonde man turned and walked out. The scarred man sneered and followed him. And the bartender mopped his forehead when the doors closed behind them. He felt very cold. There had been no hint of a threat, nothing but the most polite replies, but the bartender shivered.

"That li'l feller, he's a killer," he murmured nervously. "I hope he ain't figurin' on stayin' in town permanent. I sure do hope that. If he does, I'm goin' to move for the good of my nervous system."

But news arrived with the cessation of work at the mine that the two men were guards, hired by Tilford with Janet Laurier's authority, to stop the stealing of the Aztec's ore.

Jake Hornsby, driver of the stagecoach, received the bartender's confidences.

"He's got them cold, fishy eyes that look all the time like they was thinkin' about somethin' else," the barkeep confided. "I ain't a scary person, but I got a lot of fondness for my health and he ain't a healthy person to have around."

"Which one's that?" demanded Jake, bristling. He seemed to be nursing some private grievance.

"The li'l one," said the barkeep, polishing a glass uneasily. "The big one, he might plug yuh in the back, from the looks of him, but the li'l one he'll stan' right in front of yuh an' right in the middle of talkin' to yuh he'll drill yuh."

"How d'yuh know?" demanded Jake again. "You gimme a slug o' trantula juice, if yuh ain't got anything stronger."

The bartender complied. "Well," he said nervously, "I know him all right. His name's Gleason, an' I seen him do that li'l thing one time in Dos Pasos. He went up to a feller an' began talkin' to him. The other feller answered back. An' Gleason he started to roll a cigarette, an' he finished it, listenin' to what the other feller had to say, an' then he lighted his cigarette an' chucked the match away an' dropped his hand to his hip an' shot that feller dead. No warnin'. No cussin'. Just shot him. An' then he rid away whilst we was still starin' at the feller on the floor."

"Hm," said Jake coldly. "Gimme another slug of this here side-windin' rye. What's he doin' in town here?"

The bartender glanced nervously at the door. "Tilford sent for him, they tell me. He's goin' to be a guard on the mine, to stop ore stealin' an' hold-ups. There's goin' to be six of them."

Jake downed his drink and hitched his belt around. A gun was in his holster today. "He's a frien' of Tilford's huh?" he said coldly. "Well, all I got to say is, frien's of Tilford's better step aside when I came prancin' along."

"What's happened?"

"Tilford," said Jake, in a tone of concentrated venom, "he had me fired today off of drivin' the stage."

"What for?"

"He's runnin' for sheriff," explained Jake in a voice that would have made a five-gallon jar of vitriol explode from sheer envy. "He give me some han' bills to pass out explainin' how noble he was an' knockin' the ol' sheriff an' Sonny Holman. An' I said I wouldn't insult my passengers by askin' 'em to vote for a horned toad, so he went an' got me fired."

"Sho!" said the bartender nervously. "That's sure a shame, Jake—"

The swinging doors opened and he stopped short. The two men of the morning had come in again. The man with the scarred face sneered silently at the Roaring Zephyr and all its patrons. The little man, Gleason, walked directly to the bar. The bartender hastened anxiously to wait on him.

Gleason tapped two fingers on the bar. The bartender hastily pushed up two glasses and a bottle; so hastily that one of the glasses toppled over, rolled to the floor. The bartender gasped a little and replaced it with another glass as quickly as his fingers could move.

"What's the matter?" asked Gleason in his expressionless voice.

"N-nothin', suh," said the bartender hastily. "Nothin' at all."

The man with the scarred face sneered. "We like service," he announced. "Stay around in case we want yuh."

"Yes, suh!"

Jake bristled every inch of his five feet three. "Hey," he snapped acidly, "I come in here for a drink. Mistuh bartender, are you waitin' on me or them?"

There was dead silence in the Roaring Zephyr. All of a dozen men were there, either in groups of two or three at the bar, or else lounging about the tables that surrounded the yet deserted dance floor. The entertainment at the Roaring Zephyr would not begin for some time yet, and these were the before supper customers. Later, uproarious festivity would be in order. But now there was dead silence while every man watched Jake Hornsby hitch his holster around and pound angrily on the bar.

"I come in here," repeated Jake coldly, "for drinks." He addressed his remarks solely to the bartender. "Do I get 'em, or don't I?"

The scarred face man turned truculently, but it was Gleason with the expressionless eyes who spoke. "The bartender's busy."

"Busy hell!" rasped Jake. "You got your drinks. I want mine! An' I don't perpose to hang aroun' till all o' Tilford's frien's get through before I git it, neither!"

Gleason fiddled with his neckerchief, turning his faded blue eyes upon the angry Jake. "What yuh got against friends of Tilford?" he asked without intonation.

"I don't like the company they keep," said Jake acidly. His hand hung near his belt.

"Maybe yuh prefer Sonny Holman's?" asked Gleason, still in the flat, monotonous tone.

"Yes, suh," said Jake venomously. "Sonny Holman is a frien' of mine!"

"The.," said Gleason without expression, "my frien' here will give yuh a drink."

The man with the scarred face had his glass in his hand. He sneered at Jake and suddenly threw the liquor squarely in Jake's eyes. It scalded and stung, burning horribly. Jake roared and clawed at his gun.

And Gleason shot him.

Jake crumpled to the floor, still trying to get his gun out. It did slip from its holster—and Gleason deliberately shot him again.

There was a stir ard a growl. Gleason gazed about him with his blank, faded eyes. "I call on you folks to witness," he said without emotion, "he went for his gun first."

The gun in his hand, his companion ready to fire, and both of them with the deadly air of killers, made the growl die away to a murmur.

Gleason and the other man drank again, deliberately. Then they went out of the Roaring Zephyr.

The tale of that happening went through the town like a whirlwind. Men were raging, but the bartender shakenly narrated what he knew of Gleason, and Gleason was identified. Many others had heard of him, and what they had heard made them realize that to pick a quarrel with him was suicide. The sheriff, now badly hurt and still fighting for life, was the only man who could cope with him. And the sheriff had held office so long and fulfilled his duty so rigorously that lynch law had ceased to seem the logical remedy for a killing in Gila County.

Friends of Jake raged, and burned up the wires to find the sheriff's two duly appointed deputies, somnolently discharging their duties in distant parts of the county. One was found fifty miles away, with a broken leg as a result of his horse stepping in a prairie dog hole. The other was off to the south, trailing a man reported to have stolen horses from the Lazy Y and to be making for the border. Neither was available for the Moleville necessity.

Gleason and his companion strolled about the streets dropping into a saloon here and there, aware that they were observed by all observers. The man with the scarred face wore a continual sneer. Gleason's face, utterly without expression, showed no emotion whatever, but his pale eyes seemed to glint with a faint amusement as the male population of the town grudgingly made way for him.

They were back in the Roaring Zephyr at midnight. Then the gaiety should have been in full swing, but tonight it seemed to have a false note. As the two of them strode in the doors a painted girl was singing shrilly from the dance floor. The tables were crowded with men, and the girls in the place were outnumbered three and four to one by those who should have been their admirers and patrons.

AIMING HIGH

It is a law of this universe that the best things shall be seldomest seen in their best form . . . And therefore, while in all things that we see, or do, we are to desire perfection, and strive for it, we are nevertheless not to the nearer thing, in its narrow accomplishment, above the nobler thing, in its mighty progress; not to esteem smooth minuteness above shattered majesty! not to prefer victory to honorable defeat; not to lower the level of our aim, that we may more surely enjoy the complacency of success.

CONFIDENCE

Confidence is conqueror of men; victorious both over them and in them. The iron will of one stout heart shall make a thousand quail. A feeble dwarf, dauntlessly resolved, will turn the tide of battle; and rally to a nobler strife the giants that had fled.—Tupper.

BABY'S OWN SOAP

Best for Baby — Best for You

No "just as good" oil says lubrication expert

In every line of endeavor there is always a leader—and countless followers. The field of household lubrication is no exception. Unfortunately the general public doesn't always appreciate the difference between the real thing and the "just as good"—but household experts do.

They know an oil intended for general household lubrication should clean and protect as well as lubricate. 3-in-One Oil does these three things because it is a scientific compound of three high grade products—animal, mineral and vegetable oils. It is distinctly in a class by itself.

3-in-One costs more to make than ordinary oil, but less to use. If you want the best possible service from your sewing machine, vacuum cleaner, lawn mower, washer, electric fan and other household devices, insist on the old reliable 3-in-One Oil. At good stores everywhere. For your protection, look for the trade mark "3-in-One" printed in Red on every package.

Reminiscences

Speaking of "Making the Most of Your Life," Messrs. Morgan and Webb quote Chauncey Depew—a real humorist, if you please—as once saying:

"My grandfather died of worry, and my father died of worry. I was dying of worry when I decided to take up humor—to see the genial and amusing side of life. It was humor that saved my health."

Depew was a young man until he passed on at the age of 94.

• • •

One of Mr. Depew's stories came out of a visit he paid to St. Paul's Cathedral. He was looking at the tomb of the great Duke of Wellington, when a guide edged up to him and said:

"Many Americans come here, but the most remarkable of them was Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll. He was very inquisitive and wanted to know all about Wellington's tomb.

• • •

"I told him that the Duke's body was first put in a wooden coffin, and this was enclosed in steel; that this had made for it a position in a stone weighing twenty tons, and over that was another huge stone weighing forty tons. He gave me a slap on the back which sent me flying quite a distance and exclaimed:

"'Old man, you have got him a safe. If he ever escapes cable at my expense to Robert G. Ingersoll, Peoria, Illinois, U.S.A.'"

• • •

Then there was the story of a young clergyman who was commanded to preach before Queen Victoria at Windsor, and who sought out Disraeli, then Prime Minister, for some pointers.

"If you preach thirty minutes," advised Dizzy, "Her Majesty will be bored. If you preach fifteen minutes, Her Majesty will be pleased. If you preach ten minutes, Her Majesty will be delighted."

"But," said the young clergyman, "what can a preacher possibly say in ten minutes?"

"That," replied Dizzy, "will be a matter of indifference to Her Majesty."

• • •

Mentioning Disraeli reminds me that his wife, the famous Mary Anne, has a biography all to herself. And no married man will read "Mary Anne Disraeli," by James Sykes, without agreeing, perhaps only to himself, that she was "the perfect wife." Why, for thirty-three years of their married life Mary Anne cut (and later dyed) Dizzy's hair every two or three weeks—meticulously preserving the curl over the forehead, a characteristic feature of his portraits and caricatures.

• • •

Furthermore, she kept the hair! This Disraeli discovered when examining his dead wife's treasures. She had never reaped the crop without, as he put it, "garnering the harvest."

To cut the hair (as Mr. Sykes well says) was a mark of affection; to keep it, surely, an act of adoration.

The new Kipling book of stories and poems, "Limits and Renewals,"—his first in six years—recalls the days of long ago when he arrived in London from India in search of fame and fortune and lodged in some small rooms—up two flights of stairs—in Villiers Street, alongside Charing Cross railway station. One morning a friend called, and when he found himself in Kipling's sitting room he was surprised to see a handsome mirror which stood over the fireplace smashed to smithereens.

"Snakes," said Kipling, noticing the look of astonishment on his friends face. "I was dozing in my chair yesterday evening and my foot slipped out of my shoe, which for comfort I had unlaced. Half-waking, I felt with my foot for the shoe and began slipping it in, when my toes touched the leather tongue. Snake! flashed across my sleepy brain. I gave one desperate kick and when the shoe struck that mirror I realized that I was in London and not in India."

We hear much about quick and easy divorce these days, but one hundred years ago, divorces were obtained even quicker and easier—at all events in Florida, where the Governor of the Territory had the right to grant them. At that time, the Governor was John H. Eaton, husband of the celebrated Peggy Eaton. Peggy, you may recall, was the storm centre of one of the most dramatic, political and social scandals Washington has ever known.

• • •

By the way, Peggy's own account of that historic drama—in which she played the leading part—is given for the first time in "The Autobiography of Peggy Eaton," just published, and an amazing and intensely human story it is. But that is neither here nor there, except to connect up the appointment of her husband, John H. Eaton, as Governor of Florida, after he had retired as a result of the scandal, from President Andrew Jackson's Cabinet, in which he was Secretary of War.

• • •

Three days after his arrival in Florida, Governor Eaton granted—as was his right—his first divorce, to a dissatisfied wife.

"I am going to give them as fast as they ask for them," Peggy quotes him as saying. "If they cannot live together in peace I am not going to keep them together."

"He scared me half out of my life," adds Peggy. "He would give seven divorces a day. I remonstrated with him, telling him that it would ruin the population, and he playfully threatened to divorce me if I did not stop. That first year of his reign was actually frightful to matrimonial circles. It separated an amazing number of couples. Several ladies told me that they hardly knew how to behave themselves any more. They were afraid to speak to their husbands for fear they would find themselves divorced next morning.

Another Grand Canyon in Africa

A great valley like the Grand Canyon of Arizona, cut nearly a mile deep across plateau lands of southern Abyssinia, but inhabited only by monkeys, and seldom if ever seen by white people, has been discovered by the Italian explorer, the Duke of Abruzzi.

One of Italy's colonies, a part of Somaliland, lies just south of the Abyssinian border. Says D. E. E. Free, in his Week's Science (New York).

"Through this colony flows the river called the Webi Shebeli, the Abyssinian headwaters of which the Italian Government commissioned Duke to explore. At one place along this river, he reports, the water has cut a deep gorge through almost horizontal rock strata much as the Colorado River has cut the Grand Canyon.

"The gorge is reported to be six to twelve miles wide and from three-quarters of a mile to one mile deep. Its sides are almost bare of vegetation, as is true also of the Grand Canyon, so that the horizontal rock layers are exposed. The coloring and the unusual pinnacles and other rock forms sculptured by erosion in the American Grand Canyon are reported to be less spectacular in the newly discovered African duplicate.

"Just as the waters of the Colorado River, after emerging from the American Grand Canyon, now are to be used for power and irrigation by the new government project at Boulder Dam, so the river that flows through the African canyon ultimately will be put to use, the Duke believes, as a source of power."

Canada's Fur Imports

In 1930 Canada imported raw and dressed furs and fur goods to the value of $9,865,433, and exported furs of Canadian origin, either raw, dressed or manufactured, valued at $15,357,386.

Nearly the whole of this sum was the value of raw furs, which had a total export value of $15,202,168, of which the British Isles took over $8,525,000 worth, and the United States nearly $6,000,000. Fur of Canadian origin is of notably high quality and consequently is in demand in the best markets.

Children and Adversity

By Ray Lyman Wilbur

Personally and speaking broadly, I think that unless we descend to a level far beyond anything that we at present have known our children are apt to profit rather than suffer from what is going on.

We must set up the neglect of prosperity against the care of adversity. With prosperity many parents unload the responsibilities for their children onto others. With adversity the home takes its normal place. There is no substitute for intelligent parental care exercised throughout the day, at meal times, and in controlling proper sleeping conditions at night. More important still, there is no substitute for the parent in the development of the spiritual, moral and mental make-up of the child.

WITH THE LONE SCOUTS

The value of Scout training and its application in times of emergency, by boys who might otherwise have been at a loss to know the correct thing to do, is shown by the two following paragraphs which appeared in the press recently:

Scouts' Training Saves Their Mother

Two Scouts of Westfield, N.J., returned from school at noon to find their mother unconscious on the floor of the gas-filled kitchen. One threw open doors and windows and phoned the doctor; the other immediately began artificial respiration. The doctor, on another case, arrived twenty minutes later to find the mother partially recovered. He declared the boys' prompt action had saved her life.

Scouts Again Avert Panic

Cool and prompt action by Boy Scouts in directing a large crowd to safety probably averted a panic at the City Auditorium, Atlanta, Ga., when fire broke out during a benefit performance in which a large number of children were taking part. The children were marshalled out the stage exits and the audience directed through the main doors.

Lone Scouts should prepare themselves so that they too, in times of emergency, will know exactly the right thing to do, and be able to do it promptly and efficiently.

Mr. Beatty Again Scouts' President

Upon the nomination of His Excellency the Governor General, Mr. E. W. Beatty, K.C., of the Canadian Pacific Railway, was re-elected President of the Canadian Boy Scouts Association at the recent annual meeting, held at Ottawa.

How Many Scouts in Australia?

New South Wales, 16,633; Victoria, 16,279; South Australia, 7,874; Queensland, 3,767; Tasmania, 1,866; West Australia, 4,429. In New Zealand there are 13,200.

A World Target For Gifts

Probably few crowned heads or other national figures are in receipt of such a constant stream of honours and gifts as come to Pax Hill, the home of Lord Baden-Powell. One of the latest was a silk scarf and an icon representing St. George, presented on behalf of Russian Scouts in Foreign Countries by Dr. B. A. Perott, their International Commissioner.

A New Honour For B.-P.

The latest honour conferred upon Lord Baden-Powell is the Grand Cross of the Order of the Grand Duke Gedimin of Lithuania. The decoration was presented by the Lithuanian Minister to Great Britain on behalf of the President of the Republic, the Honorary Chief Scout of Lithuania, "in recognition of his services to Lithuania in the cause of international good will through the Boy Scout Movement."

The Lone Scout Summer Camp Site

The Lone Scout Commissioner and a party of Lone Scouts and Rovers recently visited Ebor Park, which is the beautiful spot at which our summer camp is to be held in July. The Park is looking very nice indeed, in spite of the fact that the ice storms during the past winter have damaged some of the branches of the fine old trees.

The Scouts cleaned up the Lone Scout Camp Site, and put it in shape for the summer, and helped to prepare the swimming pool for its activities.

There will be many Lone Scouts who will be anxious to take part in all the fun which will take place in this Camp. Remember the dates—July 4th to 16th inclusive—and send in your reservation as soon as possible. For fuller particulars see the Magician of the Lone Scout Trails.

There must be many boys living on farms or in villages or on rural routes who have often wished that they could be Boy Scouts.

Here is your opportunity. Although it is impossible for you to attend the meetings of an ordinary Scout Troop, you can be a Lone Scout, and follow the Scout Programme at home.

Write for particulars to The Lone Scout Dept., Boy Scouts Association, 330 Bay Street, Toronto 2.—"Lone Ed"

The Greatest Joy

Our greatest joy is not in never falling, but in rising every time we fall.—Goldsmith.

A Desert Day

The summer's night at end, the sun stands up as a crown of hostile flames from that huge covert of inhospitable sandstone bergs; the desert day dawns not little and little, but it is noontide in an hour. The sun enters as a tyrant upon the waste landscape, darts upon us a torment of fiery beams, not to be remitted till the late evening. No mating here of birds; not a rock-partridge cock calling with bibulous chuckle over the extreme waterless desolation. Grave is that lofty heat upon the crown of the head; the eye tingle with a sickening shrillness; a subtle trepidation in veins, in the fluidness of this sun-stricken nature; the hot sand-blink is in the eyes, and there is little refreshment to find in the tent's shelter. The worsted booths lead to this fiery rain of sunny light.

The silent air burning about us, we endure breathless till the assr: when the dozing Arabs in the tents revive after their heavy hours. The lingering day draws down to the sunsetting; the herdsmen, weary of the sun, come again with the cattle, to taste in their nearils the first sweetness of mirth and repose. The day is done, and there rises the nightly freshness of this purest mountain air: and then to the cheerful song and the cup of the common fire.—From "Travels in Arabia Deserta," by C. M. Doughty.

Obedience

Obedience is the secret of freedom. A little girl once said to her mother: "Grown-ups are very fortunate; they no longer have to obey."

Wait till you grow up, little girl, and you will see that obedience will demand a the core from you as you become more conscious of life, for obedience is not only a family virtue, but a social, scientific and religious duty.

Sunday School Lesson

June 5. Lesson X—Joseph the Worker—Genesis 41: 46-57. Golden Text—Seest thou a man diligent in his business? he shall stand before kings.—Proverbs 22: 29.

ANALYSIS.

I. A POLICY OF THRIFT, vs. 46-49.
II. DOMESTIC FELICITY, vs. 50-52.
III. FAMINE, YET PLENTY, vs. 53-57.

INTRODUCTION—This chapter relates the dramatic reversal of Joseph's fortunes. At the opening of the chapter, he is a slave in an Egyptian prison; at the close, after skilfully interpreting Pharaoh's dreams, he is installed the Grand Vizier or Governor of Egypt. [illegible] it happened, not [illegible] that one who came as a [illegible] country was ultimately [illegible] position of great power. Pharaoh, [illegible] doubtless aware of a [illegible] quality in the man, and judged him worthy to share with him in the responsibility of government.

I. A POLICY OF THRIFT, vs. 46-49.

Such power as Joseph now attained brought with it its own temptations. There was the temptation, always keenly felt by an Oriental ruler, to fleece the populace and to promote his own interests; the temptation to bask in the royal favor and the plaudits of the multitude, and to neglect the responsibilities attached to great office; the temptation also to turn cynical from the bitter experiences of the years that had gone and, now in office, to make others suffer as he once suffered. Joseph, however, was as noble in power as he had been in privation. He had been made the administrator of the whole land of Egypt. Usually there was an administrator for Lower Egypt, and another for Upper Egypt. But a critical emergency was foreseen; Joseph had been granted powers extraordinary for coping with it. The reign of Amenophis IV., in the New Kingdom has been suggested as the most likely background for Joseph's administration. At that time Egypt was under an official bureaucracy with a highly centralized government. Joseph's agrarian policy would be possible at that time, for Pharaoh was then regarded as the land-owner of the whole of Egypt. In order to carry out his policy Joseph traversed the land, visiting all the nomes (or districts), together with their leading cities. He had recommended to the Pharaoh that in the seven years of plenty, twenty per cent. of the crop should be stored as a provision for the lean years. The Egyptians were thus taught the homely virtue of thrift. The grain was stored in state granaries in the capital towns of the various districts. From numerous paintings on Egyptian ruins, it is possible to form an idea of these granaries. They were conically-shaped, clay buildings. A series of them was enclosed within a high wall. Grain was poured into a window at the top of the granary and was removed through a vent at the bottom. The policy of storing grain in this way became an established institution in Egypt.

II. DOMESTIC FELICITY, vs. 50-52.

In the midst of his busy public duties, Joseph took occasion to establish a home of his own. He married a daughter of one of the priests of On, or Heliopolis, north of Cairo, where an obelisk of the old sun-temple still stands. From very early times On was the seat of a mighty and wealthy priesthood. Their religion was a mixture of the worship of Re, the sun-god, with the worship of a local god, Atum. The high priest of On was one of the most influential persons in the kingdom. This alliance thus linked Joseph with the most powerful interests of Egypt. Without abandoning, in any way, his faith in the God of his fathers, Joseph thoroughly identified himself with the life of his adopted country. The sons of this union were given names which memorialized the goodness of God to Joseph. In ancient times names were not merely names. They served to indicate character or the circumstances under which one was born or lived.

III. FAMINE, YET PLENTY, vs. 53-57.

Egypt derived its fertility from the Nile; Canaan was much poorer because it had no such great river. The Nile annually overflowed its banks; this inundation caused the Egyptian harvests to be relatively sure and very rich. Sometimes, however, the waters of the Nile were diminished through lack of rainfall in the interior of Africa, and failed to overflow its banks. This, of course, occasioned famine with all its misery. Two prolonged periods of drought in Egypt are a matter of historical knowledge. This condition now prevailed during Joseph's administration. The drought was international in its scope and, therefore, very serious. Thanks to Joseph's policy, however, Egypt had enough and to spare. Joseph, as virtual dictator, was himself in supreme control of the state granaries. He was thus in a position to supply his brothers with corn when they came from Canaan.

A SLIGHT MISTAKE.

All sorts of good and bad golfers visited the seaside golf links for the Easter holidays. Among them was a red-faced colonel who was a very bad golfer.

During the round he got into a lot of bunkers and succeeded in cutting up a lot of turf.

After a specially desperate effort he got his ball out of a patch of touch grass, he turned to his caddie.

"Jove," he exclaimed heartily, "it's a great game!"

"What is?" asked the puzzled caddie.

"Why, golf, you fool!" snapped the colonel.

"Oh," murmured the caddie, with a show of surprise, "I thought you were referring to gardening."

Howlers

"What king came after Queen Elizabeth?" "Philip of Spain, but she wasn't having any." Did we think of such answers when we were at school, or is the race of schoolboys growing more intelligent? At any rate, Mr. Cecil Hunt's collections of "Howlers" seem to get funnier and funnier.

History was ever a happy hunting ground for the howler-maker. How easy it is to fall into little errors such as "Napoleon defeated the Marmedukes at the Battle of the Pyramids," or that "When the garrison of Lucknow ran out of provisions, a Scottish maiden put her ear to the ground and said, 'Dinner, ye hear it.'"

THE YELLOW PERIL

Here are some more:

From what state did Frederick the Great invade Silesia? From a state of collapse.

Mary Queen of Scots sewed well. History says she was fond of darning.

Who was the father of James the First's son? He hadn't got one. (Not a fair question, this.)

Napoleon dispersed the rioters with a whiff of grape fruit.

Bannock Burn is so called because Alfred burnt the cakes there.

In the reign of Elizabeth the Commons were always petitioning the Sovereign to marry, a thing they would never have dreamed of doing in the time of Henry VIII.

Henry the Eighth was called Bluff King Hal because first he bluffed his wives and then he killed them.

Who was the famous maid who saved France? Mademoiselle from Armentiers.

Extravagance is wearing a tie when you have a beard.

Too much indulgence is sports gives us barrackers veins.

A croupier is someone who has the croup.

A sculptor is a man who makes faces and busts.

Muses were often seen at funerals in olden days.

Mrs. Grundy was:

A famous tennis lady.

The lady who carries away salt.

The future of "He drinks" is "He is drunk."

When Hercules was very young he heard a kissing sound, and put out his hand and strangled two servants.

Sinister means a woman who hasn't married. (This has a sinister sound in a Leap Year.)

Equilateral was a horse robber.

A cataract is a cat that catches rats.

A fissure is a man who sells fish.

The Decalogue is a low-necked frock.

And as a motto for all perpetrators of "howlers": "Cave canem"—"Beware of the cane."

The "Howlers" Prize Competition, run by the "University Correspondent," elicited some good examples. Edgar Wallace may be surprised to know that he "was chosen King of Scotland by Edward I." but it is certain that "Old King Cole" was a "Merry Monarch" if not "the Merry Monarch." And, after all, a sensible answer to "Of whom was it said that he never smiled again?" is "of Charles I. after his execution." And who can deny that the Milky Way is "the way you feed infants"?

Ambitious

Bobby was one of the few boys who said they didnt want to be an engine-driver, a pirate, a fireman, or a dirt-cart rider.

"What are you going to be, then?" inquired his aunt.

"Wont' tell," said Bobby.

"Oh, come on, Bobby. You're going to be a policeman."

"No, I'm not."

"Well, will you tell me if I give you more pudding?"

Bobby gave in and announced that he was going to be an after-dinner speaker.

"Whatever for?"

Bobby grinned.

"Think of the dinners," he said.

"We can thank Long Distance for that cheque"

Old man Carrington was selling his farm and there were two fine teams for quick sale. Bill Smart didn't need them but he thought of a man he knew in the cartage business in town.

Bill called his man by Long Distance telephone that night and arranged to buy both teams for him next day on commission.

A few days later he had a nice cheque in the mail — and his telephone call cost him only 30 cents.

SUNLIGHT FOR BABIES

The direct rays of the sun are an important aid to health. The rays which tan the skin and which promote normal growth are the ultra-violet rays which we do not perceive as light. The light rays of sunlight which enable us to see are able to pass through glass and light our rooms, but the ultra-violet rays do not pass through ordinary window glass or clothing. So it is that if the baby is to benefit from the sun's rays the sunshine must fall directly on his skin, nothing must come between his skin and the sunlight.

Every baby should have the advantages of sunbaths. The sun's rays will not hurt the baby's eyes unless his face is turned directly toward the sun and the eyes are open. Sun baths should begin early in life. The age at which they should begin will depend upon the time of year the baby is born. A summer baby should, as a rule, begin his sun baths when he is two weeks old..

Summer sun baths are given between 8 and 10 in the morning or late in the afternoon when the heat of the sun is not too intense. On very hot days the baby should not be exposed to the direct rays of the sun but placed so that he gets only reflected light.

The baby is placed so that the eyes are turned away from the sun. Begin with a five-minute exposure of the face, arms and legs. Gradually increase the surface exposed and the strength of exposure until the whole body is exposed for about three-quarters of an hour.

The ultra-violet rays tan the skin. The baby's skin should be tanned, but it should be done gradually. Harm may result from over-exposure and no good comes from doing things too quickly. Sunshine is good, but like other good things it is to be used in moderation. Because a certain amount is good it does not follow that more is better.

The sun bath does more for the baby than secure for him the benefits of direct sunlight. It keeps him out in the fresh air and the exposure of the body to the air, when the temperature allows of such exposure, has a desirable stimulating effect.

The baby requires sunlight. If he does not have it, he will not develop as sound and strong a body as he would otherwise have. He may develop rickets,, a serious condition which can and should be prevented by plenty of sunlight and cod-liver oil.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

Children Left Alone

In a little house in a back street two children are awaiting Mother's and Dad's return. They are being helped by a friendly organization but there can be no home for them until their parents come back.

Where are the parents? For many months they have been struggling for lost health and strength in the Toronto Hospital for Consumptives. They have benefited greatly, as so many hundreds do, from the quietness, fresh air, kindly nursing and medical attention.

"Able to walk to the dining-room for two meals a day now" is the proud boast of the husband and father. But a short time ago he could not be moved from his bed. A few months from now, who knows, he may be back again taking up the burden of the home.

Such work as this has great economic value to the community as well as opening the only way from misery and despair to hundreds of the consumptive poor. The hospital greatly needs your help. Will you please send a gift to Mr. A. E. Ames, 228 College St., Toronto.

Norman G. Holmes, 67 Years, Claresholm Pioneer, Dies

A pioneer of the Claresholm district, Norman G. Holmes, aged 67, died at the family residence in Calgary, on Tuesday afternoon. News of the late Mr. Holmes' death reached The Herald late Tuesday evening.

Mr. Holmes was a leader in the business and community life of southern Alberta since 1907, in which year he came to Claresholm from McGregor, Manitoba. He was at one time mayor of Claresholm, was for many years a member of the council, had been president of the Alberta Union of Municipalities, and was for a time president of the Claresholm Liberal Association. He was also some twenty years ago, the active Claresholm representative on the Southern Alberta Board of Trade, and was well known in Lethbridge through his efforts on behalf of this association.

Born in Georgetown, Mr. Holmes spent his youth living with his grandfather, Mr. John Leslie, just north of the village of Streetsville, Ont, attending high school in Streetsville, came to McGregor, Man., in 1900, and to Claresholm in 1907, conducting a general merchandising business there for a number of years. He was also interested in business in Nanton, Granum and High River. In 1926 he moved to Vulcan where he engaged in business until 1930, in which year he retired to Calgary.

Deceased was a member of the Masonic Order at Claresholm, and a member of the congregation of Grace Presbyterian Church of Calgary. He is survived by his widow and four daughters, Mrs. H. Reiber, of Berkeley, California; Mrs. W. Gaetz, Raymond, Alberta; Mrs. E. Leppard, Morley, Alberta, and Miss Kathleen. A sister, Mrs. H. Scott, of Winnipeg, also survives.

Deceased was a nephew of Mrs Wm. McCracken, Meadowvale.

Scout Notes

SCOUT NOTES

In the last issue of our column we made reference to the fact that a flag was flown upside down during the recent holiday.

We, the Scouts of Streetsville, offer our humble apology for having brought the matter up. We did not make mention of it with any intention of disrespect or criticism, nor any suggestion of disloyalty to the King and country.

We appreciate how easily such a mistake could be made, as most of us were unaware of the correct method of flying the Union Jack until joining up with the local troop.

NOTE—the Scout column is written up by one of our Scouts, and we were all young once. For this reason which, needless to say, covers a multitude of sins, we crave your kind indulgence in any future indiscretion on our part.

Badge Issue Goes Up

A twenty per cent. increase is indicated in the issue of Boy Scout proficiency badges in Ontario during the first four months of 1932, as compared with the first four months of last year. The totals for the two years are 1,625 and 1,336 respectively.

Old Fire Engine for Scout Camp

A unique addition to the equipment of Mystery Island Scout camp site near Ottawa is an old hand-pump fire engine. It was presented by the mayor and council of Mason, Que. It will be used to pump water to the tank of a camp water system.

Scouts' Training Saves Their Mother

Two Scouts of Westfield, N.J., returned from school at noon to find their mother unconscious on the floor of the gas-filled kitchen. One threw open doors and windows and phoned the doctor; the other immediately began artificial respiration. The doctor, on another case, arrived twenty minutes later to find the mother partially recovered. He declared the boys' promptness had saved her.

Marketing Ontario Fruit

One result of the depression is the increased work in systematic marketing The latest manifestation of this is the announcement of Colonel Thomas L. Kennedy, Minister of Agriculture, to extend the present fruit selling organization in the Canadian Provinces. This will be effected through the Ontario Growers' Markets Council.

Permanent commercial representatives are to be stationed in Winnipeg, Montreal, and the Maritimes, during the selling season, while efforts in Great Britain are to be increased in order to supply best quality produce, shipped in the most satisfactory manner.

Strenuous endeavours will be made on the prairies to regain the market enjoyed by Ontario in years gone by. British Columbia is a large fruit producer, and Ontario, despite the excellent reputation of its fruits, will have a powerful opposition, especially when it comes to packing, and maintaining standards. Our small fruits, cherries and strawberries in particular, and our hamper packed apples as well as peaches, pears and plums should appeal to Western people, many of whom formed an appetite for such delicacies before moving from Ontario to the prairies.

Montreal is a market for all varieties of Ontario produce. A commercial representative in that city can do much towards promoting orderly marketing, preventing gluts and price-cutting, and adjusting claims on an equitable basis.

Here and There

Anticipations are that there will be an attendance of 500 Rotarians at the district convention to be held at the Cornwallis Inn, Kentville, N.S., June 1 and 2. It is expected that Sir John Bennett, of St. John's, Newfoundland, will address the convention.

Hon. Gordon S. Harrington, premier of Nova Scotia, accompanied by Mrs Harrington, left Halifax recently for Montreal where they boarded S.S. Duchess of Bedford for a short holiday in the Old Country. During his absence, Hon. Percy C. Black will be acting premier of the province.

"It is not too much to say that any improvement in the revenues of the railroads will immediately make itself felt in all channels of trade and that the maintenance of railroad solvency will do more than any other domestic factor to restore strength to the nation's institutions," says an editorial in the Charleston, S. C., Post.

The "career open to merit" in railway affairs is well illustrated in the case of Charles H. Ewing, a railroader for 49 consecutive years, recently promoted president of the Reading Company. In 1883, at the age of 17, Ewing began his railroad career as a rodman in the employ of the Philadelphia & Reading Railway, now the Reading Company.

There were 447 moose and 9594 deer shot in New Brunswick last year, according to figures contained in the annual report of Chief Game Warden H. H. Ritchie to the provincial Minister of Lands and Forests. There was also a very successful partridge season with a bag of 44,469 birds.

Warmer weather and generally favorable conditions point to normal development of the western wheat crop, according to the report of the agricultural department of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Virtually all of Manitoba's seed is in and Saskatchewan and Alberta seeding will be completed by the end of the third week of May.

Two famous globe-trotters, Dr Roy Chapman Andrews, noted anthropologist, and Bob Davis, New York Sun's world-girdling correspondent, came together at Victoria recently on Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Canada, the former on his way to Peking and the latter travelling with Mrs Davis to Honolulu.

Success attending the inaugural cruise of S.S. Princess Alice last year to northern British Columbia and Alaska has led the British Columbia Coast Steamship service to provide another special Alaska cruise with the S.S. Princess Charlotte, leaving August 9 from Vancouver, it is announced by E. F. L. Sturdee, general passenger agent, Canadian Pacific Railway.

Capital, Labor, the learned professions, diplomacy and business were all represented in the passenger list of the Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Australia on arrival at Quebec recently. The list included Sir Charles Gordon, president of the Bank of Montreal; Tom Moore, president of the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada; F. E. Meredith, K.C., Dr Moser, consul-general for Czecho-Slovakia, and Colonel Hercule Barre, Canadian Government Trade Commissioner in Paris.

Residents of Maritime Provinces will have a fine opportunity of visiting Montreal's great Naval and Military Tournament, May 27-29, through a special low rate Canadian Pacific coach excursion leaving Saint John, Fredericton, Woodstock, St. Stephen and St. Andrew's May 27. Similar excursions over the same week-end are being operated by the railway from Vermont, and the Sudbury, Ontario, areas. (843)

AGAIN SOMETHING NEW

French Deputies to Record Votes by Pressing Buttons.

The French Chamber of Deputies has decided to make a trial of the system of voting by electricity invented by M. Langlois. On the desk of each deputy—in the Chamber every deputy has a permanent seat of his own—will be four electric buttons, one for 'aye,' one for 'no,' one for abstention, and one that will enable a deputy who has pressed the wrong button to rectify his mistake. The pressure of a button will immediately register the deputy's vote in an apparatus behind the Speaker's chair, and the result will be recorded by a totalizator. The cost of installing the apparatus will be about $25.000.

The present system of voting in the Chamber when a division is demanded is very unsatisfactory. Each deputy puts in an urn carried around by an official of the Chamber a voting card with his name on it. The card is white if he votes 'aye,' and blue if he votes 'no.' Voting by proxy is allowed. The counting of the votes takes about a quarter of an hour.

IS AN OYSTER A FISH?

Difference of Opinion In Legal Case In England.

Whether or not an oyster is a fish was a question raised before the Colchester Area Assessment Committee when the Essex County Valuation Committee sought to have the Colne Oyster Fishery assessed. The oyster fishery is a lessee from the Colchester Corporation who from time immemorial have enjoyed the rights and privileges of the river. Counsel for the company, Gerald Benham, said he would admit that an oyster was not only a fish but a super-fish.

Frederick Levy, who appeared for the Committee, said that from the scientific point of view it was not certain that an oyster was a fish, but legally it had been established as long ago as Richard II., that an oyster was a fish. If that was so a fish was something that swam in a fishery, and a fishery was something that could be assessed.

The Committee held that the fishery was subject to assessment, and they fixed a figure of $3,500 on the property. Mr. Benham gave notice of appeal.

MODERN ART.

Artist and Editor See Sketches From Different Angles.

An amusing story as told by Sir Philip Gibbs concerns an artist who was sent abroad by the editor of a London illustrated paper.

His job was to make sketches of the country and the people. It was, however, his first experience, and he made a mess of it, the sketches he sent home being very poor, and at times quite unintelligible.

The editor took him to task on his return, and told him that if he could not make a recognizable sketch of anything it would have been far better to have indicated in writing what the picture represented.

"Take this one, for instance," he continued, picking up one of the artist's sketches. "Since you were apparently in such a hurry that you hadn't time to draw it more carefully, why didn't you write above it: 'This is a Windmill'? Then our people would have known what it was intended for, instead of which they had to guess."

"But it isn't a windmill; it's a man on horseback," replied the artist.

ANCIENT OAK BURNED.

Fine Tree, Six Centuries Old, Destroyed by Carelessness.

One of the splendid old oaks in Windsor Great Park, was destroyed by fire recently, the blaze being witnessed by the King and Queen, who were motoring through the park at the time. Their car was stopped a few minutes, while Their Majesties watched the progress of the flames, and the King enquired the cause of the fire. He was told that it probably was due to picnickers setting fire to rubbish, and he expressed regret that such a fine old tree should perish in such a way. This particular oak was 600 years old, and stood near Queen Anne's Gate on the main Windsor-to-Ascot road. There are now only a few of these fine old trees remaining in the lower portion of the park.

WHIRLPOOL IN OCEAN.

Curious Phenomenon Spins Outward From Its Center.

A whirlpool in the ocean, [illegible] miles east of Cape Cod, so strong that it repels a ship, was described by Captain William E. Parker of the Hydrographer, one of the four U. S. coast and geodetic survey vessels engaged in the first complete charting of George's Banks.

The whirlpool was reported by Captain Parker as spinning outward instead of towards its centre.

He said he had made several attempts to force the Hydrographer through it but the force of the water immediately threw the vessel off its course. He planned, he said, to investigate the phenomenon further upon his return to the Banks.

BULBS ON POTATO STALKS.

It is not true that a potato plant has "gone crazy or somethin'" when it has bulbs growing along its stalks; for they are not tubers but seed pods. The bulbs usually grow about the size of a cherry. They will grow in clusters. Certain seasons will not see any and some people who grow potatoes will never have seen them as they are not common. If tubers are planted you will not see such development; but it may happen when seed is planted.

Grounds for Divorce.

A shrill voice allied to a tendency to talk too much in a wife might well become grounds for a divorce, states a French Government expert on deafness.

DENOUNCES COUNCIL AS FAILING IN DUTY

Streetsville Reeve Critical When New Vote on Hydro By-law is Refused

Streetsville, June 3.—Denounced by Reeve H. W. Hope for "not doing their duty as councillors," Streetsville council abided by its decision not to place before the electors again the by-law to approve purchase of power from the Hydro-Electric Power Commission to supplement the power from the municipally owned plant. The council decided 3 to 2 against another hydro by-law vote, but later approved a resolution granting permission to anyone who so desired to buy hydro power for domestic use.

"There is no justice to it," said Reeve Hope. "You have broken faith with the majority of the people, who voted in favor of these by-laws. They were quashed on a technical point over which neither the people nor the council had any control. It should be our duty as a council to give them the opportunity of voting on it again but you have now deprived them of that privilege. You are not doing your duty as councilmen when you cater to the minority."

UNITED SUNDAY SCHOOL PICNIC ON JUNE 3rd A GREAT SUCCESS

Although the weather-man had predicted "showers" for Friday, June 3rd, his heart softened as he saw the eager, expectant faces gathering about the United Church for the annual Sunday School picnic. He hastened to hold special conference with good King Sol and prevailed upon him to send forth his brightest, cheerfiest rays, particularly on the flats near the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Steene, who had so kindly invited the school there.

In trucks and cars the merry crowd, shepherded by the genial superintendent, Mr. K. Featherstone, went thither. Even Mother Nature appeared to have put on her best attire for the occasion; the birds lustily sang forth greetings, the trees nodded gaily in the breeze, while the meandering Credit babbled a welcome. It was not long before a goodly number were bathing and swimming, while others engaged in a friendly game of ball. On the benches which had been built here and there, many sat and enjoyed the beauty of the surroundings.

About four o'clock, the sports programme, under the supervision of Rev. Mr. Purchase and his committee, was opened by a very interesting "Treasure Hunt." Directions had been placed in various places and such fun it was scampering up hill and down vale, tracing and retracing the same ground until at last in an old log, near the beginning of the hunt, Edward Culdecott located the treasure—a delicious box of chocolates.

An interesting feature of the afternoon was a guessing contest to estimate the number of beans in a bottle. Ian Johnson was the winner, estimating the exact number, 813.

Last, but not least, was the supper, when about 225 sat down to enjoy the dainties of the numerous well-filled baskets. Everyone entered this competition heartily, but as yet the superintendent has not named the winner. In every way, one and all voted this "the best picnic yet."

MARRIAGES

Chinnery—Boucher

The marriage took place at Home United Church, Alloa, of Miss Wilma Mary Boucher, to William George Chinnery, son of George and the late Mrs. Chimnery. The wedding was performed by the Rev. H. Payne, Huttonville, and the attendants were, Miss Vera Adams, Toronto, and Emerson Boucher, brother of the bride. Harold Tust of Danforth United Church played the wedding music, and Mrs. Tust sang during the signing of the register. Miss Boucher was given away by her father. Following the marriage service, a buffet luncheon was served at the bride's home, her mother presiding. Following a honey-moon tour of the States, Mr. and Mrs. Chinnery will reside at Aylmer, Ont. Miss Boucher was a prominent member of the Brampton Junior Institute, Mr. Chinnery being associated with the Junior Farmers' Association.

TORONTO TP. COUNCIL

The Township council, after a brief, but wordy debate, decided to take no action on the request of .V. Frank Oliver for a deed of 12 feet of the road allowance of the Lake Shore rd., a shoreline road of the Clarkson district. Mr. Oliver's house has been for a number of years resting on ten feet of the road allowance. In order to dispose of the house, Mr. Oliver needs a deed to the footage of the road on which his house encroaches, and has applied several times to township council in the last two years for a deed.

On Saturday, he appeared before council with a petition signed by a number of ratepayers of the district, asking that the deed be granted. Mr. Oliver told council that, by the expenditure of over $2,000 on cribs along the waterfront, he had saved the road for the township. In the event that the deed was not granted him, he told council, he would remove his house from the site, and take away the cribs along the shore, with the result, he predicted, that the lake would wash through his property, and destroy the road within two years.

E. A. Orr, Clarkson, owner of property near that of Mr. Oliver, sent in a petition signed by 66 Clarkson residents asking that the deed be not granted, on the grounds that it would block the road to the inhabitants of the village.

Mr. Oliver, speaking on the matter, asked council: "I want to know if an ex-reeve is running your council?" He also stated that Mr. Orr's fences encroached on ten feet of the same road.

A by-law was passed adjusting the wages of laborers, foremen, etc., in the township. The old and new scales of pay are as follows: Foremen, old, 35 cents, new, 32.5 cents per hour; man and team, old, 60 cents, new, 50 cents; laborer, 30 cents, new, 25 cents; trucks, old, 85 cents; new, 75 cents; sub-foreman, 30 cents, no charge: tractor operators 40 cents, no change.

Deputy Reeve Robert S. Whaley told council that he thought that foremen should be cut to 30 cents per hour, but after Reeve L. H. Pallett had pointed out the responsibility and expense of the position the cut was limited to two and a half cents per hour.

Sixty-five unemployed of the Lakeview district approached council asking for work, or, failing work, direct relief. E. R. Bales, president of the Lakeview Workers' Association, told the council that conditions were becoming worse in Lakeview. Grocers, who had helped out-of-workers during the winter, were unable to offer further credit, and many of the residents of the district were running very short of food and clothing.

A meeting of all of the organized bodies of the township is being arranged to discuss further plans for relief. Reeve Pallett told the delegation that the township is not in a position to assume further responsibility for relief work. There remains in the township funds only $15,000 to be used for work during the remainder of the year.

Communication from W. Storrie, engineer in charge of the water-system construction, intimated that a detail report would be presented at a special meeting to be held in the near future, at which time the question of assessment on the new system will be dealt with.

General H. M. Cawthra-Elliott thanked council for the work done on the roads in his district, and hoped that the council would soon see fit to lay a distributing system of pipe along the branch roads near Lakeview. He was told by the reeve that the council was considering further extension of the water system next fall and winter, as an unemployment relief measure.

A report from Robertson, Robinson, McCannell and Dick, auditors at present investigating the township books, stated that their report on the audit will not be ready for presentation for some time, possibly not until the July meeting of the council, but that, as far as can be seen at present, the alleged shortage reported earlier in the year is due entirely to clerical errors.

PORT CREDIT

Repair garages reaped a harvest from cars coming from points in and about Port Credit, when no less than ten autos and a truck were involved in one accident. None of the cars was seriously damaged and only one passenger was hurt.

Provincial Officer Hinchcliffe spent a long time straightening out the complicated accident.

The first move in the chain of accidents was made when an unknown motorist stopped suddenly to turn left into the Dixie Road. Following the car, a truck driven by N. Greenspoon, Grace St., Toronto, managed to stop in time and the next car, driven by Donald Husband of Oakville, also was able to avoid the truck. The fourth car, however, ran hard into Husband's car, damaging the rear and pushing it into the truck.

With traffic blocked by this accident, a fifth car appeared and stopped suddenly, telescoping seven cars following and causing damage to each.

One passenger, a woman in the fifth car, received slight injuries and was treated by Dr. W. H. Godfrey of Cooksville.

It was some time before the road was cleared and Provincial Officer Hinchcliffe is busy investigating all phases of the unusual accident.

Sports Column

Creditvale and Streetsville football team were soundly beaten at Sheridan by the score of five to nothing. This was the same score as Streetsville beat them by last week, so both teams will be able to enter the league tied in goals. The league starts Wednesday night. The Bluebirds playing Canada Bread for the first game. The game starting at 7.15.

LACROSSE

Streetsville Lacrosse team also suffered their first lost of the season at Malton, on their return game Friday night. The boys thought it was the roughest game they had played, but after the game, Tuesday night at Port Credit, it seemed like a tame affair, several of the boys getting laid out cold. Ronald Bruce was the worst injured, having his knee put out of joint at Malton.

A SPORT

The Creditvale softball team went to Lorne Park Thursday night and were beaten by the score of 12-6. Young Red McGill was the pitcher for Creditvale, while Tate Courtney pitched for the Park. Poor work in the field was responsible for their defeat. This was the first game of the year and it was a tough one to lose. However, on their return game Monday night the tables were turned, Creditvale beating them 19-6. The good work of Pope in the box and big Red McGill's batting was the main factor of the game. Red got two homers and a triple to score seven runs.

THRILLING BASEBALL GAME BETWEEN NO. 10, TRAFALGAR, AND ASHGROVE SCHOOL

One of the most sensational baseball ball games of the season was played on Monday afternoon between a team from No. 10 school, Trafalgar, and Ashgrove school. The teacher of the Ashgrove school is Miss Ruth Giffin, whose sister, Miss Marion, is teacher in No. 10. The boys and girls of the latter set out with a grim determination to bring home the palm of victory and to bring to a fitting climax the teaching year of their teacher.

Upon arrival the visiting team found their opponents ready for the fray. After a few preliminaries the umpire was chosen in the person of Bert Cooke, one of the notable athletes of Streetsville High School.

Everything being set, the first team to go to bat was No. 10; they set their faces to the task and no one but a spectator could fully appreciate the spectacular play. After a very few minutes they had to surrender the bat to their opponents, but not without registering a couple of points.

As the game proceeded the players warmed up and were ready for every emergency, though there were frequent errors, yet, as a whole, many sensational catches were made and much fast running to the various bases.

At one period of the play the score was 8-1 in favor of No. 10 team; they felt very secure and showed signs of laxness, later on their opposing team gradually climbed in points until the score was 8-8. Norman Cooke, the sturdy captain of No. 10, said: "Now team, do your best!" Under the spell of his enthusiasm a new start was made, and when the last inning was played the score was 9-8 in favour of No. 10.

On the whole the game was most interesting and presented many thrills, causing excitement among onlookers. It would seem that some day there may go out from either of those teams some who may drift into the realm of professionalism: Who knows?

If one were to single out three of the Babe Ruth class, he would have to mention Norman Cooke, Carl Hall and Fred Workman. This does not relegate to the sphere of nonentity the rest who played, for each and everyone did well.

The following is the list of players, so that those who see and are looking out for additions to an outstanding team may use this as a guide, Norman Cooke, captain; Carl Hall, John Hall, Miss Giffin, John Donnelley, Muriel Alwell, Joe Milton, Fred Taylor, Verna and Elma Sparling and Fred Workman.

As a fitting climax to the afternoon's proceedings a relay race was staged which proved a tie.

CANADA

Steps Forward Again

As usual, John Bull has taken the initiative in showing good faith toward his obligations by a tentative arrangement for payment to the United States of war debts deferred during the past year. The Hoover moratorium applied to all debtor nations, but none except Britain, so far, has come forward to make a settlement, as she was also first to make the original war-debts settlement. Her arrangement at that time was the most costly of all, and the present proposal, rather than bringing relief, increases the expense. The interest rate is 4 per cent. instead of 3, and if the pound remains at less than par when the money is forwarded the payment in pounds will be that much heavier.

The fact that Britain's arrangement is conditional does not alter the principle. Westminster hopes a way will be found to wipe out all war debts or adjust them to prevailing conditions. Payment of arrears will depend upon the outcome of negotiations at Lausanne on the major problem. John Bull has let it become known that he will follow his traditional policy of meeting obligations, no matter how it hurts.—Toronto Mail and Empire.

The New Zealand Treaty

Any treaty or trade arrangement that gives Canada a preference in a $200,000,000 a year market cannot but be a good thing for Canada. That is what has happened in the case of the new treaty entered into with New Zealand, and the consequences are bound to be beneficial.—Ottawa Journal.

"Holding On To It"

It is understood here that United States railways, in order to hold Canadian traffic for their lines, are accepting payment in Canadian funds. It means that in these transportation matters the Canadian people are receiving no compensating advantage from their depreciated dollar. It also demonstrates the determination of United States carriers not to relinquish the Canadian traffic which is diverted from our own lines and our own ports.—Halifax Herald.

Lancashire's Change

With ruin staring them in the face if the present situation is prolonged, the cotton spinners of Lancashire have at last taken their courage in their hands and moved to break the deadlock created by the refusal of the workmen to stand by the tentative agreement regarding more looms and wage limitations reached towards the end of March. They have decided to terminate the agreement of 1929 under which working hours were reduced from 55½ per week to 48 and a compensating wage scale provided. This simply means that each individual mill owner will be able to conclude a separate agreement with his own employees. In fact, a number of firms have already done so, introducing more looms per operator and cutting wages, and are now working full capacity under the new agreement. — Montreal Star.

What of the "Dole?"

A year or two ago nearly everybody in Canada and the United States was blaming conditions in Britain on what they called "the dole" and predicting that nothing was so necessary as the ending of this system which was described as paying a cash bonus to idleness. In Canada and the United States, where unemployment is widespread and where "relief" has to be given to multitudes of people running into large and increasing totals, one hears no more censure of the British method of dealing with a problem which is now our problem also. It is more with envy than reproach that the British method is now being regarded. —Toronto Star.

Preparing for the Conference

The Winnipeg Board of Trade has done an excellent piece of work in the brief prepared at the request of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce in preparation for the Imperial Economic Conference. Its detail is exhaustive, and represents the results of a very thorough survey of commerce and industry in Manitoba. The leading recommendation is that a permanent Inter-Empire board shall be formed, to meet at least once a year for the purpose of promoting the development of Inter-Empire trade and the fullest possible utilization of the Empire's resources and man-power. — Winnipeg Tribune.

British Finance

The financial typhoon which has devastated the whole commercial world hit Great Britain with terrific force. It even waterlogged the pound sterling. But cool, competent navigation has righted the ship, and it seems likely that she will reach quiet waters before any other of the nations have weathered the storm.—Melbourne Australasian.

Violence in India

During the past few weeks there has been an epidemic of serious dacoities and murders from which few parts of India have been exempt. It is not necessary to assume that all these crimes are necessarily due to political or terrorist motives. That is not to say that the Congress does not bear a very serious share of responsibility. For ten years Congress have consistently preached the virtues of breaking the law and every day in every way have done their utmost to make the task of the guardians of law and order as difficult as possible. It is, however, a well known fact, confirmed by Police records in all parts of India, that economic depression is at once reflected in an increase of cognisable crime; that there are more dacoities when the monsoon fails. This year, as if the worldwide economic depression were not serious enough, the winter rains have generally failed in Northern India.—Calcutta Englishman.

The Last Canadian Frontier

"The Men of the Last Frontier," by Gray Owl, a Scottish-Indian trapper who served overseas during the war, gives a vivid picture of Indian life in the northern Canadian wilds. The book has considerable merit as a Canadian product by an aboriginal Canadian. It constitutes a real addition to the literature of the nation. It has been considered worthy of a full-page review in the Sunday edition of the New York Times. The exclusive Canadian rights are owned by the Macmillan Company of Canada, Limited, St. Martin's House, Toronto. — Toronto Mail and Empire.

THE EMPIRE

This Patriotism

Foreigners resident in Egypt often share the opinion of many Egyptians that the British community appear indifferent to the pride of their heritage. The truth can be witnessed at least once a year, when the 24th of May brings round Empire Day. It is essential that if this celebration of a great national occasion must be made, it should be made well. Apart from the necessity of imparting the correct impression, it is necessary to remind oneself in an impressive way that one belongs to a world-wide community of the greatest kinship that history has ever recorded. The children must have the important fact deeply planted in their growing and impressionable minds if they are to carry on the traditions and work that their parents will one day bequeath to the. The undying spirit of Britain is as powerful and virile to-day as it has ever been.—Cairn Sphinx.

The Plague of the Roads

Every day eighteen people are dying on the roads, and 550 are being injured, many of them for life. Imagine the outcry through the country if some plague spread through the towns and villages of the land and struck down as any victims! How can we fight the plague of the roads? It seems little use to pile Act of Parliament upon Act of Parliament. The reckless driver will still be reckless even though he is condemned by a thousand Acts. The only remedy is the sterner application of the powers to punish the careless man at the wheel. There is no need for any penal code against the careless pedestrian. He is already punished by death.—London Daily News.

Empire Settlement and Ottawa

We have got to prove to the Dominions that it is to their interest to broaden their policy on a foundation of inter-Empire preference. This does not apply merely to goods and to produ . The Federation of British Industries rightly insists upon the importance of people. In 1913 we sent 285,046 emigrants to Overseas Empire; by 1931 the number had dropped to 27,151. The flow must be started again—to their advantage as much as ours. There can be no thought of dumping either in peopl or in goods; any arrangement that is likely to be acceptable to the Dominions must be as much to their advantage as to ours. The bargain must equally benefit both sides.—London Evening Post.

Ottawa Prospects

Already Ottawa is becoming the battleground of many diverse commercial interests from every part of the British Commonwealth, and the Conference is threatened with "log-rolling" on an unprecedented scale. Already, too, Canadian manufacturers are making it increasingly plain that they do not intend to agree to plans which will admit British manufactured goods more freely into Canada. It is extremely doubtful whether comprehensive scheme of Imperial Preference can be contrived.—London Daily Herald.

London, Ont.—Dr. A. B. Macallum, dean of the medical school of the University of Western Ontario, will move at the Canadian Universities' conference at Ottawa for formation of a joint committee of the British and Canadian Medical Association, Dr. Sherwood Fox, the president of the University, announced at a banquet of the Western Medical Alumni recently.

Such a move, he believed, would be a long step toward widening the field for post-graduate study for young Canadian doctors.

Canadian Business Reported Active

Improvement in Canada in Last Three Months Officially Indicated

Ottawa.—The increasing rapidity of the turnover of money in the financial markets of Canada in the three months ending April bespeak an improving business situation and increasing confidence by the general public, says the Department of Trade and Commerce in a statistical review, issued Friday.

Government statistics, says the review, show that every dollar on deposit in Canadian banks was turned over 1.06 times in February, 1.07 times in March and 1.10 times in April.

Financial transfers in the form of bank debits to individual accounts increased by $84,000,000 from February to $2,073,900,000 in April although after seasonal adjustment this increase did not measure up to the average for good years. Deposits in Canadian banks have increased from $1,875,221,000 in February to approximately $1,883,000,000 in April.

The Dominion Bureau of Statistics' index number of retail sales further indicate increased spending by the general public. Reports received from chain stores controlling 2,700 separate stores and also from 25 departmental stores indicated an increase in retail sales amounting to slightly over 10 per cent. The Government's retail sales weighted index moved up from 85.6 in March to 94.3 in April. Improvements in retail sales were most marked in articles in clothing and footwear, furniture and hardware as well as general and departmental goods and groceries. Dyers and cleaners also reported increased activity.

Exports of Canadian farm products show continued improvement. Shipments of Canadian cattle to the British market for this year to the end of May numbered 5,493 head as compared with 4,969 head in the corresponding period last year. Canadian cattle are selling on the British market at good prices and reports from overseas are to the effect that "the home supply shortage is being felt and prospects for the next two months for Canadian cattle are quite encouraging." Exports of barley in the nine months of the current crop year amount to 9,116,431 bushels as compared with 4,114,402 bushels in the corresponding period last crop year. Exports of rye increased from 1,189,337 to 3,759,209 bushels, and oats increased from 2,625,979 to 10,235,315 bushels.

Other figures indicated a marked increase in contracts awarded for buildings in May as compared with April, and also that Canada in 1931 retained her position as world's second largest producer of gold and third largest producer of silver.

Conference Stamp to be Issued by Ottawa

Ottawa.—In commemoration of the coming Imperial Conference, there will be a special issue of Canadian postage stamps of the denominations of three, five and thirteen cents. The three-cent stamp will bear the picture of the King, the five-cent stamp that of the Prince of Wales, while the thirteen-cent stamp, for use on registered letters, will be allegorical.

2,200 Passengers Sail Montreal to Britain

Montreal. — Three steamships left Montreal on Friday for British ports carrying a total of 2,200 passengers. The Canadian Pacific steamship, Duchess of Atholl, carried 1,020 passengers, the Cunarder, Aurania, 455, and the Anchor-Donaldson liner, Athenia, 755. Not since June, 1930, have so many people sailed from Montreal in one day.

Eight Drownings In Province Over Week-End

Kingston Woman Perishes With Babies in River—Hawkesville Lad Swept Over Dam

DROWNED.

Toronto.
Joseph Corbishley, 48, Mutual St., Toronto.
Mrs. Evelyn Veley, 18, Kingston.
Edna Veley, 2.
Ruth Veley, 2 weeks.
Kenneth Goetz, 10, Hawkesville.
Harold Carey, 9, Port Arthur.
John Hughes, Gamebridge.

BELIEVED DROWNED.

Lloyd Neal, 13, Wainfleet.

Kingston.—Three members of a family, the mother and two small children, were drowned and the husband was saved Sunday in the second triple drowning tragedy here in two weeks.

The dead are: Mrs. Evelyn Veley, aged 18 years; Edna Veley, aged 2 years, and Ruth Pauline Veley, aged 2 weeks.

Hiram Veley, 20, was saved.

The Veley family had gone to Bell's Island, a small island in the Rideau about a mile from where the party set out, and for years a favorite picnic spot for many.

As evening came it was seen that a storm was brewing, and the family started back to Kingston. When their boat was about half a mile from shore a terrific squal came up, so severe that in an instant waves were lashing up on to the docks, and the boat, a small flat-bottomed punt, was capsized.

Exactly a fortnight ago three local men, William Woods, John Powell Farrell and Angus McKenzie, lost their lives when their boat upset. It was a coincidence that the men also were returning from a picnic at Bell's Island when they met their death.

The week-end was one of the worst on record for fatalities locally. In addition to the three drowned this evening, there were two fatalities, C. E. Taylor of Galt being killed in an airplane crash at the airport, and Charles Gale of Toronto losing his life when he was suffocated at the C.S.L. elevator.

TORONTO MAN VICTIM.

Orillia.—A gray-haired middle-aged man, said by the police to be Joseph Corbishley, aged 48 years, 59 Mutual St., Toronto, was drowned in 14 feet of water when he fell from the town dock at the foot of Mississauga St. late Saturday afternoon.

Several persons saw the man topple, collapse and fall into the water and rushed forward to rescue him, but by the time his body had been recovered life was extinct. Dr. C. V. Scott attempted artificial resperiation but was unsuccessful.

Coroner Dr. William E. Brown said that no inquest was considered necessary, and the body has been sent to relatives in Toronto.

BOY DROWNS FROM RAFT.

Port Arthur.—On a family picnic in the McIntyre River, near here, Harold Carey, aged 9, was drowned when a raft on which a number of children were paddling sank beneath their weight. The others were saved.

BELIEVED DROWNED.

Welland. — Grappling operations were in progress Sunday night under the supervision of the provincial police in an effort to locate the body of Lloyd Melville Neal, 13-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Neal, of Wainfleet Township, who is believed to have been drowned late in the afternoon in the Chippawa Creek, which runs at the foot of the farm.

CRAMPS CAUSE FATALITY.

Huntsville.—A young man named Frank Shearman, aged 19, of Toronto, was drowned Sunday while bathing in a small lake near Melissa.

Shearman had been employed for a week with C. Bielby, a farmer residing at Melissa, and after the evening chores went to the lake for a swim.

He was in the water with a young man named Watson, and several persons witnessed the fatality from the shore. Sheerman evidently took a cramp, and when found his body was standing upright. Eye-witnesses recovered the body.

His parents live in England, but he has been living in Toronto with his uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Parker, at 108 Ferrier Ave.

HAWKESVILLE BOY DROWNS.

Kitchener.—Ten-year-old Kenneth Goetz of Hawkesville lost his life in the fast-running Conestogo River at 10 a.m. Sunday, when a flat-bottomed punt, manned by his father, was swept swept over the six-foot dam at his home village.

The father, William Goetz, and an older brother, Vincent, were buffeted through the rough water to the shallows below, where Israel Martin, Hawkesville storekeeper, plunged into the current and assisted them to shore.

BRITISH FARMHAND VICTIM.

Gamebridge.—A farmhand named John Hughes, with relatives in Toronto, but of British birth, was drowned in the Government quarry pond Sunday when he went in bathing alone, and presumably took cramps.

The bark of a tree which grows in the Malay Islands yields a fine soap.

Plot to Assassinate Mussolini Foiled

Would-be Assassin Had Pad of Nitroglycerine Strapped on Chest

Rome.—The frustration of a plot to assassinate Premier Benito Mussolini in a bombing which might have endangered the Royal family, was disclosed Sunday night by police.

Angelo Sbardellotto, an Anarchist, confessed that twice on Saturday he attempted to kill the Fascist Premier. He was reported to have said he planned the first attempt at the Garibaldi ceremony at Janiculun Hill, when King Victor Emmanuel and other members of the Royal family were present.

The Janiculun Hill attempt on Mussolini's life was frustrated by troops which kept Sbardellotto from approaching the point where Mussolini stood with the King.

Well Armed

Sbardellotto, with a pistol in his pocket, two flat bombs hung from his belt and a thin rubber pad filled with nitroglycerine strapped on his chest, was waiting near the palace for the Premier to pass. One of the dozens of detectives of the so-called "presidential squad" saw him and took him to police headquarters.

The would-be assassin said he had intended to commit suicide after attacking the Premier. Police said the nitroglycerine on hs chest was sufficient to tear a dozen men to pieces if the police had grappled with him and hurled him to the ground.

He faces almost certain death after a trial before a special tribunal for defence of the state. Michael Schirra was executed last year for a similar plot which was frustrated.

The Fascist premier has frequently been the target of assassins and once was wounded in the nose.

Sbardellotto had a passport, made out under the name of Galdini and admitted the passport was forged.

He said he had been in Italy only a few days on his present trip to Rome.

Young Woman Seized

The arrest of Sbardellotto followed by a few hours the seizure of a young French woman who attempted to gain entrance to Vatican City in male attire, carrying a bag over her shoulder. The woman said she merely wanted to see Pope Pius and that she had resorted to a ruse because she had been unable to get an audience with the pontiff.

She said she hoped to see the Pope during his regular afternoon walk in the Vatican gardens. She was not armed. The police turned her over to the French ambassador.

Following the revelation of the plot against Mussolini, there were indications that the near future would witness closer collaboration between the Fascist regime and the Crown. This was chiefly due to the fact that King Victor Emmanuel presented the Collar of Annunciation, highest decoration of Italy, to the Fascist Speaker of the Senate, Luigi Federzoni, and the speaker of the Chamber, Giovanni Giuriati.

This was interpreted as the king's contribution to the celebration of ten years of Fascist rule and a more conspicuous manifestation is expected in October, on the anniversary of the Fascist march on Rome when the king probably will speak in Parliament.

Meat Consumption In the Dominion

Ottawa.—In addition to being the world's largest eaters of butter and eggs, Canadians are also substantial meat eaters. A recent official compilation shows that the per capita consumption of meat in Canada in 1931 was 148.46 pounds, an increase over 1930 when it was 145.64 pounds per person. One explanation of the increase is that the marketing of standard grades of meat under Canadian government inspection and supervision has encouraged the housewife to buy more meat in the knowledge that if the standard grades are bought the quality is assured. This applies particularly in the case of beef. Since the red and blue banded beef was introuced in 1929 the sales results have exceeded the most sanguine expectations of the Canaian government department of agriculture.

The consumption of 148.46 pounds of meat per person in a year shows that the average Canadian eats practically his own weight in meat annually. The per capita amount of poultry eaten in Canada last year was 11.04 pounds, but brands of grades recently introduced by the government are expected to popularize poultry on the family menu.—Canada Week by Week.

Things as They Are

"We are a living part, however small, of things as they are. If we believe that things as they are can be made better than they are, and in that faith set to work to help the betterment to the best of our ability, however limited, we are and cannot help being children of the Kingdom. It is the things as they are that is the touchstone, the trial, the Day of Judgment."

Always use best oil—say expert mechanics

When you consider how much you paid for your sewing machine, vacuum cleaner, lawn mower, washer, and other expensive devices, don't you think it's foolish to try to economize on oil? The very best costs only a few cents a year—and is really cheap in the long run.

3-in-One, a scientific blend of mineral, vegetable and animal oils, is made especially for lubrication of household devices. It cleans and protects as well as lubricates. 3-in-One cost more to make than ordinary oil but it costs less to use. If you knew what expert mechanics know about oil, you'd never use anything else around the house. At good drug, grocery, hardware, department and general stores. For your protection, look for the trade mark "3-in-One" printed in Red on every package.

Miracle

I wonder like a child how this can be,
How every grumbling Spring, though men forget,
A summer wisdom works behind the wet
To bring the rose unfailing to the tree.
Day after day I watch till dark, and she,
A star of crimson in a cave of jet,
Still haunts the more. Unapprehended yet,
Behind the veils of sleep she burns for me.
And dreaming how my dear was once a child
Who drew the common air with scarce a stir,
While men destruction on destruction piled,
Or greatly gave, I marvel how, unsought,
Softly as drawing breath or taking thought,
This haunting rose of womanhood came to her.

ARTICLE No. 26

Which are the easier to handle, weak hands or strong hands? Most players probably will reply that strong hands are easier to bid and to play and that is probably true. Weak hands, as a rule, offer more problems than the strong ones, but the latter are frequently hard to handle.

The writer was watching a new Club member playing the other day and, as dealer, he passed a very strong hand. When asked why he did so, he replied: "The hand was so big, I didn't know what to do with it." This is not an uncommon fault, so learn to be as careful in bidding and playing the strong hands as you are with the weak ones. In the play, particularly, one is apt to become careless with a big hand; but remember that bad habits are hard to break. You may lose a trick or so on a big hand and still go game but, if you are just as careless on the next hand, the trick you lose may prevent you from going game. The only way to become a good Auction or Contract player is to play every hand, strong or weak, for the maximum. Concentration on what you are doing will win more rubbers for you than any other one thing.

The following hands were played in a recent duplicate tournament and the bidding showed a wide diversity of opinion. The hands of all four players are given, so that you will thus have an opportunity of comparing your analysis with the actual results.

Hand No. 1

	Hearts—K, J, 6, 5, 4 Clubs—A, 8, 2 Diamonds—A, J, 8, 4 Spades—4
Hearts—A, 10, 8, 3 Clubs—9, 7, 3 Diamonds—K, 10 Spades—A, Q, J, 8	Y A B Z	Hearts—9, 2 Clubs—5, 4 Diamonds—Q, 9, 7, 5, 3, 2 Spades—10, 7, 3
	Hearts—Q, 7 Clubs—K, Q, J, 10, 6 Diamonds—6 Spades—K, 9, 6, 5, 2

No score, rubber game. Z dealt and bid one club. What should A now bid with the foregoing hand?

A's proper bid at either Auction or Contract is undoubtedly a double of Z's one club. At one table, A doubled and Y bid four clubs. This was a good bid, for it prevented A and B from bidding. It also forced A to guess as to the proper lead. He led the ace of hearts and then the ace of spades. As a result, Z made five-odd at clubs.

At table No. 2, A bid one no trump, which Y doubled. B was on the job, however, and took A out of the double by bidding two diamonds. Z was now in a difficult position. He knew that A must have spade strength to warrant his no trump bid, but saw no other way to give his partner additional information, so made the bid of two spades. A passed, for he was satisfied with the two-spade bid and Y was forced to bid two no trump or three hearts. He elected to bid the two no trump because it seemed a safer bid than three hearts. He just made the bid so failed to make game, a big loss compared with table No. 1.

This hand is a good illustration of winning by bad bidding. The proper bid with A's hand is a double of one club. The bid of one no trump is very faulty. The only reason A B at table No. 2 gained by the bid was because the player of A's hand at table No. 1 made a bad opening. With a trump opening, the proper one on the bidding, Y Z can only make three odd in clubs. It is an ideal hand for that opening. Note that the lead of the ace of hearts, followed by the ace of spades, gives Declarer game. Study this bidding and think over A's proper lead.

Hand No. 2

	Hearts—6, 5 Clubs—8, 4, 3 Diamonds—K, Q, 10, 7, Spades—7, 3], 3
Hearts—A, K, Q, 7 Clubs—A, Q, J Diamonds—J, 9, 4, 2 Spades—9, 5	Y A B Z	Hearts—8, 3 Clubs—10, 9, 6, 5, 2 Diamonds—A, 8, 3 Spades—A, Q, 10
	Hearts—J, 10, 9, 4, 2 Clubs—K, 7 Diamonds—none Spades—K, J, 8, 6, 4, 2

Auction Bidding

Z dealt and passed. A bid one heart, Y passed, B bid one no trump and Z and A passed. Y bid two diamonds, B passed and Z bid two spades. What should A now do with the foregoing hand?

At one table A doubled two spades. On the bidding it is a certainty that B has strength in spades and yet there is not a sure game in no trump. Therefore, A should play the certainty and double two spades rather than bid two no trump. By opening the king of hearts, he should defeat Z by three tricks.

At the second table, the bidding of this hand was entirely different.

Auction Bidding

Z passed, A bid one heart, Y passed, B bid one no trump and all passed. The writer thinks Y should have bid two diamonds. This hand could not stand any other lead and yet was strong enough to warrant a bid of two diamonds for the lead. As his partner hadn't bid, Z opened his fourth-best spade, which B won with the ten. He then led a low club and finessed the jack. The only way he could get his hand into take another club finesse was by playing either the ace of diamonds or the ace of spades. He didn't care to do either, so led a low diamond in the hope that Y would not cover. He then intended to play the eight and throw the lead into Z's hand.

Y made a big mistake by not playing his ten of diamonds so, when B played the eight, it held the trick, much to his surprise. From then on, he had little difficulty in making a grand slam by forcing Z to discard either spades or hearts and thus set up winning cards in either A's or B's hand. Work it out for practice. If Y had played the ten of diamonds, B could still have made a little slam by allowing Y to hold the trick. No matter what he leads, B can win the trick, set up his clubs and force Z to discard so that he must allow A B to win four heart tricks or a spade and three hearts. Try it out for practice.

Contract Bidding

Z should pass. A should bid one heart and Y should pass. B should bid one no trump and Z should pass. A should bid three no trump and all should pass. The play then proceeds as at Table No. 2.

Both of these hands offer problems of bidding and play much above the ordinary, so study them carefully.

10,000-Mile Polar Trip Planned by Soviet

Moscow.—A 10,000-mile voyage from Archangel to Vladivostok, circling the long arctic coast of Siberia and passing through Bering Strait, is an outstanding feature of Russia's plans for celebrating the second "international polar year" in 1932. Prof. O. U. Schmidt, head of the All-Union Arctic Institute, will be in charge of the icebreaker Sibiriakoff, which has been chosen for this exacting voyage.

In announcing plans for the trip, Professor Schmidt declared that, while it is hoped to make the voyage without interruption, outside of brief halts for purposes of exploration, the vessel will carry provisions for 15 months. The Sibidiakoff will carry a radio apparatus and airplanes useful for scouting expeditions.

As far as Northern Land—a large arctic territory which is separated from the northern coast of Siberia by a small strait — the Sibiriakoff will have a companion ship, the icebreaker Rusanoff.

One purpose of this expedition to Northern Land is to take off an intrepid arctic natural scientist named Ushakov, who with a few companions has now spent two years in this remote and desolate arctic region.

"I Was Terribly Run-Down"

Says Mrs. Doughty: "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Built Me Up"

Wrought Marvellous Change

"I believe it my duty to tell others what wonderful results I obtained from Dr. Williams' Pink Pills," rites Mrs. James Doughty, Brantford, Ont. "I was in a terribly nervous and run-down condition very pale and with no ambition. I took three boxes of the Pills, and I soon began to feel like a new woman. No trouble to do my housework. The Pills built me up and put me in first-class condition."

Mrs. Richard Rusk, Roblin, Man., writes: "Diphtheria left our daughter, Beth, a nervous wreck. She was unable to continue at school. I gave her Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and the change in her was marvellous. She is enjoying splendid heath—and we do feel that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills saved her life."

Don't allow yourself or your daughter to be robbed of heath and vigour. Take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They are no temporary relief. They banish run-down or nervous conditions by creating new blood, which imparts health, vigour and vitality. 50c—at your druggist's.

DESTINY

SHE DARE NOT EAT BUTTER

Acid Stomach Since Childhood

NOW ENJOYS LIFE—THANKS TO KRUSCHEN

Don't ban a food because it disagrees with you. In nine cases out of ten, it isn't the food that's at fault—it's your digestion. Put that right, and you can eat to the order of your appetite. That is just what happened with this woman:—

"I have been taking Kruschen Salts for about three years. I began its use for rheumatism, to which I was becoming a martyr. Kruschen soon arrested that, and I now suffer very seldom from it. But I have experienced the greatest good in the correction of constant acidity of the stomach, from which I suffered from a child. I could never eat butter, nor very little fat of any kind. Now I enjoy butter especially, and eat plenty with no ill-effects. I have recommended Kruschen in hundreds of cases."—A. M. W.

Consider for a moment the cause of your indigestion. Your internal organs have lost tone and, as a result, your gastric—or digestive—juices are failing to flow freely. Your food, instead of being digested and absorbed into your system, is simply stagnating in your stomach and intestinal tract, and producing harmful acid poisons. Let it be made clear that these poisons not only give rise to the discomforts of indigestion: they dull your brain, slacken your nerves, decay your teeth, infect your joints with rheumatism and prepare the way for many other obscure conditions of ill-health.

The immediate effect of the six salts in Kruschen is to promote a natural flow of the digestive and other vital juices of the body. Soon after you start on Kruschen you will begin to feel the benefit. You will find to your satisfaction that you are able to enjoy your food without any distressing after-effects. And, as you persevere with the "little daily dose," you will see that the relief which Kruschen brings is lasting relief.

Kruschen Salts is obtainable at all Drug Stores at 45c. and 75c. per bottle.

A Chinaman opened a laundry on a street between a drug store on one side and a restaurant on the other side. The druggist put up a sign: "We Never Close." Then the restaurant put up a sign which read: "Open At All Hours." The Chinaman, not to be outdone by his neighbours, put up a sign which read: "Me No Sleepy Too."

If a man has lost an eye, a hand, or a leg, he gets plenty of sympathy, but if he loses his hair it is considered a great joke. So, ha ha, and also ho ho!

Then there was the little chap who on being sent to buy a cake of soap insisted on having one with a high perfume. "What's the idea, sonny?" asked the druggist. "Well, I want mother to know when I've washed my face, so she won't make me wash it again."

"Hello! Archie. Was the lady I saw you with the other night your fiancee or your sister?" "Don't know, old man, I haven't asked her yet."

Some amateur economists, and that includes all of us, have lived in the two economic extremes and know how each condition affects domestic and national existence. In the days of the Great War when inflation of values was evident on every hand, farmers got $3 bushel for wheat and $15 a cwt. for hogs, Clothing manufacturers got $50 for a suit of clothes, everybody had money and there was no lack of prosperity, consequently little thought of laying by anything for a rainy day. Now that very antithesis of those days has descend ed upon us. Values are depressed, forced away down till their former bulk is a mere flat fragment and the bare necessities of life are scarcely obtained & manufacturers are glad to get cost price for clothes they make to keep their employes from starving. These two extremes constitute the verities of life. Ponder them carefully and people of to-day might pass the lesson on to their children with the admonition not to lose the head in times of bounding prosperity, but to lay by the corn for sustenance in a time of famine, even as Joseph did in the time of the Pharaohs.

Passing of Mrs. Alex. Murphy

MRS. MURPHY

It was Sunday morning, June 5th, before the church bells called the people on earth to gather to worship God according to the dictates of their conscience. In days gone by, to Mrs. Alex Murphy (Irene McIlwrick) the sound of the tolling of the bells was music to her ears on Sabbath morning. In her home life, in the Sunday School and in the church, and in every other good work, she was a faithful follower of her Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. She was not ashamed to own her Lord and to defend His cause, and honor all His laws. She said, "Thy will be done," when she heard the sound of the heavenly music calling her from a loving husband, infant son, and pleasant home, and friends. That journey we must all take to understand. And alone we must go on that dread journey. No human hand, however dear and loving, may we take in ours as we embark on that great journey. No human love in the world can stay by a second that journey. No passionate pleading can hold for one fraction of a moment the beloved one when the heavenly summons comes. Therefore there is no loneliness like the loneliness of death. We often feel rebellious, but we are told God's ways are not our ways, and God's thoughts are not our thoughts. All things work together for good to those who love God. Our present afflictions are but for a moment, which worketh for us a more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.

In the Presbyterian Church, Port Credit, where Irene and her loving husband, Alex., loved to worship, she was taken for the last time, surrounded by a garden of flowers, tributes of love, for everyone was her friend. Rev. Mr. McCree, a former minister of St. Andrew's Church, Streetsville, the church of her fathers, and where she attended before her marriage, took his text from Acts 16: 15, "And she constrained us." Mr. McCree paid many tributes to her work in her home, Sunday School and church. Rev. Mr. Lundie spoke lovingly of the little boy just entered into the world and left without the care of a mother. Rev. Mr. Cameron led in prayer. Psalm "The Lord is my Shepherd," was read, and the hymn "Asleep in Jesus" was sung.

The pallbearers were H. W. Couse, Floyd Marlatt, Arthur Beamster, J. Burrell, R. Craigie, Arthur Thompson.

In the beautiful God's acre beside the Credit River she was laid to rest beside the friends who had passed on before and we know were singing with her these beautiful words:

"We are gathered at the river,
The beautiful, the beautiful river;
We are singing at the river
That flows by the throne of God."

Mr. McCree at the open grave repeated these words that Mrs. Murphy often heard and loved:

"I am the resurrection and the life. He that believeth in me though he were dead yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth on me shall never die."

As the casket was slowly lowered to its last resting place with our loved one who tried and did so much good on earth Mr. Lundy repeated these words:

"I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, 'Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth. Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors and their works do follow them.'

"May the grace of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ rest, remain and abide with you all now and forevermore. Amen."

Then we left our friend where the angels of God are ever watching until the day of the resurrection.

If we could hear the heavenly music
From our friends above
We would hear the blessed message,
This was done in love.

WOLFE'S PATH TO GLORY

Lovers' Trysting Place Said to Have Been Responsible for Success of British In Reaching Heights.

On the dusty shelves of a Toronto second-hand book store recently the writer found a faded, loose-backed volume, "Tales of the St. Lawrence," published in Montreal 60 years ago. In one of the yarns of the collection, entitled "A Country Lost for Love," the striking claim was made that Wolfe's success at Quebec was due to the revelation of a suitable path up the Heights at the Foulon, now known as Wolfe's Cove, by Captain Stobo, who, as a lightly restricted hostage of war, some time before had been the hero of a romantic affair of the heart, the heroine of which is said to have been the wife of one of the officers of the French garrison. This precarious path to the river, the story says, was their rendezvous.

Robert Stobo, it was learned from a book of memoirs, was born in Glasgow in 1727. In early youth he emigrated to Virginia where he achieved some success as a merchant. Sterner business took him, in 1755, to the territory of Ohio, where the French troops from New France were giving much trouble. He was captain in the Virginia Volunteers, a body of "self willed and ungovernable men," under the command of one George Washington, then an ardent soldier of King George III. and was present at that regrettable encounter — never satisfactorily explained—when the French officer, M. de Jumonville, under cover of a flag of truce with some attendants, fell beneath a volley from Washington's men. Shortly after this tragedy the colonist force of about 500 men was with its commander, captured by the French at Fort Necessity. A truce being arranged by the two forces, articles were signed by Washington, the terms, among others, giving to his opponent two hostages in guarantee of good faith. Stobo was one of the pair selected. He was taken first to Fort Du Quesne, site of the city of Pittsburg, and afterwards to Quebec.

Attractive in appearance and personality, Stobo seems to have made many friends among the residents of Quebec, and on giving his parole enjoyed freedom enough to make a conquest of one of the finest ladies of the ancient capital. All went merrily for both of them until the defeat of the British forces under Braddock. Among the papers of the unfortunate General were found letters, maps and charts describing certain French positions and strongholds, which Captain Stobo had sent to him while he was detained at Fort Du Quesne. Arrest, imprisonment and sentence of death as a spy followed this revelation in quick order. But official confirmation of the death penalty had to be received from France and in the meantime, with the aid of his lady-love, Stobo escaped into the woods. He was recaptured, however, the offer of a reward of 6,000 livres for this event putting a large percentage of the Quebec population on his trail. A second attempt, which he and several other Britishers contrived with infinite patience, succeeded.

Silently paddling a canoe by night, hiding in the woods by day, they managed to elude their pursuers and every day increased their confidence and courage. A surprise attack made them masters of a wheat-laden shallop. From this, later, they boarded and captured a sloop. This craft, after a one-sided argument, was exchanged for a schooner with a cargo of furs. They kept the cargo. In 22 days after their escape they sailed into Louisbourg and learned that somewhere in the gulf the formidable fleet of Admirable Saunders had sailed by on the way to Quebec. Schooner and cargo sold, the spoil divided, Robert Stobo embarked on the first vessel for Quebec, and his knowledge of the city on more than one occasion was of priceless value to his fellow-countrymen. And, if his chronicle is dependable, it was Robert Stobo who pointed out that lovers' trail of romance that become Wolfe's path to glory on the Heights of Abraham. — From the Toronto Telegram.

HORSE IS STILL KING.

Ponies Had to Carry Tractors as Well as Explorers.

Members of the Central Asian caterpillar tractor expedition who set out to demonstrate to the world that they could traverse the entire Asian continent from Beirut to Peiping by tractors and automobiles, found to their dismay that the horse is still the king of travel in the Himalayas.

Not only did the expedition's 250 sure-footed ponies carry the 30 members of the party safely over the roof of the world to Astor, in Kashmir, through all manner of defiles, ravines and tortuous mountain passes, the faithful animals actually carried the tractors, too.

Members of the expedition were obliged four times completely to dismantle their tractors and cars because of the difficult character of the roads. The dissembled parts of the machines were then loaded on the ponies.

CANADIAN PLATINUM.

The opening of the Acton refinery for precious metals in England has called attention to the part now being played by Canada in world-wide markets for some of the rarer metals. This refinery, which is owned by the Mond Nickel Company, will draw its raw materials chiefly from the mines at Sudbury. A rich residue of platinum metals is recovered at the Sudbury and Port Colborne plants of the big company, and these will be refined at the new plant at Acton.

Uses for Feldspar.

The production of feldspar in Canada last year totalled 26,796 tons. Feldspar is used in the manufacture of tableware, electric porcelain, floor and wall tile, bottle glass and scouring compounds. The principal source of supply is in the Province of Quebec, with the Province of Ontario a close second.

Here and There

Speaking of the work of assessing the village this year, we would say that the new assessor, Len. C. Pope deserves much credit, as there were only 2 appeals entered.

The Council is to be congratulated on the big improvement they have made on the old Town Hall. When they get the piles of old lumber that are lying around put out of sight it will look even better. Then plant out several beds of flowers and keep the grass cut.

The ratepayers will be pleased to know that the Village Tax Rate is about 18 mills less this year than last.

This week we print the Village Council minutes in full and hope to do so for every meeting hereafter so the ratepayers will know what the Council is doing.

Geo. Steggall Celebrates Birthday

Way back in '61, George Steggall, erstwhile miller, horse-trader, hawker, manufacturer, musician, adventurer and farmer, weather-beaten pioneer and respected citizen of Peel County, came to settle in Streetsville.

To-day, at the age of 95 years, he joins with his second wife, sister of his first choice, to celebrate 75 years of married life.

"Fifty-two years in double harness and nary a hitch," Mr. Stegall emphatically asserts and his bride, three or four months his senior, smiles her assent. Previous to his marriage to his present wife, he enjoyed 23 years of happy married life with her sister. Fate, however, took a hand and she was killed by a runaway team.

Both old people have been blessed with health and happiness and at 95 years, Mr. Stegall is renowned throughout the County for his agility and ability to carry such a ripe old age.

Powder, rouge and other cosmetics were termed by Mrs. Stegall as disgusting. Never has she seen fit to mar nature's charms with such "tommy-rot" and surprisingly she still retains the color and complexion of a woman many years her junior. A long life has failed to sour the old couple and both look forward to another happy span of years together.

Memories and economics generally run along similar lines with pioneers and very thoughtfully and conveniently, Mr. Stegall reminisced for the reporter of days "when eggs sold for 10 cents a dozen and strawberries were given for the taking."

Marry Young is Advice

"Marry when you are young," Mr. Stegall cautioned his interviewer. "I was married when I was nineteen and would do it again, were I to have life over again.

Mr. Stegall was born in Suffold, England, where after a "show-down" with his father over his marriage, he left to seek his fortune. He secured employment as millers' apprentice in the north of the country.

Not content with the lot of a north of England miller, he roamed with his wife throughout the country, working at different jobs here and there. A reconciliation with his father, brought him a mill of his own. The monotony palled upon him.

Always impetuous, one night, he "walked out" on his own mill, leaving it in the hands of hired help. Seized with a strong spirit of adventure, he bundled his wife and son into a dog-cart, set out for the coast and booked his passage to America.

He dared the rugged bush of Northern Ontario, attempting to hack farmlands out of impenetrable brush and undergrowth. Hardy Scotch pioneers aided him in building a log cabin, in which not a nail was used. Not satisfied with the hardships imposed by the North Country, he trekked to Malton and finally secured employment in the Meadowvale mill, north of Streetsville.

Successfully he managed the mill for its owners for a number of years, then again became discontented. He worked in mills in the Alpha and Barnhard vicinity, then again decided to try his hand at farming.

Purchase of 16 cows and a parcel of land gave him a start and he shipped milk to the City of Toronto for years. His partner in life looked after the dairy section of the farming and milked seven cows night and morning.

Always intent on roaming, Mr. Stegall built up a good peddling business which extended the length and breadth of Peel County. He sold clothing, tinware, vegetables and other articles and soon became a familiar figure on the highways and byways. A born musician he was very clever on the concertina and he made "many's a dollar" playing at dances at the surrounding hotels and at barn dances.

He was always in demand. Food cost him nothing and he was always welcome. Music, his one hobby, he played far into the night, taking a real delight out of his work.

His one weakness is telling horse trading stories. An entire afternoon would only see the starting of his vocabulary of yarns.

To rise at 3 o'clock each morning was only a lesser necessity and hardship in his activities as a horse-trader. He had to be on hand in Toronto early to meet the buyers and get them in good humor, and his wife never balked or failed to have his breakfast ready, even in the wee sma' hours, he confided.

A family of 10 children call them "Dad and Mom". Last Friday the little farm house again echoed to the voices of the children gathered at a re-union, who first saw light of day within its walls.

For 40 years SALADA has given the finest quality in tea. Present prices are the lowest in 15 years.

A Musical Typewriter

Not one that plays tunes, but one with which a musical score can be written, just as one prints words with an ordinary typewriter.

Attempts at something of the kind have been made, we learn from an article in La Nature (Paris), but none has been successful until the invention of the machine described below. We read:

Hitherto, little progress has been made in printing music, and even in writing it. While the processes employed in printing and reproducing written languages have been continually improved, the reproduction of music, either by typography or by hand, has remained as it has been for years.

Attempts to construct a machine to write music have met with insurmountable difficulties, especially in effecting the necessary combination of the notes and musical signs, on the one hand, and the lines of the staff on the other.

It has been thought to solve the problem by using sheets of "music-paper" or by writing the lines of the staff at the outset, by a special machine, but this process was difficult and necessitated too great watchfulness. Machines based on this principle were therefore quickly abandoned.

A music-writing machine invented by Gustave Rundstatter, an engineer of Frankfort-on-the-Main, works on an entirely different principle. Outwardly, it exactly resembles an ordinary typewriter, except that the common keyboard is replaced by one of special design, and that the carriage, instead of advancing every time a key is touched, stays quiet until the assemblage of notes and signs is complete. The difficulty of adjusting the signs with reference to the staff is avoided by an organic connection of each note with the corresponding part of the staff. The latter is formed automatically by the junction of notes and signs on the blank paper, at such impression.

The notes are written as easily, as quickly, and as exactly as one would play them on the keyboard of a piano. The copyist is never fatigued, and the typewritten score is quite as neat and clear as a printed sheet.

A man who spends a good deal of time travelling is devoted to golf when at home. He is more celebrated for enthusiasm than for accuracy.

One day he got into a deep bunker, where he stayed for a long time. His opponent strolled over to discover the globe-trotter had dug quite a sizable hole in his efforts to dislodge the ball."

"Well, Bill," he said, genially, "off to Australia again?"

French Seek Word For English "Week End"

Paris.—Efforts are being made to find a French term for "week-end." A prize has been offered for the best suggestion.

The competitors are finding, however, that the term, like "cocktail" and "five o'clock tea," is borrowed from the English which has become rather firmly embedded in the French language. Many seekers after an alternative declare there is no hope of banishing "week-end," so they propose phonetic substitutes. One of the most promising is "aniquende," which has the merit of being fairly accurate French representation of the normal pronunciation.

More enterprising word-coiners seek a purely French equivalent and urge their fellow-countrymen to adopt "l'hebda," or "trevelabeur," or "la relache.' The last term is used by theatre managers to indicate that their houses are temporarily dark.

40th Anniversary of Salada Tea Company

Forty years ago this month in an unpretentious little building on Front Street, in Toronto, the Salada Tea Company packed its first pound of tea. Founded in 1892 by the late Honourable Peter Larkin, the business progressed very rapidly and by 1895 a branch had been opened in Montreal. Two years later the United States market was invaded and an office opened in Buffalo. To-day, three of the largest and finest warehouses in the world, devoted exclusively to the packing of tea, stand as a memorial to the founder—located in Toronto, Montreal, and in Boston (the scene of the memorable tea party which precipitated the Revolutionary War).

The Canadian market was then controlled by China and Japan teas—the largest sale being China tea of poor quality. These teas were being sold from chests, exposed to air, dust, dampness, foreign odours, and so forth, all detrimental to the quality of tea. In England, which was, and still is, the greatest tea-drinking country in the world, Ceylon and Indian teas of fine quality had practically displaced China teas, and it occurred to Larkin that Canadians also would prefer these finer teas. He, consequently, introduced a Ceylon and Indian blend to this Continent. He then conceived the idea of packing it in metal packages, in order that it would reach the consumer intact, with its flavour and quality unimpaired by dampness, store odours, etc. This step revolutionized the tea market on this Continent.

He sought a name for his product and decided on "SALADA," which was the name of an old Indian tea garden. All that was left now was to tell the public about it. He wisely decided that the quickest and cheapest way to do this was by means of the newspaper. The result was so gratifying that he continued to use the newspapers as his chief advertising vehicle from that day.

He strove always to give the public the finest quality tea he could at the price and then advertise it for all he was worth. His achievement is the largest selling package tea in North America.

On the Shelf

It is still customary in rural districts in Scotland for the minister to preach a series of sermons around one Scripture text. The parable of the Ten Virgins had been selected by a minister for a series of ten sermons, in which he took one Virgin at a time.

Many of the church folks were tired of the subject at the end of a week or two, but it was left to the beadle to tell the minister the truth.

Asked by the preacher as he was disrobing him in the vestry one evening how he was enjoying "my analysis of the characters of the Virgins," the beadle replied, brusquely: "The hale congregation's fair scunnert wi' them, sir. They maun be a lot o' tough auld maids by this time!"

A Welshman spending a holiday in London noticed on a door of a big house the words, "Please ring the bell." He rang the bell. In a minute a footman appeared and asked him what he wanted. "Nothing," said the Welshman. "Then why did you ring the bell'?" asked the footman. "Because it said so," replied the Welshman. "Oh," said the footman, with a smile, "I see you come from the country, where nanny-goats grow on gooseberry bushes!" "Yes," said the Welshman; "but in London there are some more wonderful sights. You have only to ring the bell and a monkey pops out."

The Aztec Mystery

A Thrilling Story of the Old West

BY MURRAY LEINSTER

SYNOPSIS.

Sonny Holman, believing he rightfully owns the Aztec mine, holds up the mine payrolls. Janet Laurier, who holds legal title, offers a reward for his capture. She is kidnapped by Garcia's gang, but Sonny follows and escapes with her. She suspects him of being in league with Garcia in the kidnapping.

Tilford, manager of the mine, imports men to guard the payrolls. Two of them walk into a saloon, get into an argument with Jake Hornaby, a driver of the stage and a friend of Sonny's, and shoot him dead.

CHAPTER XII.

But instead of much dancing and hilarious merriment, in the saloon, the men were prone to talk to each other in low tones. Instead of laughter, there was a buzz of angry, uneasy talk. Three wandering cowpunchers, on their way to the Panhandle in search of a job, were jovially intoxicated and surrounded by shrilly giggling girls, but the rest of the men glowered and talked to one another instead of to their willing hostesses.

Gleason and his companion made for the bar, the scarred man swaggering and Gleason following quietly, though his pale and blinking eyes gazed about him with a lack of expression that was more daunting than the most ferocious of frowns would have been.

The hum of talk wavered and broke as the pair ranged themselves before the bar. Eyes swept covertly to them and away.

Gleason tapped two fingers on the bar. The bartender hastily thrust out two glasses and a bottle.

"Charge it to Tilford," growled the scar-faced man.

"Yes, suh," said the bartender. He had turned pale when they came back into the place. He waited for further orders. No one would be waited on while these two required his services.

The scar-faced man grinned suddenly at him and murmured to Gleason. Gleason nodded and spoke tonelessly. "My frien' was wonderin'," he said in his monotonous voice, "if the house wasn't plannin' to set up drinks for the crowd. He thought he heard yuh say so."

"Yes, suh," stammered the bartender.

His hands shaking, he began to prepare for the general drink.

"Yuh'll all drink with us," announced the scar-faced man jovially to the watching, sullen crowd. "We'll propose a little toast. To hell with Sonny Holman an' his friends."

There was a stirring, and outside the saloon the clattering of horses' hoofs. The bartender looked as if he were ready to drop behind the bar the instant bullets started flying. But the stirring died away once more. The swinging doors opened and two men came in, then two others.

The place became suddenly and deadly still. Sonny Holman struck a match and lit a cigarette he had evidently just rolled. "I beg yore pardon," he drawled, "my hearin' ain't so good. But I thought I heard somebody sayin' to hell with Sonny Holman. Was I right?"

The pair at the bar swung around alertly. The faded blue eyes of Gleason regarded Sonny without expression. His companion sneered.

"Sure did," he agreed truculently. "What yuh got to say about it?"

"Nothin'," drawled Sonny, "but it kinda identifies you an' yuh pardner as the folks that killed Jake Hornaby today."

Gleason opened his mouth and spoke tonelessly. "He went for his gun first," he observed.

"I rek'n," drawled Sonny gently, "you all don't realize what a law abidin' place this here Moleville is. Yuh came here to guard the Aztec. That's all right. But killin' folkses is kinda frowned on here, even in the best holdup man society."

The stillness in the Roaring Zephyr was breathless. One of the painted girls giggled nervously. Men jumped.

"Well," said the scarred man truculently, "who are you, anyway? An' what yuh got to say about what we do?"

"Right now," submitted Sonny mildly, "folks are callin' me Mistuh John Doe, an' I'm a kinda officious actin' deputy sheriff outside o' business hours. I come t' take you two fellers to jail."

One of the men behind Sonny moved forward angrily.

"Wait a minute, Thompson," said Sonny gently. "These gentlemen are comin' quietly. They'll han' over their guns real peaceable."

He moved forward without haste, his hands swinging naturally, his whole air that of a person advancing to greet an old acquaintance. A ripple of indefinable movement spread through the crowd in the saloon. One of the three intoxicated cowpunchers, evidently advised of the situation in a whisper from one of the dancehall girls, let out a drunken roar of approval.

"That's the stuff, Sonny! That's the stuff!"

Gleason's lips twitched. "If you're Sonny Holman," he said tonelessly, "I'd better let yuh have it."

His hand dropped in an infinitely quick movement. But Sonny's own hand flicked to his holster in a flawless gesture that was sheer poetry in its perfection. His gun bellowed—and Gleason's hand closed over emptiness. Sonny's bullet had struck Gleason's holster, bored through it, and flung a broken six-gun backward to the floor.

Sonny's gun was bearing on the scar-faced man before the echo of the first shot had ceased. "An' you, my frien'?" he drawled politely. "I don't hunt coyotes as a rule, but I'll plug yuh if yuh ask for it."

The scar-faced man sullenly raised his hands shoulder high. Sonny took his gun and passed it to Thompson of the Circle Bar.

"Thompson," he drawled, "I wish you'd take these two fellers an' put 'em in jail. The sheriff, he give yuh the keys. Me, I rek'n I'll ride off to the hills again. I hope," he added, facing those in the Roaring Zephyr pleasantly, "that yuh all realize the benefits of law an' order, an' that yuh let the law take its course. Jake, he was a frien' of mine, an' this is the way I want t' handle it."

Sudden grins greeted him. Thompson and his two hands took charge of Gleason and the scar-faced man. They marched them out.

"Sonny, that was the durndest thing I ever saw!" said the bartender. "Beatin' his so far he hadn't touched his gun when you shot it off his hip!"

"Excuse me," drawled Sonny. "My name, folks, is Mistuh John Doe. The sheriff's done christened me. That Sonny Holman you all mistake me for, he's a most horrific outlaw. I hope nobody ain't goin' to make the same mistake again, especial as if Tilford gets many more guards in like those two, I'll have to be hangin' aroun' Moleville a lot."

There was a pause, and then a roar of laughter. It was not a wholly amused laughter, but a let-down from a tense moment. Sonny grinned and went out.

Business in the Roaring Zephyr was excellent for some time afterward. Other saloons and dance halls were deserted as the news spread, and the occupants of the other homes of festivity hastened to the Roaring Zephyr to hear from an eyewitness just how Sonny, himself an outlaw, had come in and formally arrested Tilford's guards for the killing of Jake Hornaby.

But the bartender was relieved and the place immediately closed when additional news came, two hours later, that Tilford, accompanied by Janet Laurier, had routed out a justice of the peace and insisted on an immediate hearing for the two guards, and that Janet had secured their release on bail.

Sonny read as he rode, the reins slack over his wrist. The weekly Moleville Times and Argus-Leader was full of news this week. Sonny chuckled as he went over the columns devoted to happenings in which he had taken part.

There was the holdup of the stage, wherein Janet had tried to capture him. The injury of the sheriff, when he and Sonny together tried to round up Garcia's gang of highgraders. Janet's abduction and her return by Sonny—mostly guess work, since she refused to talk about it. Sonny's raiding of the mine office and his appropriation of the second payroll, sent to take the place of the one he had first lifted from the stagecoach. Sonny did not smile as he read about the killing of Jake Hornaby, though. The arrest of the two mine guards by an admitted outlaw brought back the amused wrinkles about his eyes. The Times and Argus-Leader, with exemplary discretion, referred to the arrest as having been made by "our well known and genial fellow townsman, Mr. John Doe," and let it go at that.

Sonny rolled a cigarette as he rode and read, and he had stuck it in his mouth when he came to the final detail, that Janet Laurier had been awakened and told of the arrest, that she had gone immediately to the jail with Tilford, and that she had bailed out the two killers. Then the cigarette dropped unnoticed from Sonny's lips.

"Lordy," murmured Sonny as the news sank in, "that lady sure hates one Sonny Holman an' all his works."

A Chinese "Main Street"

No sidewalk, just a narrow, dusty street;
Small huddled shops irregular and low,
With "open face"; and strolling to and fro
The vendors calling with the tom-tom's beat.
And here are wondrous jades sold for a song,
And crimson lacquered vases, silk brocades,
Rich old embroideries of rarest shades,
Bronze incense burners and a dinner gong.

Above float billowig clouds of green and blue,
Of red and yellow, silken banner things
That advertise the little shops below.
My rickshaw coolie, with his swinging queue,
Takes me to buy a treasure that the Mings
Held sacred quite a thousand years ago.

Top Prices For Lambs
Let Us Reason Together

From all the information we can gather there is a fairly heavy crop of lambs this year, and methods of marketing likely to be somewhat different due to the fact that Abattoir Companies have decided to place in cold storage only about 50% of what they have usually stored in previous years.

They realize from past experience that the consuming public seem to prefer fresh lamb rather than lamb from cold storage, and as an illustration we find that according to Government Statistics there was in storage on April 1st, 1932, some five million twenty two thousand pounds as against three million one hundred and fifty thousand pounds on April 1st, 1931, showing that conditions and requirements are changing.

During the last few years the quality of lambs have shown a decided improvement, and by doing so you have done much to stimulate greater consumption, hence demand for greater volume. This has been accomplished by better breeding, better feeding and castration of buck lambs. Light thin lambs do not produce good quality lamb meat. Heavy lambs are also undesirable for the market, but good fat lambs yielding a dressed carcass of thirty-five to forty-five pounds are desirable and will command top prices, or in other words well finished lambs weighing 70 to 90 pounds live weight at the market are desirable. Lambs weighing over 90 pounds at the market are likely to be discounted in price. With all these facts before us we feel disposed to recommend you to ship out your lambs as they get fat and hold unfinished lambs on the farm until fat, but the chief feature is to keep sending them out as they get ready, believing as we do that prices will be better during the early season of marketing rather than fall months when receipts are likely to be heavy.

We are anxious that farmers may receive the best possible returns for their lambs, and are asking our shippers to co-operate with you by maintaining a regular shipping service and assure our readers that we have a full staff of experienced salesmen, and in a position to handle all classes of live stock whether by rail or by truck.

A Unique Reunion

Three years ago, during the week end of May 24th, a party of nine boys camped together at Ebor Park, near Brantford, and had lots of fun.

These boys represented the "Wolf Patrol" of the old 1st Ontario Lone Scout Troop, and this was the very first Lone Scout Camp to be held in Ontario.

Capt. Furminger, our Commissioner, who was with them, says that in 1929 these boys were very inexperienced in Scouting, but that they were quick to learn.

To-day one of those lads is Assistant Scoutmaster to the 1st Paris Troop and another is Assistant Cub Leader to the 1st Paris Pack, and all of them have grown into big good looking fellows.

A.S.M. Melmin Prine and Assistant Cub Leader Cliff. Cassady were again camping on the same spot this year during the 24th May week end, and with them were some of their boys from the Paris Troop.

These boys camped on the same site as did the Lonies in 1929, and also used the same feat and provided the same food and menus as were enjoyed at the first Lone Scout Camp.

During the week end six other members of the old "Wolf Patrol" came out from Paris in a bunch to visit the camp and to renew acquaintances and talk over old times with the Commissioner, who was so delighted to meet them all again.

Summer Camp

"On Lone Scout Trails" (May issue) has been sent out and with it is a page on the Lone Scout Camp to be held this summer at Ebor Park. There is also a form for you to fill in and return to the Lone Scout Headquarters to secure your reservation at this camp.

Do not put this on one side until it is too late, but send it along, properly filled in, as quickly as possible and remember it must be in by June 20th at the latest.

"Lone E" was at Ebor Park recently and the camp site is looking beautiful, with the trees in full leaf and the grass and wild flowers coming along nicely. The Swimming Pool is being put into good shape and the river looks good too. Tell Mother that she need not be nervous, as all swimming at our camp is closely supervised by experts, and anyway, the River and Swimming Pool are not deep enough to get you into serious difficulties.

Remember we want YOU at this camp from July 4th to 16th inclusive, so come along just as you are. Never mind a uniform, if you haven't got one, and we will help you to pass your Tenderfoot and other tests and give you your badges right in camp.

Don't forget the dates, and if you haven't a reservation form, write to Lone Scout Headquarters, and ask for one.

Our Weekly Scout Law—No. 10—"A Scout is Clean in Thought, Word and Deed."

What a splendid resolution this is! To be Clean!

Every healthy boy does his best to keep himself clean, doesn't he? You can usually pick out a Scout, too, by his smart appearance, and clean cut look, even when he is not in uniform. Why?

Because a good Scout takes care to have his face and hands bright and shining. He is careful to see that there is no "tide mark" around his neck, and that those ears and fingernails are not in mourning. Also he takes care that his clothes are brushed and clean, and that they are worn correctly and not thrown on with a hay fork!

So in appearance, on the outside, he looks clean. But what about the inside? What does he think about? Are his thoughts always clean? Is he obeying the 1st Scout Law and being honorable?

Yes, I like to think that Scouts have no time for thoughts that are not clean. They will not stop to listen to stories and things that are dirty.

And if a Scout's thoughts are clean, it will naturally follow that his speech is clean also. Probably you have sometimes heard ignorant people speaking who use a swear word with every breath. What sense is there in that? Haven't you noticed how stupid it sounds? If they could only realize it, swearing is the biggest advertisement of a person's ignorance!

No! "A Scout is not a fool," Lord Baden-Powell once said, and therefore he has no time for swearing or for passing on stories which can only be classed as "dirty."

Thus you will see that if a Scout keeps his thoughts and his speech clean, it is only natural to expect that he will be clean in his actions, and this is the most important part of this law.

To keep your body healthy and your mind strong, you must be clean, Scouts, both outside and in, and all your actions must be 100% good. You study the birds and trees and other natural objects. Have you ever seen anything unclean in them?

And one further word, Lonies. Never say, do or think about anything that you would be ashamed to discuss with your Mother or Dad. If you do this you will be O.K., and I know that you want to keep the 10th Scout Law just as much as any of the other nine.

Universities in Britain Improving Financially

London.—British universities weathered the financial crisis last year in more satisfactory condition than in 1930, according to a report just issued by the University Grants Committee.

Of the fifty-two institutions concerned in the report, three balanced their revenue accounts, ten showed deficits and forty showed surpluses in 1931. In the preceding year twenty-eight had surpluses. Last year's deficits aggregated only $57,000 (at par rate of exchange), and the condition of only two institutions was considered at all serious.

A decision of the government not to curtail the grants to universities was received as a source of great encouragement and a sign of faith in the value of their work. The universities have, none the less, taken steps to effect every economy possible so as to maintain their financial stability.

Color in the Fields

Golden dandelion discs—gold and orange—of a hue more beautiful, I think, than the higher and more visible buttercup. A blackbird, gleaming, so black is he, splashing in the runlet of water across the gateway. A ruddy kingfisher swiftly drawing himself, as you might draw a stroke with a pencil, over the surface of the yellow buttercups, and away above the hedge. Hart's tongue fern, thick with green, so green as to be thick with its color, deep in the ditch under the shady hazel boughs. White meadow-sweet lifting its tiny florets and black-flowered sedges.—Richard Jefferies in "The Life of the Fields."

TACT

A policeman on point duty had held up a large touring car for nearly five minutes when there seemed to be no need. The driver, an elderly woman, was indignant.

"Good gracious me, officer!" she said. "Do you realize that you have delayed me? Have you never been on point duty before? I want to know why you held me up?"

"I beg your pardon, madam," said the young policeman, "but at first I thought you were too young to be driving a car."

Sunday School Lesson

June 12. Lesson XI—Judah the True Brother—Genesis 44: 18-34. Golden Text—Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!—Psalm 133: 1.

ANALYSIS.

I. THE ELOQUENCE OF LOVE, vs. 18-23.

II. A TROUBLED OLD AGE, vs. 24-29.

III. A BROTHER'S SELF-SACRIFICE, vs. 30-34.

INTRODUCTION—The years of famine predicted by Joseph have come. The land of Canaan as well as Egypt, feels the pinch of famine. Driven by hunger, Joseph's brothers come down from Canaan to Egypt in search of food. They are thus brought under Joseph's power, and indeed into personal touch with him. What a reverse of fortunes! They had left him in a pit (37: 24); they find him on a throne. He had been in their power: they are now in his. They pay two visits to Egypt; and although Joseph recognizes them, they do not recognize him. On the occasion of their second visit, he places his valuable divining cup in Benjamin's sack; and on its being found he demands that Benjamin should be detained in Egypt as one guilty of theft. The scene has all the elements of tragedy—Joseph, the despised brother, now clothed with absolute power; Benjamin, the father's present favorite and the innocent victim of others' guilt; the brothers prostrate with fear and grief; and the aged Jacob waiting anxiously at home for the return of the beloved Benjamin.

I. THE ELOQUENCE OF LOVE, vs. 18-23.

Judah, who from the first seems to have been of finer stuff than the others (37: 26, 27), comes forward as their spokesman. His speech is regarded as the finest instance of Hebrew oratory—tender, moving, and full of pathos and beauty. Luther once wished that he could plead with God as Judah pled with Joseph. His deep love for Jacob and for Benjamin has fired him with true eloquence. He begins by showing Joseph the utmost deference, v. 18. Surrounded with such pomp and circumstance, he is well aware that he is speaking to one almost as mighty as Pharaoh. Then he skilfully reminds Joseph that it was at his, Joseph's insistence, that Benjamin was ever brought to Egypt. Conscience has at last humbled the brothers. In a flash the memory of their early guilt confronts them, v. 16. Conscience, now active, is busily at work—"His brother is dead," v. 20. Judah hasn't the remotest notion that it is Joseph who stands before him; a the greater, therefore, will be the surprise of the brothers when Joseph finally discloses himself to them. Judah is advancing every consideration that would move Joseph to mercy. "He cleverly interprets," says Driver, "Joseph's desire on the former visit to see Benjamin as indicating a favorable disposition towards him. To "set one's eyes upon a person" (v. 21), is a Hebrew expression, meaning "to take a person under one's protection and show him favor." Will Joseph not stand by his promise now and be lenient with Benjamin? The flight of the years, together with the present troubles, have obviously purged the spirit of the brothers. Very different from the base deceit shown the father when Joseph was sold (37 31, 32) is the tender concern for him in v. 22.

II. A TROUBLED OLD AGE, vs. 24-29.

Judah now lifts the veil from the grief at home. Jacob is in an acute dilemma. On the one hand he must have food. Severe as the famine was in Egypt, it was worse still in Canaan. Even in good years the harvests of Canaan were not comparable with those of Egypt. Further, there had been no such prudent storing of grain i Canaan as there had been, under Joseph's administration, in Egypt. Throughout history when men felt the pinch of famine in Canaan, they always looked with longing to Egypt, the land of plenty. On the other hand, Jacob's sons remind him that it is useless to send them to Egypt for more corn unless Benjamin is sent with them. We are made to feel poignantly the anguish of the father. Will he let Benjamin go? But what if he is bereft of him as he was of Joseph? Jacob's cup of sorrow is overflowing. Yet in all this it is the justice of God overtaking him. These troubles of his unhappy old age are the sure retribution of the wrongs he had long ago done his own brother, Esau. Tortured with anguish of spirit, he trembles at the verge of Sheol, the shadowy abode of the dead.

III. A BROTHER'S SELF-SACRIFICE, vs. 30-34.

Judah's nobility now rises to impressive grandeur. He has given his solemn pledge to his father than Benjamin will be restored to him. But if the governor of Egypt is determined to hold Benjamin, his pledge will be broken and yet another wrong done to the father. Once is enough! He pleads passionately that he may be permitted to remain as a slave in Benjamin's stead. Better slavery than to face his grief-stricken father! Joseph cannot long hold out against such utter self-abnegation; the brothers are prepared in the spirit for forgiveness.

ONLY A TRIFLE

A young, newly-married couple were out for their first spin in a second-hand car they had bought.

They covered several miles, then hubby, who was driving, became conscious that something was wrong, and brought the car to a halt by the roadside.

"Have a look at the back tire on your side, darling," he said, "and see if there is anything wrong with it."

"Oh, it's quite all right," reported the wife, after a careful scrutiny. "It's flat at the bottom, but it's round enough at the top."

Canada's Position in Empire Mining

An important chapter was added to the history of the mining industry of the Dominion at the annual meeting of the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy, held last month in Montreal. This gathering really resolved itself into a convention of Canada's mining experts, the deliberations and discussions being of particular significance in view of the Economic Conference to be held in Ottawa in July. The papers read and discussed had for their chief purpose the consideration of Canada's position in mining and metallurgy in relation to the mineral resources of the Empire as a whole.

The central topic of this year's general meeting of the Institute was, perhaps, the paper read by Dr. Charles Camsell, Deputy Minister of Mines, Ottawa, entitled "Mineral Position of the British Empire." In this paper Dr. Camsell disclosed some interesting facts, based on a comprehensive study he has conducted during the past four years. It is no secret that the results from this study, presented at the last Imperial Conference in London, carried great weight with the members.

According to Dr. Camsell's address in Montreal, the British Empire, viewed as an economic unit or group, rather than as individual countries, is in a position, potentially at least, of unique strength. Of the 28 most important metals and minerals the British Empire possesses 21 in such abundance as to have large quantities available for export. Of the remaining seven the Empire possesses two in quantities adequate for its own needs. For one the Empire is practically dependent on outside sources, and for four it is almost entirely so dependent. No other single country, or group of countries so associated occupies a position comparable to that of the British Empire in respect of supplies of mineral raw materials.

Aviator Travels Faster Than Speed of Bullet

Man is able to travel today with the speed of a bullet. When Flight Lieutenant Stainforth, of the British navy, winner of the 1931 Schneider Trophy race, made a speed for the first lap of 415.5 miles an hour, he actually went faster than the maximum speed of a bullet from a British service revolver.

This bullet has a muzzle velocity of 650 feet a second, or 409.09 miles an hour. Therefore, if a revolver were fired just as the flyer passed in theory the bullet might be expected to travel along beside the ship and the flyer might feel safe in reaching out and touching it, or even putting it in his pocket while it was still proceeding at full speed.

The flyer's speed might also be said to have been faster than the average speed of a Springfield rifle bullet, says "Popular Mechanics Magazine." Such a missile leaves the muzzle at 2,653 feet a second, equal to 1,808.9 miles an hour, and its average speed over its effective range of 1,000 yards is 1,270 miles an hour. However, after the bullet has covered its effective range it floats on and on, until, slowed down by air resistance, it drops to the ground spent. At the end of its flight it has very little speed, and if the average is taken it is found to be less than for the plane at top speed. The bullet would win, however, if the plane's speed were averaged in the same way.

ONE WAY

He took his ticket leisurely at the booking office of a suburban station, but, on hearing the train approach, made more haste than speed to the platform. He was going well until, when nearly at the top of the steps leading to the platform, something caused his foot to slip.

His hat had wobbled on to his brow, his bag and umbrella betook themselves one to the right and one to the left, but he regained these possessions in a grasp-all sort of fashion while on his knees.

Then he looked up at the official at the gate, and inquired: "Is this the way to the Glasgow train?"

"Yes, sir," was the unsympathetic reply; "you can come that way if you wish, but if looks bad!"

Unique Methods To Get Jobs

Rotterdam Chemists Advertises by Plane—Other Notes

Rotterdam.—"If this is no hit, what else can be?" was the headline of a handbill, which recently a Royal Dutch Airlines airplane scattered over Rottendam and The Hague in ten thousands of copies in behalf of an unemployed chemist, who in this unusual letter of application summarized his qualifications. There is evidently a climax in the efforts for originality in attracting the possible employer's eye. This advertising for a job by airplane was preceded by the application of the old and well-tried system of the sandwichman. Some time ago a well-dressed young man appeared in the streets of Rotterdam, wearing large signs on his breast and back, giving particulars of his education and intellectual qualifications, requesting those who thought they had a use for an enterprising young man to communicate with him. He received a score of letters, offering him work. This example was soon followed by someone in Amsterdam.

Dinners For Sea Gulls

Sea gulls perform the same office in connection with the announcement of winter in Amsterdam as the swallows, according to tradition, do with respect to spring in these northern countries. Early in winter the gulls come to Amsterdam because they are sure to find there much of their native element, namely, water. Furthermore a great many people in Amsterdam in winter make it a point daily to feed them. The birds are very bright and soon get to know the places where, at feeding time a kind-hearted woman or child appears at the winow, with a plate heaped with fragments of bread. The gulls fly in large flocks past the window, catching in their flight the pieces of bread that are thrown up in the air.

Radio and Film Exhibit

Amsterdam people had a fortunate opportunity to get a clearer insight into the working methods of the electro-acoustic industries, through an international exhibition of radio, television, gramophone, sound films, films and photography held at Amsterdam from May 6 to May 16. This gave a complete and lively picture of the technical, cultural and economic phases of these industries, while lectures were given on allied subjects. Rare and important exhibits from Russia, the United States, Japan, Great Britain and Germany gave instructive impressions of the achievements of other nations.

Taxi Men Cut Rates

A rate war between the so-called stationed taxicabs, which are subject to stringent municipal rules and traffic police control, and the "free" taxi owners, who have no fixed station and are not allowed to solicit customers by driving very slowly, has recently resulted in the establishment at Amsterdam of the lowest taxi fares in the world. It is reported, Amsterdam taxi fares are said to be even cheaper than those in Paris or Berlin. A uniform price of ten Dutch cents ($0.04) per kilometer, is charged, which figures out at about six American cents a mile, including the first mile. This explains the signs which many taxicabs carry on their windshields. Rides from 10 cents upward!

DANGERS OF FATIGUE

Death from fatigue does not occur very often. The marathon race reminds us of one such death, for the runner who carried the report of the Greek victory from Marathon to Athens is said to have collapsed and died as soon as he had delivered his message.

Although, as we have said, fatigue is seldom the direct cause of death, it does result in injury to the body, since it decreases the ability to work and apparently increase the likelihood of the occurrence of certain diseases.

As the result of the activities of our body, energy is used up and certain waste or end products are produced. Providing these waste products are not produced too rapidly, the body is able to get rid of them quite readily, but if they are formed quicker than they can be eliminated then they accumulate, and when this occurs the body is burdened, or one might even say, poisoned with its own waste products and such a person experiences fatigue.

It has been shown that a person may repeat some action so many times a minute and keep on doing so without becoming tired. Just as soon as the number of repetitions is increased, then fatigue is felt. The reason for this being that with the limited number of repetitions the products of activity were removed but when the number was increased, they accumulated.

Another interesting point is that when work is carried to the point of fatigue it takes comparatively a much longer time to recover than if a stop had been made for rest before fatigue had set in. It is observed that rest periods in the middle of the morning and afternoon result in a greater production of work. It is also a matter of practical importance to remember that industrial accidents increase towards the end of the day when workers become tired.

There is what we might call normal fatigue, the result of the day's work from which we recover fully after the night's rest, and there is abnormal fatigue or overfatigue which harms the body and from which we do not recover except after a prolonged period of rest.

When we use our muscles and become fatigued it is not only the muscles which are affected, the whole body is involved in the condition. We do not digest food properly when we are tired, which indicates that the digestive system feels the fatigue although it has not itself been doing extra work.

Sufficient rest before overfatigue occurs, rids the body of the poisons before they accumulate and injure the body. A healthy body supplied with proper food, sufficient water and fresh air is best able to avoid fatigue and its ill results.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

Our Lives Pass Like a Day in May

Almost everyone gives a sigh of regret when the last Sunday in May is gone for another year. Their memory often goes back to many May days spent with those who have borne the burden and heat of the day, and wonder if they could visit their old home and see how the work has been taken up where they had laid it down, would they be satisfied.

As we sat in old St. Andrew's Church on the last Sunday in May and beheld the garden of blossoms and May flowers around the altar, we knew if the ones who had charge of the flowers in Mays gone by could see them, they would be satisfied?

If the ones who sang in their choir in Mays gone by had heard them singing the Psalms, hymns and solos on this last day of May, they would have been satisfied.

If the ministers who earnestly preached the Gospel of Jesus Christ and Him crucified, heard the sermon on that May day, they would have been satisfied. The congregation were satisfied that our minister has a great storehouse of living truths that touch vitally many-sided lives, and that the heart of it all is the Christ who alone can redeem them, is his great privilege.

Then we thought of the words of wisdom by the Rev. James Wilson, D.D., who had been nine and thirty years serving his Master in the ministry, in his charge to Mr. Cameron in his chosen calling, who will be called to minister to men and women engaged in the real battles of life. He will be called to rejoice with men and women in the most joyous scenes of life, to help struggling ones to bravely face the burdens that seem ready to crush them, to bring the message of cheer and hope to the sick and dying and to bring the sweet evangel to those from whose lives the light has gone out.

He must stand before men as God's ambassador and plead with them to be reconciled to God. He has studied books and systems; he must now study men and women. He must know their needs. They look to him as one who has a message for them. We know he is sufficient for all things.

One of the charges, Mr. Cameron seems not to have taken any heed to, and which Mr. Wilson laid great stress on, was, he must not take too much out of himself.

When travelling on life's winding way,
Our lives pass like a day in May,
Whether good or bad the roads we go,
The seeds we sow will always grow,
Then in the future we will see
The kind of harvest there will be.

LET US SMILE

At a singing competition, the local baritone sang, "The Village Blacksmith" and was confident of being placed first. On the result being declared he was disappointed to find he was second and he asked for an explanation.

The adjudicator informed him that he had made a mistake in his lines "Instead of singing 'each morning sees some task begun; each evening sees it close,' you sang, 'each evening sees some task begun, each morning sees it close' "

"That was right enough," protested the singer. "Don't you know he was on the night shift?"

Joseph Goulding, one of the oldest members of the York Pioneer and Historical Society, with which he has been connected for 46 years, died at his home on the Stavebank road, Port Credit, Saturday, in his 68th year.

He came to Canada in 1873, first settling at Davisville. Later, he moved to Toronto, marrying Margaret Sproule of that city and for many years conducted a coal business on Parliament St. During these years he was actively connected with Berkeley St. Methodist Church, which he attended for 35 years.

Mr. Goulding is survived by his widow and one son, Joseph, in Chicago.

A New Honor for B.-P.

The latest honor conferred upon Lord Baden-Powell is the Grand Cross of the Order of the Grand Duke Gediminans of Lithuania. COMMUNITY CLUB

The Club held a very pleasant meeting at the home of Mrs. Jack Miller on May 25th, with about twenty present. Plans were made for our annual picnic which will be held on Saturday, June 11th at Mr. J. D. Steen's beautiful grounds. After the business part of the meeting was completed, Mrs. Lindsay of Streetsville, who we were pleased to have present, gave us a splendid address on the life of Queen Victoria, whose birthday we honored on May 24th. Mrs. D. Ross, our honorary member, assisted by Mrs. Lindsay, then gave a humorous "skit," which was enjoyed by all. Our closing song brought a very pleasant meeting to a close. The hostess, assisted by Mrs. Williamson, served a delicious lunch.

Our next meeting will be at the home of Mrs. Harold Beattie, tenth line. This meeting will be a Good Housekeeping meeting. Every member is asked to answer the roll call with an economic idea or a suggestion for some household convenience which they have found useful. The meeting will be on Thursday, June 9th. Please note the change of day.

THE MISSION BAND OF UNITED CHURCH HOLDS SUCCESSFUL EVENING

The Mission Band of the United Church held a very successful evening in the Sunday School Room on Tuesday. There was a large number of members and parents present. The programme given by members of the band consisted of choruses, Recitations, readings, solos and instrumental selections under the supervision of Mrs. E. King. The programme was supplemented by a group of beautiful slides on Korea, which everyone enjoyed. They saw in those pictures the wonderful work the missionaries have done and are doing, the keen interest the Koreans are taking in spiritual things and their willingness to send help to other places which have not heard the gospel message.

The band and the superintendents, Mrs. John Temple and Mrs. Wilbert Andrew, are to be congratulated, not only upon the evening's programme, but upon the fine work they are doing. The band is large in numbers and increasing in interest. The silver collection at the door brought in an encouraging amount toward the band's missionary objective. Helen Rice, the President, conducted the evening's programme in a most efficient manner.

COULD NOT EXPLAIN

Private Soldier Found Himself Under Superior Officer's Boots.

Speaking at St. Peter's School near York, England, Field Marshal Sir William Birdwood, who was general officer commanding the Australian and New Zealand army corps during the great war, said the men from the Dominions under his command were often endowed with individuality. This was due largely to the Australians living in lonely spaces, he thought.

The Field Marshal related how, when visiting Australia after the war, he was hailed by a man whom he failed to recognize. "You ought to remember me because one night when you were going along the trenches I was asleep and you stepped on my stomach," said the man.

"I told him I failed to see how I could be expected to remember his face," the Field Marshal said. "It was more likely I would remember his voice, I told him."

"'You never gave me a chance,' the soldier replied. 'Your other foot was on my mouth'."

DUTIES OF LAW-MAKERS

Words of Wisdom From One of Britain's Outstanding Public Men.

Sir John Simon delivered an address recently, in which he said:—

"Our rulers will best promote the improvement of the nation by strictly confining themselves to their own legitimate duties, by leaving capital to find its most lucrative course, commodities their fair price, industry and intelligence their natural reward, idleness and folly their natural punishment, by maintaining peace, by defending property, by diminishing the price of the law and by observing strict economy in every department of the State."

In these threescore and eight words is compressed the measured opinion of a learned and experienced man on the true function of government. They compriso a sentence that every man whose vote is cast to put another in authority should read and ponder. A land ruled in accordance with Sir John Simon's formula would be well ruled; what more can man seek from the rulership under which he lives his life?—St. Catharines Standard.

BALDNESS IS INCREASING.

Many of Great Leaders Have Smooth Domes.

Baldness is increasing with such alarming rapidity that it is estimated that within a few hundred years all men over the age of 40 will be bald, says a London despatch.

Look down from the gallery of the House of Commons or the House of Lords and you will see a goodly number of bald heads.

Nearly all the famous kings of history have been bald. One French King was actually known as Charles the Bald. And Mussolini has set the fashion for bald-headed dictators. The Pope is also bald.

Nearly all British business magnates are bald. The late Lord Melchett was bald, and so is Sir Henry McGowan, his successor as chairman of the Imperial Chemical Industries.

PICTURE IN SECRET CHAMBER.

An interesting discovery was recently made at Ross Castle, Killarney, Ireland. Some workmen, who were making repairs to the old fortress, entered a secret room of the castle and on the wall discovered a mural painting in colors. The figure represents a man with his hands joined as if in prayer. It is thought that the figure represents one of the O'Donoghues, former chieftains of the district. The painting has suffered much from exposure, and part of the wall, on which the picture is executed, is falling away. It is expected that the Earl of Kenmare, who now owns the castle, will do something to preserve this very interesting relic.

SALT PLENTIFUL IN CANADA.

Among the natural resources in which Canada is abundantly rich is salt, which is found principally in Ontario and Nova Scotia. In 1930 the total production was 271,695 tons valued at $1,694,631, an average price of $10.05 per ton. In Nova Scotia it is estimated that the Malagash deposit contains 60,000,000 tons of developed salt reserves sufficiently pure to sell directly after mining and crushing. There is also an additional 300,000,000 tons of slightly lower grade salt. An interesting feature of this deposit is the presence of potassium salts which may ultimately prove of economic importance.

English Birth Rate Low.

English census figures indicate that if present tendencies continue, the population at the end of another twenty years will be on the decline because the birth rate is falling so much faster than the death rate. The present birth rate is less than half that of forty years ago.

Road Hogs Caused 1069 Auto Accidents In Ontario In 1931

Records of the Motor Vehicles Branch of the Ontario Department of Highways show that in 1931 the most common cause of accidents in which the automobile was involved was middle of the road driving.

Life, limb and property are at the mercy of the driver who through ignorance, selfishness or just common carelessness, will not keep to the right of the road.

Accidents cannot be blamed upon amateur drivers, as records show that considerably more than half of the drivers concerned in auto accidents last year were between 25 and 54 years old, and more than ninety per cent. of them had been driving for a year or more.

ERINDALE

Orangemen at Church

Last Sunday evening, Union L.O.L. No. 263 and Jeanie Gordon L.O.B.A. Streetsville, along with members of sister lodges from Brampton and Cooksville, attended divine service at St. Peter's Anglican Church, Erindale, when a large number were present.

The service was conducted by the new rector, Rev. G. F. Banks, who took for his text, St. Luke 21: 36, "Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man."

Mr. Banks preached a splendid sermon. Among other things he exhorted his hearers to so live that they would be prepared for the judgment day—for the judgment day was sure to come. We should know our duty to God and to our neighbors, but should know our duty to God first. We should so live as to stand the test. We stand before three tribunals: the judgment of public opinion, the judgment of friends and the judgment of hearts. We should get ready now for the judgment day and to meet the dear ones who have gone on before.

During the service a solo in good voice was rendered by Miss G. Croxon.

Mr. Banks welcomed the visitors to his church and hoped they would come again.

LACROSSE

Streetsville Lacrosse team lost two very tough games this week. The first game, against Brampton was a hum-dinger from start to finish. Although they were a little outclassed, they never stopped trying, and deserve all kinds of credit for their remarkable showing against such a strong team. One of the players being a member of the professional Montreal Club. The final score was 11-4.

In the second game, against Port Credit, they lost by 11-6. The score by no means represents the play as Streetsville was every bit as good as their opponents. The main feature of the game was the smart work of Dave Andrew in goal. He bids well to be another Bert Large. Jack Nixon was referee and handled the game well. A silver collection was taken, which made the swell sum of $8.00. It looks as though our national game is going to go over big, and steal the limelight of all other sports around town.

FOOTBALL

The S.C.U. football team held a strong Georgetown team down to a two-all tie. As Georgetown played in the T. and D. league last year, Streetsville had to be on their toes all the time. On the return game Tuesday night, our home team won four to three in the best game of the year, and showed why they are considered a dangerous team in the league. On Monday night Oakville defeated them by the score of 2-0. But the Bluebirds are a lot better team than the score indicates, having much of the play throughout. Jimmie Sullivan is the star goal-getter for the team, having hit the net eight times this year, so far, and should score a lot more for his teammates yet. The next league game will be played at Sheridan Friday night. Game starts at 7.30. Truck leaves Creditvale corner at 7 o'clock. All players and rooters are asked to be punctual.

Community Club Have Gala Day

Hold Annual Picnic on J. D. Steen's Flats---List of Winners in Contests

The North Trafalgar Community Club held their annual picnic on Saturday, June 11th. It was a perfect day in June. It was just such a day as this club deserves, for ever since they held their first meeting they were never weary in well-doing, doing good and giving pleasure.

When the club were considering about a suitable place to hold this annual event the Streetsville Review was brought in to action, where reports were given of a number of picnics that were held this year on the farm of J. D. Steen, beside the Credit river, and with such flattering comments on the beauty and accommodation of the place that a committee was appointed to ask Mr. Steen for the grounds for their picnic.

The pleasant way Mr. Steen consented won the admiration of the club. When we turned off the 2nd line into a long, winding lane, a few rods from the road, depression stared us in the face. The radial track that runs on an angle through this farm, now the rails are covered with rust; the sound of that old familiar whistle of the radial car is no longer heard, but when we bumped over the rusty rails, depression was forgotten for that day.

The turn of a long, winding lane brought us to a cozy farm house where Mr. Steen and his amiable wife gave the arriving picnickers a hearty welcome and hoped all would have a pleasant afternoon.

This is an ideal place for a picnic, with plenty of room for races, and all kinds of sport. Seats and swings are there and, best of all, free-hearted hospitality. As we gazed on nature's grandeur the banks and valleys and winding river we naturally felt curious about the history of this remarkable place. A few questions brought out some interesting events in past history. This part of the new survey in Toronto Township was opened for settlement the vear 1818. Mr. Giffin, from the County of Anthrim, Ireland, received the crown deed of this farm. After making the necessary settlement duties and building a modest log cabin the surroundings was not Ireland to him and he becaame restless. Just at this time, 1822. Mr. William Steen, from the old land, came to spy out a home. Mr. Steen was part English and part Scotch, but the greater and best part of him must have been Scotch, and the bonnie, bonnie banks of Loch Lomond, running through his blood, for he was captivated with these bonnie banks of Canada and was determined to make this his home. He made the Irishman a generous offer, which was quickly accepted, the Irishman seeing more in dollars and cents than in banks, streams and valleys.

Five generations of Steens were born on this farm. The head of each generation were: William, first; Ephriam, second; Nathaniel, third; J. D., fourth, the present owner; the fifth generation are two daughters of J. D.'s family. This is the first generation without a son and by this ommission the ancient land mark his fathers have set will be removed.

Mrs. Waldie is the only living member in the third generation. Mrs. Waldie, who is lovingly called Aunt Jane, is living in Hamilton, in feeble health. In the fourth generation surviving are J. D. and one brother. The fifth generation, two daughters. When Mr. Steen settled on his farm the river Credit was a more ambitious stream than it is today. On the flats where the picnickers play and ramble was a flowing river then.

And many who wondered when they heard the name of the Steen Stave Bank farm could not imagine nature had provided anything as perfect for the benefit of the early settlers.

The banks are about 20 rods long, from the top of the bank to the bottom of the river is about 25 feet. The river runs south-east towards the bank then runs direct south-west along the banks about 20 rods.

It was claimed that in no part of the province along the banks of the Credit from Port Credit to Caledon was covered with heavier oak timber than around the old Stave Bank Steen farm.

From the year 1822 until about 1826 the settlers would cut logs and staves in the winter months and pile them along the bank, drawing them with their oxen and home-made sleighs. In the spring they would be thrown into the river. (It has been said that a man could walk on logs for a mile so thickly the logs would be piled together.) Then they would be floated down the river to Port Credit and loaded on schooners and taken across the lake. With the unlimited demand for white oak staves the whole district throbbed with life.

Then we wandered around where sparkling spring water was flowing out the banks in a number of places. The house that was built with bricks that were made on the adjoining farm is now rough-cast, a beautiful white. The mason work done in the cellar is equal to any done at the present time. The cellar and house was built about 1830. Not many years ago the old log cabin was torn down. –

—— Oh, what a banquet was then given. We can't think of anything that was left out. There were sandwiches, cake, pie. ice cream, lemonade, etc. Then the president, Mrs. Cliffe May, moved a vote of thanks to Mr. and Mrs. Steen for the free use of their beautiful grounds, and their willingness to assist in any way they could to make the picnic a success, which was given by a hearty vote of thanks and three hearty cheers.

Mr. Steen said if it gave the club as much pleasure as it gave to them he was more than satisfied. Just at this time a herd of Jersey cows, real beauties, was seen on the way to the milking byre, reminding all that this same work was waiting to be done on their farm.

This is a lesson we will learn,
Our good and ill deeds will return;
To this club blessings will be found
That they have scattered all around;
And when they get their final rest
We know they will be truly blest.

"BOX LACROSSE" By "Lou Swamp"

At the new Thistle Stadium on Monday night the Port Credit boys turned the tables on our local squad to the beautiful refrain of 11-6, Streetsville having defeated the Port at home 4-1.

It was a real struggle from the whistle, and the four hundred fans who turned up, were kept on their toes throughout. It was some game and the score is no indication of the closeness of the conflict.

Manager Evans of the Thistles was forced to field a rather weak team, a number of his stars were warming the bench all evening thru injuries.

The game was only a few minutes old when Dean, one of the local stars, went thru the entire Port team to make the score board read 1-0, for the Thistles. Oh Boy! how those Port boys did open up after that; you could not hold them, and they certainly produced a real classy passing game, working right in for a clean shot.

The first period ended 6-1 and the final score 11-6.

Rubber Harry Gill had a real easy night, only a few of the boys had to have medical attention. It takes Harry to bring the boys back life in a hurry.

Every Thistle gave all he had and played a real game, some of them having to work overtime on account of shortness of subs.

Billy Munroe, Graydon Clipperton, and Unit Baillie played a smart game on the attack, while Norm Russel, Merle Dean and Ross Evans formed a stonewall dfence.

Last, but not least, is our goalie, Andrews. He is only a Junior but he certainly put up a swell game between the posts. The goals that beat him would have beaten the best of them.

With all our beaten up boys back in the game again, just watch our smoke.

We would advise the public not to miss any of these games. They are full of thrills and spills.

Mr, Taylor of Mimico handled a hard game to the satisfaction of both teams. He knows the game.

On Saturday last Mr. A. V. Devins attended a family Re-union of the Devins family which was held at Thistletown. More than 500 descendants of Isaac Devins were present. This was the fifth annual family reunion held.

A Thrilling Story of the Old West

BY MURRAY LEINSTER

SYNOPSIS.

Sonny Holman, believing he has been cheated out of ownership of the Aztec mine, holds up the payrolls. Janet Laurier, who holds legal title, offers a reward for his capture. She is kidnapped by Garcia's gang, a band of desperadoes. Sonny follows and escapes with her, but to his surprise she persists in believing him the ore thief. Tilford, superintendent of the mine, imports some men to guard the payrolls. They shoot Jake Hornaby, a friend of Sonny's. In the absence of the sheriff, who has been wounded, Sonny arrests two of them and rides out of town.

CHAPTER XIII.

Sonny read on, turning a page of the paper. A name under the heading, "Political Announcements" took his eye:

To the Voters of Gila County:

I offer myself as a candidate for sheriff in the coming election. While I do not wish to cast aspersions on the conduct of the present sheriff during his tenure of office, it is forced on me. It is notorious that an organized band of lawbreakers has been operating in this community for three years or more, without opposition. It is notorious that highway robberies, ore stealing and murders have gone unpunished and unopposed. It is known to everyone that the sheriff is at present incapacitated by bullet wounds received while co-operating with the outlaw Holman in a battle between factions of Holman's gang.

I do not need to dwell on my own qualifications for the office I seek. My aim is simply to do away with the laxity of law enforcement that has disgraced the county for years past. I will appreciate the support of citizens who value the good name of their community and state, and pledge my best efforts to the eradication of the present disgraceful conditions.

T. J. TILFORD.

Sonny smoothed out the paper and read the announcements again. At first his brow clouded angrily. Then he grinned. "Shucks," he murmured. "I'll bet that li'l spitfire writ this for him. It sounds like her, anyways."

He glanced down the column. There was another notice:

To the Voters of Gila County:

Seeing that I am pretty well shot up and won't be able to fill my office for a good long time, I have decided not to offer myself for re-election. I wish to thank all my friends who have supported me in the past and to say to them that if they can get John Doe to run for sheriff and serve after he is elected, they will get just about as good a man as there is in the county. He ain't as well known as he might be, but those who saw him arrest the killers of Jake Hornaby will agree that he is a good man with a gun and the right feller for the job.

JAMES GRAY, Sheriff.

Sonny whistled. Then he began to chuckle. "Lordy!" he murmured contentedly. "That's goin' t' make Janet sit up. You'd ha' thought I'd known all about it when I writ my li'l piece."

The space beneath the sheriff's announcement met his eye and he read it with all the complacency of an author.

To the Voters of Gila County:

I announce myself candidate for sheriff to succeed the present Sheriff Gray. I hate rustlers, ore thieves and sheepmen. I'll thank anybody kindly that votes for me.

JOHN DOE.

Sonny's nose wrinkled as he tried to imagine Janet Laurier reading that notice. He chuckled at his contemplative picture of her rage.

"Lordy!" he murmured expansively. "I bet that li'l critter is mad enough to raise her ante for my hide."

He reined in. Gunpowder had come to the end of the cleft in the hills that Sonny had been following, and Sonny was gazing out into open space.

"Feller ridin' herd," he observed. "Hoss wrangler fightin' a real mean dispositioned caballo. Feller ridin' off to mend fences. That's new wire he's got on the saddle. Who's that yonder?"

He regarded a trio of riders far to the right for a long time, then shrugged and rode down the mountainside with the riders unplaced in his mind.

The ranch cook poked his head out of the bunkhouse and grinned at him when he rode into the Circle Bar ground. "How's it feel to be worth a thousan' bucks, Sonny?"

"Right much," said Sonny, amiably, "like bein' a good cook. You ain't never goin' to have neither sensation. Where's Thompson?"

The cook jerked his thumb toward the ranch-house. Sonny went in and found the owner of the Circle Bar gazing at the same Times and Argus-Leader Sonny was carrying. When Thompson saw him he surveyed him with a curious amused thoughtfulness.

"I don't know," he said deliberately, "whether you're a crazy fool or a genius, Sonny. Why did you put that piece in the paper?"

Sonny grinned. "To make Miss Laurier mad," he admitted. "Can I get some chuck from your cook?"

Thompson smiled grimly. "Miss Laurier is out campaigning for Tilford for sheriff," he said. "With two of those outside gunmen for escorts. In fact, she's up at this end of the valley now, talking to my line riders and trying to make them promise to vote for Tilford. She rode up toward Little Canyon half an hour ago."

Sonny nodded. "Saw 'em. I don't exactly like the company she picks out," he admitted, "but if she asked me to vote for a hell-bender, I'd be kinda inclined to oblige her. She's right cute, Thompson."

Thompson eyed him soberly. "I'm a cattleman," he said deliberately. "You say Tilford is a crook. I don't know. I don't care, but I do think he's going to use these gunmen of his to stop Garcia's ore stealing."

"Sounds right likely," acknowledged Sonny. "I'll be kinda obliged to him. I don't like anybody to steal from the Aztec but me."

"I'm a cattleman," repeated Thompson. "Garcia has a big gang all organized for ore stealing. If he's stopped from that, what will he do?"

Sonny crossed his knees. "Rustle cattle," he admitted. "Rustle cattle. Your cattle, 'mongst others."

"And so," said Thompson, "I'm going to attend to the formalities you didn't bother with, so you'll actually be a formally enrolled candidate for sheriff. You're really going to run for the job."

"Suh," drawled Sonny with dignity. "I am a respectable holdup man. I ain't a politician."

"But this is something you've got to—"

There were distant little poppings, as if someone were firing a six-gun rapidly, not at a target, but to attract attention. The rapid beating of a horse's hoofs sounded and drew nearer.

"What the devil!"

Thompson looked out the window and raced to the door. Sonny bent to look and saw one of the Circle Bar cowboys riding for the ranch-house, swaying desperately in the saddle, and holding on to his horse's man to keep from toppling out. A spurt of smoke shot from his gun and he came doggedly on, limp and weak and apparently all in.

Sonny and Thompson alike plunged to meet him.

"Garcia's gang," gasped the cowpuncher, reining up with a terrible effort. "Turned rustler. Plugged Buck an' me with rifles from behind some boulders. Drivin' off four hundred head up Little Canyon way." He sagged forward in the saddle and held himself up with both hands. "Buck's cashed in," he gasped. "There was a dozen of 'em, shootin' with rifles outer pistol range. I come for help. Bandage me up an' I'll hide back with yuh. Damn 'em, they bushwhacked us or I'd ha' got some of 'em!"

He collapsed, and Sonny caught him. He was still protesting weakly as he was carried into the ranch-house.

"Jus' bandage me up so's I can go back with yuh. They plugged Buck an' he was my pardner."

The cook had come loping out of the bunkhouse on the first alarm. Now, without orders, he began to pound furiously on the ranch bell, summoning every man within earshot. But there were not many. Two men were running from the corral. The foreman was out of the hayshed and already saddling up without hearing more than the shots the injured cowpuncher had fired to attract attention.

Thompson was in the house at the telephone. He had got the next ranch on the wire and was jerking savage sentences into the transmitter, outlining the situation and asking for help and the spreading of the alarm.

He jumped up as Sonny came in with his burden. "Going after them," he said curtly. "I've asked for help. You'd better keep out of this, Sonny. That reward's out for you and some damned fool might try to rope you in."

He grabbed a belt with two holsters from the wall, buckled it on, and seized a repeating rifle on his way out the door.

"Frien'," said Sonny gently to the man in his arms, "what about Miss Laurier? She had two fellers with her. Did Garcia grab 'em off?"

"Don't know." The cowpuncher caught at Sonny's sleeve as he was laid gently on the floor. "Saw some riders comin' toward us just before Garcia's gang opened fire but didn't notice who they was. Say, fix me up so I can ride back with yuh!"

"The cook'll tend to that," Sonny flung over his shoulders.

He rushed out, barked an order at the cook and raced away upon the big black stallion. As he rode the jumbled activities about the ranch-house sorted themselves into coherent pictures. The foreman had been frantically double cinching a huge bay, the two hands from the corral were teasing off on hastily saddled, bucking ponies, and the cook was dancing about the corral after a plunging horse with a six-gun five sizes too large for him buckled to his belt. The cook reluctantly abandoned his pursuit of the horse to bandage the injured man as Sonny shot out of the gate.

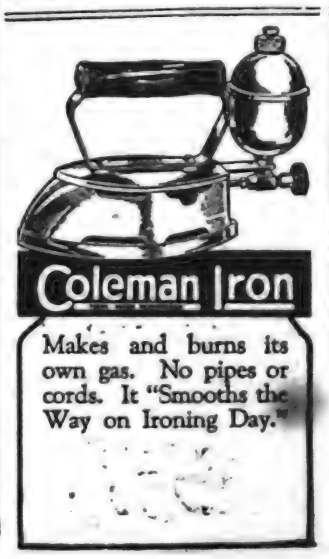
Two of a Kind

A lad who looked about thirteen was leaning against a wall smoking a cigarette, when an elderly woman approached him.



"Does your father know you are smoking, little boy?" she inquired bitingly.

The boy regarded her open-mouthed. He took a few more puffs from his cigarette and looked her up and down steadily. Suddenly he caught sight of the wedding-ring on her hand.

"You're a married woman, aren't you?" he said.

"I am," agreed the woman.

"Then," snapped the boy, "does your husband know you speak to strange men?"

I Prepare to Travel

Gail Hamilton, in "Gala Days," gives an amusing sketch of a would-be writer preparing to travel. She writes:

Once there was a great noise in our house—a thumping and battering and grating. It was my own self dragging my big trunk down from the garret. I did it myself because I wanted it done. If I had said, "Salicarnassus, will you fetch my trunk down?" he would have asked me what trunk? and what did I want of it? and would not the other one be better? and couldn't I wait till after dinner?—and so the trunk would probably have had a three-day journey from garret to basement. Now I am strong in the wrists and weak in the temper; therefore I used the one and spared the other, and got the trunk downstairs myself. Salicarnassus heard the uproar. He must have been deaf not to hear it; for the old ark banged and bounced, and scraped the paint off the stairs, and pitched head-fore-most into the wall, and gouged out the plastering, and dinted the mopboard, and was the most stupid, awkward, uncompromising, unmanageable thing I ever got hold of in my life.

By the time I had zigzagged it into the back chamber, Salicarnassus loomed up the backstairs.

"Now, then?" said Salicarnassus interrogatively.

"To be sure," I replied affirmatively.

He said no more, but went and looked up the garret-stairs. They bore traces of a severe encounter, that must be confessed.

"Do you wish me to give you a bit of advice?" he asked.

"No!" I answered promptly.

"Well, then, here it is. The next time you design to bring a trunk down stairs, you would better cut away the underpining, and knock out the beams, and let the garret down into the cellar. It will make less uproar, and not take so much to repair damages."

He intended to be severe. His words passed by me as the idle wind. I perched on my trunk, took a pasteboard box-cover and fanned myself. I was very warm. Salicarnassus sat down on the lowest stair and remained silent several minutes, expecting a meek explanation, but not getting it, swallowed a bountiful piece of what is called in homely talk, "humble-pie," and said,—

"I should like to know what's in the wind now."

"Salicarnassus, it has been the ambition of my life to write a book of travels. But to write a book of travels, one must first have travelled."

"Not at all," he responded. "With an atlas and an encylopaedia one can travel around the world in his arm-chair."

"But one cannot have personal adventures," I said. "You can, indeed, sit in your arm-chair and describe the crater of Vesusius; but you cannot tumble into the crater of Vesuvius from your arm-chair."

"I have never heard that it was necessary to tumble in, in order to have a good view of the mountain."

"But it is necessary to do it, if one would make a readable book."

"Then I should let the book slide—rather than slide myself."

"If you would do me the honor to listen," I said, scornful of his paltry attempt at wit, "you would see that the book is the object of my travelling. I travel to write. I do not write because I have travelled. I am not going to subordinate my book to my adventures. My adventures are going to be arranged beforehand with a view to my book."

Salicarnassus was a little stunned, but presently recovering himself, suggested that I had travelled enough already to make out a quite sizable book.

"Travelled!" I said, looking him steadily in the face—"travelled! I went once up to Tudic huckleberrying; and once, when there was a freshet, you took a superannuated broom and paddled me around the orchard in a leaky pig's-trough!"

He could not deny it; so he laughed, and said,—

"Ah, well!—as, well! Suit yourself. Take your trunk and pitch into Vesuvius, if you like. I won't stand in your way."

His acquiscence was ungraciously, and I believe I may say ambiguously, expressed; but it mattered little, for I gathered up my goods and chattels, strapped them into my trunk, and waited for the summer to send us on our way rejoicing.

With or Without

A sportsman invited a number of friends who were interested in boxing, and some amateur practitioners, to meet him for dinner and discussion of an idea of the host's for a charity performance.

The invitation revealed a sense of wit in the host, for at the foot in small type were the words: "Dinner dress will be worn. Black is optional.'

The Public Health

Next to the weather, there is no topic of conversation more popular than public and individual health. Hence the meeting in Toronto of the Canadian Public Health and Ontario Health Officers' Associations is of widespread interest. The delegates are discussing their subjects in a large way, as intimated by Dr. Gordon Bates's suggestion that a Royal Commission should investigate on a Dominion-wide scale the whole question of public health. Undoubtedly the subject is of national concern, and if the findings of such a body would lead to greater co-ordination in preventive methods the expense would be worth while. There is force in the doctor's claim that if but a fraction of the financial loss caused by sickness and premature death were devoted to their prevention a great deal could be accomplished.

A startling feature of the ills that afflict humanity to-day is the increase of neurotic and mental disorders, due, in large measure, to the high tension at which the affairs of the world are conducted. This was recognized in an address by Dr. C. M. Hincks, of Toronto, who stated that deviations from mental health are "much more frequent than previously supposed." And he continued:

"The time has come when the medical profession must bear a larger share of responsibility in regard to mental health than has been the case in the past. Many physicians have been prone to confine their attention to the physical factors connected with illness and have ignored, too largely, consideration of the human personality—of the emotions and mental states that may be contributory to ill health. Unless physicians and public health officers assume leadership in this field, progress will be slow in stemming the rising tide of mental maladies.

This, unfortunately, is an enlarging field for the specialist, and one in which early treatment is of the utmost importance. Undoubtedly many human ailments may be forestalled by preventive measures. In fact, basing his contention on Canadian statistics, Dr. Bates claims that "more than half of our disabling illnesses could be prevented." The difficulty in the way is that victims of disease in its incipient stages are prone to delay seekng advice, and one of the greatest benefits of public discussions such as are being conducted at this convention of health officers is that they attract attention and bring to man a realization that good health is a blessing to be guarded jealously. Thos in sound mental and physical condition will not worry greatly over the troubles of this rather troublesome world. Consequently, there is food for thought in the suggestion that, to be really effective, measures looking toward the preservation of health should be given direction by Federal authority.—Toronto Mail and Empire.

BABY'S OWN SOAP

"It's Best for You and Baby too"

Oil should clean and protect as well as lubricate—says household expert

The oiling of household devices presents a problem different from that of factory equipment, says a nationally known housekeeping expert. Household appliances are not used constantly and therefore collect dirt and rust when idle. Consequently, oil intended for general household use should clean and protect as well as lubricate.

3-in-One, a scientific blend of mineral, vegetable and animal oils, does these three things better than any other oil. It costs a little more to buy but much less to use, for it will save you many dollars in repairs and replacements on sewing machines, vacuum cleaners, lawn mowers, washers, the electric motors of fans, refrigerators, ironers and similar household devices. At good stores everywhere. For your protection, look for the trade mark "3-in-One" printed in Red on every package.

WITH THE LONE SCOUTS

The Fisher Body Craftsman's Guild

Many Lone Scouts will no doubt be interested in knowing how the Coach Building Competition organized by the Guild is progressing, and we are glad to say that the first year's activities have been reported to us as being very satisfactory.

There are now 15,250 boys in Canada, enrolled as members, and many of these are in the final stages of building their coaches, and will have same ready by the end of this month for this year's judging.

The judging will take place in July in three centres in Canada—Regina for the Western Provinces, Toronto for Ontario, Montreal for Quebec and Eastern Canada.

Soon after the judging is over, 14 Canadian boys will be taking a trip, with all expenses paid, to the annual Guild Convention in Detroit, where their models will be rejudged in the international competition for the four four-year University Scholarships.

Many Scouts from the various Troops in the Dominion have enrolled in this Guild Competition, and the suggestion has been made that, should a Canadian Boy Scout win one of the major awards, his coach be purchased from him, if he is willing, and that he be given the honor of presenting it to the Chief Scout of Canada, His Excellency Lord Bessborough.

If there are any Lone Scouts engaged in building coaches for this competition, we hope they will have them ready for the judging in July, but "Lone E" understands that this competition may be extended for another year, so if you have not already enrolled you will have an opportunity to do so.

Canadian Boys to Fly Model 'Planes in Hungary

The display features of next year's world gathering of Boy Scouts in Hungary will include an exhibition of model airplanes. Canadian Scouts are expected to show and fly models.

Canadians For Air Glider Meet

Air gliding displays will provide a feature of next year's world gathering of Boy Scouts in Hungary. Canadian Scouts who have taken up this new air sport will be invited to participate.

Governor-General Presents Silver Wolf Decoration

The Silver Wolf, Scouting's highest honorary decoration, was presented by His Excellency the Governor-General, as Chief Scout for Canada, to Mr. Gerald H. Brown, Honorary Dominion Secretary of the Boy Scouts Association, and Major A. A. Pinard, of the Dominion Medal Board, for long and valuable service to the movement.

India's Troubles Don't Affect Scouts

Apparently the Boy Scout Code of friendliness is proof even against the political and religious dissensions of India. Latest Scout census reports indicate a continuance of the steady growth of recent years to a new high total membership of 173,444. The enrolment includes boys of all castes.

King's Scouts

We congratulate Lone Scouts Kenneth Manns and Harvey Hudson, of Hensall, on having successfully passed all the tests to qualify them as King's Scouts, and we know that their brother Lonies throughout the Province will wish to congratulate them also.

The Lone Scout Camp

The time is drawing close to our Summer Camp, which is to be held from July 4th to 16th inclusive, and we are anxious that as many Lone Scouts as possible shall be there.

Remember it does not matter if you have passed any tests or not, or if you possess a Scout Uniform or not. We shall welcome you just as you are, and help you to understand how to play the Game of Scouting better and assist you to learn the points necessary to qualify for promotion.

Therefore, if you have not yet sent in your reservation, do so at once, so as to avoid disappointment. Remember all applications for this camp must be at Lone Scout Headquarters not later than the 20th June.

The Camp will be held at Ebor Park, near Brantford, Ontario.

The Boy Scout Programme is open to all boys between the ages of 12 to 18 inclusive. If you live in the country or where you are unable to attend a Boy Scout Troop's meetings, you can still take part in the programme by becoming a Lone Scout. For full particulars write to The Lone Scout Dept., Boy Scouts Association, 330 Bay Street, Toronto 2. Information will be gladly sent to you.—"Lone E."

England's Child Labor

By LADY ASTOR

In a House of Commons Speech

Lord Astor, my husband, took the word of the Home Office and withdrew his bill (to restrict employment of persons under 18 to forty-eight hours a week), but nothing was done. That gallant man worked hard in the House of Lords to get his bill. In fact, he worked as hard as he did when he tried to win the Derby.

I am the mother of many children, and if anything would embitter me it is what has happened to a woman in humble circumstances who has a very brilliant child. He has had to be sent into a blind-alley occupation and will not be able to continue his education. The employer said, "You will have to be here at 7 in the morning and stay until 7 at night." What chance has that child got?

I do not want to give sob stuff, but I could give case after case of children going into these jobs. It may be said there are only 300,000 or 400,0000, but I try to legislate for other people's children as I would my own.

Bus conductor (formerly house-agent's assistant: "Inside only." Fare: "But the outside of the bus is practically empty." "I've let the top floor to an engaged couple."

Excited wife: "Oh, dear, the cook has fallen and broken her collar-bone." Absent-minded professor: "Give her notice at once. You told her what to expect if she broke anything else."

Canned Shrimp Added To Canada's Products

Canada's long list of fisheries products has recently been made still longer by the addition of canned shrimp meat from British Columbia.

Hitherto the shrimps taken in British Columbia waters, the only waters of the Dominion where these shellfish occur, have all been marketed in the fresh form but now canning is being tried by some operators in the Fraser river district. Operations have so far been on a small scale only—the total catch of shrimps is not very large—but reports are to the effect that very satisfactory results have been achieved.

Shrimps caught in English bay are carried by truck to the cannery where they are cleaned and shelled. The meat is next hand-packed in quarter-pound tins which are then put through the cooking process. When cooking has been finished, the lids are clamped on the cans which are then tested, labelled, and packaged for marketing.

Misunderstood

A small boy entered a library with a book which his mother wanted exchanged.

Since she had neglected to send a list of books, the librarian was at a loss to know which volume to send. Finally he asked: "Has your mother read 'Freckles'?"

"No, sir," replied the boy, promptly; "they're brown!"

Wife (arriving home late): "did you think I was lost, dear?" Husband: "No—I was never an optimist."

Sunday School Lesson

June 19. Lesson XII—Jacob the Aged Father—Genesis 46: 1-7, 28-30; 47: 7. Golden Text—Honor thy father and thy mother.—Exod. 20: 12.

ANALYSIS.

I. JOURNEYING MERCIES, vs. 1-7.

II. RESTORED AT LAST! vs. 28-30.

III. KING AND COMMONER, 47: 7.

INTRODUCTION — "Behind the brilliant story of Joseph," says Professor McFadyen, "lies the background of a great sorrow—the sorrow of the aged father who believes that long ago his son had perished; and it is fitting that these two, who have loved and lost, should find each other before the end." Thus in the evening of his life, heavy with troubles and sorrows, the light falls once again on the figure of Jacob. His sons, carrying rich presents, had hastened up from Egypt to inform him that Joseph was still alive and was the governor of Egypt. At first the old man was stunned with the news. "Jacob's heart fainted, for he believed them not," 45: 26. But there before his tent stood "the ten asses laden with the good things of Egypt, and ten she-asses laden with corn and bread and meat"—sent in thoughtful kindness by Joseph. So the spirit of Jacob revived and his eye rekindled. He made haste to journey to Egypt and embrace once more the son of his love. All his life Jacob had been a wanderer; and now, old though he was, he prepared to wander again.

I. JOURNEYING MERCIES, vs. 1-7.

The decision to leave Canaan was a momentous one. Canaan was the land of promise. Jacob himself wished to go to Egypt; both Joseph and Pharaoh wished him to come. But was it God's will? There could be no sure peace of mind as long as that question was unsettled. So Jacob, setting out probably from Hebron (37: 14), made a first pilgrimage to Beersheba. This was a place hallowed by tender and holy associations, for there his father, Isaac, had built a sanctuary and lifted up his heart to God, chap. 26: 23-25. At Beersheba a solemn sacrifice was made. It was a turning point in Jacob's life, and indeed in the history of the people of Israel. Every great occasion such as this demanded a sacrifice; when offered in true faith and devotion, it brought God and man closer together. The night following was a restless one for Jacob, but God brought peace to his troubled heart. In a vision when consciousness was heightened (rather than in a dream when consciousness was lost) God appeared to him. First God underwrote the promise about to be made by referring to his associations with the family. He was the God of Jacob's father, and therefore to be trusted.

The command to "fear not" (cf. Chap. 15: 1) was timely, for Jacob was about to settle as a stranger in another land, and was in need of divine protection. God's hand was in Jacob's journey; his purpose would be fulfilled in it. "I will there make of thee a great nation." This is one of the paradoxes of life. Not in Canaan, the familiar homeland, were the people of Israel to become a great nation; but in the drudgery and slavery of the brick-fields of Egypt. To rise to the heights of real greatness, nations as well as individuals, must first become acquainted with the depths of life. No less remarkable was the next promise, which was made to Jacob personally. God would go with him to Egypt.

It was also a comfort for him to know that when his end came, his best-loved son, Joseph, would be there to perform the last office of love and close his eyes; and that his remains would be brought back to Canaan, v. 4. Strengthened with these comforting assurances, Jacob made ready to set out. The journey would be slow and tedious. The wagons, placed at his disposal by Pharaoh, were most likely drawn by oxen, for the horse was was but newly introduced into Egypt. The caravan comprised a large number. The removal of the patriarch involved the removal of all the patriarch's family and connections. In that age the old father stood at the head of the whole house of his descendants and dependents. Where he went, they must necessarily go.

II. RESTORED AT LAST! vs. 28-30.

Judah, who was the leader of the brothers in Chapter 44, again became the leader of the company. It is probable that he was sent ahead to fetch Joseph to meet the father. The company had arrived at Goshen, the pasture lands on the north-east of the Nile delta, a district which became the home of the Israelites in Egypt. Joseph did his father the honor to come to him in the fine chariot belonging to his official position. Now Jacob would see the high honor he had attained. The meeting between father and son was deeply moving. With emotions too deep for words, they held each other in a long, silent embrace. Jacob was now well content to die, since his favorite son was still living and he had had the joy of seeing him again.

III. KING AND COMMONER, 47: 7.

It was one of the fine characteristics of Joseph that, advanced though he was in worldly station, he was not ashamed of his father. He brought Jacob, the simple old shepherd, into the splendid court of Egypt, and presented him to the mighty Pharaoh. This meeting of the great king and the humble commoner provides one of those touches with which the Bible frequently astonishes us. "Jacob blessed Pharaoh." Poor though he was, Jacob, having God, had something which Pharaoh, for all his wealth and treasures, lacked. "Without dispute the less is blessed of the better," Heb. 7: 7.

How's That?

On a wet day a motorist had a skid in a big town, and in its gyrations the car knocked down a lamp-post.

A police officer in a long white water-proof coat came to his assistance and helped the poor chap out of the overturned car.

The driver was a trifle stunned. He looked at the prostrate lamp-post and then at the white-coated policeman, and murmured: "How's that, umpire?"

Tommy asked John, a young schoolfellow, to tea. John, who came from a much larger house, said with surprise: "What you have only one room? We have a dining room and a drawing room." "Oh, have you?" said Tommy, undaunted. "Well—we draw in the dining room."

"Now," said the super-salesman, "this instrument turns green if the liquor is good—red if it is bad." "Sorry, but I'm color-blind," apologized the customer. "Got anything with a gong on it?"

Nonchalant!

Mrs. Markham, daughter-in-law of Sir Arthur Markham, quietly hopped a plane at Kenya, Africa and surprised Heston airport men. 6,000 miles in seven days.

Doctors in France Increase Faster Than Population

The number of physicians in France continues to increase faster than the population, according to the Paris correspondent of The Journal of the American Medical Association.

"The total number is at present about 28,000," he says. "During the last year, 1,120 government diplomas have been conferred. It requires only a single arithmetical operation to foresee what the result will be in a few years. It may be considered that a physician practices, on an average, a period of thirty years. To maintain the present figure of 28,000, only 933 new graduates each year will be required, from which it appears that this year 187 more diplomas were issued than would be necessary to preserve the status quo.

"On the other hand, 1,120 graduates each year corresponds to a total of 33,600 physicians. However, the present total of 28,000 physicians constitutes, for the population of France, one physician for a little more than 1,400 inhabitants; while a total of 33,600, the figure toward which we are tending, represents one physician for less than 1,200 inhabitants. But since the present proportion is already too high, what will it be when the number of physicians shall reach 33,600; It should be noted also that, promotions having been more rapid in recent years, a larger proportion of the physicians are young practitioners, and for that reason the situation is more grave than it would be otherwise. It behooves the medical profession to give this question close attention.

"There are in France about 6,000 surgeon-dentists, and on every hand the syndicates of these practioers are combating this overcrowding of their profession. While for the physicians an average career extending over thirty years may reasonably be assumed, it may be considered that, since the studies of the surgeon-dentists are begun at an earlier age and the studies are much less extensive, their opportunities to practice are just so much prolonged. Their practice will extend over a period of thirty-five years. Under these circumstances, in order to maintain the present total number of surgeon-dentists (6,000), 175 graduates annually would suffice, instead of 600, the present number. Six hundred graduates annually correspond to 21,000 dentists, and one needs only to cite this figure to explain the grave error that has been committed, to which the medical profession should not remain indifferent. That is why limitation of the number of students to be admitted to the faculties is being seriously considered, as has been the case for some time in the large chools of technology."

Last Straw

Percival had heard the call of the open spaces and had thrown up an easy job to set sail for the Wild West.

Arrived in the country of he-men, he found himself comfortable quarters on a farm and prepared to enjoy the simple life.

Percival's first task was given him a day or two later. He was assigned to one end of a cross-saw, the other end being in charge of an old and experienced lumberman.

At the end of an hour the veteran stopped sawing and looked at his exhausted partner.

"Sonny," he said, "I don't mind your riding on this saw, but if it's just the same to you, I wish you'd quit scrapin' your feet along the ground."

PATCHES

You must not run down patches. Many places built all at once are most uncomfortable, and some of hte most convenient houses I know have been patched up. We get most of our comfort out of patches.—Gladstone.

THE UNIVERSE

To understand the simplest work of God, the Universe must be comprehended. Each minutest particle speaks of the Infinite One, and utters the divinest truth which can be declared on earth or in heaven.—Channing.

Polecat in the United States, is a popular name for the common skunk.

Japanese Sunset

There are no such sunsets in Japan as in the tropics: the light is gentle as a light of dreams; there are no furies of color; there are no chromatic violences in nature in this Orient. All in sea or sky is tint rather than color, and tint vapor-toned. I think that the exquisite taste of the race in the matter of colors and of tints, as exemplified in the dyes of their wonderful textures, is largely attributable to the sober and delicate beauty of nature's tones in this all-temperate world where nothing is garish.

Before me the fair vast lake sleeps, softly luminous, far-ringed with chains of blue volcanic hills shaped like a sierra. On my right, at its eastern end, the most ancient quarter of the city spreads its roofs of blue-gray tile; the houses crowd thickly down to the shore, to dip their wooden feet into the flood. With a glass I can see my own windows and the far-spreading of the roofs beyond, and above all else the green citadel with its grim castle, grotesquely peaked. The sun begins to set, and exquisite astonishments of tinting appear in water and sky. . . .

Rich purples cloud broadly behind and above the indigo blackness of the serrated hills; mist purples, fading upward smokily into faint vermilions and dim gold, which again melt up through ghostliest greens into the blue. The deeper waters of the lake, far away, take a tender violet indescribable, and the silhouette of the pine-shadowed island seems to float in that sea of soft sweet color. But the shallower and nearer is cut from the deeper water by the current as sharply as by a line drawn, and all the surface on this side of that line is a shimmering bronze—old rich ruddy gold-bronze.

All the fainter colors change every five minutes—wondrously change and shift like tones and shades of fine shot-silks. — Lafcadio Hearn, in "Glimpses of Unfamiliar Japan."

Perception Through Patience

In the act of traveling, we feel deeply the necessary affinity of beauty and repose; to enjoy a beautiful place, we ought to be resting in it as at home; to enjoy a beautiful sight, we ought to look upon it, not with the full gaze of delighted surprise, but rather with half-shut eyes, conscious of the bliss they possess, now letting it go, now calling it back, and playing with it as a beloved child. As the sand takes silently the footprints, so we should receive the impressions of imperial nature.

And how hard it is, in the rack and fret of a traveler's course, in the exertion necessary to supply the simplest wants and the very means of progress, in the tumult of strange associations, to hold your heart in chaste obedience to the quiet power of beauty, to look plainly through all these fascinating and thronging shadows, at the still light within, out of space and out of time. But, notwithstanding all obstacles, some moments of this bright perception are granted to every one, who seeks them with patient desire.—From "Memories of a Tour in Greece," by Lord Houghton.

Hopeless

It was midnight. In the smoking room of a club a young man sat huddled in a chair. A friend entered.

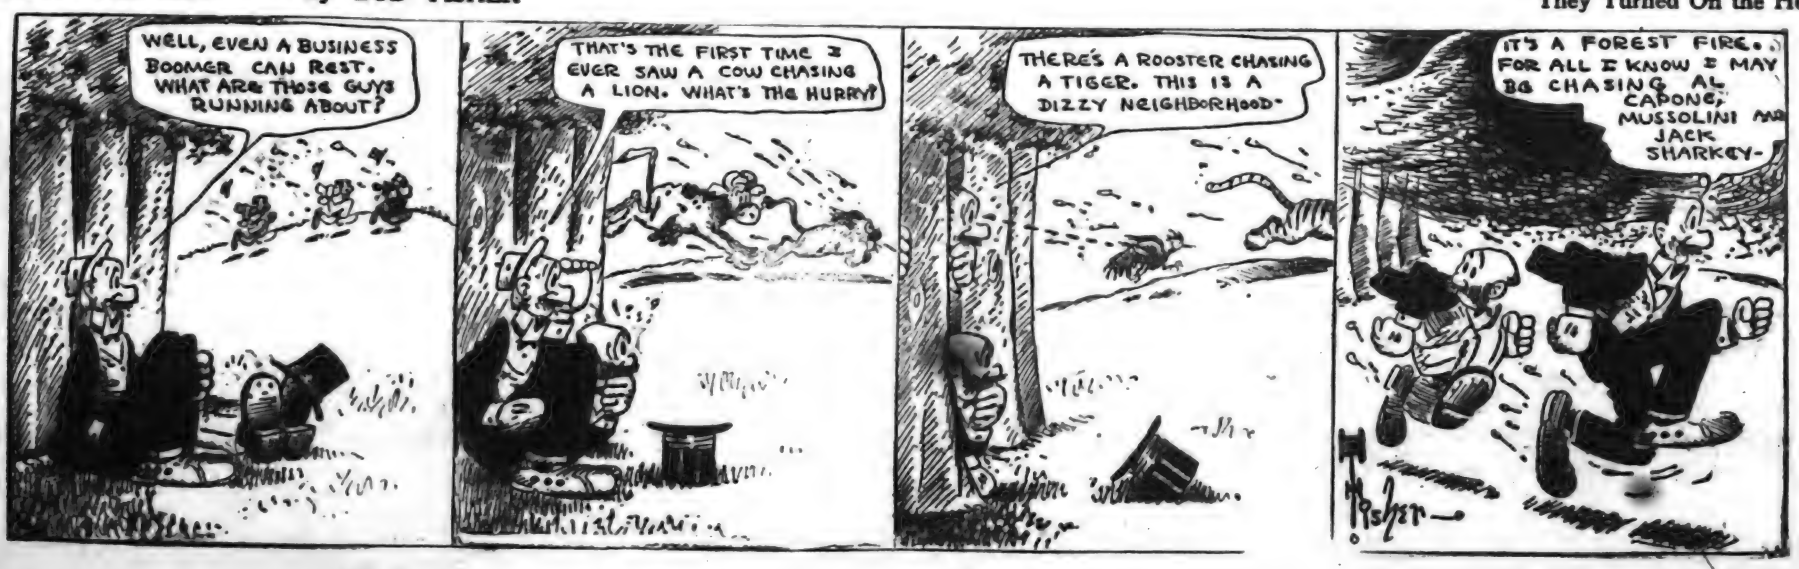
"Hallo, Smith!" he asked, cheerfully, "not going home yet?"

"No," muttered the despairing one "I—I daren't."

"Why, what's the matter?"

"Matter? It's the end of every thing. It means ruin!"

"Here, tell me what's up. Perhaps I can help you."



Smith clenched his fists until his knuckles showed white.

"No one can help me," he said. "I've come to the end of all things! At eight o'clock I telephoned to my wife and gave her a perfectly good excuse for not coming straight home, and"—his voice sank to a whisper—"I've forgotten what I said."

"Yes, my new maid came to me from a very good family." "Really? I suppose the girl wanted a change."

Sportsman Is Recovering

Phillip had a pleasant life at college, playing football, tennis and all the sports that youth loves, then his father died — and Phillip had to get a job. His work was hard and confining — there was little time for play in the fresh air. A cold and a bad cough resulted in a long spell of illness, which finally sent him to the Muskoka Hospital for Consumptives.

It has been an uphill journey, but the experienced medical attention, kindly nursing, rest and good food are remaking this young Canadian into a sturdy self-supporting man once more. "I have gained 11 pounds" Phillip says proudly, "and am just about right again. I will be glad to get back to work and help mother and the kids at home." There is high hope that his wishes will be fulfilled.

For this splendid work money is urgently needed. Would you not like to make a gift? Mr. A. E. Amos, 347 College St., Toronto, will gladly receive it.

Here and There.

The eyes of the whole British Empire will be directed towards the approaching Imperial Conference at Ottawa. There is every reason to suppose that the statesmen, who will gather there are determined to improve the condition of trade with all parts of the Empire, if at all possible.

Sir Henry Thornton has given us something to think about. He says this depression has been coming for the past 100 years. If it has taken that long to get here, it will not be apt to move on very quickly. However, there have been a few mighty bright spots during the past 100 years, which would rather discount his statement.

We don't pretend to be economists, but just the same we would be more inclined to believe that prosperity was just around the corner if the farmers were getting a decent price for their eggs and other things they have to sell. Around Steetsville eggs are going for something like 12 to 15 cents a dozen. We read that in Saskatchewan they are not bringing half that amount. The chap who said a nation's wealth came originally from the top six inches of soil was just about right. In fact his observation, when applied to the present depression, is more enlighteing than much of the complicated reasoning to be found in the Report of Babson and other economists. The question arises then, why are the farmers getting such poor prices? What conditions are responsible and how can they be remedied? We do not hesitate to say we haven't the slightest idea on the subject and the matter rests right there.

"It is good news", says the St Thomas Times-Journal, "to hear that the department of highways of this Province is determined to stamp out the menace of the one-eye car". We agree. When we spot a one-eyed car our first thought is that it's a motorcycle with a cop attached; our next, which eye is blind, and our third is disgust.

BEGGAR GIRL'S ROMANCE

Tattoo Marks May Prove Her to Be of Royal Blood.

European experts in heraldry are studying a minute design reconstructed from bits of the tattooed skin of Marthe, a Normandy shepherd-woman and beggar, 40 years old, who may prove to be the illegitimate daughter of a duke and a princess belonging to illustrious royal families of Europe.

All that is known of Marthe, officially, is that she was sent to the orphanage of the Assistance Publique in Paris in 1890, when she was four years old. Like most of these waifs, Marthe was put in the hands of farmers and became a shepherd girl in Normandy, subjected to constant harsh treatment.

Marthe lived as best she could, through 35 years of her life, mostly by begging for her food. Then, in 1926 a doctor treating her discovered 16 scars on her body. He recognized them as tattoo marks which had been burned more than 30 years before.

On the doctor's advice the scars were examined by experts who concluded that, as a baby, she had been tattooed by a clever artist with 16 identical coats of arms and that before she was three or four years old the marks had been clumsily removed by painful operations.

The traces which remain, examined by a magnifying glass, show an escutcheon of an alliance between two celebrated families. It is a question whether this was done by her parents and then cut out when they decided to return to their families and put the girl in the orphanage.

The experts in heraldry reported no trouble in identifying parts of two royal coats-of-arms.

The official records in the French Government show that the birth certificate of the shepherd-beggar had been tampered with in the great volume of the 1st Arrondissement. Certain marginal annotations had been scratched out and there is no clue from that record as to who her parents may have been.

REDUCED HIS OWN SALARY.

SIR ISAAC ISAACS

As a contribution to national economy, Sir Isaac Isaacs, first Australian-born Governor-General of that country, voluntarily reduced his salary by $5,000. He had previously relinquished his judicial pension of $7,000 per year and does not receive the $10,000 living allowance paid to his predecessors in the office.

SOVIET FIVE-DAY WEEK.

Complicated System But Workers Know Their Day Off.

In Soviet Russia the name of the day of the week is without significance. Instead, the populace figures its dates according to its day off. "The fifth day" is the key to the calendar so far as the present-day Russian is concerned. Ask any passerby in the street what day of the week it is and he will shake his head in ignorance. But follow him to his home and you will find there a calendar on which he has placed a red mark on every fifth day. That signifies his day off under the Soviet five-day week.

Fundamentally, the universal calendar still exists, although it is varied somewhat for government and industrial purposes by the adoption of the 30-day month. One day in each of the seven 31-day months is considered an "extra day." From these seven "extra days" are subtracted two to make up the difference of February. The net total of five "extra days" is required of each worker for government service in some form or another.

In turn, the government "pays back" these five days by granting five days of national holidays — two for May Day, two to commemorate the October revolution and one for the anniversary of Lenin's death.

FRANCE THE EMPIRE.

France is a nation of 100,000,000 people spread over 12,000,000 square kilometers. From the point of view of the area which she occupies upon this globe of ours she is, thanks to her colonies, the third largest country in the world, the first being the British Empire, and the second Russia. She is larger than China or the United States. With regard to population, France is the fifth country of the world, the first four being the British Empire, China, Soviet Russia and the United States. Without her colonies France would be, measured by area, only the seventeenth, and by population only the eleventh country.—The Nineteenth Century.

MOST OF TALC EXPORTED.

Of the 11,841 tons of talc and soapstone produced in Canada last year 8,512 tons were exported. Practically all the talc found in Canada comes from Ontario and the soapstone from Quebec. Crystalline talc is now used extensively in the ceramic industry for the manufacture of various kinds of tile and to mix with cement to give it greater plasticity in order to produce a smooth surfaced concrete.

Here and There

The first lot of electric light bills under the new Public Utilities Commission, have been sent out. We now have up to the 25th of each month to pay our bills. After that we get no discount.

The Reeve is right when he says the majority should rule. The majority voted in favor of the Hydro By-Law, which was quashed on a technicality, at Osgoode Hall. The Council should give the people a chance to vote on the question again but not before next January.

At the Ratepayers Association meeting last Friday night there was a lengthy discussion on the report of the Municipal Auditors. Nothing was given out for publication, but a motion was carried to ask the Reeve to call a public meeting of all the ratepayers to discuss the matter.

Some time ago the Council were notified that two iron doors were missing from the vicinity of the town hall. Accordingly an advt was put in The Review to locate them. And imagine the surprise of our Chief Constable a couple of days after the paper came out, when going to the town hall, to see the same 2 doors back in the same place. This proves two things—that it pays to advertise and that there are people who have enough nerve to steal the doors off a jail.

Canada, The Empire and The World at Large

CANADA

Prince of Wales—Agriculturist

As demonstrated in the development of his E. P. Ranch in Western Alberta, the Prince of Wales is an enthusiastic breeder of live stock. At the recent Northampton Show at Rushden, His Royal Highness beat some of the most formidable breeders of cattle. One of his Shorthorn bulls and a Shorthorn heifer calf captured first prizes. These animals came from his farm at Lenton. At the Devon show in Tavistock he showed some fine animals and made a great display of farm produce. The Prince pays special attention to the needs of consumers. He has arranged for his tenants to study the provision department of a London West End store to learn exactly what the public requires of them. Not long ago he visited the store himself to see how they were getting on. His Royal Highness takes a deep interest in every aspect of the nation's life and the life of the Empire. —Mail and Empire (Toronto).

Canada's Future

We are firmly of the opinion that Canada offers to-day, despite all the difficulties of the time, as many if not more material advantages to honest and intelligent citizens who are willing and ready to work as she did in the past. The important thing is to work, and to face with calm and energy all the trials through which we have to pass. Better times are coming and Canada will very probably be one of the first countries in the world to overcome the obstacles which are temporarily obstructing our progress. —La Tribune, Sherbrooke.

Canada and the U.S.

The United States Senate recently voted virtually embargoes against Canadian lumber and copper. It voted to place a duty of $3 per 1,000 board feet on lumber; to place a duty of four cents a pound on copper. This affects, practically destroys, $28,000,000 of Canadian trade. All but a crippling blow to our lumber industry, and a severe check to our copper exports, this action by the United States Senate may yield good. It may be that it is just what is required to impress upon all of us the vital importance of not permitting failure in the coming Imperial Economic Conference. For the real meaning of this news from Washington is that Canada may as well make up her mind that she cannot hope for anything like dependable trade arrangements with the United States. That country, whether it is under a Republican or a Democratic administration, and no matter what the political complexion of Congress, doesn't propose to buy anything from Canada that it can help; and any arrangement that it may make with Canada of a contrary character will be a temporary arrangement, subject to withdrawal at Congressional caprice.—Ottawa Journal.

Wide Open Spaces

Undoubtedly gardening is not only splendid exercise, but a profitable occupation for all who are in a position to take advantage of it. It has been undertaken on a considerable scale this season in Brantford, as a result of the scheme to provide garden plots for those who desired them. Those who have not plots for gardening will do well to engage in whatever suitable outdoor recreations they can find convenient. The main thing is to live a life of activity in the open air and sunshine as much as possible during the spring and summer months while the weather continues favorable. This applies both to children and adults. Medical authorities have never placed as much emphasis on the necessity of living in the fresh air as they are doing at present. Happy are those who can devise ways and means to spend at least a portion of their spare hours in the open air.—Brantford Expositor.

Incredible Change

Two years ago a picture of the United States of America as it is today could have been placed only in the category of the imaginary and utterly incredible. The national treasury is faced with a deficit of £500,000,000, and the richest country in the world will be driven to defy all the recognized canons of sound public finance by borrowing to balance its budget. President Hoover's sun is setting in a stormier dusk than his worst enemies could have predicted.—London Spectator.

The Farmer's Lot Improves

It is difficult to speak for farmers all over the Dominion, but certainly so far as the farmers of Western Canada are concerned — apart from the drought area of 1931—they are generally speaking getting into better shape now than they have been at any time in the past three years. Leave he farmer alone—build up no fraudulent hopes by appointing Government boards on this and that—and he will eventually come through in pretty sound condition.—Winnipeg Tribune.

Prophets of Ruin

Last December Sir George Paish made our flesh creep by telling us that unless war debts and reparations were fixed up in some way by February the world would go smash. The old perverse world didn't fix up war debts or reparations or much of anything else, and it refused to go smash. Now we have a lot of other experts telling us that unless the coming Lausanne Conference does succeed we'll all go bust for sure. Well, our own humble expectation is that Lausanne will settle nothing, and that the world won't collapse. The world is extraordinarily tough. Somehow or other it possesses intangible assets that economists and experts invariably fail to reckon with; so that just when it seems to be on the verge of ruin something or somebody comes along to save it, or to give it a few more years of grace.—Ottawa Journal.

The B. C. Loan

A British Columbia loan of £1,500,000 is being underwritten by London financial houses at 5 per cent. interest and selling at 99. The feature of the loan is that it should be the first launched on behalf of this Province in London for the last eighteen years. It indicates a return to a process of Imperial financing for Empire needs. That the loan should be underwritten in London is an excellent evidence of faith there in the future of this Province. What British Columbia has been able to accomplish may mark the beginning of a rejuvenated interest among English investors in Canadian development. The present happening comes at an appropriate time when so much attention is being centred on the forthcoming Imperial Conference at Ottawa.—Victoria Colonist.

Eastern Coal in Ontario

A few days ago the first cargo of coal from Nova Scotia under the new system of bonusing by the Dominion Government was unloaded in Toronto Harbor. It was a practical illustration of what can be done by Government assistance for the extension of markets. Nova Scotia was able to penetrate further into Central Canada than was possible under ordinary economic laws. Coal produced in the United States had found a new competitor in coal mines in the extreme eastern portion of Canada.—Mail and Empire (Toronto).

The Hudson Bay Route

It is perfectly clear that something more must be done before the West will get full advantage of the Bay route. The $50,000,000 was not spent on the Hudson Bay Railway and the port and aids to navigation merely to enable grain and other exports to be shipped at a total transportation cost just a shade lower than the cost by way of Montreal. There would have been no justification for spending such a large sum for that purpose. It was spent to give the West the benefit of materially lower rates than by the St. Lawrence route. It was spent to give the West the benefit of its geographical advantage.—Winnipeg Free Press.

THE EMPIRE

British Agriculture

However much its fortunes have declined, British farming is still one of the most important industries in the Empire, with an annual output enormous in quantity and still more enormous in value, owing to the quality of its products. In different parts of the Empire statistics are compiled in different ways and exact comparisons are therefore impossible; but all the available figures go to show that the annual value of the agricultural production of Great Britain is very little, if any, less than that of Canada and greatly exceeds that of any other of the Dominions.—London Times.

The Toll of the Roads

Sir Herbert Samuel suggests the remedy of kindliness and friendliness for the slaughter of the roads). This is a serious question which has to be settled one way or the other. In any view, and I speak as one who has controlled the police, it must be settled on the penal side. I do not believe that the 2,000,000 motorists, including the commercial drivers, are going to drive in such a kind and friendly manner as to prevent any accidents on the public roads. . . . There really is no answer, and having regard to the years during which we have tried to deal with the question by courtesy and friendliness, and by seeking to make the motorist and the pedestrian more cognizant of one another's rights —a method which has completely failed—I have come to the quite definite conclusion that the State should intervene, that it is its duty to intervene, and that such steps should be taken as may prevent the holocaust of death and injury on our roads. The population is an asset of the State. Not only are men and women entitled to their personal safety, but the State is entitled to see that its people are preserved from danger in order hat the great asset of human life and human activity may be preserved for the good of the State as a whole.—Lord Brentford in the Spectator (London).

OTHER OPINIONS

The Empire in the Lead

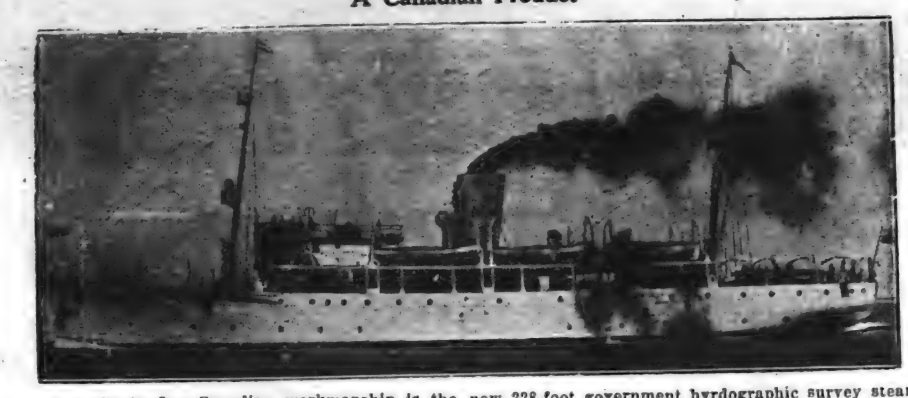
Nothing could be of a greater advantage to the world than that the United States should solve her own domestic problems, and, by solving them, provide the stimulus and the example to other countries. But observing from a distance—a nearer view of the prospect might modify my pessimism. I am unable to imagine a course of events which could restore health to American industry in the near future. I even fancy that, so far from the United States giving the example, she will herself have to wait for stimulus from outside. I, therefore, dare to hope, however improbable it may seem in the light of recent experience, that relief may come first of all to Great Britain and the group of overseas countries which look to her for financial leadership. It is a dim hope, I confess. But I discern less light elsewhere.—J. M. Keyes in the Atlantic Monthly (Boston).

The Lindbergh Tragedy

The knowledge that there exists somewhere in America a man or woman capable of snatching a baby from his crib and doing him to death has been the occasion for nation-wide revulsion and horror. But what shall be said of the fact, revealed since the announcement of the baby's death, that more than one hundred demands for ransom were received from persons anxious to capitalize this outrage? What shall be said of the whole regiment of those who have thrust themselves in front of cameras, invented stories of "contacts," carried on petty battles for prestige and generally bemired the trail and made mock of a family's grief and a nation's shame and indignation.—Baltimore Sun.

New London Airdrome Declared Superior to Croydon

Long declared too far distant for competitor as London's chief airport. Long declared too far distant fr commercial flying, continental air service in particular, the new port at Gravesend will give new impetus to this ever-growing method of transportation. The new port can be reached from the city within twenty minutes by fast river taxis. The new airdrome is directly in the line of route to Germany and Holland. Leading German Dutch services will use it for a few months as an emergency landing ground to try out its possibilities.



The advantages claimed are full customs facilities, half a square mile of airdrome, an elevation of 250 feet, and meteorological conditions superior to those at Croydon, owing to the shelter afforded by the Kent hills.

China to Establish Air Force

Nanking, China.—The National Government has contracted with a group of former military aviators to develop Chinese air force, it was indicated in official circles last week. The plan calls for a United States group to come to China and take charge of an air training school at Hanchow.

Next to knowing when to seize an opportunity, the most important thing in life is to know when to forego an advantage.—Disraeli.

Aviator Rescued, Lost Whole Week

Extreme Exhaustion Prevented Hausner From Identifying Himself

S.S. Circe Shell, 600 miles off Portugal.—This small British tanker en route to New Orleans with Stanislaus Felix Hausner, young New York-to-Warsaw flier aboard after picking him up Sunday in an exhausted condition.

Master Wilson of the Circe Shell said his unexpected passenger was too ill, apparently from exposure and starvation, to give a coherent account of his experiences.

Captain Wilson, however, allayed any fears that Hausner was in critical condition, with the statement that with treatment he was progressing favorably.

The Circe Shell, three weeks out of Hamburg on a leisurely trip to New Orleans, decided to abandon Hausner's red monoplane in approximately 42.41.18 north latitude and 20.04 west longitude because darkness soon closed in after the pilot had been taken aboard.

The plane was drifting southeastward at about a knot an hour and any vessel whose position was convenient, was asked to salvage her. When last seen her tail was sticking high out of the waves, about 500 miles off the coast of Portugal.

RESCUE ACCOUNT SKETCHY.

The brief, sketchy account of the rescue of Stanislaus Felix Hausner by the British tanker Circe Shell left much to the imagination after the first word of his safety was pounded out by the radio operator aboard the vessel.

It was apparent, however, that Hausner had undergone trying experiences during the six or seven days he was supposed to have drifted aboard his 220-horsepower Bellanca monoplane. The statement by Captain Wilson of the Circe Shell that Hausner was unable to give a coherent account of his battle against the sea made it apparent the 31-year-old Newark, N.J., amateur pilot had been taxed to his wits' end to remain aboard his plane.

The foresight he showed in taking more than the usual supply of food when he lifted the plane, loaded with 525 gallons of gasoline and 25 gallons of oil from the runway of Floyd Bennett Field nine days ago, probably saved the pilot from even more hazardous experiences.

In his cockpit on June 3, Hausner stored four chicken sandwiches, two ham sandwiches, seven bars of chocolate, two apples and two oranges, as well as a gallon of water and a container of black coffee. Unless the provisions were swept off the plane when it plunged into the sea, Hausner, with careful daily rationing, might have conserved the supply for several days.

If the one-knot speed the monoplane was floating when abandoned by the Circe Shell was maintained during the several days preceding Hausner's rescue, it is probable Eausner drifted aboard the plane for close to 400 miles.

An intimation that Hausner's exhaustion when picked up was so complete that he could not identify himself at once, was seen in the fact that the first radio message sent out by the Circe Shell and intercepted by the liner Leviathan made no mention of the flier's name.

The only identification was that on the place—"Red Bellanca Monoplane 7085."

The Circe Shell, a vessel of about 7,000 gross tonnage and 4,817 net tonnage, is expected to arrive in New Orleans within the next two weeks.

Entire British Air Force Gets New-Type Planes

London.—Fast, well-equipped fighting planes, many capable of more than 200 miles an hour, are rapidly replacing older craft in the British Air Force. The naval air arm is being equipped with Hawker "Nimrod" single-seater fighters, fast naval war planes, and "Osprey" two-seater naval reconnaissance fighters, modified day bombers. These are to replace the "Flycatcher," single-seater marine fighters, which form the principal equipment of the naval section of the air force.

Four bombing squadrons are to be equipped with new Fairey "Gordon" single-engined biplanes to replace the famous Fairey 3F machines now in use. The "Gordon" is a development of the 3F powered with a "Panther" 500-horsepower air-cooled radial instead of a water-cooled engine.

Two of the squadrons to be re-equipped with these machines are stationed in Amman, Palestine, and Ismailia, Egypt. One of the torpedo bomber squadrons is to be fitted out with the latest Vickers "Vildebeest" biplanes, while an army co-operation unit is scheduled to fly the Hawker "Audax" two-seater. The latter craft is possessed of astonishing speed, rate of climb and general flying efficiency, and will take the place of the "Atlas" biplanes, which have been standard equipment of army co-operation squadrons for several years. The entire re-equipment scheme is scheduled to be completed within three months.

Picnicking By Air

Wenatchee, Wash.—Hundreds of mountain meadows and beauty spots in the Cascades back of Wenatchee which go unenjoyed and unseen by lovers of the outdoors no longer will be slighted by visitors, now that picnicking by air is the latest diversion being tried out here.

Several Wenatcheeites were flown to a picnic ground on one of the mountains south of here recently to spend the day. The pilot of the plane was able to land his craft without difficulty in an open mountain park. Later in the evening he returned, picked up his passengers and brought them down again at the local airport.

Violet Sharpe Hounded to Death

British Press Denounces U.S. Police Methods

London, Monday, June 13. — The Daily Herald, in an editorial captioned "Hounded to Death," urged to-day that Parliament take up the matter of Miss Violet Sharpe's death, which has created a "wave of revulsion in this country at the disclosure of American police methods whereby she was driven to her death."

The British Government, the editorial stated, should make the strongest representations and demand the most searching of inquiries.

The Daily Telegraph denounced the "stupidity" of the New Jersey police for the death of "a tortured girl.'

The Herald said that Cocks, a Laborite in Commons, would raise the question of whether Sir John Simon, Foreign Eecretary, should make representation to the United States Government in the matter.

The News Chronicle said that a Conservative member of Commons, Brig.-Gen. Brown representing the constituency where the Sharpe family lives, would make representation to Home Secretary Sir Herbert Samuel, if a member of the Sharpe family or other of his constituents requested it.

Editorially the News Chronicle said that "sympathy for the poor girl and her relatives will be widely felt and will not be untinged with what seems on the face of it natural and just indignation at the methods which hounded her to death."

Feared Third Degree

Alpine, N.J. — The circumstances surrounding the kidnapping and slaying of Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh's infant son on March 1 became a seemingly impenetrable mystery again as the line of inquiry opened up by the suicide of Violet Sharpe suddenly collapsed.

The case of circumstantial evidence in which Ernest Brinkert, roofer, painter, farm boy, butler, chauffeur, and jack-of-all-trades, was involved after the waitress poisoned herself on Friday in the home of Mrs. Dwight W. Morrow at Englewood, appeared to have collapsed completely when the identity of the girl's two companions on the night of March 1 became known.

It developed that she was not out motoring with Brinkert that night, but with a country boy bearing the same first name, and two girls. They went to a grill, and were not at any time near Hopewell, according to the story told the police.

It also became apparent that Violet's suicide was the result of nervous fears rather than a sense of guilt. Mrs. Morrow believed from the moment she heard of the girl's death that she was in no way implicated in the kidnapping of the baby.

Companions Found

Ernest Miller, a 23-year-old youth of Closter, N.J., admitted he was Violet's companion. They were accompanied by Miss Katharine Minners, Palisades Park, N.J. All three vowed that Brinkert was not in the car and that the "Ernie" Violet spoke of in her statements to the police was Miller. They went to the Peanut Grill in East Orange. "Ernie" called for Miss Minners between 7.30 and 7.45 o'clock on the evening of March 1. At about 8 they drove up to the servants'-entrance of the Morrow home and met Violet.

Miss Minners, a good-looking brunette 21 years old and a stenographer in New York, said she had never seen the English waitress until that night. She had met "Ernie" on three previous occasions, however. They did not go near Hopewell during the evening and she was back at her home at 1 a.m., she said, a circumstance corroborated by her mother, Mrs. Charles Minners.

"Mrs. Morrow knew that Violet was innocent, but did not want to bring my name into it," Miss Minners said.

Miller's name was introduced into the case by Stepimus Banks, the Morrow butler. Miller gave a frank account of their movements on the night of the kidnapping. He was released together with the two girls, but Brinkert was still held by the authorities, although Inspector Harry J. Walsh admitted that there appeared to be a case of mistaken identity.

"It is hard to understand," he said, "why Miss Sharpe chose to be so secretive and to tell conflicting stories of her movements on the night of the kidnapping, and why she should poison herself rather than name these people."

While States police were definite in their assertion that Brinkert is no longer under suspicion in the case, it was learned that authorities of Westchester County, New York, are not altogether satisfied with his story and intend checking it further.

How to play Bridge AUCTION and CONTRACT

by Wynne Ferguson

Author of "PRACTICAL AUCTION BRIDGE"

ARTICLE No. 27

There are still a number of Auction and Contract players who, as dealer, do not understand what to do with certain types of hand. Most players know when to bid no trump or one of a suit, but every now and then they hold hands that puzzle them. For example, suppose you dealt and held the following hand:

Hearts—A, K, J
Clubs—9, 7, 4, 3
Diamonds—A, K, Q
Spades—8, 5, 4

What would you bid? The only proper bid with this hand at either Auction or Contract is one no trump, and yet the holder of this hand passed. It is too strong to justify a pass for, if you do, there is a very good chance of the hand being passed out. A suit bid would mislead partner as to strength held.

Here's another hand:

Hearts—A, K, 4
Clubs—A, 9
Diamonds—K, J, 3
Spades—Q, J, 10, 9, 8

Should you bid one no trump or one spade?

This is a very close hand. Personally, the writer prefers a spade bid at either Auction or Contract, but would not criticize a no trump. These two hands are indicative of the difficulty that still confronts Auction or Contract players who have not yet mastered the proper bids of the dealer. The dealer is in a peculiar position, for he can always give exact information. For that reason he should strive to bid correctly. To pass under certain circumstances is just as bad as to bid incorrectly. Don't pass sound bids for to do so is just as misleading as an unsound bid. Your partner depends on you as dealer to give exact information both by your bids and your passes; so strive to do so at all times.

Problem Hand No. 1

Hearts—K, J	Y	Hearts—10, 8, 2
Clubs—J, 6, 3, 2	A B	Clubs—none
Diamonds—9, 3, 2	Z	Diamonds—A, K, J, 8, 7, 5
Spades—A, K, 10, 4		Spades—9, 7, 3, 2

No score, rubber game. The hand is applicable either to Auction or to Contract. Z dealt and passed, A bid one spade, Y one no trump, B passed and Z bid two hearts. A and Y passed and B bid two spades, Z bid three clubs, A and Y passed and B bid three spades, Z bid four clubs, A doubled, Y redoubled and B bid four spades. Z and A passed. Y doubled, B redoubled and all passed. Y opened the ace of hearts and then led the trey. How should A play the combined hands?

Solution: After winning the second trick with the king of hearts, A should lead the king of spades. He should then lead a low diamond and win the trick in B's hand with the king. He should then lead a low spade and win the trick with the ace in his own hand. In this particular hand, Z failed to follow suit on the second round of spades.

A was now in a position where he count count Z's hand very accurately. Y's lead of the ace and trey of hearts and the fact that B held the deuce indicated that Y originally held only two hearts. Therefore, Z must have held six hearts. Z's bid and rebid of clubs indicated that he must have held at east five clubs so that his original holding must have been six hearts, five clubs, one spade and one diamond. Therefore, A at the sixth trick should lead a diamond and finesse the jack. Played in this way, A B should make their contract for Y Z can make only the ace of hearts and two spade tricks. Play out the hand for practice.

Problem Hand No. 2

Hearts—6
Clubs—none
Diamonds—none
Spades—K, 9, 5, 2

Hearts—Q, 7	Y	Hearts—10, 8, 4, 2
Clubs—none	A B	Clubs—none
Diamonds—none	Z	Diamonds—none
Spades—A, Q, 8		Spades—10

Hearts—K, 9
Clubs—none
Diamonds—none
Spades—J, 6, 3

There are no trumps and Z is in the lead. How can Y Z win three of the five tricks against any defense?

Solution: Z should lead the jack of spades and A's best play is the queen. If A should play the ace, Y Z will win the balance of the tricks. If A allows the jack to hold the trick, A B can win only one trick. When A, therefore, plays the queen of spades, Y should win the trick with the king and lead the six of hearts. If B plays the ten, Z should play the king and then lead the nine. If B plays low, Z should play the nine, forcing A in the lead. A can now lead a heart or a spade. If the former, Z wins the trick and leads a spade. If A leads the ace and small spade, Y will win the remaining tricks.

In either case therefore, A B can win only one spade and one heart trick so that Y Z win three of the five tricks against any defense.

Laughter Declared Valuable Asset

As Necessary Today as the Important "Bread and Salt"

New York. — One of the biggest graduating classes in the history of New York University went out carrying the thought of Dr. Elmer Ellsworth Brown, Chancellor, that lightheartedness and laughter are as necessary as bread and salt. Addressing them at their baccalaureate services, Dr. Brown envisaged another "Cervantes" arising from the university groups entering upon the work of the world and declared that "he will find to-day his opportunity and material."

"While we are deeply impressed with the dangers which beset our modern society," he said, "it is well to remember that they have a comic aspect as well as a tragic. There is need not only that they be fought, but that they be laughed at. Take, for example, the portentous solemnity with which our people bow down in worship of the dollar, whether in prosperity or in this time of depression. It is tragic beyond words, but it is also unutterably absurd. It calls for cheerful ridicule, to loosen the knees and lighten the hearts of the worshipers. Caricature, satire, the sheer fun of Wonderland—we have need of them and we ned them at their best. We need them for wiping away some of the grime and letting a more spiritual life shine in."

Dr. Brown held that the ultimate safeguard against economic troubles was not solely economic, but was to be found in a regenerated scale of values," in "the spiritual aspirations of humankind."

"We have to give new force and vitality to other interests than those expressed solely or mainly in money values," he declared.

Dr. Brown made a stirring plea for moral courage to face issues squarely. He said that "those champions of democracy who would still reject all check on individual action short of murder must learn in time that the only individualism that can endure is that which freely and of itself, looks to the general good."

Evaporation of Water Made Visible to Eye

Fort Collins, Col.—A method of determining water loss from irrigation reservoirs through evaporation—losses of vital importance to all Western irrigated farming regions has been developed at Colorado Agricultural College's experiment station.

Carl Rohwer, associate irrigation engineer for the Department of Agriculture, developed the method, a formula requiring special hydraulic apparatus. To devise the rule it was necessary to make a sensitive instrument which measures losses as small as 50-1000th of an inch. The instrument is so sensitive the observer can see the water surface dropping as the water evaporates from the tank.

Dr. Rohwer's experiments demonstrated that, contrary to general belief, water evaporates faster during the night than in daytime, provided there is no wind to affect the process. It was shown also that water that did not freeze in winter evaporated almost as fast as water in the summer months. Evaporation increases with the altitude, it also was found.

It was decided that evaporation losses from a reservoir are reduced if the water has protection from wind, and if it is deep rather than shallow, because depth reduces the evaporation area and keeps the temperature of the water low.

FAT—HEALTH'S GREATEST ENEMY!

Physicians declare excess fat is a condition which often weakens the whole system.

A needless strain is placed upon the heart, the function of body organs is interfered with, mental activity impaired—shortness of breath, constipation, backache, and rheumatism are but a few of the ailments which are apt to arise in overweight men and women.

The proper, safe and certain way to banish fat is to do away with the cause—this a half teaspoonful of Kruschen Salts in a glass of hot water every morning before breakfast will do.

Kruschen is based on scientific principle—it's an ideal blend of 6 separate minerals which help glands, nerves, blood and body organs to function properly and maintain a splendid degree of health—it builds up energy and strength all the while you're training yourself down to a point of normal weight. You feel years younger—you look it. You can hasten the reducing action of Kruschen by cutting out fatty meats and pastries and going light on butter, cream and potatoes.

What New York Is Wearing

BY ANNEBELLE WORTHINGTON

Illustrated Dressmaking Lesson Furnished With Every Pattern

A delightfully smart model is this little crepe silk print with its new and modish points.

A small patterned crepe silk in the popular navy and white coloring made the original. And don't you think the one-sided rever a smart idea? It's a bit feminine too, for it terminates in a bow.

The bias cut of the bodice, accented by button trim, with a similar treatment at the front of the skirt, gives a charming slender appearance.

If you do not need slimming you can indulge in the gayest of schemes in plain crepe silk and sheer woolens for this jaunty day dress.

Style No. 2749 is designed for sizes 16, 18 years, 36, 38, 40 and 42 inches bust. Size 36 requires 3⅝ yards 39-inch with ½ yard 35-inch contrasting.

HOW TO ORDER PATTERNS.

Write your name and address plainly, giving number and size of such patterns as you want. Enclose 20c in stamps or coin (coin preferred; wrap it carefully) for each number, and address your order to Wilson Pattern Service, 73 West Adelaide St., Toronto.

Rheumatism So Bad He Had to Quit Work

Albert Berger Not Bothered Since Relieved by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Working Every Day Now.

"I was terribly bothered with a weak back and rheumatism in my shoulders," writes Albert Berger, Wingle, Ont. "It got so bad I had to stop working and stay in the house. I was two weeks in bed, when a friend advised me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I gave the Pills a fair trial, and they relieved me right away. My back is good and strong now, and I am working every day. I have never been bothered with rheumatism since. I recommend them for anyone suffering from Rheumatism, Lame Back, Sciatica."

Rheumatism and kindred ailments thin the blood very rapidly. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills enrich the blood stream and create new red blood cells, which is the reason they are so successful in combatting such ailments. Equally good for all rundown or nervously exhausted people. Try them. At your druggist's. 50c. 273

The small son of the house was chatting on the front porch with the young man who had called to see his big sister. "Daddy says you are like the month of June," confided the youngster, "'cause when you come in May goes out."

So Little

It takes so little to make us sad;
Just a slighting word or a doubting sneer,
Just a scornful smile on some lips held dear;
And our footsteps lag, though the goal seemed near,
And we lose the courage and hope we had—
So little it takes to make us sad.

It takes so little to make us glad;
Just a cheering clasp of a friendly hand,
Just a word from one who can understand;
And we finish the task we long had planned,
And we lose the doubt and the fear we had—
So little it takes to make us glad.

While visiting the deaf and dumb school," relates a man, "a friend of mine was given an opportunity to ask the children questions One question he wrote on the blackboard was: 'What is your idea of forgiveness?' After a short pause one of the curly-headed little boys, who could neither hear nor speak, raised his hand and the teacher motioned him to the blackboard. The little fellow wrote: 'My idea of forgiveness is the fragrance a violet sheds on the heel that crushes it'."

Lady (in Baker's Shop) — "Your French rolls are really far too small. I can put a whole one into my mouth at once."

Baker—"I can quite believe that, madam, but it's not the fault of the French rolls."

Some persons are contetnt to be comfortably fixed, while others can't be happy unless they can sit in the lap of luxury.

Aunt Hetty—"Sakes alive, I don't believe no woman could ever be so fat."

Uncle Cyrus — "What you readin' now, Hetty?"

Aunt Hetty—"Why, this paper tells about an English woman that lost two thousand pounds."

Tailless cats are reported to be disappearing from the Isle of Man. Probably because they never had a definite end in view.

Lady (to electrician) — "I thought I told you to send a man to repair my doorbell?"

Electrician—"I did, ma'am; but when he rang three times and received no answer he decided no one was at home."

A specialist declares that noise is making us a nation of nervous wrecks. Especially the noise of eating soup and celery.

The farmer was delivering vegetables to the sanitarium. A patient saluted him:

Patient—"You're a farmer, ain't yuh?"

Farmer—"I allow that I am."

Patient—"I used to be a farmer once."

Farmer—"Did yuh?"

Patient—"Yes. Say, stranger, did yuh ever try bein' crazy?"

Farmer—"No, I reckon I never have."

Patient (as the farmer started to move on)—"Well, you oughta try it. It beats farmin' all hollow."

Scraps

If Columbus came looking for America now he would find it hiding behind a billboard. Love makes the world go round; but for that matter, so does a good swallow of tobacco juice. Too many people classify their friends by race rather than by personal characteristics. Radicals comprise that breed of politicians who hate their party every day in the year except election day.

Praise of Small Birds

Sing praise of small birds who build nests in eaves
And are content with springtime near at hand,
Who pour their simple music through the leaves
And ask no more. Beyond their pale upland,
The eagle, terrible with hate may go;
The vulture, that marauder, he arrives
At heaven's opal fortress, but below,
They lead their docile, matrimonial lives.

Dear innocents! Upon a single branch
They find their world and are content to make
The most of little and to have that long.
In their arboreal breasts no avalanche
Of dark desire burns and for the sake
Of simple beauty they pour out their song.

Masefield's Ode

(Composed by the Poet Laureate for the opening of the Shakespeare Memorial Theatre, and spoken by Miss Lilah McCarthy, at the opening performance).

Beside this house there is a blackened shell,
The theatre that Flower built of old
Lest English love of Shakespeare should grow cold,
He, Stratford's citizen, established here
A home for Shakespeare that for many a year
Drew happy thousands till the fire befell,
I saw its ruins black in smoke that rolled.
Now a new house has risen; it is given
Not by one citizen or State, it stands,
Given to us by many hundreds hands
American and British; nay, each race
Upon this earth has helped to build this place:
Lovers of Shakespeare everywhere have striven.
Every man gave it out of all earth's lands.
First, let us thank the givers for the gift,
This consecrated gift of brick and stone,
Where poetry, the queen, shall have her throne.
Long may the givers come here to unite
With us in Shakespeare's service of delight:
The acted passions beautiful and swift,
The spirit leaping out of flesh and bone.
And may this house be famous, may it be
The home of lovely players and a stage
Schooling young poets to a fruitful age.
We but begin: our story is not told;
Friends, may this day begin an age of gold,
England, again a star among the seas,
That beauty hers, that is her heritage.

VACATION HINTS

Life is made up of periods of work, rest and recreation. The summer vacation should provide recreation. An essential point in recreation is that it gives pleasure and satisfaction. It is because what pleases one does not please another that there are great differences in type of vacation. A vacation should provide a complete change and a break from the ordinary routine of life. The indoor worker should have plenty of outdoor exercise together with relief from his usual mental activities. The manual worker wants rest and relaxation. The man of business had better not see the home papers or be near a telephone.

The vacation should be safe as well as pleasant. It is a poor return on a vacation to contract some illness and so it is well worth while to consider the safety of the vacation along with the other points.

Despite a popular idea, one does not gain health simply by going to the country or to a summer resort. Disease is more prevalent in the country than in the city; water supplies become contaminated in rural areas and raw milk on the farm is not safe; dishes need to be sterilized at summer hotels just as at a city restaurant. We suggest the advisability of enquiring as to the safety of the water and milk supplies and for other information as to what the opinion of safety is based upon. You cannot judge the safety of water by its appearance. A clear cold water may be laden with typhoid germs whereas the muddy stream may be free from pollution. Unless a supply of pasteurized milk is available, boil the milk you have and be sure that your children do not use anything but pasteurized or boiled milk.

Water and milk are either safe or they are dangerous. If they are safe, use them freely; if not, do not fool yourself in thinking that just a little will do no harm. That one sip may be sufficient to cause a great deal of harm.

Sunshine is good but it is to be taken in moderation beginning with small doses. Sunburn is a burn and is just as uncomfortable and harmful as if the burn were acquired in any other way. Secure a coat of tan but go at it slowly.

Each summer a number of deaths from drowning occur. Most of these would have been avoided by paying attention to a few safeguards. Never swim alone. Never swim in a place where you do not know the depths and the current. Stay out of the water for two hours after meals.

You can make your vacation safe and comfortable as well as pleasant by attention to these simple matters.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

LET US SMILE

This little incident is related: Major H. Reynolds of London was registered on a liner's passenger list. The prser, running over the names, assigned to the same stateroom a husky stockman, The cattleman protested to the captain. "Look here, Can. I can't travel in the same stateroom with that there Major Reynolds. I can't and I won't. Far as that goes, neither of us likes the idea."

"What objection have you to an army officer as a travelling companion?" the captain asked.

"None, generally," said the westerner, "only this happens to be the Salvation Army. That there major's other name is Henrietta."

Wolfe—Drennan

Trinity Church, Streetsville, was the scene of the marriage of Edith May, daughter of Mr. Joseph Drennan, Streetsville, to Mr. S. Edmund Wolfe, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Wolfe, of Cooksville, Saturday afternoon at half-past three o'clock. Rev. R. J. W. Perry officiated, and the church was decorated with a profusion of snowballs. Mrs. Cora Graydon played the wedding music and during the signing of the register Mrs. W. H. Wright sang. The bride wore a graceful gown of white satin made on simple princess lines with long sleeves. Her tulle veil was caught in cap effect with orange blossoms and she carried a bouquet of Cala lilies. The couple were unattended and immediately after the ceremony they left for a motor trip through the States, the bride travelling in a white wool suit with matching white wool hat. Mr. and Mrs. Wolfe will reside in Streetsville until September, when they will reside in Toronto.

VALUE OF FARMING

Canada's Biggest Industry Produces Four or Five Times as Much Wealth as All Others.

Agriculture is Canada's leading industry, the net annual value of agricultural production averaging double that of all other primary industries put together. It is from four to five times as great as that of either forestry or mining, which come next in order of importance. The farmer supplies the raw material for many of Canada's leading manufacturing industries, such as flour milling, feed and grist milling, bread and bakery products, slaughtering and meat packing, butter and cheese making, boot and shoe making and fruit and vegetable canning. The farmer, too, is a large consumer of the finished products of nearly all other manufacturing industries, more especially of such industries as agricultural implements, motor cars, binder twine, sawmills and fertilizers.

There are upwards of 700,000 farmers in the Dominion.

The census of the farms of the Dominion is taken for the benefit of the farmer. While the average farmer, however, probably does not make individual use of the statistics, they are used by the leaders of the farming community, by professors and teachers in agricultural colleges, by local agricultural representatives of Provincial Governments, by Dominion and Provincial Departments of Agriculture, by Members of Parliament and the Legislatures, as well as by the general press and agricultural newspapers.

Agricultural information has been collected by means of the census since the earliest times, but the amount and the variety of information secured has been steadily increasing with the growing complexity of the operations carried on by farmers in the Dominion. The questions asked in the 1931 schedules covered a greater variety of subjects than in any previous investigation. Not only was every outstanding expert in agricultural matters in Canada consulted in connection with the questions, but advantage was also taken of the work of the International Institute of Agriculture, representing some 60 countries, which had a staff of experts at work for the last four years making plans for an ideal census of agriculture.

THE SILVER FOX LEADS

Takes Premier Place In Canadian Fur Production.

The silver fox has been the pacemaker in the Canadian fur trade now for a number of years, but now has achieved the leadership of all furs in the value of its production. The fur trade year is measured from July to June, and in the last statistical year the value of silver fox pelts sold was $2,716,264. Nearly the whole of this amount was contributed by the fur-farming industry. Next in value among the furs for the last fur season came muskrat with $1,761,651. White fox was third at $1,238,917, beaver fourth at $1,035,033 and mink fifth with a value of $1,010,198.

The fur farm is playing an increasingly important part in the fur trade of Canada. In 1927-28 fur farms supplied 11 per cent. of the production value of the industry, and in 1928-29 it was 12½ per cent. In 1929-30 the proportion of the production value of the industry supplied by fur farms rose to 19 per cent.

HUGE ELM REMOVED.

Stood for Over Four Centuries In Fruit District of Ontario.

A huge elm tree, said to be over 400 years old, and an outstanding landmark near Vineland, Ontario, has been cut down in the interests of public safety. It stood right on the shoulder of the highway against the pavement. When the highway was laid, this tree, on account of its age and beauty, was left standing. It stood about 150 feet high and measured over five feet across. Lately, however, it was decreed that the monarch had to go.

Ten to fifteen foot pieces were cut from the top at a time, chain blocks and anchor lines being used to prevent damage to the telephone and power lines. The limbs measured up to two feet in diameter.

A 95-year-old old lady living at Vineland recalls having milked the cows under the shade of this big tree when a young girl.

Only one accident is known to have happened at the tree since the highway was laid years ago. In this case a man was killed when he drove his car into the tree.

SMOKE AND CANCER.

Meeting at Glasgow, the Royal Sanitary Institute Congress made two startling disclosures with regard to that most dreaded disease — cancer. One was the evidence that soot is directly responsible for the most deadly forms. The other that the soot in the atmosphere is equal in weight to three days' output from all the British collieries. As one delegate pointed out, the "penalty for the romantic coal fire is twofold. It first implants the disease and then robs the sufferer of the means of combatting it by creating a fog which virtually shuts off the vital rays of sunshine, and thus lowers the powers of resistance."

THE AUTHOR'S REWARD

It is true that authors write for the sheer love of it. But at the same time, the construction, plotting and execution of a worth-while story involves much hard plodding work. And no divine enthusiasm is going to drive the most inspired fictionist into this labor when the most he can expect from a Canadian magazine for his effort is from $25 to $75—if he is lucky. With ordinary energy in the same length of time, the author could earn as much or more selling peanuts or peddling apples.—Winnipeg Tribune.

The gas man told him that a hen just flew from his truck, but Mr. Bayne would not believe it. However, the gas man said they did not keep hens around the gas station, and when Mr. Bayne took another look at it he was convinced that it was the hen he had lost the day before. It had stayed on the truck all the way.

PORT CREDIT

Accidental death, with no blame attached to anyone, was the verdict of a jury under Coroner Dr. A. B. Sutton, at the inquest into the death of Mrs. Florence Blakey.

Mrs. Blakey, on a visit from her home in St. Catharines, was killed in Port Credit on May 23rd by a car driven by Alonzo V. Robinson, Niagara Falls, Ont.

Eye witnesses testified that Mrs. Blakey had come onto the highway from between two cars, hesitated a moment, and was struck. Witnesses said the speed of the car was moderate, and Provincial Officer Hinchcliffe reported the brakes 85 per cent. perfect.

The woman was struck by the right side of the car, according to marks on it. She had been terribly injured, with fractures of the skull, left arm, left leg, and three ribs. Official cause of death was "shock and multiple fractures of the skull."

Reports that fruit growers in this district may ask the Government to designate a day for shooting pheasant next fall were discounted by W. B. Hare, Game and Fisheries Overseer for Peel and Halton counties.

Mr. Hare stated that he had not heard of the proposal. As to pheasants injuring fruit crops, especially strawberries, he thought that crows did much damage, while pleasants got the blame. Pheasants were not unusually thick in the vicinity, he added.

Tabby Terribly Torn

Victim of what is termed one of the cruelest acts in some time, a valuable Persian cat, missing for two weeks, returned to its home with its tail chopped off and a quantity of its beautiful white hair shorn raggedly. It is owned by Mrs. Cardy, Centre Road, Port Credit.

Oddfellows Decorate Graves

Graves of Oddfellows in Port Credit and Clarkson were decorated Sunday by members of the order, an annual ceremony. Twenty-five graves were visited. Grand Noble George Kirkham and Chaplain Albert Block officiated.

ERINDALE

CAT MOTHERS PUPS

Erindale, June 20.—As the sequel to a motor accident at the bridge over the Credit, a local cat, mother of several kittens, has adopted three young Pomeranian pups.

The accident occurred when a trailer attached to a car crossing the bridge broke loose, smashing into the bridge. The car killed a Pomeranian riding in the trailer, although her three young pups still lived. A bystander offered to care for them, taking them to his farm home, where the family cat was mothering a family of kittens. By removing two of the kittens, the new owner persuaded the cat to adopt the two-day-old pups in their place.

CLARKSON

Price of Strawberries

Strong exception to reports that fruit growers could grow and market strawberries for five cents a quart is taken by J. H. Pinchin, secretary-treasurer of the Clarkson-Dixie Fruit Growers. "The idea of the cost of production being stated as at least five cents a quart, including picking, packing and handling, is ridiculous," Mr. Pinchin said.

Production costs alone would average five cents, he continued, while packing, picking and handling would mean as much again, making a cost of ten cents at the farmer's packing shed. "This being the fact," he asks, "how can the consumer and the canner expect to receive berries at half the cost of production."

The fruit grower in the past has on many occasions received little if any more for his produce than has paid for the cost of the container in which it was packed, Mr. Pinchin went on. "The farmer is engaged in one of the oldest industries known to man, a tiller of the soil, and he does not ask for sympathy, merely a fair return for honest labor.

The grower, he said, was entitled to at least 12 cents for every quart box marketed.

LET US SMILE

Two Hollywood film stars got married and went away on a honeymoon. When they returned a friend asked the husband how he had enjoyed himself.

"Oh, fine!" was the reply. "Honolulu is a charming place."

"And did your wife enjoy herself?"

"I don't know," answered the husband. "You see, she went to New York."

Anglicans Defeat Presbyterians

At Annual Picnic at Pine Grove Park Saturday

The Anglicans and Presbyterians held their annual Sunday School picnics at Pine Grove Park, Port Credit, Saturday, June 18th.

It was a lovely day. There was a large turnout from both churches. There were all kinds of amusements and games for the children, which were conducted separately.

The great excitement of the day was the baseball game between the Anglicans and the Presbyterians, which got everyone excited. A number of onlookers, when they saw the interest Rev. Mr. Perry was taking in the game, when they saw him cheering for anyone who made a good strike, run, or catch (even if he did not belong to his own flock, said, he sure is a good sport, a good mixer.

The teams lined up as follows:

Trinity Church — Frank Haddon, George McClintock, Arthur Arch, Verne Steggall, Albert Lovatt, Heck Wright, Edgar Steggall, Vic Crozier and Jack Wright.

St. Andrew's Church—Homer Dunn, Lorne Chamberlain, Rev. R. K. Cameron, Clif Robertson, Ralph McGregor, Mac Gibson, Harold Treonor, Douglas Dunn and Donald McGregor.

We counted them over, and there were eighteen,
And a finer lot of young men, never was seen.
As they formed up like soldiers, for battle arrayed,
For the ball game between these churches, annually played.
The Trinity boys had lots of backers behind them,
And the Presbyterian boys' backers, it was easy to find them.
This ball game was a real game of sport,
So I hope I won't spoil it in this report,
The excitement throughout, was so intense,
It is better to have a foot, on each side of the fence.
Trinity played first, and at the beginning,
Luck seemed to be kind, for awhile they were winning.
Can an onlooker imagine anything sadder,
Than to see some going up, and others down on luck's ladder?
But the dregs of a cup, we don't always sup,
Sometimes we are down, then we are suddenly up.
For the Trinity backers got suddenly sad,
And the Presbyterians cheering seemed like they were glad,
But to keep out of trouble, as I said before,
I won't have a thing, to do with the score.
For the way some talked, and the way things were going,
It is well at this time, not to do too much crowing,
But then I heard, a good many whine,
That the Presbyterians got eight innings, and Trinity nine.
They saw quite plainly, they were in for defeat,
That their excuse was so flat, they must go and eat.

SANDY

Some of our citizens took advantage of the cheap trip over the C.P.R. to Detroit during the week-end.

A baby girl was born on Monday, June 20th to Mr. and Mrs. Omar Turney, Streetsville. Congratulations.

Sheridan Football Club defeated the Streetsville-Creditvale team at Sheridan last Friday evening, the score being 2-0.

Mr. and Mrs. Austin Graydon motored to Ottawa this week to attend the funeral of Mrs. Graydon's sister, Mrs. (Rev.) Ernest Butler, who passed away very suddenly while visiting her son, Dr. William Butler, North Bay, on Sunday, from a paralytic stroke.

The new tank at Streetsville Junction has been completed. It is the same size as the old one and holds about 60,000 gallons of water. It is made of the very best British Columbia cedar, and should last 20 years. It is equipped with an automatic float. Mr. Cochrane has had charge of its erection.

One day last week a young man who lives not far from Meadowvale was taking a load of strained honey to Toronto. He made a stop on the highway when an officer spied the cans in his car. After much explaining and opening a can or two, the officer was satisfied that the young man was not a bootlegger.

COOKSVILLE

On a charge of disorderly conduct, arising out of a dispute over children in which accused was alleged to have used unbecoming language, Fred Clark of Orchard Park was fined $10 and costs, $22.50 in all, in Magistrate E. J. Pallett's court here yesterday. Four speeding cases, two for insufficient lights and two failures to stop at through highways, and one case of a motorist failing to produce his license, made up the balance of the list.

His suspicions roused by the sight of a laborer riding round in an expensive car, Provincial Constable Arthur Bosworth is given credit for uncovering what is believed to be an extensive stolen car racket. As a result of the officer's work, James Wilson, of Cooksville, is under arrest, and three cars have been sized, at least two of which are alleged to have been stolen in Montreal.

Bosworth decided to question Wilson last Tuesday about the car he used, a 1932 model of an expensive make. Examining his ownership card, the constable says he found irregularities, and arrested Wilson on a charge of having improper license plates.

Searching Wilson's rooms, Bosworth says he found Quebec license plates. He communicated with Montreal, where police claimed the description of Wilson tallied closely with that of a man wanted there for car thefts. A list of stolen cars was forwarded.

Stewart Smith, Hamilton lawyer, went to Brampton jail to arrange bail for Wilson, only to have his car seized by Bosworth, who said it was one of those reported stolen in Montreal. Smith said he bought the car from Wilson last year, turning over another car as part payment. The latter car, it is claimed, was sold by Wilson to an Erindale man. It was also seized until investigations are completed.

Inspector Albert Ward, of the Criminal Investigation Department of the Provincial Police, was assigned to conduct further investigations after the case had been reported. In the meantime, Wilson is held at Brampton without bail. It is understood that he denies all charges.

TRINITY CHURCH

The annual S.S. picnic took place to Pine Grove Park on Saturday last. Arrangements were hurriedly made for the event. A goodly number gathered for lunch and during the afternoon a large attendance sat down to a splendid tea. The grounds are well shaded and it is quite an ideal place for old and young to enjoy a day of sport and rest. Those in charge of the sports and prizes are to be congratulated on the splendid results. An interesting baseball game took place with our old rivals at four o'clock, providing a great deal of enjoyment. All arrived home tired and happy about seven o'clock.

Our annual garden party takes place Wednesday evening, June 29th, on the church grounds. A splendid program is being provided. The leading artist is the well-known and ever-well received comedian, Jamie Reid. Look for posters, and all be ready to enjoy an evening's entertainment on Trinity Church grounds. Admission 25c.

The Aztec Mystery

A Thrilling Story of the Old West

BY MURRAY LEINSTER

SYNOPSIS.

Sonny Holman, believing he has been cheated out of the Aztec mine, holds up the mine payrolls. Janet Laurier, who holds legal title to the Aztec, offers a reward for Holman's capture. Janet is kidnapped by Garcia's gang, a band of cutthroats. Sonny follows and rescues her, but she thinks he is in league with Garcia and a party to the kidnapping.

Tilford, the Aztec manager, imports some mine guards, two of whom kill Jake Hornaby, Sonny's friend. In the absence of the sheriff, Sonny single-handed arrests them, then rides out of town. He is visiting a friend's ranch when news comes that cattle rustlers are at work. Sonny suspects Garcia and rides in pursuit.

CHAPTER XIV.

And so the chase began. It was no orderly, deadly trailing of miscreants. It could only really have been envisioned by a person standing upon the vantage point from which Sonny had surveyed the ranch before descending. To such an observer, there would have been apparent first a long streak of dust, far below, curving out of the Circle Bar ranchhouse and lengthening steadily with a pinpoint of a horseman moving madly at its head. That streak crept across the valley toward Little Canyon. Two other streaks crept in other directions, one toward a spot where a microscopic man had dismounted from an infinitesimal horse and worked leisurely upon a barbed wire fence, and another toward a pair of horsemen trotting somnolently about a herd of grazing cattle.

With infinite slowness the streaks of dust sped across the plain below. The racing horsemen reached their destinations. One came to the mender of fences, and then there were two streaks of dust, one going on to line riders yet invisible in the distance, and the new one toward Little Canyon. The other streak touched the cowboys riding herd. Another long cloud of dust arose as the cattle were left to themselves and two men sped toward Little Canyon and the third to arouse yet more help.

A dust cloud arose in the ranchhouse and shot out. A second and a third followed it. Far and far away, at ranch-houses almost at the limit of visibility, the little trains of alkali dust arose in the still air and from the height of the mountains it would have looked as if a mass of tangled, invisible fuse had been ignited, whereof the separate sparks crept smokily from one spot to another, always spitting new threads which led directly to one spot in the far distance where some cataclysm must inevitably be about to occur.

Sonny was bent low in the saddle, helping the big black stallion cover ground as only the best of horsemen can help. The earth fairly flew beneath the flying hoofs of Gunpowder. Sonny's face was set and grim. "I said I was goin' to kill Garcia, Gunpowder," he murmured once through stiff, set lips. "If he's gone an' hurt Janet! Oh, my Gawd! Faster, hoss! Faster!"

Thompson loomed up out of the cloud of dust that rose behind him. Sonny came up to and passed him, though Thompson's horse was rated a good one in the valley. Sonny pressed on. He was in the lead now and going like a madman, a single individual racing to come up with a dozen or more men who might have harmed Janet Laurier.

Thompson was half a mile behind when Sonny swooped into Little Canyon with his gun in his hand. He was in a cold rage and a terrible panic. He had seen no trace of the trio of riders which should have included Janet, and he feared the worst. As he plunged from the valley into the canyon, he seemed to see it.

At the far end of the canyon the rocky walls narrowed to hardly more than a crack through which a snow-fed stream rushed when the spring thaws came. High, precipitous cliffs of crumbling rock overhung the opening, and deep in the shadows of those cliffs there were four or five of Garcia's gang flourishing long whips and yelling madly to get the last of the rustled herd through.

Sonny set his teeth and raced ahead. He was spurring down the lush grass of the canyon bottom when there was a sharp crack and then another. Bullets flew over his head. One passed between his arm and his body.

He half swung in his saddle to see a puff of bluish haze arising from a heap of boulders long since rolled down the canyon sides. He snapped one shot, two at the mass of rock as he swept on.

Bang! Bang! Bullets whined about him. Gunpowder stumbled and dropped to his knees, flinging Sonny over his head. Sonny struggled to his feet and other bullets ripped into him. He heard a sudden cry and the firing stopped.

He began to hobble desperately after the slowly moving herd. No one can ever drive a herd very fast for any long distance short of stampeding them, but a herd pace with many drivers who use their whips mercilessly is nevertheless faster than a man can walk. Sonny's attempt was hopeless and he knew it. He was almost sobbing in his disappointment and rage when the pounding of hoofs behind him made him snap about in a moment's hope. These would be Garcia's men. If he could shoot one from the saddle and dispose of the rest.

His eyes almost started from his head when he saw Janet as the trailing last of the three riders who bore down upon him. The two foremost were strangers, but white men—obviously two more of the guards Tilford had imported from outside. They rode down upon him with six-guns levelled.

"Put 'em up," snarled the first.

"Go plumb to hell," snapped Sonny, angry beyond reason that his wild ride to serve Janet had turned into a trap which she had sprung. "Those fellers are rustlers yonder. Goin' to let 'em get away?"

"Take him!" cried Janet fiercely from the rear, spurring forward as fast as she could come.

The foremost of the gunmen fired coolly. But most men's expressions change a little before they pull a trigger on another man. Sonny flung himself aside, firing in his turn. He whirled on the second man and of the two guns, his flashed the fraction of a split second sooner.

"Get outer those saddles," drawled Sonny, suddenly very cold and deadly. "Ma'am, if you bother me I'll shoot the hoss plumb out from under yuh!"

He dragged a swearing man, clutching at a bullet-numbed arm, out of the saddle and plunged down toward the end of the valley again. And he saw one of the yelling herdsmen ride back from the last of the disappearing cattle, rush at a breakneck pace toward the base of the overhanging cliff that formed one of the two portals, and dismount. Sonny yelled wildly and fired, but he was too far away for anything like accurate shooting. His shot went wild. The rustler stooped, jumped to his feet and flung himself on his horse, and went spurring away as if the devil were after him.

Yelling like a fiend, Sonny flashed toward the narrow opening. A sizzling, spitting fuse was burning where the rustler had knelt. Up to it, Sonny reined in—and saw it flash up sharply. That was where the slow fuse ended and the swift burning "instantaneous" fuse began. He sunk his spurs deep in his terrified mount's sides and went streaking ahead for the open.

Behind him sounded an ear-splitting detonation. A blast of air lifted the running horse almost from his feet. And then the cliff shuddered, rocked, and with the noise of ten thousand thunders collapsed into the gorge through which Sonny rode so frantically.

There was a storm in the mountains that night and the rain poured down in torrents. But angry men rode in the hills all night long with the icy night rain pouring from them, trying to drive frightened horses into unknown openings and passes by the light of spitting, roaring lightning flashes. They rode recklessly, these men, with the air of hunters, and each man greeted every other rain wetted figure with a ready pistol until identification was complete.

But they failed in their hunt. The storm rumbled itself into silence. The rain gave way to icy dampness, and the flickering light they had come to count on died into unrelieved blackness and silence. Little by little, the riders in the hills gave up their task and found their way back into the outer valley, angry, disgruntled and worn out.

So it was that not one of the ranchmen heard at last the imprisoned bellowings of cattle being driven savagely, just before daybreak. Their hoarse complaining lasted for a long time, before their leaders appeared suddenly and impinged upon the level valley floor again. Their heads drooping, straggling and dispirited, they trickled out into the thick grass and scattered, too exhausted to go any farther. As the last of them appeared, Sonny Holman rode down the narrow defile through which they had come and estimated their number.

"Shucks!" he said tiredly. "Lost a lot of 'em. But durned if I'll do another dadblamed thing for Thompson. He's a good feller, but I'm going to look after my own business."

He drove his exhausted horse onward, leaving the cattle where they grazed. The clouds over the mountains to the east had paled and now streaks of deep crimson shot through them. The crimson faded to gold and the whole earth glowed in the pale gray light of dawn.

Sleeping Sickness Germs Becoming Devitalized

Experiments on human beings, who permitted themselves to be inoculated with living germs of the African sleeping sickness, have proved, it is announced by Government authorities in Kenya, that when these germs are deprived for many generations of human beings to live in, they seem slowly to lose their ability to infect human bodies at all, writes Dr. E. E. Free in Daily Sciecne. One of the islands in Lake Victoria once was so infested with the germs of this disease and with the tse-tse flies which carry these germs that in 1909 the entire human population of the island was deported. Since then the island has been uninhabited, although scientific expeditions have visited it at intervals to collect tse-tse flies and examine them for germs. These germs have been found regularly, also, in the bodies of wild game if no domestic cattle or human beings are available. Recently several thousand infected flies from the island, containing traces of the sleeping sickness germs which must have been more than 20 years without experience in infecting human beings, were brought from the island to the Government laboratories and some of the germs injected into monkeys. Although these germs infected the monkeys in the usual manner the medical experts suspected that the germ races had lost part of their virulence. Accordingly samples of the germs were injected itno human volunteers, none of whom developed the sleeping sickness. Whether this loss of virulence by the germs marooned for 20 years on the island would be maintained if human beings returned there for the germs to live in no one knows.

Happiness

To enjoy happiness is a great good, but to be able to confer it also on others is a greater still.

Notes From London

"DISHCLOUT ROW" VANISHES.

A terrace of quaint little Georgian houses, which is said to have earned the nickname of "Dishclout Row" from George III. owing to the number of commemorative plaques on the walls looking like dishcloths hung out to dry, has disappeared from the north side of Kensington High street to make way for new shops. This is yet another example in London of the rapid spread of business premises into traditionally residential districts. City merchants and high lights of society used to live in majestic mansions in central London. Today they usually occupy luxury flats during the week, and retreat to small country houses for week-ends. Famous streets like Park Lane are changing completely in character. Mayfair's big houses are being pulled down and replaced by blocks of flats and shops with severe modern architectural lines. The census returns of last July showed that while the population of Greater London had increased by more than 720,000 to 8,202,818 from 1921 to 1931, yet the number of residents in London County, or inner London, had decreased by nearly 100,000 during the same period. Stately Georgian and ornate Victorian mansions in once fashionable streets and squares have fallen out of favor owing to their large rooms, numerous stairs and the necessity for considerable domestic staffs to maintain them.

One is told that the demand for luxury flats has been more than satisfied in the last few years. But they continue to be built. In many cases their rentals are much greater than those of old five-storied houses near by. But the most remarkable change of all is taking place in London's suburbs. Ever-busy builders are weaving their web of little homes round the roads which radiate in all directions from the metropolis into Surrey, Middlesex, Kent, Essex and Hertfordshire. Speeding up of train services has made it possible for the business man to live in rural surroundings. Even Brighton, the south coast resort about sixty miles away from London, is becoming a "suburb," with many of its inhabitants traveling daily to the metropolis and back.

DUCKS DELIGHT LAWYERS.

There is great delight in legal circles here at the appearance, in readiness for the nesting season, of a pair of wild ducks in the peaceful, medieval surroundings of Lincoln's Inn, which is set in the very heart of London, yet sheltered by beautiful mellowed stone buildings from the ceaseless rumble of traffic. Benchers (senior members of the Inns of Court) had their little pond in New Court cleaned out in hopeful anticipation. Two years ago a pair of mallards suppenly appeared like a bolt from the blue and set up house in a nest on the edge of the pond. They reared a fine family in an atmosphere of white wigs and flowing robes, under the interested and somewhat paternal gaze of eminent King's counsels and learned barristers. Last year they returned, but had hardly moved into their home when two more ducks and another drake arrived on the scene. The limited accommodation of the fifteen-foot diameter pond soon became evident. Loud quacks and scufflings disturbed the peace of the whole of Lincoln's Inn. The original couple finally established their right to the solitary nest and the others departed. Lawyers are hoping that there will be no rivalry this year.

RIVERS RUN UNDER STREETS

Waiting for an electric train at Sloane Square Underground Station, one's eye is caught by what looks like an ordinary inclosed passenger bridge over the lines. Actually this bridge carries, not pedestrians, but a river. The Westbourne is only one of London's lost rivers. The area of Greater London was once a marsh drained by a number of streams running into the Thames. The Tyburn flows beneath Bond Street and the Green Park, and provides Buckingham Palace with its ornamental water garden. The Fleet, which necessitated the building of Holborn Viaduct, passes under Fleet Street. The course of the Wallbrook runs close to the deep foundations of the vaults of the Bank of England. Counter's Brook rises in Kensal Green and winds in an underground channel to Thames-side, while Peckham took its name from a stream called the Peke, which still gurgles on beneath tall buildings and crowded streets. For centuries these rivers and the muddy land surrounding them have called for the utmost ingenuity from the architects and builders of Britain's capital. There have been periodic subterranean rebellions, too, but these have always been successfully overcome.

FISH PORTERS' QUEER HATS.

London's queerest hats—those of the fish porters of Billingsgate—are made in a little shop in a steep winding alleyway called Love-lane, which runs into Billingsgate Market. Champion porters think nothing of carrying 100 pounds' weight of fish at a time on their heads, so their headgear has to be substantial. It is made of leather, with a flat top studded with nails, and protects neck as well as head. It is not a ready-made affair, but each porter has to be specially fitted. It is carefully sewn with wax thread, and its owner's initials printed in nails on the crown. Although there are about 1,000 fish porters in Billingsgate, the demand for their special hats is not very great. They last almost indefinitely. But Edward Spink, who makes them, had an unexpected order recently from a woman. She did not intend becoming a porter, but wanted "the real thing" for a fancy dress dance.

Life-Giving Pigment Taken From Leaves

One of the world's most mysterious substances, chlorophyll, the life-giving green pigment in the leaves of plants, is now available to science and industry. Dr. Frank M. Schertb, of the United States Department of Agriculture has found a way to extract it at low cost from blue grass, spinach and other plants and has isolated the largest single hatch of the pure compound.

With plenty of chlorophyll available for study experts hope to explain a long standing riddle. Sunlight falls alike on man, animals and plants, but only the plants have the power of harnessing its energy to manufacture food. The chlorophyll in their green leaves, in some way still unknown, takes carbon dioxide gas from the air and transforms its carbon into sugars and starches, yielding oxygen in return through the pores of the leaves. New studies of chlorophyll may reveal the secret of this process, says Popular Science Monthly.

Commercial applications also are foreseen for Dr. Schertz's discovery. Chlorophyll already is used in soap manufacture and other industries. Medicinal pills are made from it. Hitherto Germany and Switzerland have furnished small quantities, extracted at almost prohibitive cost. With a cheap supply available Dr. Schertz foresees new uses. One derivative of chlorophyll, he says, offers great promise as a beneficial coloring matter for ice cream.

Chlorophyll has been analyzed and found a combination of carbon, hydrogen, oxygen, nitrogen and the metallic element, magnesium. It loses its green tint and becomes blue-black upon extraction.

Corn Planted by Terrace Method to End Erosion

The erosion problem, one of the most serious facing the farms of the United States, has been practically solved in one section of Missouri where the Federal warnings have been taken seriously. In this area, says The Washington Star, steep hillsides which for years had been washed by heavy rains, have been planted in corn by the so-called terracing method. The results have more than borne out the contentions of the experts who have maintained that this method is the only one which will save the fertile top soil which in unprotected regions has been washed away either by sheet erosion or by gullying.

To illustrate, accurate measurements on adjacent fields subject to the same rainfall as the terraced fields disclosed the soil washed away last year at the rate of 140 tons an acre. On the terraced fields the loss showed an average of 2.3 tons an acre with one particular development with just eighty-five pounds over a ton loss.

There are two methods of terracing, one which provides a gentle slope from one flat down toward the terrace leading to the flat on the next lower level, and one in which the various flats are made as level as possible. In the case of the level areas, the loss was held to the minimum.

Household oil must do 3 things, say experts

Household oils that merely lubricate do only half the job, say lubrication experts. Locks and hinges, sewing machines, electric fans, vacuum cleaners, lawn mowers, washers—all household devices are constantly gathering dirt and rust when not in service. To get best results one should use an oil that cleans and protects as well as lubricates.

Unlike ordinary oil, 3-in-One is a blend of high grade animal, mineral and vegetable oils, so it does these three things as no other oil can. 3-in-One Oil costs more to make than ordinary oil, but it costs much less to use. It is cheapest in the long run, for it will save you many dollars on repairs and repacements of expensive household equipment.

Don't be satisfied with anything but the best. Get the old reliable 3-in-One Oil. At good stores everywhere. For your protection, look for the trade mark "3-in-One" printed in Red on every package.

Lone Scouts Don't Hitch Hike.

Although the number was not large, there were last summer several press-reported instances of alleged Scouts cadging their unscoutlike way across the country—"hitch-hiking."

Bona fide Scout hiking is not done on the main highways; and except in an obvious case of emergency, any boy or man in Scout kit travelling along a highway and looking for a lift may at once be put down as a fake-scout tramp; and no assistance should be extended.

When such pretended Scouts call upon Scoutmasters or Scouts seeking free entertainment, a service would be done the movement by securing their names and other particulars, and forwarding these to Provincial Headquarters. Local papers should be advised to give no publicity to alleged-Scout hikers claiming to be on a "world tour" or a "coast to coast trip on a wager," etc. Such wagers usually are as imaginary as the Scout connection.

All bona fide oversea foreign Scouts travelling in Canada carry credentials from the International Scout Bureau at London; American Scouts carry credentials from National Headquarters, New York. Purely local credentials have little value.

Genuine Scout hiking involves an incidental example of manly self-reliance. Hitch hiking is a complete negative of this spirit of Scouting.

So real Scouts don't hitch hike!

A Duck Scramble For Boys

A job that any other Scout Troop would gladly have shared fell to the 4th (Elks' Own) Calgary Troop when they were called upon by the keeper of the Calgary Zoo to help catch and move the water fowl to new quarters on St. George's Island. The birds lost a few feathers, and the Scouts gained a few pecks and scratches, but the job was done.

The book, which is simila. in size and in its illustratons to the English verson, was written under the direction of Major A. A. Pinard, Ottawa District Commissioner for French Canadian Scout Troops. The book may be had from the Stores Department, at 15 cents per copy.

Sunday School Lesson

July 3. Lesson I—Childhood and Education of Moses—Exodus 3: 1-10; Acts 7: 20-22. Golden Text—Train up a child in the way he should go; and when he is old, he will not depart from it.—Proverbs 22: 6.

ANALYSIS.

I. THE CHILD'S PERIL, vs. 1-3.
II. THE CHILD'S RESCUE, vs. 4-10.
III. THE CHILD'S EDUCATION, Acts 7: 20-22.

INTRODUCTION—The book of Genesis closes with the Hebrews in great favor in Egypt; the book of Exodus opens with them in slavery. The Hebrews were pressed into the Pharaoh's forced labor-gangs. They were employed in the building of two cities (Exodus 1: 11), one of which has been recently excavated; they were also employed on work on the land—extending and repairing the irrigation system connected with the Nile, and cultivating the soil, Exodus 1: 14. The Pharaoh proceeded to a policy of extermination—at first secretly, by having every Hebrew male child mysteriously killed at birth, and then publicly, by ordering that every male child be drowned in the Nile. But God was mindful of his own. In the birth of Moses God was preparing for the day of deliverance. "God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty," 1 Cor. 1: 27.

I. THE CHILD'S PERIL, vs. 1-3.

Moses was born at a time when his life was in deadly peril of being forfeit to the frenzy of the Pharaoh. There seemed, on all human reckoning, little hope that he would escape the general extermination. At first his mother hid him, until the growing power of his lungs made concealment no longer possible. A mother's love usually sharpens her wits and makes her resourceful; but Moses' mother was utterly baffled. There was nothing more she could do—nothing but commit him to the kindly providence of God. To show that the life of her child was beyond her power and solely in the hand of God, she set him out, or exposed him, on that same river in which Pharaoh had decreed that the Hebrew baby boys should be drowned. She made a small boat of a kind frequently to be seen on the Nile; it was shaped like a little basket, woven of papyrus reeds, and rendered watertight by asphalt. Sometimes in the inhuman cruelty of ancient society, children were set out and left to die; but Moses' mother set him out in an act of love and trust.

II. THE CHILD'S RESCUE, vs. 4-10.

Moses' older sister took her stand to see what would befall the infant. There was more, however, than the sister watching Moses; God had had his eye on Moses from birth. Unseen in the background, God was shaping the most unlikely chain of events in order to preserve the child, and to fit him for the day of deliverance. The daughter of the Pharaoh, attended by her ladies-in-waiting, came down to the river-bank at just the spot where the little basket-boat lay floating among the rushes. The princess' maids would probably pace the bank back and forth while she was preparing for the bath; but when the great lady bathed, her attendants would bathe with her in order to protect her from all danger. On spying the child, she immediately judged that it was a Hebrew, for none but a Hebrew child would be thus set out. Her compassion on the child was in strong contrast to the incredible cruelty of her father. But if she, a pagan stranger, felt thus, how did Moses' mother feel? How also did God feel? Now follow a couple of delightful touches. The princess was induced by Moses' sister to employ a Hebrew nurse; and the nurse procured was none other than the child's mother! In the good providence of God the mother not only had her child restored to her, but she was actually given wages for nursing her own child by the daughter of the Pharaoh who had decreed that the child should perish! Then, too, there is grim humor in the fact that Moses, a Hebrew child, was brought to live in the palace of the Pharaoh. Through the mysterious providence of God, Pharaoh, who had decreed the extermination of the Hebrews, was really sheltering one who was to be their deliverer under God. The child was obviously given an Egyptian name. The word "Moses" means in the Egyptian language "son"; it occurs frequently in compounds names—Thutmoses, Ram-(o)ses. It sounded similar, however, to the Hebrew word for "removed" or "drawn," and was thus understood among the Hebrews.

III. THE CHILD'S EDUCATION, Acts 7: 20-22.

The education of Moses in the lore of the Egyptians became a matter of elaborate speculation among later Jews like Philo of Alexandria. In his address Stephen briefly alludes to it. The Egyptologist, Erman, points out that a good Egyptian education comprised such things as "moral duties and good manners, reading, writing, composition and arithmetic," but also such undesirable items as "mythology, astrology, magic and superstitious practices in medicine." Doubtless the education Moses received gave him a breadth of view, but much that he had learned in Egypt had to be unlearned before he could become the leader of God's people.

Losses From Sinking Logs

The sinking of logs while being floated to the sawmill is responsible for a considerable annual loss to Canada's lumber and pulp industries. In a recent year the loss of logs in that industry attributable to the cause just mentioned was estimated to amount to 225,000 cords, valued at about 2,700,000. Circular 35 issued by the Forest Products Laboratories, Forest Service, Department of the Interior, Ottawa, is a study of one aspect of the situation and suggests means of partially overcoming this loss.

Tiber Fast Regaining Position As Trade Gate to Rome

Rome.—The Tiber is being burdened with more tons of traffic each year as Rome seeks to utilize her water highway to the coast. Last year 414 vessels came up to the river and unloaded merchandise that netted the customs office $3,200,000. The previous year ships totaled 278 and the customs receipt $2,700,000.

Rome is endeavoring to increase traffic on the Tiber because of the cheapness of this transportation. The railroad deprived the river of its old primacy, but the capital believes it can be restored.

The B.B.C. Moves On

The British Broadcasting Corporation has sent out its last program from its historic headquarters at Savoy Hill, London, and has moved into more commodious premises at Portland Place, about a mile farther west. This is likely to prove an event of cardinal importance in British radiocasting, for work at Savoy Hill was carried on only in the face of great difficulties. Portland Place, however, offers every possible facility for radiocasting under ideal conditions.

The B. B. C. can look back on its nine years at Savoy Hill with considerable satisfaction. In that time British radio has acquired a cultural reputation second to that of no other radio service in the world; and viewed merely as an entertainment it stands very high. It introduces millions of listeners to the most famous statesmen, actors, thinkers, writers, and scholars of the day, and has perhaps done more than any other single influence to raise the popular taste in music. It radiocasts regularly all the most important public functions, from the opening of disarmament conferences to the fighting out of cup finals. And it successfully financed the famous Promenade concerts when they were in danger of being discontinued from lack of sufficient support.

All these things are developments of the B. B. C. while it has been at Savoy Hill. Technically also immense progress has been registered during this period. Seven years ago there were only 1,000,000 licensed receiving sets in Britain; today there are 4,473,227, representing roughly 20,000,000 listeners. Its record therefore encourages the B. B. C. to enter Portland Place with every confidence that its achievements there will be a significant contribution to the history of radio.—Christian Science Monitor.

Volcanic Ash Cause of Colorful Sunsets?

Wellington, New Zealand.—Dr. Ernest Kidson, meteorological director of the Dominion, attributes to volcanic ash, blown over the Pacific from the recent Chilean eruptions, responsibility for unusually brilliant sunsets, frequent aurora displays, and lower temperatures in New Zealand this month.

Banff National Park in the Province of Alberta is the oldest of the Dominion playgrounds, the original reservation having been set aside in 1885. It comprises an area of 2,585 square miles of territory. Reserved for the enjoyment of all who wish to visit it, it is also a wild life sanctuary, evidence of which is manifest in the large number of mountain sheep, deer, and bear to be seen in the areas adjacent to the highways of the park.

Rome-Buenos Aires Air Service Proposed

Rome.—A project to establish weekly two-way air service between Rome and Buenos Aires was presented by Gen. Italo Balbo, Italian Air Minister, at the recent convention of transoceanic fliers of all nations here.

The scheme resulted from studies conducted both before and after General Balbo's group flight to South America in January, 1931.

The War Minister presented cost figures and even a time-table and declared that "even commercially speaking the line would pay for itself."

Under the plan the 7185 miles from Rome to Buenos Aires would be covered in 3½ days. Two routes were suggested:

Rome to Tripoli by hydroplane; Tripoli to Bolama, Portuguese Guinea across the desert by land plane; Bolama to Parahyba, Brazil, by hydroplane, and Parahyba to Buenos Aires, land plane.

Rome to Tunis, hydroplane; Tunis to Bolama, landplane; along the coast from Bolama and then to Parahyba, hydroplane, and Parahyba to Buenos Aires, landplane.

The ship would fly night and day. Both land and water craft would be three-motored and a total of 11 planes would be necessary, each manned by two pilots, a navigator, a mechanic and a telegrapher.

General Balbo indicated that he would like to conduct experiments in flying in the stratosphere. He recommended that a ship be hired to cruise out from Bolama in less frequented zones and that it have special equipment to study conditions in high altitudes.

In the projected south Atlantic crossing a plane would be going from Africa to South America on the same day that another was going from South America to Africa. Thus each would be able to inform the other about the weather conditions.

General Balbo was elected president of the transoceanic fliers. Before the meeting the air men visited the King at Quirinal Palace.

Fur seal captures by British Columbia Indians in 1931 totalled 1,463, as compared with 2,297 in 1930. Prices were so low that there was much less inducement than usual for hunting fur seals, which, under the Pelagic Sealing Treaty, may be taken by Indians only, so far as British Columbia waters are concerned.

Nearly twenty-six million motor-cars are registered in the United States, the owners paying about £70,000,000 in registration and license fees last year.

It is estimated that there are some three and a half million wireless sets in use for which no license is paid. The Post Office thus loses £1,700,000.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

On Thursday of last week forms 3 and 4 were the guests of Miss Hoople at a marshmallow and weiner roast. The roast was held at Mr. Gerhart's beautiful park on the Third Line. A large camp-fire was built and we all had a wonderful time. Mr. McArthur led in community singing and John Blank led in eating. The party ended with the singing of "Auld Lang Syne."

We wish to thank Miss Hoople for the very enjoyable time spent as her guests.

Peony Blooms Decorate Two Churches

The congregation of St. Anne's Church, Gladstone Ave, Toronto found the chancel beautifully decorated with more than 600 peonies on Sunday, the annual gift of Miss Blacklock in commemoration of the men of St. Anne's who fell in the Great War. The blooms came from her Rowancroft Gardens, Meadowvale, and completely transformed the chancel, covering the pulpit, font, steps and communion table.

Miss Blacklock also supplied Trinity Church, Streetsville. with flowers last Sunday, as a gift.

Her 90th Birthday

On Monday afternoon last a very pleasant hour was spent at the Old People's Home, Brampton, on the occasion of Mrs. Houghton's 90th birthday. Old time songs were sung. The 'light fantastic' was tripped off by one of the old ladies and caused much merriment. Mrs. Yarranton and Mrs. Partridge treated to light refreshments, which all thoroughly enjoyed. Mrs. Houghton thanked them for their kindness, and the happy event was closed by singing the National Anthem.

Malton defeated The Streetsville Thistles 7—5 on Tuesday evening at Malton.

Don't miss the big game here on June 29th. This is a League fixture and will be worth seeing. Port Credit vs. Streetsville Thistles.

FOOTBALL NOTES

The S.C.U. football team broke even in their games over the week-end. Losing the first to Sheridan two-to-nothing, and winning the second against Oak Ridge four-to-one. The game against Sheridan was sure a tough one to lose, as Streetsville had the best of the play throughout. However, a most pleasing feature of the game was the combination of our forward line. This has been missing in all other games, so now they are playing more together we hope to see them win more. The second game which was played on Monday night at Peel Park was the best game of the season. The Bluebirds could do nothing wrong, having their combination play working like clockwork. To make the victory all the more pleasant for the club this happened to be the team that beat Sheridan five-to-one, so the S.C.U. is quite confident they can trim Sheridan the next time they meet. James Sullivan the star goal-getter for the team, sure had his shooting boots on, accounting for three of his team's goals. This brings Jimmie's average up to eleven for the season, and should get a lot more. Robt. Little, "Scotty", was responsible for the other on a nice piece of headwork in front of the goal. The next game will be played at Port Credit, Friday night at 7.30. Truck to leave Streetsville at 7.00. The next home game is scheduled for next Wed., so watch for the poster at the creamery. We would like to see more fans turn out, as the boys sure work hard for every game. Their record so far is five losses and four wins, so come out everybody, and give the team a little encouragement.

HERE AND THERE

New York State has 12,500,000 people, of these, 7,500,000 are either foreign born or of foreign parentage. This means a good deal in the government of the state, and in the manner in which the laws of the union are carried out.

An Indian youth recently walked 300 miles in order to register at a school in New Mexico. He surely was anxious to possess an education. There are a few others, not Indians, who would rather walk 300 miles away from the school.

This is a universe which is ever changing, and so far as we can see has ever been so. We all should learn to change with it. Even our ideas may be outgrown.

Mr. Ford having announced that in future a rule would be enforced by him on his workmen of "no garden", "no job", the farmers throughout upper Michigan are opposing the rule quite strenuously, declaring that it will hit them hard. It seems at times difficult to help one man without damaging another.

We are informed that an engine in a new sedan was run for 21,662 miles without a stop, touring through the country at an average rate of 698 miles every 24 hours. Each day the car was motionless for 3 hours, but the engine idled at about 25 miles per hour during that time. The time occupied in making the record was 31 days and nights. No oil changes were made. This is but an illustration of the perfection the auto engines have attained.

Bernice Temple is spending a few days with Edith Rogerson on the Rogerson Farm.

Margaret Falconer has left to spend a couple of weeks with friends near Fenelon Falls.

Rev. Robt. and Mrs. Lundy motored to Kitchener and spent Monday with Rev. A. and Mrs. Hanna.

Miss Mary Temple has been engaged as a teacher in one of the important schools of Huron County.

After an absence of two weeks at Burford, Ont., Mr. and Mrs. A .Sibald have returned home.

Mrs. Fred Switzer is staying with her sister, Mrs. Dandie; she has been confined to bed for a few days.

We are informed that Wismer Hall is showing marked improvement in his health, he was able to take a walk to the barn one day last week.

Congratulations to Mr. H. Gerhart on his success in examinations written at Toronto University, passing in two subjects, history and geology.

We are all glad to see Alec Wallace back to the village looking hale and hearty. He expects to be back to normal within a few weeks.

Two Notable Careers

Two great shipping magnates have died within a week of each other—Robert Dollar, picturesque Canadian, at 88, and the equally picturesque Lord Inchape at the age of 80. Their careers had many points of similarity. Both were born in Scotland of poor parents. Both had in abundance industry, integrity, vision and that genius for organization which lead men into high places. Both made huge fortunes, but they did much more than pile up personal wealth. One was the biggest factor in multiplying the commerce of the United States from its Pacific ports; the other the most potent influence in trebling the trade of Britain with India and the Orient.—London Free Press.

Efficiency and Humanity

Lutheran Synod in New York objects to the policy of firing middle-aged men on the plea that they are too old to work. Humanity has been taken out of industry when it seeks to extract the maximum effort from the most productive years and then prepares to scratch the name off the pay-roll.—Stratford Beacon-Herald.

Wheat Prospects

The Canadian prairies have had the most drenching May rain in years, while the winter wheat States across the line are parched and crops are threatened with almost complete destruction. It is morally wrong to rejoice in the afflictions of others, but the economic result is a rise in prices for all wheat in the United States and Canada. The rain and higher prices combined will put new hope into Western Canada.—London Advertiser.

Canada's Pension Bill

What do governments do with all the money? To people who constantly ask this question we suggest an examination of a return tabled in Parliament. What it shows is that for pensions alone Canada last year paid out $65,636,263. And on top of that there are old age pension, pensions for retired civil servants, pensions for retired judges, pensions for others. All of us asked for these pensions, supported them. No one, certainly, begrudges the pensions that go to war veterans. But it is well that occasionally we be reminded of what we are doing, of the money that is involved.—Ottawa Journal.

A Brilliant Notion

Mr. Samuel Vauclain, the great American locomotive magnate, has found the solution of the unemployment problem. "All our troubles will come to a end," he said, "when every one makes up his mind to work instead of soliciting help from the Government!" The cure for unemployment is work. All we have to do is to give orders to eight million unemployed Americans to start working, and to be quick about it. Nothing like a business man for brilliant notions!—Le Canada, Montreal

The Imperial Conference

We do not want to be pessimistic, but we should look the facts in the face. South Africa wants reciprocity with Britain and the other countries of the Empire on condition that her national industries are adequately protected. Australia wants to sell her meat and dairy products. India is always ready to sell her pig-iron and half-finished steel to Britain. The Irish Free State, which is becoming more and more free, wants more extensive markets for her dairy products. Canada wants to sell her grain, and her pulp and paper. "We ought to consider in the first place the interests of our own people, then the interests of the Empire," Mr. Ramsay MacDonald and Mr. J. H. Thomas have declared. We have never doubted this for a moment, and it is for this reason that we do not expect much from the Imperial Conference.—Le Droit, Ottawa.

Imperialistic Germany.

Germany has apparently fallen back into the hands of the world-defying militarist class which was responsible for her present plight.

A Germany governed by Hohenzollerns and their ilk is a potential danger to her neighbors and to world peace. A democratic Germany released from war debt payments might have aided in world recovery. An imperialistic Germany relieved of debt payments may utilize the advantage gained to strengthen herself for another attempt at world domination. News of the recent political developments in Berlin is the most disturbing that has come out of that country since pre-war days. — Toronto Telegram.

EMPIRE.

The Cost of Higher Education.

South Africa is more than liberally endowed with institutions which furnish instruction more or less of the university type. It may soon be in a position to boast that it is turning out more B.A.'s to the morgen than any other nation on earth, except possibly the United States of America. The question is, can the country continue to face the expenditure even on the present slightly reduced scale? Unless commodity prices recover—and unfortunately they are still falling in terms of gold—it will surely be necessary to effect large economies in higher education, and in that event the right of existence of the smaller university colleges is certain to be challenged.—Cape Argus.

Trade "Advisers" for Ottawa.

The Prime Minister has made a good choice of delegates to attend the Commonwealth representatives at the Ottawa Imperial Economic Conference. Once it was determined to follow the British Government's lead in sending "advisers" with Ministers, it became important that they should be representative of the interests likely to be affected by the Ottawa decisions. The selection of the personnel of such a delegation was necessarily a matter of great difficulty, and doubtless there is not one of the five who might not have been replaced by somebody else with equally good claims. But it needs to be said again that this delegation can in the nature of things be no more than an advisory and information-conveying body. The real work at Ottawa will be done by Ministers, and must be followed by Parliamentary action to be effective.—Melbourne Australasian.

Russia and Japan.

World-wide apprehension is being roused by the snarling between Tokio and Moscow. The Russians pretend to see from all quarters imperialistic designs against the Soviet Republic, and in reply Japan declares that Russia is massing huge numbers of troops near the Manchurian border. It is difficult to see why Russia should seek a quarrel with Japan at the present time. Russia's bluster has much more the appearance of a clumsy attempt to stir up trade union and "proletariat" trouble throughout the world by an appeal to "the workers" to resist their governments—nominally to prevent help going to Japan. The industrial quiescence throughout Europe and America owing to the economic depression must be gall and wormwood to the indefatigable intriguers of the Third Internationale. Not war with Japan, but another drive for "world revolution" is the most likely object of Moscow's queer manoeuvres.—Hong Kong Press.

The Need for Economy.

The need for greater economy in public expenditure has been insufficiently emphasized at this conference (conference of Australian Premiers). When the Premiers' plan was launched last year it was recognized that it was but the beginning of economy. An aggregated deficit which was then regarded as the largest allowable with safety will be exceeded this financial year by several millions of pounds. It is evident that further drastic economies are required—not the piecemeal departmental savings now being made, but a fundamental reconstruction of the whole public service.—Melbourne Argus.

OTHER OPINIONS

Signs of Recovery.

There are many indications that with the conclusion of the session of Congress, when it is known that the budget is balanced, when taxes are no longer an uncertain quantity, and business is assured that there will be neither inflation of the currency nor demoralizing bond issues, business will respond.—Washington Post.

The American "Nation"

The United States cannot be considered a "nation" at all as the word is commonly employed; it is altogether too vast in area, its population too mixed in race and colour, its huge commonwealths and legislatures too diverse in interests, climates and "sovereign" rights. Political sagacity has always been wanting here; and even the early fathers—Washington, Adams, Franklin, Madison and Monroe—deplored this fact and sought to remedy it. The first President thought the political enlightenment of his people a matter of "primary importance"; Lincoln called it the most pressing of all civic duties. But just as America entered the World War quite helpless as a belligerent, so is she unable to adjust herself to today's universal crisis in the economic sphere. "Public opinion" is many and various; tenets of policy common to all are very hard to establish in a land of continental range.—W. G. Fitzgerald in Nineteenth Century (London).

Publicity.

There is no doubt that publicity suffers from having grown rich much too quickly. It sometimes flashes its diamonds and boasts of its powers and deals too freely in empty slogans and dubiously elaborate statistics. Imagination and brain-work are needed in its service, and these qualities the English, more than any other wooer of the new art, are likely to bring to it. England is publicity's last, most fastidious lover, and will prove the truest in the end.—Truth (London).

Hamilton Boys Perish

Hamilton.—Russell Rankin, of 776 King Street West, aged 15 years, and Teddy Westfall, of 780 King Street West, aged 13 years, were drowned Sunday afternoon in a creek at the rear of the west-end plant of the Westinghouse Company.

Both lads had been dead for some time when found, and it is not known what time the tragedy occurred. The boys left home shortly after dinner, and informed their parents that they were going swimming.

Edward and Allen Smith, of 87 Chatham Street, and Archie Walters, of 100 Chatham Street, discoverd the boys' clothes in the ravine about 6 o'clock, and searched until dusk before they found their bodies.

They saw the clothing near the creek and thought it unusual that there shoud be no sign of the owners. They walked the full length of the stream without result, and then Allan Smith probed with a long pole. He located the body of Rankin in a 10-foot hole and called the police. The remains of Westfall were brought to the surface a few minutes after the officers arrived.

Peterboro Drowning

Peterboro.—Arnold Frost, aged 17, a student of the vocational school of the Collegiate Institute, was drowned in the Otonabee River at the C.N.R. bridge Sunday afternoon.

Over-confidence in a fledgling ability to swim was a contributing factor in the first fatality of the bathing season in loca waters. Against the advice of three 'teen age copmanions, he decided to swin ashore from a pier in the middle of the river instead of walking back over the bridge. In less than 20 feet from the midstream boom he began to show signs of distress, floundering in the deep water, and although his companions tried to hold him up, his weight and struggles were more than they could sustain, and he sank.

The body was recovered by city firemen several hours afterwards.

Canoeist Perishes

Napanee.—Falling out of a canoe which he was paddling alone, Clarence A. Thompson, aged 20, was drowned in the Napanee River about half a mile from his home at 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon. The body was recovered in 25 minutes in about 13 feet of water.

Before the accident the drowned lad had been accompanied in the canoe by Allen Birrell, but the latter had dived from the craft and was swimming in the river about 30 feet away when he heard Thompson cry for help. Sighting his companion in the water and the canoe overturned, Birrell swam to his assistance but he had disappeared before he could reach him. He made repeated efforts to locate him by diving but was unsuccessful.

Dragging operations from a rowboat recovered the body. Efforts at resuscitation were unsuccessful and life was pronounced extinct by Coroner Dr. T M Galbraith. Deceased was a radiotrician, unmarried, and is survived by his parents, five sisters and three brothers.

Sudbury Lad Sinks

Sudbury.—Zelino Cecchetto, 20-year-old son of O. Cecchetto, a local contractor, was drowned at Richard Lake, nine miles south of Sudbury at noon Sunday.

When the accident occurred Zelino, with three others, was riding in a canoe about 50 feet from shore. The canoe upset and four boys on shore, Otto, Democle and Edwino Fabbro and Charles Cecchetto went to the rescue in an old punt. Zelino Cecchetto, drowning, grasped Charles, his brother, who was attempting his rescue, then drifted away and was lost from view in the muddy waters.

After about 40 minutes the body was recovered. Fire Chief William Andrews made an effort to resuscitate him but to no avail.

The occasion was an Italian picnic attended by practically the entire Sudbury Italian colony.

Two Perish Near Perth

Perth.—Miss Jessie Conboy, aged 22, of Maberly, and George Varkujan, aged 38, Swedish, cook of the road construction camp at Maberly, were drowned Sunday about one mile west of Maberly and 18 miles west of Perth, in the Fall River.

Miss Conboy was bathing with several companions and found herself in difficulties when she stepped off a ledge in the river bed into 12 feet of water. Varkijan, father of four children and a strong swimmer, rushed, fully clothed, into the water from the opposite bank of the river, and awam to her aid, but she pulled him under in a frantic grasp.

J. McGregor went to their rescue and was endangered himself but was saved by W. H. C. Munro, in front of whose home the accident occurred.

The bodies of Miss Conboy and Varkijan were recovered immediately, but two hours' application of artificial respiration failed. An inquest was deemed unnecessary by Coroner Dr. A. W. Dwyer.

Miss Conboy was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John A Conboy of Maberly, while Varkian was a native of Sweden, where he is survived by his widow and children.

Gretna Green Marriage "No Joke", Girl Told

Kathleen Williams Rockfort of Helensburg, Scotland, has learned that a wedding ceremony at Gretna Green is no joke. Lord Pitman so informed her when, in the Court of Sessions, Edinburgh, recently, he granted her petition for annulment of the marriage performed between her and A. T. Koch, a commercial traveler, of Glasgow, at Gretna Green, in April, 1929.

Miss Koch had explained that she and Koch went through a ceremony before a shoemaker, but neither intended that it should be a real marriage. They then returned to their respective homes and never lived together as man and wife. Both regarded the ceremony as a means of persuading her parents to agree.

"I can't sleep, doctor. My brain keeps goin' round an' round." "Yes, and what do you think about when your brain functions in that circular fashion?" "Dog racin'."

Older Men Lead As Canada's Workers

Septuagenarian of To-day Occupies Job His Grandson Would Have Had Earlier

Ottawa, June 19.—More men of 70 are at work in Canada than youths of 19.

The septuagenarian of to-day is occupying the job that a generation ago his grandson would have secured.

he young Canadian does not really become a man until he is 28 years of age. At least half have to wait until that time before they are in men's jobs.

These are figures gleaned from the last census and just announced by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

At 28, the bureau points out, the Canadian's expectation of life is 42 years. Censuses show that of those who have reached the 70 mark only 41 per cent. were unemployed or on pension.

Of those who had reached the age of 19 there were 44 per cent. who had not found jobs.

The maximum proportion at any age in men's jobs is during the 40's, whence it steadily recedes until the 60's, when only half remain, just as only half had arrived at 28.

Records of the bureau show that the years spent in school by Canadian youth are lengthening.

French Girl Registers Love Letter 3,000 Francs

The system by which the contents of a letter sent by registered post can be insured at a declared value in France no doubt has its merits; but, writes the Paris correspondent of "The London Sunday Observer," it will raise false hopes in the minds of recipients of such communications if many persons make the same use of it as a correspondent of a certain young actor. His salary was not very large, and to meet his expenses, which were a little lavish, he relied on occasional subsidies from home.

One day the postman brought him an envelope, "value declared 3,000 francs." After signing for it, he feverishly broke the considerable number of seals which the regulations require to be affixed to envelopes of this kind, and examined the contents. They consisted of a single sheet of paper, on which was written, "I love you—Genevieve." No doubt here love had paid the excess registration rate, but he did not think so at the moment.

Oil Tanker Blast Takes 27 Lives

Montreal Fire Chief Among Victims — 13 Near Death

Monreal, June 20.—All Montreal was steeped in deep mourning over the week-end. Black and gold drapings transformed the large fire hall at the fire department headquarters into a fitting place in which the City of Montreal can pay honor to an heroic fire chief and three of his men, killed with 21 workmen in the disastrous explosions aboard the tanker Cymbeline early Friday.

The remains of Firemen Napoleon Henrichon, Louis Debrienne and Lucien F. Hemelin were in closed coffins placed on catafalques beneath large crucifixes, with shaded candelabra throwing a soft light over the sombre-hued hall.

But the principal victim, Director Raoul Gauthier, who led his men to his death in the tragic explosion, is still missing, according to latest reports. He lies somewhere in the dock of Canadian Vickers, Limited, possibly in the debris jamming the space between the dock and the wrecked tanker Cymbeline or possibly under the dock itself., the man whom fire fighters all over the continent are waiting to honor in death is reposing in a temporary grave.

Eleven men were found at one time by divers, spread in gruesome array around the hull of the wrecked tanker Cimbeline which was being repaired in drydock when the explosions rang out. Most of the men had been fatally injured in the searing blast but some had been drowned in oil and water when thrown from the scaffold built up about the tanker.

The search for Fire Chief Gauthier was centred around tanks in the floor of the drydock. Grappling irons were being used to drag the 15 feet of oil and water in these tanks as survivors of the fatality believed he was standing over one of them when the second explosion occurred.

Should a blank be found there, it would be necessary, it was believed, to move the whole dock to permit divers to work underneath it.

IDENTIFICATION PROCEEDS.

At each succeeding discovery the morgue becomes crowded with broken-hearted relatives of the dead. Since Friday these people had suffered the anguish of uncertainty. On Sunday they picked out their loved ones by such marks of identity as rings, teeth fillings, parts of clothing, length of finger nails—for in most cases the characteristics of facial appearances and hair had been destroyed by fire. Despite utmost efforts of morgue authorities two men remained unclaimed.

A little further uptown endless streams of people filed quietly and reverently past three coffins. The bodies of firemen Napoleon Henrichon, Louis de Brienne and Lucien F. Hamelin lay in state in the departmental headquarters.

A blank space in the centre of the room was eloquent. It told that Chief Gauthier was still missing. The funeral for the firemen now lying in state, and for Chief Gauthier should he be found today, is set for 10 a.m., Wednesday at St. James' Basilica.

The order of march for the public funeral is as follows: Mounted police, corps of Montreal firemen, ladder truck draped and bearing floral tributes, draped hose wagons bearing coffins, the mayor of Montreal, the city council, delegates of all kinds—representatives of government and other cities, families of the deceased, citizens.

Churches resounded with references to the heroism of the dead, both Roman Catholic clergy and Protestant ministers uttered fitting eulogies.

Aster and Daisy Differ Widely, but Are Plant Sisters

The beautiful blossom of the aster and the more simple bloom of the daisy, while they are widely different in appearance, belong to the same general family, a family which composes perhaps as much as one-seventh of all the vegetation in this country and constitutes by far the largest single family group.

These flowers, the compositae, include the sunflower, the chrysanthemum, the goldenrod, thistle, dandelion, sagebush, ragweed, rosinweed and other such common plants. A single bloom, on close examination, is found to be not one bloom but many closely joined in a common head with the outer flowers putting out the showier petals which give the illusion of a single flower.—Washington Star.

British Stores Pay Premiums On Insurance for Shoppers

A novel form of life insurance coverage is being offered shoppers by several British stores. Under a general insurance policy the customer automatically has his life insured and, in the event of death the heirs of the insured receive a sum in direct proportion to the amount spent in the store during the previous year. The shopkeeper pays for the premium at the rate of about 2 cents a day for every $5 of customers' purchases. The maximum benefit is $200.—United States Department of Commerce.

With the idea that such vehicles might find a place in the Dominion, the Canadian minister to France, M. Philippe Roy, inspected and rode in the new pneumatic rail cars at Paris. The arrow points to the Canadian minister.

How to play Bridge

AUCTION and CONTRACT

by Wynne Ferguson

Author of "PRACTICAL AUCTION BRIDGE"

ARTICLE No. 28

It often has been pointed out in these articles that one of the best ways to learn Auction or Contract is to study examples of "What not to do," either in the bidding or play. Knowing what not to do is particularly important when partner has made a no trump bid.

Supporting values for a no trump bid by partner are aces,, kings and queens only. Jacks and tens are counted as supporting values only when held in combination with higher honors of a suit.

If partner's no trump bid has been overcalled by a suit bid, don't bid two no trump unless you have opponent's suit stopped at least once, and also a trick or two on the side. If you hold a big hand, and no stopper in the suit bid, double. The opponent cannot take eight tricks when your partner has a real bid of one no trump and you also have a big hand.

What do you mean when your partner has been taken out of his no trump bid by an opponent and you double the opponent's bid? Do you want your partner to go on with his no trump bid, or are you doubling to defeat the bid?

Answer. Your double means that you can defeat the bid if your partner has a no trumper; that you either have a big no trump yourself or that you have four or more cards in the bid and prefer to defeat the bid rather than to go on with your partner's no trump. Your partner should not go on with his no trump under such circumstances unless he has a sure game hand. The use of good judgment in this situation is highly profitable and what you do serves to indicate whether you are a good player or a dub.

The other night the writer was playing at one of the well-known New York Card Clubs and supposedly with high grade players, and yet observed some very fine examples of "What not to do." For example:

Hearts—K, 7, 6
Clubs—K, J, 9, 8, 4	:	Y :
Diamonds—K, 10, 8, 6, 5	: A	B :
Spades—none	:	Z :

Auction Bidding

No score, first game. Z dealt and bid one no trump, A passed, Y bid two spades and B and Z passed. Here's where A started to give a fine exhibition of "What not to do." He didn't stop to figure that his hand was worth probably three tricks if spades were trumps so that, if his partner could take only one trick, they would save the game. He gaily bid three clubs, which Y doubled. B and Z passed and A now decided to try three diamonds. This also was doubled and the contract was set for 400 points. Study this hand, the bidding and the score and learn "What not to do" under similar circumstances.

At Contract, A would probably not have bid so freely as he did at Auction. The heavy penalties at Contract have curbed a great deal of free bidding.

Problem

	Hearts—A, 10, 2 Clubs—none Diamonds—5, 3 Spades—K, 8, 2
Hearts—9 Clubs—7, 5 Diamonds—J, 8, 7 Spades—A, Q	: Y : : A B : : Z :	Hearts—Q, J Clubs—K, 9, 3 Diamonds—6, 4 Spades—6
	Hearts—8, 4 Clubs—Q, 8, 6, 2 Diamonds—K, 2 Spades—none

Clubs are trumps and Z is in the lead. How can Y Z win five of the eight tricks against any defense?

Solution: Z should lead the four of hearts and Y wins the trick with the ace. Y should then lead the deuce of spades, which Z should trump with the deuce of clubs. Z should then lead the king of diamonds and follow with the deuce of diamonds, which trick A must win. Whatever A now leads, Y Z must win two trump tricks.

If A leads a diamond or a spade, Z trumps and leads the eight of hearts. His queen of clubs must now make. If A should lead a trump, Z must still win two trump tricks. Played in this way, Y Z must win five of the eight tricks against any defense.

It should be noted that the lead of the king of diamonds by Z at trick one and the lead of the deuce of diamonds at trick two is a loser. A should lead the nine of hearts which Y must win. The lead by Y of a heart or a spade is a loser. Played in this way, Y Z must lose four tricks.

It should also be noted that Z may first play the king of diamonds and then lead the four of hearts and let Y lead the deuce of spades. When he trumps the spade, Z should then lead the deuce of diamonds, obtaining the same result as in the correct solution given.

This is a tricky problem and should be carefully noted. All of the variations given should be played out.

The Passing of the Crossroads Store

The loafers, seated on the long benches before a New Hampshire country store, stopped their whittling and desultory gossip and indolently sat up. Even the farmers' horses, nuzzling their soft noses in the three gnawed and weather-beaten feed troughs, raised their heads. An important event was about to happen, for the stage- coach which carried the mail and an occasional passenger to the mountain village was due on one of its tri-weekly trips. The rattle of the huge wagon, and the clipclop of the horses' feet sounded down the narrow, dusty road.

With a flourish of whip and a steadying of reins that almost swung the leaders to their haunches, the driver brought the stage to a standstill. He flung off the leather bag, and the storekeeper, who combined the duties of postmaster with those of village trader, carried it inside the dimly lighted store. There was an excited buzz of expectancy as the few letters from the outside world were sorted. The storekeeper, however, was not allowed to read his two letters from Boston! He owed his community another duty. Since he was the only man in town who subscribed to a newspaper, he must first read to the assembled group the news. . . .

The storekeeper himself was a "man of parts." Shrewd at a bargain, keen-minded, just, kindly, he was a leader in the vicinity. Among his neighbors he was known as a rich man. His house was the largest in the village and boasted steel engravings and horsehair furniture in the parlor. He had sent his children away to school. His wife's black Sunday silk was rich and heavy. He was a deacon in the church, a justice of the peace, first selectman, chairman of the school committee, and had represented his town at the general court.

In 1840 he had opened a small general store. Now, in the sixties, he had taken his young son into the business, and had moved to larger quarters, taking it for granted that he would pass his "trade" down to his son and his son's son. He never thought of this village, where his personality and individuality were so strongly felt, without his store.

Twice a year the storekeeper went to Boston "to stock up." He was thrifty and careful in buying; blue drilling for overalls, thirty pieces of calico, hoop skirts and bustles, cotton thread knotted in "hanks," red and white spotted bandanna handkerchiefs, cotton batting, "factory yarn," quaint buttons, pieces of glassware made by that "new company down on Cape Cod," a few webs of lawn, a piece or two of sprigged muslin, some webs of lace, needles, pins, an occasional piece of silk, hard candies for the children, as well as the groceries and hardware needed in the daily life of the village. Finally he added a few wallpapers.

The following years, after the storekeeper's son had inherited his business, found the village growing. Small lumber mills were bringing workers from outlying districts. Summer boarders were migrating in increasing numbers from the cities. The country store grew to meet the demands.

Then appeared two factors which have sounded the knell of the general store as it was known twenty-five years ago—the automobile and the mail order house. There still remain stores, one is willing to admit, where everything is handled, from "knitting needles to plow points," but the crossroads store as it was, is soon to be a thing of the past.—From "About Antiques," by Ella Shannon Bowles.

WIFE WAS FAT—

No Longer Attractive

Lost Husband's Love

The above headlines appeared in a New York newspaper, in connection with a divorce trial that has attracted wide attention.

"She was a beautiful woman," one witness testified, "but she got too fat and is not attractive any more."

Thousands of women are getting fat and losing their beauty — just because they do not know what to do.

If you are fat, why not do what thousands of women have done to get rid of pounds of unwanted fat? Take one half a teaspoon of Kruschen Salts in a glass of hot water every morning before breakfast, and keep it up for 30 days. You can help the action of Kruschen by cutting out pastry and fatty meats, and going light on potatoes, butter, cream and sugar. Then weigh yourself and see how many pounds you have lost.

Now you can laugh at the people who pay hundreds of dollars to lose a few pounds of fat, and you will know that the 6 vitalizing salts of Kruschen have presented you with glorious health.

But this is what I wish to state—
The dogs have had an awful wait."

A scientist says that mankind is of vegetable origin. Obviously. Men descend from monkeys, monkeys from trees. In our opinion the biggest chump is the fellow who shakes the plum tree while others gather the fruit. Nowadays England expects every man to do his duty, and pay it too. One wife out of every three is the ideal helpmate, we are informed. But how many of us can afford three wives? Our idea of an ideal marriage is one where the husband is treasurer and the wife is a treasure. A man's ideal wife is one in whose society he can spend a whole evening and not notice it. It may not be polite to stand around with your hands in your pockets, but they had better be there than in somebody else's pockets. A man who falls in love with himself never has any rivals. People with lots of pepper in their make-up are the salt of the earth. The strength of a building is in its frame; the strength of a salesman is in his frame of mind.

It takes the present-day girl to get down to cases—"vanity," "cigarette" and 'divorce."

Johnny giggled when the teacher read the story of a man who swam a river three times before breakfast.

The Teacher—"You do not doubt that a trained swimmer could do that, do you, Johnny?"

Johnny—"No, sir, but I wonder why he didn't make it four times and get back to the side where his clothes were."

Meek Little Man (apologizing) — "Oh, I'm sorry. I thought you said slaughtered.."

Average American Eats 106,400 Lbs. of Food

If you were served at a single meal all the average person eats in a lifetime, you would sit down to a breakfast weighting as much as six dressed steers, confront a giant potato too big for a two-ton truck to haul, cut slices from a loaf of bread higher than your head and your milk from a bottle as tall as a bungalow.

In the fifty-six years that the average American lives, recent statistics compiled by the United States Department of Commerce show, he consumes 106,400 pounds of food—enough to load to capacity several freight cars, says "Popular Science Monthly."

On other dishes at this colossal feast there would be a half-ton block of butter and a 224-pound slice of cheese. The sugar bowl would be six feet high and the salt shaker would weigh 800 pounds. There would be an egg 12,000 times the average size, and apple seven feet in diameter, an orange weighing 1,100 pounds. Around your table would be piled 1,120 tins of canned fruit, 124 cans of salmon, 600 tins of sardines, 336 lbs. of dried fruit, 888 cartons of breakfast food, and more surprisingly still 280 pounds of rice. To top off your meal you would find a 672-pound box of candy and near 6,000 sticks of chewing gum, not to mention 56 pounds of walnuts and 1,176 pounds of grapes.

Things that have a common quality ever quickly seek their kind.

When To Say "No"

Mary Starck Kerr

Mrs. Wilderson was almost distracted. Her three children were continually running into the house to ask "Mother, may I go over to Bobby Brown's ' or if it were one of the girls instead of the boy, "May I go home with Mary, and stay till supper time?" Or perhaps it was a request to use some of Daddy's tools or to get some pieces for dolly's dress out of Mother's pece-bag. At any rate, Mrs. Wilderson was worn out with her own continuous stream of No's, followed by the childrens pleas, then tears or rebellious cries. Very often,, just to get peace, Mrs. Wilderson would finally say "Yes" instead of "No."

Then during vacation, the time she most dreaded because of having the full care of the children, her sister, a student at the kindergarten training school, came to visit her, and relieved her of the burden. While Mrs. Wilderson sewed or rested, she observed her sister's methods with the children, and the atmosphere of peace that prevailed. What was the secret of the change that had come over the children? They never teased Aunt Margaret and seldom cried when with her.

At first Mrs. Wilderson thought it was because of the newness of Aunt Margaret, but as the weeks passed and the newness wore away, the children were still on the same good behavior. Then the mother began noticing that whenever the children asked Aunt Margaret to let them do some definite thing, or to go to some particular place, she took a moment to consider before answering, and then usually the answer was "Yes." Yet she was not spoiling the children; they were more obedient, as well as more quiet and less mischievous.

Mrs. Wilderson noticed, also, that when her sister said "No," it was always after consideration and for some good reason. For instance: it was too near dinner time for Donald to go home with Bobby Brown—then she gave Donald something interesting to do until the meal was ready; Helen could not get pieces for her doll's dress just now because Mother was lying down and they would not want to disturb her, but after Mother was rested Aunt Margaret would ask if Helen could not have a little bag of pieces of her own, and then she would always know where to find a piece of material when she needed it.

When the vacation was over, Mrs. Wilderson did not lose the benefits of her rest for she put into practice the lessons she had learned, chief among which was when to say "No." Before this, she, like many another mother, had thoughtlessly said "No" to many appeals which should have been granted; now, only when the best interests of those concerned would suffer by granting the request, did she refuse. Besides this she explained the reason, and so, to a very great extent, peace and contentment reigned in her household, where once there had been friction and turmoil.—Issued by the National Kindergarten Association, 8 West 40th Street, New York City. TYPHOID CARRIERS

It is unfortunate that in certain of the communicable diseases, the carrier state develops. The carrier is a person, who, although well, harbours the germs of disease and is capable of spreading disease by passing the germs on to others. The carrier is particularly dangerous. The person who is ill with a communicable disease is recognized as a source of infection and is therefore isolated. The discharges from the body of the patient are destroyed so that they may not spread the disease germs which they contain. The carrier, very often unaware or not suspecting his condition, goes about his ordinary life taking no special precautions.

Whether or not the typhoid carrier spreads the disease depends upon the habits of the carrier and his occupation. The typhoid germs leave the body of the carrier in the urine or faeces or both. If the carrier would thoroughly scrub his hands after every visit to the toilet he would in general be safe. Failure to do so, or just a casual rinsing of the hands leaves the hands of the carrier contaminated with typhoid germs. It is the careless or uncleanly typhoid carrier who prepares food or particularly the one who is engaged in the milk business who is very likely to spread the disease. The contaminated hands pass the germs on to food or into the milk. Unless the food is cooked later, or the milk pasteurized, the consumer takes into his body the germs which cause typhoid fever.

It is because this danger is a very grave one and because outbreaks of the disease keep occurring which are traced to carriers, that Health Departments, as part of their service for the protection of the public against disease, keep known carriers under supervision.

The carrier state may be intermittent, that is, the germs are only passed out at intervals. The condition may persist for years during which time the carrier continues to be a possible source of the disease. There is no certain way to rid the carrier of the germs which he harbours.

Typhoid fever has been brought under reasonable control where water, milk and food supplies are safeguarded. It seems possible that this disease may be eradicated if, in addition to these measures, carriers are controlled. It is obvious that the Health Department is justified in supervising carriers and forbidding them to engage in any occupation which has to do with the preparation of foods. This type of activity of Health Departments needs to be better understood by the public as essential to the protection of the public so that the public will co-operate with Health Departmenst in their services.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

Children Left Alone

In a little house in a back street two children are awaiting Mother's and Dad's return. They are being helped by a friendly organization but there can be no home for them until their parents come back.

Where are the parents? For many months they have been struggling for lost health and strength in the Toronto Hospital for Consumptives. They have benefited greatly, as so many hundreds do, from the quietness, fresh air, kindly nursing and medical attention.

"Able to walk to the dining-room for two meals a day now" is the proud boast of the husband and father. But a short time ago he could not be moved from his bed. A few months from now, who knows, he may be back again taking up the burden of the home.

Such work as this has great economic value to the community as well as opening the only way from misery and despair to hundreds of the consumptive poor. The hospital greatly needs your help. Will you please send a gift to Mr. A. E. Ames, 223 College St., Toronto.

SAYS REAL DEPRESSION TO BE FOUND IN U.S.

"You Canadians don't know what depression is. If you want a real description of depression, take a trip to the United States." So said Father James Cox, pastor of St. Patrick's Church in Pittsburg, Pa., as he sailed aboard the liner Doric for Ireland.

"There was never any real panic in Canada. There were no periods of inflation or deflation." Father Cox said. "This depression in the United States has been used by capitalists as an excuse to cut down wages and make men slaves. Instead of improving conditions they are making present problems worse.

"Every time there is a wage reduction four or five families are added to the long list of hungry Americans. Already there are 18,000,000 men out of work and, if present conditions continue, in a short time there will be between 25,000,000 and 27,000,000 without work."

Father Cox who led the "hunger march" to Washington a few months ago, said that farmers in Canada were in a "heaven" compared to those of the United States. "Up here," the priest said, "the farmers have wheat, cattle and horses. They possess material wealth if not gold. In our United States the farmer has nothing and what he has he cannot sell.

THIEVES RIFLE GARAGE

Holding up the Red Indian service station and taking $15, two armed bandits had apparently made a clean getaway today, despite an all-night hunt by police. Had the thugs waited a little longer they would have run foul of the whole force of Port Credit and Oakville police.

Entering the service station about 1.15 a.m. the two men presented guns to R. Lackie, the only man on duty there, and scooped $15 out of the till. They did not tie him up but warned him to stay in the garage until they were gone, then they left hurriendly.

A few minutes earlier, Lackie had noticed a car go past and believed that it had stopped facing west. As soon as the bandits were out of sight, he ran to the home of Provincial Officer J. M. Hinchcliffe, immediately behind the garage, and told him of the hold-up, adding that he thought the men had escaped to the west.

Within five minutes, half a dozen constables were on the job. Telfer Wilson, Port Credit chief, arrived in his car; Jack Kay, night traffic officer, followed, and the provincial police flying squad also came along. They immediately scattered along the highway hunting the bandit.

Word was received from a milk driver, three-quarters of an hour later, that a car had been seen speeding east along the highway. Chief Wilson recalled that he had seen a car headed that way too, before he knew of the hold-up. Hearing later that the bandits were supposed to have gone west he had not regarded it as significant.

Only a meagre description of the bandits was available, Lackie having seen them for only a minute. He described one as five feet ten inches in height and clean shaven, aged about 26, the other much shorter and with a moustache.

For French-Canadian Scouts

The recent growth of Scouting among French-Canadian boys has resulted in the publication of a French version of the Canadian first Scout textbook, "Starting to Scout." The French book is titled, "Les Debuts d'Un Scout."

U.S. Scouts Making Good

Sixty-nine per cent. of American Rhodes scholars have been Scouts; 80 per cent. of all players selected for last year's All-American first teams were Scouts; 39 of the 50 boys selected by Thomas A. Edison's intellectual test were Scouts, and the boy given first place was a Scout.

A Tablet to the Late Dr. Robertson

A bronze tablet to the memory of the late Dr. James Robertson, Chief Commissioner of the Boy Scouts Association, was recently unveiled at Dominion Headquarters, Ottawa, in the presence of His Excellency the Governor General. The tablet was erected by subscriptions from Scouts in all parts of Canada.

MARRIAGES

Copeland—Tolman

Cooksville United Church was the scene of the marriage of Lenore Eleanor, daughter of Mrs. A. E. Tolman, to Mr. Charles Clarence Copeland, only son of Mr. and Mrs. W. C. H. Copeland of Cooksville. Rev. C. Sinclair Jones officiated and the church was lovely with marguerites, wild roses, palms and ferns. Mr. Herbert Falconer played the wedding music and during the signing of the register Miss Neita Tolman, sister of the bride, sang. The bride wore a pretty gown of white embroidered net fashioned with a tight bodice and skirt of circular frills, and a Bertha collar. She wore a small Juliette cap of net and lace trimmed with orange blossoms, and carried a nosegay of sweetheart roses and lily of the valley. Mrs. James Kingsbury, sister of the bride, was matron of honor, wearing a frock of bluepoint d'esprit trimmed with pink and blue hat trimmed with pink and pink lace mitts. The bridesmaids were Miss Rilla Harris and Miss Bessie McCurry, wearing frocks of pink point de'esprit with match pink picture hats and carried nosegays of pink forget-me-nots. Their frocks were made alike on similar lines as that of the bride. Mr. Arthur Limer was best man, and the ushers were Mr. Ted McCurry and Mr. James Kingsbury. Following the ceremony a reception was held at "Glen Devon," the home of the bride's parents, when the mother of the bride received wearing a black and white chiffon with black hat and corsage of mauve orchids. Mrs. Copeland, mother of the groom, was in beige chiffon and lace with matching hat and corsage of Talisman roses. Later the couple left on a wedding trip to Quebec via North Bay and Ottawa, the bride travelling in a skipper blue and white georgette frock with blue and white coat and matching accessories. On their return Mr. and Mrs. Copeland will live in Cooksville.

Can. Legion News.

The Veterans of Streetsville Post held their monthly conclave at the home of Comrade Harry Lee on Monday night. This was the family meeting and the wives and children augmented the attendance to over sixty. Games for old and young on the spacious lawn and in the orchard featured the early part of the evening. Then all stood silently at attention in memory of the comrades who did not come back. An invitation to attend Milton's Decoration ceremonies and church parade on Sunday next was accepted. All veterans able to go will notify the secretary and meet at the memorial at 1.45 D.S.T.

Two new members were received, bringing the Post's strength to over twenty.

Then came the lunch with cake, ice cream and cooling drinks for all. The kiddies resumed their games on the lawn, while the adults joined in progressive euchre for an hour. There were prizes, the ladies' was won by Mrs W. Milligan and the gents by Bill Arch. All voiced their appreciation to Mr. and Mrs. Lee for their hospitality, and voiced the evening the "best yet". A committee was appointed to consider a picnic. Unless the veterans are notified otherwise the next meeting will be in the town Hall on the third monday of July.

An Old Soldier's Soliloquy
—Fifteen Years—
Then—June—Now

Deep in a dugout hearing the earth shake,
As shells came tumbling down.
Old Vimy behind did the horizon make
In front was Avion.

Three months had we been, mid the gas and guns
Sandbags and shells galore;
Never a letup from holding the Huns
And deeping our dugouts more.

There were shirts to pick and brass to burnish
No place where we might roam
The water was rank and the rations worse.
Thank God for that box from home!

But many pulled through the mud with a song,
They are out for an evenings fun.
Their kiddies and wives have all come along;
—Just watch those wee boys run:

There's the fragrance of flowers, the song of the birds
Games, the hour to beguile.—
Old soldiers smoke on, and seem to agree
The return was well worthwhile.

There's work to be done, ere sets the old sun
But let's forget all the worry;
Have more ice cream Bill? Come eat your fill
For the cake will go in a hurry.

YOUR STREET

Where Did It Get Its Name?

Leslie Street

Once upon a time—still within the recollection of many—Leslieville was a "suburb" of Toronto and had its own post office, of which George Leslie was postmaster for many years after its inception in 1851. His name was given to the community now but a memory, and to the street, which remains. His father had come to Canada in 1826 and settled in Streetsville. George Leslie came to York when he was 21, became gardener to Hon. William Allan and Hon. J. H. Dunn; and ultimately established himself as a grocer and seed man, importing his first seeds from London. In 1854, he leased 20 acres east of the Don, and began as a nursery man, subsequently being the owner of 200 acres of land. He was appointed a magistrate; was reeve of York Township, and for two years was a city alderman.—Toronto Telegram.

Court decisions respecting newspaper subscriptions are very clear. Any person who takes a paper regularly from the post office, whether in his name or another's or whether he has subscribed or not, is responsible for payment. If a person orders his paper discontinued he must pay all arrears or the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made, and then collect the whole amount, whether the paper is taken or not. The courts have decided that refusing to take newspapers or periodicals from the post office or removing and leaving them unpaid, is prima facie evidence of intention of fraud.

The editors of local newspapers are often blamed for partiality in their notices for churches, societies and even families, when the fact is the parties most interested are the ones to blame. The local newspaper does not possess a sufficient number of reporters to send to every church service in the range of its circulation, and it must needs depends upon some person to send in the news. Many pastors or leaders of the congregation do this and their items are gladly printed. Many societies appoint one of their members to attend to this important work.

Mr. Reg. Bruce has been successful in passing his examinations as a student-at-law, in Toronto.

Austin and Mrs. Graydon have returned from Ottawa, where they attended the funeral of Mrs. Graydon's sister.

Miss Lillian Underwood, B.A., who teaches in Cornwall High School, is spending her summer holidays with her parents on Victoria Street.

—o—

The Cooke reunion will be held on Saturday of this week in Peel Park. Members of the connection are expected from many distant points.

—o—

Mr. R. G. Brown, of Guelph, visited friends here this week. He is always glad to get back to the old town and have a chat with former acquaintances.

Mr. and Mrs. F. J. McNabb, of Rosemount, Ont., spent a few days at the week-end with the former's brother, A. G. and Mrs. McNabb, of Broadview Lodge, Drumquin.

Bloor Street Business Men, Toronto, held their annual picnic at Peel Park, Streetsville, yesterday. They came in large numbers and went away singing the praises of this park as a picnic resort.

Mr. Bert Bailey, of Chicago, is here on a visit to his brothers. Bert says things are very much worse in the States than in Canada. He has been laid off for several months and hopes to get employment on this side of the line.

—o—

Mr. Clif. Robertson, who has been Principal of Streetsville Public School for the past year, has returned to his home at Wingham. Mr. Robertson filled the position faithfully, and besides assisted the young people in their dramatic performances.

—o—

A large number of our boys and girls are busy picking strawberries. A motorist can see in almost every patch a group working energetically. We admire such an ambition among our youth, not only to add to their well drained purse, but to keep from idling around, which so often leads to discontent and a temptation to act unwisely.

—o—

At a meeting of the Streetsville Public School Board Monday night, Mr. Russell Langmaid was re-engaged, after a year's absence, to take charge of the school as its principal. Mr. Langmaid had been principal for eight years before, and always gave good service, as the record of his pupils at the entrance examinations each year will prove. His salary is to be $1500 a year. The board will advertise for an assistant teacher.

—o—

We congratulate the Boy Scout Troop for their splendid showing on Saturday evening last as they paraded in full uniform up and down Main Street. One cannot find anywhere a finer lot of boys anywhere. The training they receive at home linked up with the practical training as Scouts will add much to their future manhood. Dr. Monte Muro, the Scoutmaster, is deserving of public praise. He is being assisted by Hec Graydon, who is and always will be "one of the boys."

—o—

Our attention has been called to the fact that certain young men who congregate on the street corners have been using filthy language and insulting young ladies as they pass by. We thought the day had passed when young men with dirty mouths lived in Streetsville, but it is quite evident that they are still here. The trouble may be in the training, or rather lack of training, and in many cases it is, like father like son. Some of these young fellows should get the strap. Of course they are always on their good behaviour when the chief of police is around.

—o—

Streetsville is becoming a mecca for pleasure seekers. Peel Park is certainly a medium of attraction. Picnic parties galore. Last week among the numerous picnic parties was one representing one of the Literary clubs of Toronto. Members have been coming to the park for several years. As in other years supper was provided by the Women's Association of the United Church. We understand that a similar group with a large membership are spending the day in sports and have requested the ladies of the above association to give dinner at a price which will add greatly to their treasury.

HERE AND THERE

Just now Prohibition is getting a rough ride in the United States.

One of our federal members bluntly refuses to see any of his constituents on political matters on Sunday. We think the public will approve of his decision.

The outlook on the great question of disarmaments is very encouraging. There is included the cancellation of war debts and reparations.

The press informs us that the Hon. Peter Heenan, a cabinet minister in the King Government, has gone back to his old job of running an engine. He maintains that his family needs support, and his old job makes this possible.

It would appear that the nursing profession at present is overcrowded. In 1911 there were 6,000 in Canada, to-day there are 30,000. It is estimated that there are over 7,000 unemployed nurses in Ontario alone.

The Salvation Army officers have taken a cut of 10 per cent. in their salary without one word of protest. The public know they were never overpaid, always underpaid, and consequently were obliged to do without many comforts. It is a lesson on unselfishness to everyone.

It is appalling to learn from Rene Leon, a foreign exchange expert, that in making the countries on a silver standard compete with those on a gold standard we have reduced the purchasing power of nine-tenths of the world's population. We are looking hopefully toward the Imperial Economic Conference that many adjustments may be made to strengthen our economic condition and show to the world what unity means within an Empire.

A recent despatch states that the Hon. G. H. Challies, Provincial Secretary, and his deputy, E. F. Neelands, are visiting the county jails of the Province, 37 in all, and have visited 30 of them. Their investigations have revealed that crime in Ontario has decreased in the past year, but they say a serious situation is developing in delinquency among youths, which they attribute to a breaking down of parental and church influence. Fifty per cent. of the prison population is under 25 years of age. They commend the strap as a more efficient crime deterrent than a long jail sentence. Whatever the cure, our youth need to be taught many stirring lessons on self control.

WEDDINGS

Rutledge—Fraser

On Saturday, June 25th, 1932, at 2 p.m. at St. Nicholas Anglican Church, Long Branch, Miss Lillian Fraser, of Port Credit, became the bride of Mr. Percy Rutledge of Streetsville. Rev. Mr. Warren officiated. The bride was attired in a pink crepe-de-chene dress and large picture hat, with white satin coat and white gloves and hose to match. She carried a bouquet of white and pink peonies and baby's breath. They were unattended. Her only brother, Thomas, of Camp Borden, was present. The bride is a popular young lady and received numerous wedding gifts. Fifty guests were present at the reception, which was held at the bride's home. The happy young couple will reside in a new home which the groom is erecting at Port Credit. We extend congratulations.

About fifty members and officers of Queen Alexandra Lodge No. 470, Brampton, attended Jeanie Gordon Lodge No. 464, Streetsville, Wednesday evening, June 22nd, when they conferred the Orange degree on the candidates.

Just before closing, the W.M. of Queen Alexandra Lodge, Sister Wilson, presented Sister Harper, W.M. of Jeanie Gordon Lodge, with a beautiful glass dish.

Several of the visiting sisters said a few words, each and all expressing their pleasure at being guests of Jeanie Gordon Lodge, and wishing it every success.

After the lodge was closed refreshments were served.

The eminent alienist recognized the thug who was holding him up. "Look here," he protested, "I'm your benefactor. "Don't you recall that I once saved you from a life sentence by proving you crazy?"

"Sure, I remember you now," the thug said as he continued his work. "And ain't holdin' up your benefactor a crazy thing to do?"

Ratepayers Meeting Termed a Fizzle

Plenty of Talk, but Blame for Losses Not Placed on anyone---Matter Dropped

The public meeting held Monday evening in the Town Hall for ratepayers only, was attended by about thirty ratepayers. The meeting was called to discuss the Auditor's Report. Those present included the Reeve and council; the Municipal Solicitor, Gordon B. Jackson, Mr. Joy, of Toronto, a lawyer acting for the Ratepayers' Association; Mr. Kennedy and Mr. Coutts, of the Fred Paige Higgins Auditing Co., and two other gentlemen from Toronto, supposed to be expert auditors.

The Reeve assumed the role of chairman, read off some auditor's reports, tried to explain what the duties of the Council were, and made the statement that these had not been carried out by past councils.

Then the meeting got down to business. There was a dialogue between lawyers on questions of who was liable for the present state of affairs, the Council, the auditors or the bank.

Lawyer Joy stated that checks not countersigned by the head of the municipality, issued by the treasurer, should not be cashed by the bank. Lawyer Jackson claimed that the Municipal Act did not require this to be done—but it was a good policy to have it done.

Then Mr. Joy fired a lot of questions at the Auditors, who had audited the town books for the past four years, but Mr. Kennedy was ready for him every time with an answer.

Mr. Dandie said we wanted auditors to audit the village books for the village, and for nobody else—and we didn't get it. To this Mr. Kennedy said that the auditors advised a new system of bookkeeping, but council never acted on the suggestion.

Mr. Johnston asked if it was not customary to audit the revenue, to which Mr. Kennedy replied, "Yes, we did."

Mr. Joy—Does the wording of the Auditors' Report for the four years mean the same in each case? Mr. Kennedy—Yes, although it was put in different ways.

Mr. Joy read the resolution passed by council in 1921 giving the Treasurer authority to transfer monies from one account to another. The men whose names were on the motion denied having made it, and asked to have the original resolution produced to prove their signatures.

Mr. Joy said the Bank might have to reimburse the village for any loss sustained through cashing cheques without being countersigned by the Reeve.

Mr. Joy wanted to know if the ratepayers wanted any further investigation, when Mr. English asked, "What will it cost?" Nobody could answer this question.

Mr. Joy said it would be cheaper to have a private investigation by the Council than for the ratepayers to have one on a large scale, which would cost a lot of money.

Mr. Dowling wanted to know what they would investigate, but nobody seemed to know what.

Mr. Bailey said if they did not go back 20 years, it would be no good.

Mr. Joy said we could only go back 10 years.

Others who took part in the discussion were: Messrs. W. S. McClintock, W. C. Arch, R. H. Greig, Herm. McClintock, T. H. Goodison, Leonard Pope, C. R. Evans, J. H. Atkinson, J. P. Caslor, Wm. Couse, and S. H. Foster.

There was a motion to have a further investigation, but it never got to the stage of taking a vote on it.

The council don't want to take the responsibility on their own shoulders. They want a petition signed by the majority of the ratepayers and then they will go ahead with it.

The feeling of the meeting was that no good could come out of having an investigation, and as it stands now the matter will be dropped.

ERINDALE

Owing to their inability to secure transportation, the Erindale Women's Institute have changed the date for entertaining the soldiers from Christie Street Hospital, Toronto, and instead of having the event on Saturday, July 2nd, it will be held on Wednesday, August 17th.

St. John's Church, Oakville, will picnic at Huttonville Park on July 6th.

First Church of Christ, Scientists, will hold a picnic at Huttonville Park on Saturday, July 2nd.

—o—

Burnhamthorpe United Church Sunday school will picnic at Peel Park, Streetsville, on Saturday, July 2nd.

The stopping of the bus service through Streetsville has made it very inconvenient for citizens to get to Toronto and other places.

500 members of the McClure Clan attended the re-union at Huttonville Park recently. Samuel McClure, of Woodbridge, was elected President.

SPEEDSTERS CAUSED 881 AUTO ACCIDENTS IN 1931

In Ontario, alone, last year, there were more than two motor vehicle accidents per day for every day in the year because men and women drove too fast for traffic or road conditions. There is no guess work about this figure. It is quoted from official records. Mr. J. P. Bickell, Registrar of Motor Vehicles, Ontario Department of Highways, speaking about speed on the streets and highways, says:

"It is most difficult to say what a safe speed is. The law restricts speed on the highways to 35 miles per hour. Too many motorists accept this limit as being permissible under all conditions. Every thoughtful and observing person knows that there are times when ever five or ten miles an hour is dangerous. Safety on the highways is a matter of sane driving judgment and constant vigilance."

AGAR FAMILY GATHER AT ANNUAL REUNION

The Agar family reunion held in High Park on Saturday last was unique in that it marked a period of 100 years since the arrival in Toronto of Thomas and Hannah Agar, natives of Yorkshire, England, who settled in the western section of Vaughan, where they raised a large family and prospered. Many branches have grown from the original family settling in Canada four generations ago. The picnic on Saturday was not as well attended as on occasions of past years owing to unfavorable weather. However, about 100 got together to keep green the memory of their sturdy ancestors. The oldest in attendance was Mrs. J. Landsdell, Brampton, while the youngest was Jean Alice Irwin, Kleinburg.

Officers elected are: Honorary president, Joseph Agar, Nobleton; president, T. K. Agar, Nobleton; secretary, Mrs. R. Agar, Brooklyn, Ont.; table convener, Mrs. Roy Agar, Acton; sports convener, W. Hemphill, Toronto.

PORT CREDIT

Breaking into the home of John McLelland, on the Toronto Hamilton Highway here, a noisy prowler roused the family and had to make a hurried getaway through a rear window. Aroused by the intruder's footsteps, McLelland came down in time to catch a glimpse of him escaping. Four dollars was stolen from a sideboard drawer. Chief Telfer Wilson is investigating.

Rain Postpones Picnic

Owing to rain on Saturday afternoon the annual Sunday school and congregational picnic of Mimico Presbyterian Church, to have been held at Pine Grove Park, Stavebank Road, Port Credit, was postponed until Saturday, July 2nd. W. E. S. Savage is general superintendent of the Sunday School and Rev. John Galloway, pastor.

The Empire at Ottawa

A party of Jews and Arabs went down yesterday from Jerusalem. They are on their way to Ottawa. They are orange growers, from that strip of green country which makes an oasis across the ancient country of the Philistines. They will come down on the military railway that the British built in the Palestine campaign of the Great War, alongside the old caravan route out of Syria and Judea down to Egypt, where the Children of Israel once passed in their flight from the tyranny and the servitude of the Pharaoh. They are coming to Ottawa, to sell Jaffa oranges to the Empire, perhaps, and certainly to tell the Empire that the Jaffa orange is the best in the world.

What a touch of color it lends to the preparations for the Ottawa Conference, this latest pilgrimage out of the Holy Land! Jews, and Arabs are coming, those ancient and modern enemies, reconciled in this imaginative project of a larger trade and communication between the diverse peoples who, in greater or lesser degree, profess a common interest in the destiny of the British Commonwealth.

President de Valera, fresh from his alarums and excursions about the Oath of Allegiance, is seriously considering whether he had better not come to Ottawa himself. Merchants of spices and cotton are coming from India, and tea planters from Ceylon. There will be men there from Kenya and Uganda, rubbing shoulders with the official delegates of Australia and New Zealand and South Africa. All roads of the Empire, all trade routes of the seven seas, lead these days to the capital of Canada, where the Ottawa runs down to the mother of Canadian waters.—Vancouver Province.

He Failed in Mathematics

Much has been said by way of exposing the unsatisfactory character of written examinations as a test of scholarship and fitness for academic degrees and positions of trust. Educationists recognize that while some students have the faculty for expressing what they know on paper, others have not. It often happens that a poor scholar may do better than a good scholar in a written paper. That is one reason why schools, colleges and departments of education have been trying to get away from the straight-jacket of examinations. A school in New York has recently found a novel way out of the well known dilemma. At the Lincoln school a young student, William Beal, could not compass Algebra. To hopelessly failed in that subject. He did well in languages, wrote plays and essays, shone in music, but mathematics stumped him. The management looked about for credits to compensate for his failure in a single field. It was found in his natural aptitude for creative work. Art came to his rescue. The Lincoln school has a new set of murals of singular merit, and William Beal has his diploma. This is an idea to which educationists may well give consideration. — Mail and Empire (Toronto).

Menace of Faulty Headlights

It would be interesting to know how many motorists, reading the warning given by Hon. Leopold Macaulay, Minister of Highways, about the importance of headlights, have bothered to check up on this particular equipment of their own cars. Every driver, out on the highway after nightfall, knows that the headlights of the majority of approaching cars are a menace to his safety . . but in all probability he hasn't taken the trouble to ascertain whether or not his own beams of illumination are as annoying to others. There were 250 accidents in Ontario last year directly attributable to faulty headlights, the Minister of Highways declares. Twelve of these had fatal termination.—Hamilton Spectator.

Holiday for Farm Folk

The municipal Council of the Township of West Luther unanimously passed a novel resolution at its last meeting. The motion expressed the wish of the council that the ratepayers observe every Saturday afternoon as a public half holiday during the month of June and on the first two Saturdays of July in 1932. Coupled with the wish was a suggestion that games and sports be held at convenient centres for the ratepayers of the municipality. The Arthur Enterprise-News, in referring to this action, congratulates the council on the move thus initiated and expresses the hope that it will develop into full fruition. The initiative thus shown by West Luther council is surely worthy of commendation. The municipality is thus linked up with urban centres in which the weekly half holiday has been observed for years by merchants and other business men. This weekly period of recreation has come to be regarded in towns and villages as a necessity. People engaged in agriculture would find it difficult to break the continuity of their week's work with a Wednesday half holiday, such as generally is observed by urban folk. To them Saturday afternoon would be more advantageous and would also give them a longer week-end respite from their arduous tasks.

THE EMPIRE

The Bulldog Breed

The heart of the nation is still high. The British people have borne every burden imposed upon them with courage an dwith cheerfulness. Business and industry, though sorely pressed by the burdens of taxation, are still reaching out to new fields of enterprise. The confidence of the people in their ultimate triumph is as strong as ever.—London Daily Express.

Britain and Ottawa

Britain already has given more than adequate evidence of her sincerity. At the time of her deepest distress, when she was compelled to abandon her century-old tradition of free trade, she deliberately exempted Empire produce from the scope of her import duties. From that action she could expect nothing but good-will, and good-will she gained in plenty—from all Dominions save the Free State, which derived the greatest benefit. If her action, and the reactions of the older Dominions, are a foretaste of the Commonwealth's decisions at Ottawa, those decisions will be precious and enduring. If the Free State's reaction as illustrated in her fantastic tariff policy, serves as a symbol of her attitude towards the Ottawa Conference, she will be the "wall-flower" of the imperial ball.—Dublin Weekly Irish Times.

Each For All and All For Each

After Lord Beaconsfield, there is one name that stands above all others. Joseph Chamberlain. Because of his work for the Empire, we stand on the threshold of the Ottawa Conference—and because of the movement he founded we have to-day the first practical instalment of his great policy, Imperial Reciprocity. He crystallized that policy in an undyink phrase: "Each for all, and all for each." It is a slogan we should remember when we are apt to become impatient with progress.—Trinidad Guardian.

The Ottawa Conference

The negotiations at Ottawa will necessarily be difficult, and in some cases delicate, but they will be conducted on all sides in the friendliest spirit and with frank recognition of the fact that, while the common good should be teh aim of all, no part of the Empire is in a position to disregard its own material interest, or can be expected to do so.—Cape Argus.

Forest Fires

In view of the immense damage that is wrought every year by bush fires in Australia, the difference of opinion which exists as to their cause is astonishing. Tens of thousands of pounds' worth of property are destroyed, hundreds of people are cast into homeless despair, great suffering and loss of life ensue, yet many talk as if bush fires were occurrences to be included in the legal category of "acts of God" or unpreventable accidents. Careful observers are satisfied that most bush fires are preventable. Is it not time that they were prevented, and that those who cause them, either by act or negligence, were punished? —Melbourne Australasian.

Ottawa and Foreign Trade

As soon as satisfactory arrangements have been made at Ottawa for reorganizing the Empire so as to make the most of its economic capacity in all directions, each foreign nation should be considered on its merits and offered terms for negotiation. If this question of suitably blending our foreign trade relations with our development scheme within the Empire can be settled satisfactorily, so as to give a stimulus both to inter-Imperial trade and to international trade at the same time, the one would react favourably on the other and an important step will have been taken towards the improvement of world economic conditions. But if, on the other hand, Ottawa leads to an all-British economic policy of isolation on narrow, well-contained Imperial lines, ignoring the foreign trade of Great Britain and her Dominions, there will be a grave danger that Ottawa may merely drive one more nail into the coffin of our world economic system.—Major Poison Newman in the Nineteenth Century (London).

OTHER OPINIONS

Europe on the Brink

In an atmosphere of impotence, nervelessness and fatalism Europe is drifting helplessly towards even more stormy waters than threaten already to engulf it. Every day some new evidence of the deterioration of the general situation comes to hand. Not a country, with the temporary exception of our own, hardly one but goes on imposing new restrictions on imports in the desperate hope of somehow keeping the trade balance even. The difficulties at Lausanne are vast, but the consequences of failure would be too grave to contemplate. The temptation is to temporize and drift. The effect of that would be to double all the difficulties when the Conference met again. The whirlpool does not recede. It stays where it is, and a continuance of drift will carry Europe inevitably into it in no long time unless the leaders of Europe have courage and strength to drive the ship against the current.—The Spectator (London).

Cobblestone Farmers

A prominent citizen of Pennsylvania proposes that the State should finance unemployed city workers in the purchase of farms and stock. That kind of aid might be welcome to a genuine "back-to-the-lander" who had been brought up in the country, but how can it benefit the man who has never known of life outside a city? He could not tell a horse crupper from its headstall, he is helpless when he seats himself on a milking-stool at a cow's flank, he has the vaguest ideas or none at all as to the proper feeding and care of swine. You might as well bring a discouraged farmer to the city and expect him to make a success of running a beauty-parlour or a high-class specialty shop.—Boston Transcript.

Grasshoppers Delay Manitoba Train

Inches Deep for Twenty Miles Along Track

Winnipeg.—Grasshoppers by the billion, mile upon mile of the crawling, leaping insects tangled to form a vast brown and green blanket, inches deep, delayed a passenger train in Southwest Manitoba last week.

West of the Deloraine, miles of rail were covered with the grasshoppers. Without a supply of sand to throw on the rails ahead, the train crew shunted over a 20-mile stretch at snail's pace.

Railway officials said trains have crushed to death billions of the pests. In the wheat belt region grasshoppers have infested for weeks. Highways have been covered with hoppers and automobies have killed millions more.

Serious crop damage is considered probable by the Manitoba Department of Agriculture, which has assisted farmers to check the grasshopper plague. Poison bait has been distributed to thousands of farmers and the poison manufacturing stations scattered throughout the Southwest still are working at top speed.

Australian Cricketers To Meet "Eastern Canada" on Holiday

"Third Visit To Ontario"—Don Bradman, Holder of World Batting Record Big Drawing Card

Arriving in Toronto June 28, after a brief stay in British Columbia, Arthur Mailey's Australian Cricket Team is scheduled to play five matches in Ontario. On Wednesday and Thursday, June 29-30, a twelve a side two-day match found the visitors engaged by an "All Toronto" team, and on the holiday a strong "Eastern Canada" team opposed the Aussies in another two-day fixture For both matches the very fine Toronto Cricket Club grounds at Armour Heights furnished the "terra firma." This is the third visit Ontario has received from a touring Australian team, but in view of the coming of Don Bradman, holder of the world's batting records, never before has such tremendous interest and enthusiasm been manifested.

To accommodate the anticipated record attendance for a cricket match in Toronto it was necessary to set up stands which provided seating for over 5000 people. Substantial parking area adjacent to the grounds, without extra charge, special bus service connecting with Yonge Street cars, refreshment marquees and every possible provision toward catering to the large concourse on hand, if only to see the world famed Bradman bat, was included in the preparations for the stellar event.

The most picturesque personality in the brilliant group of Australian cricketers to be seen during the Ontario tour is, of course, Don Bradman. Regarded in American sports talk as the "Babe Ruth of Cricket," his greatest achievement was the amassing of 452 runs, not out, in 450 minutes, two years ago, when he was but 21 years old. Already he has created six world's batting records, a dozen test match records and in the realm of first class cricket he is credited with a score more. The "crowded firmament of cricket" has never before displayed so meteoric a rise in sheer brilliance of batsmanship as this youthful visitor from the Antipodes who as a member of the "goodwill tour" team, hailed as a happy band of ambassadors, is also enjoying his honeymoon on this continent.

The limelight which has been focussed on Bradman has, inevitably, diverted a great deal of deserved attention from the other members of the visiting team. They are a colorful group of players. Victor Richardson, the captain, is the only player to captain his State in both cricket and football. He represented his state against Victoria in baseball. He is a first class lacrosse and tennis player, a runner of no mean ability; in fact, one of Australia's foremost all-round athletes. Richardson was vice-captain during the victorious tour of England in 1930, and both as a sound batsman and brilliant fielder (at "mid off" or "silly point") is incomparable. To summarize the special accomplishments of the remaining members of the team, Kippax is the "stylist of the cricket world" who bats magnificently and bowls quite effectively; McCabe, only 21 years old, is an outstanding "all-rounder" who can score quickly and bowl in deadly fashion. Carter, the wicket-kepeer, is the veteran of the group of players and still an uncanny artist behind the "sticks" as well as an audacious batsman. Fleetwood-Smith and Mailey are, respectively, left hand and right hand bowlers. The former is making, it seems, a name which the latter has already achieved for "googly" bowling. Messrs. Tolhurst, Nutt, Ives, Rofe and Carney are the lesser lights on the team but they have each performed prominently in inter-state cricket.

After the two matches in Toronto, the Australian team journeyed to Guelph for the centenary celebration of the Guelph Cricket Club on July 4th and to St. Catharines, where they play two days on July 5-6. The balance of the tour takes them to Montreal, July 7-9; Ottawa July 11-12; and thereafter to New York, Detroit, Chicago, Winipeg, Regina, Moose Jaw, Saskatoon, Edmonton, Calgary, Vancouver and Victoria.

The tour will be concluded in California, where Santa Barbara, San Francisco and Hollywood stage matches from August 20 to 28. On the R.M.S. Monowai the team embarks at San Francisco on the return trip of 7000 miles to Sydney, Australia.

Young Aviator Commits Suicide

Was Reducing For Ocean Hop —Pills Affect Heart

London, Ont.—A hundred reducing tablets taken in three weeks, to cut his weight for a mystery non-stop flight to England, wrecked the life of Wilbert Clayton Hyatt, youthful mechanical wizard, whose body was brought Sunday afternoon from Windsor to the home of his parents at 307 Ridout Street South.

On the threshold of his 26th year, young Hyatt heard from Dr. L. G. Cargill of this city that the muscles of his heart were dangerously damaged by the drugs he had taken, and in a fit of despondency ended his life in a warehouse at the Windsor branch of his father's Hyatt Roofing Company.

William J. Hyott, president of the company, revealed the cause of his son's despondency as a warning against the use of the reducing pills in question.

All who had knowledge of young Hyatt's plans, including his father, Dr. Cargill and pilot friends, described him as a "mechanical wizard" who took air engineering, pilot and navigator's courses at the United States army base at Mount Clemens, Mich.

The boy figured on being able to lift a load for a 4,000-mile non-stop flight on a runway only a block long, while he had also special braking facilities which he said assured safe landing in a very small field. He had charted his route Harbor Grace, Newfoundland, and the North Atlantic course, and, aimed for Old London, with the possibility of a round-the-world attempt as he had studied conditions over the Pacific as well.

He studied night and day, and from the fruits of this knowledge secretly built in Windsor a small type high-powered plane, even the motor of which he designed and built. The motor had been tested with astonishing success, they said, and last week Hyatt purchased a special type propeller. The plane, a low-wing monoplane, was ready for the air, and incorporated in it were the youth's feature invention, a mean of changing the position of the wings from the pilot's cockpit in flight, and through which he would, he believed, be able to step up his speed on a trans-oceanic flight from 250 to 300 miles an hour.

His father described the plane as the most beautiful piece of machinery he had ever seen.

"His mind teemed with ideas," said W. R. Stehenson, the elder Hyatt's secretary. "I have seen him work continuously night and day for three days on the plane, stopping only for meals."

Catholic Pilgrims Stoned In Ireland

Women Thrown Down, Clothing Torn in Melee at Station Platform

Belfast, Northern Ireland.—Catholic pilgrims on their way to and from the Eucharistic Congress at Dublin were stoned Sunday in various parts of Northern Ireland in an outburst of apparently anti-Catholic attacks which caused many injuries.

Feeling flared into riotous conditions in four districts as pilgrims were departing for the congress, and later seven of nine trains filled with pilgrims returning from Dublin were stoned between Portadown and Belfast.

From both sides of the track came the attack, smashing windows of the cars and severely cutting several passengers.

Clashes occurred at Belfast, Ballymena, Larne and Coleraine. Scores were injured, a few seriously, before the pilgrims started their excursions.

The Bishop of Down and Connor sent a telegram to Sir Dawson Bates, Northern Ireland's Minister for Home Affairs, demanding protection for the pilgrims on their return journey.

The worst outburst occurred at Ballymena, where a mob was on hand as hundreds of pilgrims gathered at the railway station to board their trains.

CLASH AT LARNE.

At Larne a clash occurred as the pilgrims were about to board a steamer for Dublin. The windows of the buses which had brought them were smashed, and several were injured, but none seriously.

The Belfast and Coleraine disturbances were comparatively minor. In the capital, stones were thrown at trams conveying pilgrims to the Great Northern Station where they were to entrain for Dublin. The police made a baton charge and two policemen were injured. Omnibus windows were broken in Coleraine in a similar display.

The port holes of the excursion steamers at Larne also were broken by stones, some of which struck several men among the pilgrims. Stones also crashed through the windows of St. Narcissus.

At Donemana, in Tyrone, the papal flags and colors of the Eucharistic Congress which were being displayed by Roman Catholic citizens, were hauled down and burned. A large parade of Orangemen was followed by firing of revolver shots and stone throwing. Police reinforcements were called to restore order.

How to play Bridge

AUCTION and CONTRACT

by Wynne Ferguson

Author of "PRACTICAL AUCTION BRIDGE"

ARTICLE No. 29

The "two-suiter" is a hand that contains two suits of at least five cards each. It is the stongest hand that can be held if played at the best suit of the combined hands. Such a hand is considered, on the average, one trick better than the usual suit bid, and at least two tricks better than a no trump bid. This fact shows the importance of the proper bidding of such hands in order to arrive at the best suit of the combined hands. As dealer, or before partner has bid, if your hand is a "two-suiter," try to bid both suits, provided of course they are sufficiently strong to warrant an original or forced bid. As a general rule, bid the higher valued suit first, provided it contains sufficient strength to warrant the bid. If not, bid the lower valued suit, and show the higher valued suit on second or subsequent round. In the same way, always prefer, if possible, the major suit to the minor.

If partner has bid no trump, and you hold a "two-suiter," always bid both suits, if you have the opportunity, irrespective of values held. If partner has bid a suit, and you hold a "two-suiter," bid both suits, unless holding at least one trick better than average support for partner's bid. If, after bidding both suits, partner persists in rebidding his hand, either at no trump or a third or possibly a fourth suit, let him have the bid. You have informed him of the character of your hand, and it is for him to decide. The only exception to this rule is a "two-suiter" so strong that you have a game in one of the suits, irrespective of partner's hand. If partner supports one of your suits, it is not advisable to bid the other suit unless such suit is a major suit and the first suit bid is a minor suit.

If, as dealer or second hand, you have bid a no trump and your partner shows two suits, always support one of them if possible. Do not rebid no trump unless you have a double stopper in the other two suits, and less than normal support in the suit bid. Remember that a "two-suiter" is the strongest suit hand that can be held at Auction or Contract, if played at the best bid of the combined hands, and it is your duty to figure out this bid, if in any way possible.

The following hand is a good example of what happens to the player who doesn't follow the rules just given for a "two-suiter." Z, the dealer, held:

Hearts—K, Q, 9, 7, 6
Clubs—10, 9, 8
Diamonds—A, Q, 7
Spades—J, 4

Auction Bidding

Z dealt and properly bid one heart. Second hand passed and the dealer's partner bid one spade. Fourth hand passed and the dealer properly bid one no trump. Second hand passed and the dealer's partner bid two clubs. Fourth hand passed and the dealer incorrectly bid two no trump. With three clubs and such a big outside hand, the dealer should have allowed his partner to play the hand at clubs. As it was, he made only two no trump, while his partner could have made five clubs. His hand was as follows:

Hearts—8, 4
Clubs—A, K, 7, 6, 2
Diamonds—9
Spades—A, K, 9, 7, 3

Contract Bidding

One heart, pass, two spades (a forcing bid), pass. Second round—two no trump, pass, three clubs, pass. Z is now in a position to realize that Y wants to try for game in one of his suits and should now bid four clubs to show a decided preference over spades. Y should now bid five clubs and he will score game.

When your partner has bid two suits, you can assist his bid with a much weaker hand than with the usual suit bid. Z held the following hand:

Hearts—Q, 7, 6, 2
Clubs—10, 9, 7, 4
Diamonds—6
Spades—Q, 4, 3, 2

His partner had bid both hearts and spades and his opponents had overbid with four diamonds. Z failed to realize the great strength of his hand and passed. If he had bid four hearts either at Auction or Contract, his partner could easily have scored game and rubber. Be on the lookout for "two-suiters" and try to realize their unusual possibilities.

Problem

Hearts—Q
Clubs—none
Diamonds—6, 2
Spades—A, Q, 10, 4

Hearts—7
Clubs—8
Diamonds—9, 8
Spades—J, 9, 3

Y / A B / Z

Hearts—J, 10
Clubs—2
Diamonds—A, Q, 4
Spades—K

Hearts—6, 4, 3
Clubs—A
Diamonds—K, J, 7
Spades—none

Spades are trumps and Z has the lead. How can Y Z win six of the seven tricks against any defence?

Solution: This problem is an excellent illustration of the "grand coup:" that is, the trumping of a winning trick in order to shorten one's trump holding. Z should lead the ace of clubs and trump Y's hand with the four of spades. Y should now lead the ace of spades and follow with the six of diamonds. If B wins the trick with the ace, he must lead back either a diamond or a heart. In the former case, Z should win with the jack and lead the king. A must either trump or discard. If the former, Y should overtrump and should then win the balance of the tricks. If A discards, Y should discard the queen of hearts and then must win the last two tricks.

At trick four, if B leads a heart, Y should win and lead the diamond so that Y Z get the same play as before. At trick three, if B refuses to win the first diamond trick, Z should win the trick and lead the heart, which Y should win and return the diamond. No matter what B now does after winning the trick, Y Z win the balance of the tricks. It is a tricky little problem but interesting and instructive.

Berliners Like Boating

Citizens of Berlin enjoy all kinds of sport, but especially every variety of aquatic sport, because 6 per cent. of the total area of the greater city is water. As soon as the warm days come, everybody who can possibly do so spends his week-ends on or at a river or one of the sixty lakes that surround the German capital. Steamboat trips on the Spree and the Dahme to the lakes around the great Mueggelsee in the east, and on the Havel to the lakes in the Potsdam district in the west are especially popular.

About 6,000 Berliners own canoes, 2,000 have motorboats, 17,000 own rowboats, and 6,500 have sailboats. The oarsmen have 279 clubs; the swimmers, 103; the yachtsmen, 55; the motorboat owners, 5; and there are forty organizations of canoeists.

The oarsmen and paddlers generally tent on the shore at places designated by the forestry authorities. Permission to erect a tent costs about 25 cents for members of organizations and about 50 cents for others. Owners of yachts and motorboats generally sleep on them.

Most of the yachtsmen are found on the lakes of the Havel in the west and on the Mueggelsee, Seddinsee and other lakes to the east. A prominent figure to be seen on Sundays on the Havel is Professor Albert Einstein. He is an ardent yachtsman and has a week-end house in Caputh near Potsdam.

There are twenty-five municipal baths, the most important of which are on the Wannsee and Mueggelsee. The Wannsee baths extend for miles along the beach between Berlin and Potsdam.

Average German Train Shows Speed Gain

A study of the average speed obtained by the trains on main lines of the German railways indicates that considerable improvement has been made in recent years in the average speed attained by all trains, but that the express trains as a whole travel but little faster than they did during the year 1914.

It would appear, therefore, that the German Railway Company looks to the development of motor-driven rail cars for further advances in increasing the speed of its express trains. It also expects to reduce operating costs by the use of motor-driven cars on feeder lines and, to a less extent, on main lines.—United States Commerce Reports.

Woman's Susceptibility To "White Man's Plague"

Twice as many women as men die of tuberculosis between the ages of fifteen and twenty-four.

Why? For the first time a scientific answer is available to this question.

A report of an investigation made public by the National Tuberculosis Association gives the "jazz age" a clean bill of health, and designates early motherhood as the most important contributing factor.

The study was made in one of the largest industrial cities of the country under the direction of Miss Jessamine S. Whitney, statistician of the association. To quote a press release sent out under its auspices:

"The life histories of all girls between the ages of fifteen and twenty-four, who had fallen victims to the disease during a single year, were investigated, Miss Whitney explained. The home of each girl was visited as soon as possible after tuberculosis had claimed her life, and in a personal interview with parents or near relatives, all possible information about her habits of living prior to the development of the disease was secured.

"'The result,' says Miss Whitney, 'indicates that motherhood at an early age during the period when physical development constitutes a more or less consistent strain upon strength and general health is probably the most important factor in this phenomenon.

"'Many people have presumed to explain off-hand the reasons why the group of young women between the ages of fifteen and twenty-four continues to show the highest death-rate from tuberculosis in the whole span of life for either sex.

"'Some ranted about short skirts and scanty clothing. Others issued a blast against dieting.

"'Cigarette-smoking received its share of blame. A few laid it to the fact that the war opened the doors of industry to women. And nearly all took occasion to point a finger at high-school and college students, and to raise an eyebrow at all extra-curricular activities, including late hours. It was pure speculation'."

The investigators, to their surprise, found that they had to discard most of the reasons usually given for the high death-rate in this group.

The industrialization of women, mentioned most frequently, was proved out of the picture, because 35 per cent. of the group never had been employed outside of their homes, and 20 per cent. had been employed less than a year.

Likewise it was discovered that the length of the working day and week, early employment, long distances to be traveled to work or school, and low wages, seemed to be negligible factors as far as this group was concerned.

To quote from the interesting report of Miss Whitney again:

"Dieting as a cause for tuberculosis was given a solar-plexus blow by our data. The usual remark was that the girl had dieted in streaks for six months or so and then forgot it, or that she dieted about a week, forgot it for a time, and then started again.

"The study of clothing habits showed that, if anything, the girls who contracted tuberculosis had worn more adequate clothing than the perfectly healthy university students used as a control group. The sick girls, however, quite obviously had too little rest."

Miss Whitney sounds this important warning as she proceeds:

"Another important factor was found to be actual contact, without taking proper preventive measures, with another person who had tuberculosis. More than half the girls who died showed such a history.

But if motherhood were excepted from the account, the mortality rate among young women between these ages would compare more favorably with that among young men. Thirty-five per cent. of the cases gave a history of one or more children. These children were born, in 70 per cent. of the cases, before the girl was twenty years old. The onset of tuberculosis was usually closely associated with childbirth.

"I believe the results are in no way to be considered an indictment of early matrimony, but rather that the young mother does not take the proper measures to protect her health. This factor, together with the high proportion of cases having lived with consumptives, seems to point to the direction in which we should go to stop this unnecessary loss of life."

What New York Is Wearing

BY ANNEBELLE WORTHINGTON

Illustrated Dressmaking Lesson Furnished With Every Pattern

Lovely for spring wear is the jacket dress.

And here are some of the "fors" concerning this smart bolero model.

Note it features the new built-up skirt so youthfully chic. The cross-closure bodice of the dress is very slimming. The dropped shoulders form brief sleeves. The dress is just as attractive as can be when you take off the jacket.

In a navy blue silk crepe, either in a rough or flat finish, this model is just perfect. Blue and printed crepe lends a gay note of contrast.

Style No. 2715 is designed for sizes 16, 18 years, 36, 38, 40 and 42 inches bust. Size 36 requires 3¼ yards of 39-inch material with ⅞ yard of 39-inch contrasting.

HOW TO ORDER PATTERNS.

Write your name and address plainly, giving number and size of such patterns as you want. Enclose 20c in stamps or coin (coin preferred; wrap it carefully) for each number, and address your order to Wilson Pattern Service, 73 West Adelaide St., Toronto.

Treasure

Out of life I would keep
Some things to love dearly,
Hours to be still,
To see far, and think clearly;
A spot for a dream
Where a hilltop would lift me,
And the Presence of God
Would winnow and sift me.

After long years of work,
And this world's busy stirring,
I should like time to rest,
With all memories blurring;
To hold my hands still,
Lest they reach out, and bind me
To the small things of earth
I am leaving behind me.

Yet a farmer I am,
And when all is over,
I know I shall take with me
Dogwood and clover,
Ripe wheat in a sheaf,
And young corn's first greening;
How else could my Heaven
Have heavenly meaning?
—By G., in the Southern Agriculturist.

Iodine for Storage Battery

Iodine, the same chemical element that is used as an antiseptic for cuts, is now being used in a storage battery of new type invented by Francois Boissier and announced to the French Academy of Sciences, says Science Service. The battery looks like an ordinary dry cell, with a rod electrode of carbon in the centre surrounded by an absorbent material saturated with zinc iodide, contained in an electrode shell of metallic zinc. When the battery is charged the zinc iodide breaks down into metallic zinc that is deposited on the zinc sheeting and oxide that accumulates on the carbon electrode and in the absorbent material, which may be carbon powder. The zinc iodide is re-formed during the discharge of electricity. M. Boissier asserts that the iodine storage battery is superior to the conventional storage batteries of the lead or nickel-iron varieties. The plates do not disintegrate, there is no acid or caustic liquid to spill no dangerous gases or vapors are given off and continual maintenance is not necessary.

Summer Ills

"Baby's Own Tablets are wonderful for summer complaint", writes Mrs. Laura Wheeler, Toronto, Ont. "Whenever my children get cross and peevish and refuse to eat, I give them the tablets". Equally effective for teething, colic, simple fever. Easy to take as candy—and absolutely safe. 25c a package. 229

Flying Sparks

Between sense and nonsense the latter is the best seller. Let's ride back to business on a buy-cycle. To keep a romance from blooming, nip it in the bud. It is dangerous to lose the habit of making friends. You cannot build a reputation on the things you are going to do. When your foot's asleep let the sleeping dogs lie. Don't question your wife's judgment—look who she married. If a man isn't honest there's no use bothering with him. True religion is not in services so much as in service. How polite and obliging people are when work is slack. Money may, but it never gives itself away. No man has the nerve to tell a woman the things her mirror tells her. A small man is easily satisfied with himself. Difficulties strengthen the mind, exactly as labor does the body. A criminal is a person who breaks the wrong laws.

Push

A man was lecturing to a village audience on "The Art of Getting On."

He lectured hard for about an hour, and concluded: "The successful man is the one who strives persistently. His motto is, 'Push and keep pushing'; by that means alone does he reach his goal."

A small man in the audience laughed loudly.

The lecturer held up his hand.

"You, too, my friend, will have to push—" he began.

"So will you," interrupted the small man. "There's half-a-dozen youngsters been pinching the petrol out of your motor to light a bonfire, and there's no petrol in the village."

The Wife—"Do you think I look all right in my new gown, dear?"

The Husband—"Hm! Yes, but I would suggest that if possible you get in it a little further."

We have often pointed out that there is no such thing as a painless tax and agree with the sage who declares that the only honest creature who is taxed and doesn't mind it is the dog.

Courtship Under Difficulties

Consider the mail pilot's sweetheart,
She watches until he is a mere speck,
Then saunters off home with the knowledge
That he is her pain in the neck.

Counsel (examining prejudiced witness)—"I suggest that Mrs. Gibbons is anathema to you."

Witness—"Then you suggest wrong. It's only my friends that I calls by their Chrsitian names."

A husband who is in the habit of coming late at night with elaborate excuses says the best present to give a doubting wife is a copy of "Believe It Or Not."

Hen—"You've been looking a bit shoddy of late, old man. Haven't you spent any money for new clothes lately?"

Peck—"Oh, haven't I? You should have seen her last Sunday."

The girl who used to marry a man to reform him now has a daughter who figures that two can go to the devil as cheaply as one.

Jarvis—"And how is your wife?"

Pervis—Oh, her head is troubling her a lot."

Jarvis—"That's bad. Chronic headaches, eh?"

Pervis—No; she wants a new hat."

Henderson — "Did you get my cheque?"

Pennington — "Yes, twice. Once from you and once from the bank."

Bachelor—A man who, when he accomplishes something, gets all the credit.

Prosecuting Attorney — "Your Honor, your bull pup has chawed up the Bible."

The Judge (grumbling)—"Make the witness kiss the dog. We can't adjourn court to get a new Bible."

After all, "to love 'em and leave 'em is better than to "love them and deceive them."

Picnics Galore, at Peel Park

Peel Park, Streetsville, known as the prettiest picnic grounds in all Canada, is getting well advertised by the numerous picnics that are being held here. Mr. Dawson is giving people what they want in this line and they all go away well satisfied with the service, and promise they will come again. Mr. Dawson is doing a lot to advertise Streetsville and should have the hearty co operation of our citizens. Streetsville people are always welcome at the Park, and they should help to keep the place clean and not leave papers and other articles lying around. You will find Mr. Dawson very agreeable and obliging if you go and interview him.

Peel Park is becoming quite an attraction for city people who want to take a drive out into the country on Sunday and spend a few hours in a nice shady place by the river. About 100 cars were parked there last Sunday. The people are not noisy, either.

ISLINGTON

Islington is proud to have as a citizen Mr. Henry J. Moore a noted authority on horticulture and the founder of the International Peace Garden. Mr. Moore has recently spent several weeks in the West making final plans for the dedication ceremony on July 16th. The large acreage of this fine site is on the Manitoba—United States boundary.

The Rev. Canon Greene celebrates his 84th birthday and also the 62nd anniversary of his induction as a clergyman, by taking part in the service last Sunday morning in St. George's Church here. Canon Greene, by all classes and creeds is looked on as one of the saints of the Anglican Church.

The Islington Presbyterian Church held a delightful lawn social on the Church grounds on Friday evening, under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid. The programme was contributed by Howard Park Orchestra, Mr. Harold Pattison, baritone and Miss Ruth Springford, elocutionist, all of Toronto. The affair was "uneek" in that no admission fee was charged. Proceeds from booths and tea-room amounted to nearly fifty dollars. Mr. Graham Jamieson, student-in-charge acted as chairman.

On Saturday the Etobicoke Horticultural Society held its peony, iris and rose show in the school gymnasium, and proved to be one of the finest displays in the society's history. BUDDHISM'S RECRUIT

Former British M.P. and Suspected Spy Becomes Buddhist Priest In China.

Because he believes that "Christianity is bankrupt," Ignatius Trebitsch Lincoln, who gained wide notoriety during the war as a suspected international spy, has entered a monastery at Paohanshan as a Chinese Buddhist monk and started a crusade for Buddhist missionary work in the United States and Europe. Lincoln was at one time a member of the British House of Commons.

Lincoln, who has taken the name of Chao Kung, formally entered the priesthood by having twelve wound scars, symbolical of the Buddhist wheel of life, burned into his scalp with tiny wafers of incense and charcoal. Preparations for his ordination in the monastery included kneeling on a stone floor for days.

"The imperative need of Chinese Buddhism is to send missionaries to the United States and Europe to spread the doctrines of Buddha," said Lincoln. "The self-abnegation of Buddhism is the only antidote against the grasping greed and gross materialism of Western countries.

"I was a Christian at one time but I have found a consolation in Buddhism that Christianity could never afford me."

A FEW INTERESTING FACTS.

Booklet Shows That Torontonians Are Heavy Drinkers.

The fact that the drinking water is tested hourly in Toronto by the Department of Public Health, and is found to be uniformly pure and potable, is among the interesting facts in the Toronto Bureau of Municipal Research booklet, "Toronto at a Glance," which, among other things, states that Toronto's annual consumption of water is 28,317,000,000 imperial gallons.

The marked increase in water transportation that entered the harbor of the Queen City is indicative of an increasing prosperity to come from the new harbor, Welland Canal, and the great number of new industries located on harbor lands.

Of the three bells in the City Hall tower that strike the quarter, half and hours, the hour bell weighs 11,648 pounds, and the other two 2,339 and 1,904 respectively. Total cost of the City Hall, clock and bells, did not exceed $2,500,000.

THE MOUNTIES' SLOGAN.

The world famous tradition that the Mounties always "get their man," was an invention of American moving picture producers, Col. Courtlandt Starnes, former head of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, admits. "We got them if we could," Col. Starnes said, but added that the personnel of the Mounties now was equal to that of its earlier days when it earned international fame for its exploits.

Should Dry Up the Source.

The New York police dumped a boatload of confiscated revolvers in the ocean. They had been taken from criminals during the year. And there will have to be regular excursions of a kind until the promiscuous sale of lethal weapons is stopped.—Hamilton Spectator.

IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE

The Aztec Mystery

A Thrilling Story of the Old West

BY MURRAY LEINSTER

SYNOPSIS.

Sonny Holman, believing he has been cheated out of the Aztec Mine, holds up the mine payrolls. Janet Laurier offers a reward for Holman's capture. She is kidnapped by Garcia's gang of cutthroats, but Sonny rescues her. News comes of a depredation by cattle rustlers and Sonny rides in pursuit. Janet and two men try to capture him but he escapes and rounds up most of the missing cattle.

CHAPTER XV.

Sonny's horse was barely going faster than a walk, and Sonny himself was nodding in the saddle when he reached the Circle Bar. He rode in and dismounted by the corral. He unsaddled and let the worn out animal walk drearily into the enclosure. Then, with eyes half closed from sleepiness, he made for the ranchhouse with the heavy saddle under his arm.

A figure stepped out of the house as he approached, uttered an exclamation, and stood irresolute. Sonny dropped the saddle and lifted his hat.

"How-do, ma'am," he said politely. "It's gettin' to be a kinda trite sayin' that this here is a small world, ain't it?"

"I thought a cliff fell on you," she managed to say, her voice barely more than a whisper. "I saw it fall!"

"No, ma'am," said Sonny wearily. "It missed me by a little bit. Ought I apologize for not waitin' for it to light on me, ma'am?"

She hesitated, her hand to her throat. "I'd like to say that I told my guards not to kill you. I told them to shoot your horse, to capture you."

"Am I expected to thank you for that, ma'am?" asked Sonny drearily. "I owned Gunpowder a good long while, ma'am, an' he was right close t me. I'd ha' rather seen a lot o' humans killed than him."

She hesitated again, there in the gray light of early morning. "I'm sorry!" she cried in distress.

"Your sympathy, ma'am, helps a lot." Sonny stooped for the saddle once more. "This here saddle belongs to one of your men. He can get it from Thompson whenever he likes."

She paused. Then she said suddenly. "Don't go in! Please don't go in! A messenger just came in from Mr. Tilford. He had proof that you were involved with Garcia in the rustling raid of last night. Mr. Thompson has that proof now."

Sonny smiled grimly. "What kinda evidence, ma'am?"

"A letter from Garcia to you. It was given to one of Garcia's men to deliver to you. Instead, he deserted and carried it to Mr. Tilford, and Mr. Tilford has sent it out here to discredit you with the people who have protected you before. He asked that you be sent in to jail, but they'll lynch you!"

"That, ma'am," drawled Sonny, "ought to be right convenient for you."

"No," she said anxiously. "I don't want you to die. You're an outlaw and a thief and you've looted the Aztec when it's the only thing that can save my—" She stopped. "But you did bring me back safe when Garcia would have harmed me, even though you'd planned my kidnapping with him. I only want you to go far away, and never come back. Now you'll have to go. All these men will hate you."

"Ma'am," drawled Sonny, "folks have hated me for a good long time. Miss Janet Laurier for one. An' somehow I've managed to bear up under it."

"I'm trying to save your life," she cried anxiously.

"An' ma'am, beforehand yuh tried to set every Mexican an' every low-down white man in the county gunnin' for me, tryin' t' shoot me in the back. Excuse me, ma'am."

He went by her and into the house. Thompson, worn out by a night of riding, was gulping down black coffee in company with half a dozen other owners of ranches in the alley. They looked up and stared as Sonny entered the room.

"Howdy, folks," said Sonny gently. "I hear there's talk o' me bein' mixed up in this here rustlin' affair."

An old-timer sat down his coffee and dropped his hand carelessly to his hip. Hostile and suspicious eyes regarded Sonny. Jamison of the Star Wheel grunted uncompromisingly. "There's talk," he admitted grimly. "What yuh got t' say?"

"Jus' this," said Sonny, drawling, "that you-all can go plumb to hell! An' if there's anybody wants t' shoot it out with me, why, I'm right here, ready an' willin' to oblige yuh."

He looked grimly about him.

"Nobody willin', eh?" he drawled, though his voice had an edge to it that told of nerves close to the breaking point. "Thompson, I'm goin' out o' here an' take one o' your animals. Gunpowder got shot t'day. Here's pay for it." He tore a roll of bills from his pocket and flung them on the table.

"Hold on, Sonny," began Thompson.

"I ain't holdin' on," said Sonny harshly. "I'm an outlaw, I am. I'm a holdup man, an' I admit it. I'm kinda credited with bein' a ore thief an' denyin' it ain't done no special good. An' now yuh believin' me a rustler too— Ain't there anybody wants t' shoot it out with me?"

"Easy!" began Thompson.

"You all can go plumb to hell like I tol' yuh at first," repeated Sonny harshly. "An' when yuh come back, yuh might look up the end of this here valley. Yuh'll find aroun' a hundred an' fifty of that herd Garcia run off yesterday. Backtrail 'em an' yuh'll find most of the rest, frettin' some t' get home. I stampeded 'em las' night in the middle of that storm. Got 'em headed right and drove 'em home, Garcia's hombres thinkin' me a hole posse of you fellers." He paused, blinking a little. "I'm goin' out an' take one o' your hosses, Thompson. There's the cash for it, so's yuh can't say I'm a hoss thief, too."

He swung on his heel and went out. Those left in the ranchhouse stared at each other. Two shots sounded suddenly outside, and then the galloping of a horse's hoofs. Then more shots, fired after the retreating figure.

A man came running toward the steps. He stumbled on the porch and fell headlong, then scrambled up and ran into the alert bunch of ranchmen who were moving swiftly to take part in the fracas.

"F-feller just shot 'my hat off,' raged the cowpuncher, an' rid off with my hoss! Say, there's near two hundred head of that missin' herd grazin' up at the end of the valley, an' more tricklin' out o' the hills! I'm goin' t' git me an animile an' catch that feller!"

"That," said Thompson dryly, "that was Sonny Holman, and he just bought the horse you were riding. I'm going to take a look at those cattle. Ed was just telling us about them." He paused. "And when we get back, I—um—I think we'll take another good look at that letter Tilford sent out to us. Come on and get your horses." He made his way toward the corral, the others following.

By the time they were inspecting the weary cattle, Sonny was deep into the hills, worn out and curiously heart sick. It was bad enough to have lost Gunpowder. But to lose Gunpowder at Janet's express order for his shooting, when Sonny had been riding madly to make sure of Janet's own safety—that hurt, somehow.

He drove his newly acquired mount without mercy. By the time the direct rays of the sun had done more than guild the mountain tops, he had climbed to the point of vantage from which he had surveyed the hills the morning before. By the time the sunlight had come halfway down to the valley floor, Sonny, a figure of bronze in the dawn rays, was riding drearily through ways and paths that he alone knew, to a hiding place no one else had even entered. He was able to see his horse for the first time, then, and curled his lip at the sight of it. By comparison with the black stallion it was no horse at all.

He came at last to a small canyon and went up its centre, looking with weary eyes for traces of other human beings having been about. He turned to avoid a huge rock slide and seemed forced to pass close to one of the precipitous walls. And abruptly he vanished. The canyon was left empty.

A draggled Mexican, far up on the cliff tops, swore venomously to himself and limped away. He was dismounted. During the night, in wild flight from Sonny Holman, his horse had thown him and he had got hopelessly separated from his companions. And naturally, since he thought with the others of the gang that he had been chased by a posse, he had hidden at sight of a rider in these hills. Recognition of the rider as Sonny, a close watching of his route, and a careful note of the point at which he disappeared—these things followed naturally. And the Mexican was making now for a rendezvous Garcia's followers sometimes used, in confidence that his accidentally acquired information, feeding Garcia's hatred of Sonny, would relieve him of Garcia's rage at his cowardice.

That was on Sunday morning, the raid having taken place on Saturday night. On Tuesday morning, Tilford came face to face with a placard that was a duplicate of others posted throughout the county:

ANNOUNCEMENT TO VOTERS!

The Gila County Cattlemen's Association announces that it supports Mr. John Doe for sheriff of Gila County, and invites its friends to consider his qualifications for the office.

His courage is unquestioned. His ability is undoubted, and at least one letter in the possession of this Association making accusations against his character has been proved to be the work of a political rival.

A good man! Vote for him!

Von Hindenburg's Salary About $6,000 a Year

Berlin — President von Hinden burg's net salary is less than one-twelfth of that drawn by the executives of the two largest republics, the United States and France, and little more than one-third paid by one of the smallest, Finland, to its chief executive.

Von Hindenburg used to draw $15,000 until one of his own emergency decrees last year, slicing salaries and wages in all branches of civil service, cut it down to $7,500. The President must pay income tax the same as any other citizen. He has a little more than $6,100 left.

In addition, Hindenburg receives $30,000 yearly for expenses of official functions, receptions, dinners and the like, but his private purse does not profit by any surplus in this amount. This sum compares favorably with the $25,000 yearly allowed the President of the United States and the $36,000 granted to the French chief executive, in recent years it has not been used in full.

Von Hindenburg is not wealthy, his private interests being modest. After the war, the City of Hanover gave him a house and garden and the Reich purchased the estate, Neudeck, in West Prussia, which had belonged to von Hindenburg's ancestors and had passed out of the family's possession, and presented it to him.

Compared to other republics of the world, and to other countries comparable in size, the chief executive of Germany, with dictatorial powers over 65,000,000 people is, therefore, rather poorly paid, especially when the heavy responsibilities of his job are considered.

The President of the United States draws $75,000; of France, approximately $72,000; of Finland, $17,500. Argentina pays her chief executive 96,000 pesos and Chile 120,000 pesos.

Money

Reminiscences

Chuckles from "The Journal of Arnold Bennett, 1890-1910"—a thoroughly delightful book:

May 20, 1908: "Mme. B— came. Speaking of her cat she said: 'I give him everything except liberty. I can't give him that because I haven't got it.'"

February 29, 1908: "Pett Ridge (the novelist) came on Wednesday for lunch, and told us a funny story about a page at a ladies' club who made an income by cutting politenesses out of telegrams which he was entrusted with for dispatch."

December 6, 1907, (at a dinner): "Pett Ridge told one good story about a little boy who said there were only 9 Commandments,, and when his father said that at any rate when he went away there had been 10, replied: 'Yes, but mother broke one last week.'"

• • •

Some more:

May 24, 1904: "Mrs. Devereux said she was at a dinner party the other night at which were also W. S. Gilbert (of Gilbert and Sullivan fame) and Douglas Straight (editor of the "Pall Mall Gazette",) Straight was talking about the peculiarities of memory, loss of it, etc. He said he could remember incidents when he was in Naples at the age of 2. But if he was asked where he dined last week he couldn't remember. 'No,' said Gilbert. 'And if you could, probably you wouldn't be able to tell us.'"

• • •

February 8, 1904. "He (Eden Phillpotts, the novelist) said he had, long ago, met an American woman who had aspired to be a poet and had submitted her verse to Longfellow in his old age, and called on him and received his advice. She was then young and very pretty. 'How can I thank you, Mr. Longfellow?' she cried earnestly. 'You can give me a kiss,' said Longfellow. She said to Eden: 'I was so taken aback and startled that I just kissed him and ran straight out of the house."

In the early days of his writing career, Arnold Bennett was editor of a weekly paper for women called "Woman"—which adds piquancy to this entry in his Journal:

January 22, 1897: "In this week's 'Woman' is one of those mistakes that must inevitably occur now and then when a man edits a woman's paper. Under some designs for a layette outfit is the legend: 'Cut to measure patterns supplied.' Nine men out of nine would never observe the blunder."

• • •

And here's an amusing story about Sir Herbert Tree, the actor-manager—in his younger days:

May 20, 1896: "During a rehearsal of 'The Pompadour,' one of Tree's ancient failures at the Haymarket and almost if not quite the first piece in which Mrs. Tree came out as a serious, professional actress, she managed clumsily to give Tree a blow in the face while embracing him. 'Maud, Maud,' he exclaimed, stopping the rehearsal, 'here have I been teaching you to act all this time and the best you can do is to put your thumb in my eye! Begone, Maud! Begone!'. And the rehearsal concluded—so Gardner (manager for Tree) told me today."

In these days of giant Trans-Atlantic liners, it is interesting to learn that the "Great Eastern"— full-rigged ship with auxiliary engines—built over eighty years ago, still holds one record of the ship-building world; no other ship has ever had five funnels and six masts.

"Noah's Ark was 300 cubits long, 50 cubits wide and 30 cubits high; since a cubit is about 18 inches, Noah's Ark must have been a formidable craft 450 to 500 feet long," point out the authors—Eric Hodgins and F. Alexander Magnon—of "Behemoth: The Story of Power."

"No modern marine engineer had been sufficiently courageous to build a competing ship, until, in 1845, Scott Russell and his associates began, upon the banks of the river Thames, the construction of that premature leviathan known as the 'Great Eastern'." add Messrs. Hodgins and Magoun. "She was 692 feet long, 83 feet beam (118 feet over the paddle boxes), 58 feet in depth, and 28 feet in draft. Her displacement was some 28,000 tons. It took four years to build her."

• • •

"The 'Great Eastern' was a famous and picturesque craft, and a triumph of naval architecture. She had a double bottom (its first appearance), and 50 water-tight compartments. Yet, for all these tremendous physical dimensions, she was tragically under-engined for her size. After living an unhappy and frustrated life, she was—in 1887—turned over to the ship-breakers and her twenty anchors scattered to the seven seas.

In the third volume of his historical Memoirs, Prince von Buelow, former German Chancellor, quotes a letter from Lady Norah Bentinck, who was visiting her kinsman Count Bentinck, at Amerongen, Holland, at the time the ex-Kaiser arrived there following his flight from Germany. The first thing the tired Emperor said, as he pulled up before the main entrance, "rubbing his hands together" and with a "deep sigh of relief," was:

"Now you must let me have a cup of real, good, hot, strong English tea."

• • •

"The Count, with a smile, promised to see to it at once," says Lady Norah, "and soon the Emperor got his tea. It was not so much an ordinary English tea as a real Scots high tea. One of the many treasures of Amerongen is a Scots housekeeper, an expert at the preparation of Scots biscuits, scones, shortbread, and all the delicacies which most travellers in the Highlands have enjoyed. The Kaiser was soon acknowledging her exceptional culinary skill."

The recent discussion as to the origin of the name "America," recalls a story about Oscar Wilde, told by Walter Sichel (in "The Sands of Time"). Wilde was at a party when the discussion turned on who really discovered America. An aggressive New Yorker repeated more than once:

"I tell you, sir, that it was the great Columbus who first discovered our great country."

• • •

Wilde softly inquired whether a certain Don Amerigo had not given his name to the Continent just before Columbus discovered it.

Still the New Yorker persisted.

"I see," sighed Wilde. Of course, you must be right, though I fancy I can explain the anomaly. Don Amerigo discovered it first, but it was hushed up."

Explaining the size of the earth as compared to the size of the sun, and how the earth looks from the sun, A. L. De Leeuw states (in "Rambling Through Science") that "from the sun the earth would appear to an observer in the same proportion as an eight-inch bowling ball ball placed at a distance of a mile and a half from a human eye. To see it at all," he adds, "would require a powerful telescope."

• • •

In reproducing the surface features of the world on an eight-inch sphere, Mr. De Leeuw explains, the ratio would be 1,000 miles to an inch. Mt. Whitney, which is nearly three miles high, would be represented by an elevation of only three thousandths of an inch, the thickness of an average grade of writing paper. The Hudson river would be represented by a scratch one thousandth of an inch wide and almost one-hundred-thousandth of an inch at the maximum depth. The Empire State Building, in New York City, is too small to indicate, since its elevation in proper proportion would be only one-fourth of the thickness of tissue paper.

That versatile man of letters, John Drinkwater—he is poet, playwright and biographer — was once asked what he considered his greatest achievement. He replied.

"When I was 13 years old I created a record for my class at the Oxford High School in the long jump, 5 feet 8 inches, which has never been beaten."

Farmers

What if the back be stooped and the skin be dried,
Tending the soil? The sun, the wind and the rain
Leave kindlier marks than avarice and pride
On the face and hands of a man. One's share of pain
Had better be got from simple things like drouth
And yellowing plants, than from the dread disease
Of melancholia that puts upon the mouth
A smile deformed, and lashes the memories
Until they burn. O Farmer, you plough and hoe
And the sweat you drop on the seedlings in the ground,
Bring you a harvest of verdant life to show;
While we who are occupied the seasons round
With thoughts and cunning schemes, whose souls are carved
Even as your back is, have not seen the fruit
Of our cultivation ripen, nor have we served
Earth, nor ourselves—discouraged and destitute.

—Helene Mullins in Scribner's.

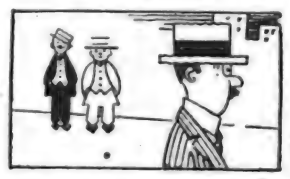
Settled

A middle-aged man, with what appeared to be a load on his mind, visited the Arctic steamer just before it started on the expedition, and seemed greatly interested in what he saw.

"I say," he said to the officer on deck, "I'd like to go with you on this expedition of yours."

"It's awfully cold up there," remarked the officer discouragingly.

"I don't care for that."



"You have very little to eat, and you might starve to death."

"That wouldn't be pleasant," observed the visitor.

"I should say not," returned the officer.

"Then you wouldn't see your wife for three years, and possibly longer. You now you couldn't take her with you."

"Oh!" returned the would-be explorer, after a long pause, "then you can put my name down as a starter. Your last argument captures me."

"How long have you known Smith?"

"Never; I've only known him short."

"Joan, darling, give me a kiss. "No, I've got scruples." "I don't mind—I've had them twice."

Commencement

Many Lone Scouts will be heaving big sighs of relief at this time because of the thought that "School is Out" and long weeks of vacation lie before them. Those examinations are all behind us again for a while, and we congratulate all those Lonies who have successfully graduated or passed into a higher form.

If there are any who did not make out so well this year, we urge them to show the right Scout Spirit of determination, and make up their minds to stick hard at it when school starts in again in the fall.

Remember that your present vic- and tame with those which you will exercised by you if you are going to experience in the future, and the same courage and determination, to an even greater degree, will have to be exercised by yo uif you are going to make the best use of your opportunities and "win out" in the years to come.

"Out of Doors" Scouting

It should always be borne in mind that Scouting is essentially an out of doors game, and in the holidays every opportunity should be seized to practice your Scouting in the fresh air.

Some of you will be lucky enough to attend the Lone Scout Camp, or some district camp, but others, who maybe have to stay at home and help on the farm, will have to arrange their own camping plans.

We recommend that every Lonie who lives in the country should make a camp site of his own, perhaps in the bush on his own farm, where he can spend his leisure moments, sleep out with his dad or brother or some of his chums, and be near at hand to take part in the daily activities that he is called upon to perform at home. At this "Lonie Camp," he can practice his woodcraft, make all the "gadgets" used in a regular camp, and have a real heap of fun.

Your Scoutmaster will be delighted to hear all about your Camp Site, so don't forget to write and tell him all about it.

A Mineral Detective Story

A story of "mineral detective work" as related by Dr. Charles Camsell, Deputy Minister of Mines, in an article for the Professional Institute, will be of interest to Scouts in general, and in particular to those who are working for the "Miner's" and "Prospector's" proficiency badges.

During excavation work for the Welland Canal, a thin seam of gypsum was exposed. It was of high quality, but too small in quantity to be of value. A private company sought assistance from an expert geologist, who, from their fossils, identified the layers of rock above and below the thin seam of gypsum

Applying this information to a geological map of the area which had already been made by the Geological Survey of Canada, it was predicted that if the company would drill to a depth of 90 feet at a place called Willow Grove, south of Hamilton, at least 40 miles distant from the point where the original discovery had been made, they would locate the gypsum bed, and that it would in all probability be much wider.

A drill hole was made, and the prediction was borne out. A seam seven feet thick was located, and as a result of the bit of geological Sherlock Holmes detective work a modern plant was immediately designed for the mining and manufacture of gypsum there. And as Dr. Camsell points out, the wizardry became possible because men had learned to tell the fossils always found in one stratum of rock from those always found in another.

Indian Scouters Have No Differences

Mohammedan, Hindu, Chirstian and Budhist Scoutmasters took a ten-days' training course together in perfect harmony and good will at a camp near Colombo, Ceylon. All joined in the morning and evening prayers of Robert Louis Stevenson.

Another International Scout Camp

An international Boy Scout camp to be known as the Baden-Powell Camp has been established in International Park, Beaumont, California. The camp is sponsored by the Beaumont Rotary Club, and is open at all times to Scouts of any country.

World Plane Model Show For Boys

The glider and airplane model display at the 1933 World Boy Scout Jamboree, to be held in Hungary, will be in charge of Stephen de Horthy, eldest son of the Regent of Hungary, and one of Europe's experts in flying and gliding.

An Opportunity

The Lone Scout Organization provides an opportunity for boys between the ages of 12 and 18 inclusively, who otherwise could not be Boy Scouts, to enjoy all the privileges of Scout Training in their own environment.

Lone Scouting is mainly designed to take care of boys who live on farms, in small villages where there is no Scout Troop, or in rural localities.

Full particulars regarding the activities of this organization, which is a branch of the greatest "Boys' Club" in existence, covering the whole civilized world, may be obtained from The Lone Scout Department, Boy Scouts Association, 330 Bay Street, Toronto 2.

Why not write to-day and find out all about it? You will not be placed under any obligation.—"Lone E."

Sunday School Lesson

July 10. Lesson II—The Call of Moses—Exodus 3: 10-15; 4: 10-12. Golden Text—Certainly I will be with thee.—Exodus 3: 12.

ANALYSIS.

I. A GREAT COMMISSION, vs. 10-12.
II. THE NAME OF GOD, vs. 13-15.
III. A GREAT MAN SHRINKS, 4: 10-12.

INTRODUCTION—The great men of the Bible traced their life-tasks back to the will of God. They were distinctly conscious of a time when they received a call from God to their work. Usually their call came in a vision of God, followed by a commission from him in which the nature of their task was unfolded. So it was with Moses. He was tending his father-in-law's flocks in a lonely part of the wilderness close by the slopes of Mount Sinai or Horeb, as it was sometimes called, v. 12. At the time, he was probably brooding over the oppression of his countrymen in Egypt. "A great sight" (v. 3) attracted his attention. A desert bush or shrub was burning, but was not consumed. Travelers in those parts inform us that "certain small bushes of the desert emit combustible gases which, when they have given off in sufficient quantities, are ignited by the great heat of the eastern sun. The flame plays round the branches of the bush, which, so far from being injured, appears to enjoy its baptism of fire." But to Moses this was obviously no natural phenomenon; to him it was a sheer marvel; God was in the matter. Little wonder, then, that he heard God calling from the bush, "Moses, Moses." His great hour had come. A revelation of God now broke upon him that not only constituted him a leader of his people, but opened a new and glorious epoch for Israel.

I. A GREAT COMMISSION, vs. 10-12.

God had made it plain thta he was sleeplessly watching the evil plight into which his people had fallen. "I am come down to deliver," v. 8. God, however, works through human agencies; Moses was the one chosen for this crisis. "Come now I will send thee," v. 10. This is the paradox of the divine operation in history—it was God who wrought the exodus out of Egypt; it was Moses who carried it out under him. "I am come down to deliver"—"Come now I will send thee"—both of these statements are true. Moses took the measure of the task laid upon him and realized that it was stupendous. He was to appear before the great and mighty Pharaoh with the demand that his people should be set free; he was also to quicken the desire for freedom in a people already somewhat inured to slavery, v. 11. "Who am I that I should go?" he cried. Like most of the great prophets, he shrank from his task. It was not that he was without sympathy for the project nor that he was cowardly. His wavering came from comparing is slender personal resources with the magnitude of the undertaking. He was met with the promise of divine help—"Certainly I will be with thee." Moses was further assured that doubt would pass into certainty, and faith into sight when the Israelites, finally liberated from Egypt, would worship their God on the slopes of Mount Sinai by which he was standing. This mountain was regarded as God's local habitation; hence it was peculiarly sacred.

II. THE NAME OF GOD, vs. 13-15.

Moses raised yet another difficulty when he suggested that the people of Israel might be incredulous of his mission. They would demand his credentials; above all, they would ask regarding the name of the God who had sent him. In that day there were lords many and gods many," and each had its own proper name. How was Israel to know that it was not a false god who had sent Moses? One would expect God to have answered, "My name is Jehovah"; this was the proper name of Israel's God. In place of saying "Jehovah" God answered with an interpretative phrase which, in the Hebrew language, sounded somewhat similar to the name, Jehovah. The significance of God's answer is not realized unless it is translated, "I will be what I will be." Profound depths are disclosed in this phrase. God's self-manifestation is not exhausted in the past: he is the God of the future. The future alone will be able to unfold all that is in the fulness of his being. All this may have been very mysterious to the shepherd, Moses, but God met him on more certain ground when he assured him that he was the same God whom the ancestors of Israel had had to do. He was the God of the past. As he had been with the patriarchs in the past, so he would be with the people of Israel now and ever. These gracious ideas would always be associated with his name, v. 15.

III. A GREAT MAN SHRINKS, 4: 10-12.

One commentator has counted four difficulties raised by Moses in connection with the task assigned him. His shrinking from his God-given commission may be taken as the measure of the seriousness with which he finally assumed the work. The difficulty here raised refers to his lack of persuasive powers. The art of fluent, persuasive speech would be needed with one like Pharaoh! v. 10. God, in reply, reminded Moses that man's faculties all find their source in his sovereign will, v. 11. Not only will he endow Moses with the gift of speech, but he will suggest, as occasion arises, what he should speak. "I will be with thy mouth." God will so inspire Moses that the words of his mou will be the words of God himself.

"I offended George dreadfully."
"Have you made up?"
"Yes, I succeeded in getting him to ask my pardon."

A Day's Wage

Love wore a suit of hodden grey,
And toiled within the fields all day.

Love wielded pick and carried pack
And bent to heavy loads the back.

Though meagre fed and sorely lashed,
The only wage Love ever asked.

A child's wan face to kiss at night,
A woman's smile by candle light.

A Summer Day

When that the misty vapor was agone,
And cleare and faire was the morning,
The dewe also like silver in shining
Upon the leaves, as any baume swete,
Till firy Titan with his persant hete

Had dried up the lusty licour new
Upon the herbs in the grene mede,
And that the floures of many divers hew,
Upon hir stalkes gon for to sprede,
And for to splay out hir leves in brede
Againe the Sunne, gold burned in his sphere,
That doune to hem cast his beames clere.

And by a river forth I gan costay,
Of water clere as birell or cristall,
Till at the last, I found a little way
Toward a parke, enclosed with a wall
In compace rounde, and by a gate small
Who so that would might freely gone
Into this parke, walled with grene stone.

And in I went to heare the birdes song,
Which on the braunches, both in plaine and vale,
So loud sang that all the wood rong,
Like as it should shiver in peeces smale,
And, as methought, that the nightingale
With so great might her voice gan out wrest,
Right as her herte for love would brest.

—Geoffrey Chaucer, "Pooms."

Warbles Dry Up

The cattle in some 60 herds, about 2000, on farms near Guelph, were treated by wetting their backs with a warble killing wash. The warble grubs were killed while still beneath the skin, between March 1st and May 24th. The dead grubs withered up and were ejected through the hole in the skin in less than two weeks. The holes in the skin rapidly healed. The cattle treated were saved much soreness and irritation and it was pleasing to see the way the badly warbled backs cleaned up. This meant a saving to the cattle owners as the period of torment was very much reduced, and the cattle relieved of much unnecessary suffering. A warbled back is a very painful condition. If the cows could talk they would tell us in forceful words, of our neglect to control the warble fly. Either derris powder or pyrethrum powder mixed with soap and water, at the rate of one-half pound in either case, with one gallon of water. This wash is brushed on the back of the animal, over the grubby area. An ordinary dandy brush is best, as the stiff bristles, will uncover the grub hole, and permit the liquid to soak in on top of the offending grub. With the grubs all dead there can be no flies.

A Child's Love

It is a sweet thing to enjoy a child's love. It is so spontaneous, full and free, so outspoken and confiding, so natural and tender that it constantly reminds one of love of Heaven. To enjoy once in one's life the pure gushing of a child's friendship is to taste of a sweetness never to be forgotten. The memories of such an enjoyment linger around one's heart like dreamy soliloquies of a past existence in some abode of purity and beauty. To lose them would be to lose islands from the sea, oasis from the desert. They are types of what friendship should be; symbols of what it will be. They are the flowers of Heaven, sown on earth. They bear the fragrance of the skies. The beauty of God's Kingdom sparkles within them, and the love of our Father's home breathes from their pure young hearts.

French Cross Spanish Border To Find Cheaper Film Shows

Madrid. — Thrifty French, living near the Spanish border, are getting in the habit of crossing the frontier in order to enjoy their motion picture shows economically, according to the newspaper "El Sol" here.

Residents of Hendaye are flocking nightly to the cinemas at Irun to such an extent that the program is made up nearly exclusively of French films. The main reason for this is the price. At Irun, and even in San Sebastian, they can see a good show for 1 franc, while at Hendaye they must pay at least double and often as much as 20 francs.

Suspicious

"A mighty queer man stopped here the other day," stated the landlord of the Petunia tavern. "He didn't have anything to sell to our merchants, he wasn't trying to introduce valuable literary works to the few persons in the community of sufficient culture to appreciate 'em, and he quietly told everybody who inquired that he did not wish to buy land. He sat around here in the office some and read a book, and the rest of the time he strolled about in town and looked at things in a casual sort of way.

"To one gent who asked him if it didn't look right smartly like rain off to the south'rd, he replied that it did. And when another inquired if he hadn't met him some'rs, he answered that it was quite likely, inasmuch as he had been there several times. When he got ready to leave he simply paid his bill and departed on the two o'clock train. Opinions are pretty evenly divided; some of our leading citizens think he was an inspector of some sort, and others believe he was a spy.

Canada's Level Net

What is known scientifically as the precise level net of Canada now covers the Dominion and a maze of of figures is required to represent the elevation above sea level of the various localities indicated. These figures are carefully computed by the Geodetic Survey of Canada, Department of the Interior, and are based on mean sea-level obtained from five tidal station, namely, Yarmouth and Halifax on the Atlantic coast; Father Point on the gulf of St. Lawrence; and Vancouver and Prince Rupert on the Pacific coast. The figures are necessary in the laying out of towns, the building of bridges, engineering and irrigation work, and they also serve as the basis for all other survey measurements and computations.

FOOD PREJUDICES

Many of us are prejudiced against certain foods. We avoid them because we dislike them. Some people secure a considerable amount of pleasure in telling us about the foods they dislike and explaining why they dislike them.

A feeling of dislike for some particular food is frequently the result of an unpleasant introduction to that article of diet. In our minds it is associated with something unpleasant and for that reason we avoid it since we only like things which please us. We would like practically all foods if they were introduced to us in small quantities, just enough to taste, until we have become used to them. We do not acquire a liking for olives by being forced to eat a large number of them the first time. We eat one, or part of one; later we repeat the sampling and then we find that we "like olives."

The idea that some food disagrees is very often the result of that food being associated with the occurrence of some digestive upset. The fact that it had nothing to do with the upset does not banish the dislike as long as the two are associated in the mind. There is no reason why you should not like one food more than another. If one does not want to eat some non-essential food, there is no reason why he should, except that as one of the family, it may be rather a nuisance in planning the meals. It is much more comfortable for everyone if you eat everything.

The person who sits down to the table and enjoys whatever food is prepared; the one who has the right attitude towards food, an attitude which all normal people should have. It is not desirable to be thinking of food in the sense of its relative value as you eat it. The one who prepares the meals is the one to assume responsibility for the required variety of food and the regular appearance of milk, fruits, green vegetables and eggs on the table. The pleasant duty of the family is to consume and enjoy what is placed before them and not to fuss about it.

If you have acquired a prejudice aainst some food, you had better get rid of it. Start by taking a very small amount of it whenever it is prepared. Take it along with something else that you particularly like, and in a short time you will be able to laugh at your old dislike.

From what has been said, it is obvious that the selection of an adequate variety of food rests with the housewife. It is she who is also responsible for its proper preparation, and for serving it in an attractive manner. She should introduce new foods in small quantities along with well liked ones. It is best for her to ignore the food prejudices of the various members of the family, for if they are encouraged, they become the more firmly fixed in their dislikes.

Children Cry FOR FLETCHER'S CASTORIA

Here and There

Premier Gordon S. Harrington, of Nova Scotia, has returned from his trip to Europe by the Empress of Britain.

Growth of all crops in western Canada is now vigorous and well advanced for the time of year, according to the latest weekly survey made by the Canadian Pacific Railway's agricultural department, and crop prospects in the West as a whole are encouraging.

Members of the British party touring the Dominion under the auspices of the British Columbian Government, arrived at Montreal aboard the Duchess of Bedford, travelled across Canada by Canadian Pacific rail and lake steamship, stopped over at Banff and will spend between June 15 and July 2 in British Columbia.

Delta Gamma, one of the most important Greek Letter organizations on the continent, is holding its annual convention this year at the Empress Hotel, Victoria, June 27-July 1. Stopping over at Banff, a Canadian Pacific special will carry delegates to the Pacific Coast from Chicago, while Canadian members from Montreal, Toronto and Edmonton will join the main group at Victoria.

If early promise is fulfilled, the Annapolis Valley should this year produce an even larger yield of apples than in 1931 when the total crop was close to a million and three-quarters barrels, is the opinion of leading fruit men of Kentville, N.S. The bloom this year lasted over ten days and attracted visitors by the thousand from Eastern Canada and the United States.

Miss Constance Regan, Middleburg, Va., established a record for women anglers on the Tobique River, New Brunswick, recently, when she took a 27½ lb. Atlantic silver salmon, the largest ever caught with a fly by a woman on that river. The record salmon taken in those waters by a male angler weighed 33¼ lbs.

Canadian Pacific standard time is standard time the world over. Prior to 1883, every town and city had its own local time, based on the sun, but in that year the suggestion of Sir Sandford Fleming, chief engineer of the Canadian Pacific Railway, that the world should be divided into 24 sections, one for each hour of the day, and that time within each of these areas should be standard, was adopted all over Canada and the United States. In 1884 the plan was also adopted in Europe after a conference held at Washington.

Gilbert Miller, architect, of Youngstown, O., has a grouch against windows and doors in office buildings and summer homes. He found both too narrow to admit a moose head with an antler spread of five feet five inches taken from a monster he shot near St. Jovite last season. "It looks," he wrote to A. O. Seymour, general tourist agent, Canadian Pacific Railway, "as though both the head and myself will end up in the garage." But that is the kind of trophy to be got in the forests of Quebec. Big heads and lots of them. (849)

MASONS AT CHURCH

Last Sunday evening the officers and members of River Park Lodge, No. 356, A.F. & A.M., and visiting Masons, met at the lodge room and marched to St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, over sixty strong, to attend divine service.

They were welcomed to the church by the pastor, Rev. Ross K. Cameron, M.A., who delivered a splendid sermon from a text taken from Amos 7: 7-8. The pulpit was nicely decorated.

Rt. Wor. Bro. (Rev.) Geo. H. Purchase assisted in the service.

A number of singers from Toronto assisted the choir in the service of song, and Miss Gladys Ball favored with two solos.

The church was comfortably filled.

Upon returning to the lodge room a vote of thanks was passed to the minister, the choir, and the floral committee, and the secretary instructed to transmit a copy of the motion.

Two sons, John and James, married sisters, Mary and Sage Rowland, and their children took up farms in Toronto Township.

Members of the clan came from Toronto, Hamilton, Galt and nearby centres to attend the reunion, at which Oscar Main, Hamilton, Clev McDonald, Galt, William Kurtz, Toronto and Edgar Culham, Stayner, were elected the executive to take charge of the next reunion, to be held in Galt. EVERY MAN AN INVENTOR

Well-Known Canadian Expert Tells of Unique Inventions.

Every man at some time or another during his life time is an inventor, is the claim of E. N. Featherstonhaugh, well-known Canadian patent solicitor. But some of them don't know it, he says.

This patent solicitor whose father has been in the business half a century has many curios. One of them is a fly electrocutor invented by an Albertan. It can be used for any insect venturing between two electrically-charged screens attached to wooden frames. The unwary fly goes in. There is a short circuit and another spider has been cheated out of his breakfast.

Mothers need not worry any more about infants who show a tendency to swallow their thumb. A device has been created by a Toronto man to correct this. It has been registered at Ottawa. It is a guard fitting over the thumb and attached to the wrist.

Another inventor hopes to give impetus to aeronautics, by a series of pontoons 1,500 feet in the air anchored to steel towers by cables. These pontoons are wires which will store energy for electrically-driven airplanes.

Another brain-wave may result in bigger and better fish stories. This man has constructed a school of artificial minnows to trap fish. These are nickelled or gilded to reflect a light to the bottom. The fish sleeping peacefully sub-aqua are attracted by the light and dash to the top. Delighted to see such fat little minnows ready for their breakfast, they grab fat tails concealing sharp hooks and Mr. Fish is caught cold.

A machine that can go four ways is the fond hope of another inventor. By means of twisted spring-like rudder attached to the top of the craft, it is hoped to make it go up or down, frontwards or backwards. There is no record yet of any trial flight.

DAVID'S WALL FOUND?

Engineers Repairing Sewers Discover Wall In Jerusalem.

What is believed to be part of the wall of ancient Jerusalem, dating back to 1000 B.C., was discovered by British and Palestinian engineers. While repairing an old Roman sewer inside the old city of Jerusalem they came across a line of huge stones 30 feet underground.

Some time ago it was found necessary to reconstruct the old Roman sewer which passes near the Mosque of Omar and empties into the Valley of Kedron because the dilapidated condition of the sewer endangered the houses above it. In the course of excavations by the sewer repairers many archaelogical discoveries were made, including an old Roman road, jars and coins.

While nearing the end of a 250-foot stretch of sewer to-day the engineers struck firm rock and bit by bit uncovered a wall of stones, each about four feet by two feet. Tunnels cut through the wall allowed the passage of ancient sewers. The Department of Antiquities believes the wall belongs to the Jerusalem of David's time.

After Jerusalem's capture by David the town first became distinguished as a stronghold. Its first wall, built by David and Solomon, inclosed the old part of the town, now the suburb of Zion. Much of it probably was destroyed by Egyptian, Arabian and Philistine tribes in their raids upon the city and by the earthquake in the time of King Uzziah.

TREES FOR PRAIRIES.

Planting Scheme to Cover Whole Treeless Parts of Saskatchewan.

A tree-planting plan on a large scale, which will extend over a period of ten years, has been inaugurated. The scheme, which will embrace the whole treeless part of Saskatchewan is to be started at once, and will entail the planting of over 100 acres of caragana seed on Government nurseries and institutional farms for the purpose of growing seedlings for free distribution among farmers of the province. It is estimated, between 5,000,000 and 8,000,000 seedlings will shortly be ready for distribution, and these will be given out subject to certain conditions necessary to the growth of a good hedge.

The caragana is easy to grow, drouth resisting, and very difficult to kill once properly established. In ten years the seedlings properly planted and cultivated, will grow into an ornamental hedge 12 feet high and 10 feet wide, and eventually to a height of 18 or 20 feet. Besides making an efficient windbreak, which will prevent soil drifting to a great extent and also assist in the cultivation of various fruits, the hedge will act as a moisture retainer. The planting of other varieties of trees such as maple, ash, willow, poplar, and cottonwood, will be carried on as before.

FAMOUS HOME SAVED

Englishman Purchases Byron's Home Presented to Nation.

Lord Byron's famous home at Newstead, in England, has been presented to the city of Nottingham by Sir Julian Cahn. The present owner of Newstead, C. I. Fraser, also handed over to the city the furniture at Newstead Abbey, which originally belonged to the Byron family.

Newstead was steeped in historic associations long before the time of the poet. The abbey, an Augustinian priory, was founded by Henry I. in penance for the murder by Henry's knights of Thomas A. Becket in Canterbury Cathedral.

After the dissolution of the monasteries the despoiled abbey was bought by Sir John Byron from Henry VIII. for $4,000.

Dangerous Relic Found.

A live aerial torpedo, 18 inches long and of German type, believed to have been lying unnoticed since the great war, was recently found in a pile of rubbish in the boiler room of a hotel at Finton, England.

WAS COW MILKED DRY OR BOUGHT THAT WAY?

William Leader, Streetsville, thinks that he has been defrauded. He bought a cow in Milton yesterday and brought her home. The cow wandered into Peel Park and filled up on the succulent grass of the park. The park employes, after allowing the bossy to act as a mowing machine, milked her, then thoughtfully returned her to her owner. Mr. Leader tried to milk the cow, only to give up in despair. He is not sure whether he has a dry cow or whether the park hands did not do right by Nell.

Prayers on Behalf Imperial Conference

Dear Mr. Editor:

May I, as a humble subscriber to your valuable paper, be permitted a small space to bring before our citizens the need of earnest meditation and prayer during these coming days, which will be epochal in the history of our Empire.

We all know that on July 21st there will meet at Ottawa, representatives from the various units of the Empire to consider the economical situation and try to bring about a satisfactory solution, so that we may be lifted out of this chaotic condition to a plane where we shall not again have to speak of economic depression.

The writer believes that each representative will work for the best interests of the Empire and of mankind. We, as their compatriots, have a share in this great adventure, ours is not to sit in council and discuss these complex problems, but we can seek for them, divine guidance. May we not make this a matter of earnest Prayer, not only in our various church services, but individually?

The poet expressed a significant truth when he said, "More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of."

If the conclusions of this economic conference are to mean much to humanity, there must enter in, not only a material prosperity, but a deep spiritual awakening. The Great Father of us all will not fail us, are we willing to have a share in the coming of better days? "The Lord of Hosts is with us, the God of Jacob is our refuge."

UNITED CHURCH Y.P.S. PICNIC

Overflowing with joyous anticipation of a pleasant picnic, over fifty young people gathered in front of the United Church early Monday afternoon. Here transportation was provided by generous members to the ferry docks, Toronto, where we embarked for Centre Island. The ferry boat ride across the bay seemed all too short, as we enjoyed the cool, invigorating breeze from the lake.

On our arrival at the Island, everyone enthusiastically joined in making the picnic a success. Games and softball were played. Sports, running and jumping were well contested. Many took advantage of the amusements afforded by the park, while all enjoyed the time spent in walking and viewing the magnificent scenery of island and lake.

About six p.m., we sat down to an appetizing and excellent lunch, prepared by our faithful lunch committee, consisting of Mrs. McArthur and Misses Edna Falconer, Margaret Cooke and Alma Hewgill.

A fit climax to our most enjoyable picnic was a launch ride to Hanlan's Point and return.

When we parted at the dock, everyone expressed the opinion that we had had a most enjoyable time, and the hope that we would again have a picnic at Centre Island.

TRINITY CHURCH GARDEN PARTY

There was a large attendance at the postponed garden party held Saturday night on the lawn at Trinity church. The weather was rather cool, but the people did not mind that.

Rev. R. J. W. Perry was chairman. A delightful program was rendered, in which the following artists took part: Jamie Reid, well-known Scottish minstrel; Miss Jean Simpson, character contralto; The Silverton Duo; Miss Betty Robertson, and the Alfalfa Boys' Orchestra.

A thriving business was done at the refreshment booth, in ice cream, hot dogs, etc.

It was reported to be one of the best garden parties this church ever held, and the committee are well pleased with the returns.

The grounds were nicely lighted and decorated for the occasion.

SUCCESSFUL STUDENTS!

Among the successful students at the recent pianoforte examinations at the Toronto Conservatory of Music, are Misses Elma Sparling and Muriel Mason in the Introductory Grade, each taking honour standing; Misses Miriam Perry and Mary Switzer, in Elementary grade, with honours also Miss Doris Waite obtaining honours in Primary Grade. These young ladies are pupils of Miss M. Hicks.

Mr. Tom Love has been successful in his examinations at a Toronto Business College and has received his diploma.

Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Cooper, Mrs. Harry Wolfe and daughter, Evelyn, are spending the week end in Windsor and Detroit.

Gordon B. Jackson officiated at the formal opening of the Cooksville Tennis Court on Dominion Day.

We are glad to hear that Mr. John Crozier, of Harris' Corners, is recovering from a severe illness. He has made rapid progress recently under the care of Dr. Hills, of Streetsville.

Harry Gough, trooper, was arrested on a reckless driving charge, when his car skidded and struck a car driven by William Campbell, of Toronto, at Port Credit. Two women in Campbell's car were injured.

The third annual picnic of the Carton-Mariatt families was held at Huttonville Park, on Dominion Day and was attended by 150 members. Officers were elected for the ensuing year, with George Cusick, of Guelph as president.

John Brydon Needham, aged 21, of Brampton, was accidentally killed when he drove his car head-on into a street car on the Lake Shore Highway, New Toronto, Sunday night. He was a lieutenant of the Peel-Dufferin Regiment, which had just broken camp at Long Branch. Interment took place yesterday at Brampton.

ISLINGTON

As mentioned in last week's letter, Islington is specially interested in the opening of the International Peace Garden on July 14th, because the founder of this project, Mr. H. J. Moore, is one of our citizens. Governmental delegations from both the United States and the Dominion will attend the services, as well as prominent organizations from both nations. The Progress Club of Toronto will send a group of 200 members, while the Ontario Florists' and Gardeners' Association, of which Mr. Moore is a prominent member, will send delegates. A cairn, built of boulders collected from both countries, stands on the Dakota-Manitoba boundary, half in each country. This will be unveiled by officials of both nations. To prevent exploitation by gas stations, hot dog stands and other catch-penny concerns, plans are being made for government control of a five-mile zone around the garden. Concessions in this restricted zone will be operated by the board of directors of the Peace Garden, and the profits will go for its up-keep. To make this site at Turtle Mountain, the governments of North Dakota and Manitoba, each donated 1,500 acres.

We are pleased to report that Rev. Canon Greene, who, a few days ago, developed a serious case of pneumonia, in this (Tuesday) morning, much improved.

Mr. J. H. Beamish leaves this week for a two months' visit in the British Isles, Belgium, France, Germany, Switzerland and Italy.

On the Agar farm just north of this village, a firm of contractors are drilling deep wells to supplement the water supply for Etobicoke township. Thus far, success seems assured.

PRESENTATION

A happy event took place on the last day of school at S.S. No. 16, Toronto Township, near Streetsville, when Miss Simmons, retiring teacher, was presented by her pupils, with a slight token of their esteem for her. The address was read by Evelyn Wolfe and the presentation made by Vera Steen.

Miss Simmons made a suitable reply and thanked the pupils for their kindness to her.

The Address

Dear Miss Simmons:

We have learned with regret of your resignation as teacher of school section No. 16, at the close of the present term.

We look back over the years during which we have received instructions from you with sincere pleasure. We recollect your efforts with grateful remembrance. You leave this school without the loss of one worthy qualification which you possessed when you came among us.

May we say that we have been proud of you in your teaching profession and we are none the less proud of you now. In fact, we have felt so kindly toward you that we are grieved at your going and can assure you that all of us who have been entrusted to your care will grow to be better fitted for life's duties, not only in the sphere of knowledge, but true and loyal citizens of our country as well.

Our words are genuine and come from hearts that are sincere, but we would not confine our gratitude to mere words, so with a deep sense of your many thoughtful and kind acts, we present this little token of our mutual and increasing admiration and esteem for yourself, and of our gratitude for your labours in our behalf.

Miss Simmons, please remember when we are far separated from each other and the years will have brought changes, that we consider we are better, as well as wiser, from the instruction we have received from you.

Signed on behalf of the pupils of S.S. No. 16.

The Aztec Mystery

A Thrilling Story of the Old West

BY MURRAY LEINSTER

SYNOPSIS.

Sonny Holman, believing he is the rightful owner of the Aztec, holds up the mine payrolls. Janet Laurier, who holds legal title to the Aztec, believes that Sonny is at the bottom of numerous ore thefts and offers a reward for his capture. Janet is kidnapped by Garcia's gang and Sonny follows and rescues her. Tilford, the Aztec manager, imports mine guards. Two of them kill Jake Hornaby, Sonny's friend. In the absence of the sheriff, Sonny, single-handed, arrests them, then rides out of town. News comes of a cattle raid. Sonny rides after the rustlers and his horse, Gunpowder, is shot by two of Janet's mine guards. He brings back the cattle. Under the name of John Doe he runs for sheriff, opposing the candidacy of Tilford.

CHAPTER XVI.

Tilford stopped and stared at the placard. It had been hastily printed, so much was evident, but it meant more than a political announcement to Tilford.

Hoofs sounded behind him. Thompson, of the Circle Bar, and Jamison, of the Star Wheel, reined up. Tilford nodded nervously. "Hello."

"Hello," said Thompson grimly. "We wanted to talk to you."

"Hell's bells, yes!" grunted Jamison. His grizzled moustache seemed to bristle. "What in blazes," he roared, "d'you mean by trying to pass off a poor fake like that letter you sent out to the Circle Bar?"

"I don't know what you mean," protested Tilford.

"That letter," said Thompson grimly, "was supposed to be from Garcia to Sonny Holman, asking him to help raid my herds." He regarded Tilford steadily. "It's on exactly the same kind of paper the Aztec Mine uses for its letterheads," he explained softly. "It's spelled too well—much better than a greaser like Garcia would spell. The man who wrote it had just heard of the raid. It wasn't written until after I'd phoned in to town and asked for riders."

"I don't get you," said Tilford nervously. "I assure you—"

"Yuh get us, all right," growled Jamison. "Yuh faked that there letter t' set us against Sonny Holman! Us bein' durned fools, yuh came near doin' it. But that there poster yuh readin', favorin' John Doe, that there's the result. An' we' goin' t' put through the stuff at the courthouse now t' make him a reg'lar candidate. Yuh got no more chance o' bein' elected than a snowball in hell."

"I—I've got to be going," said Tilford nervously. He moved away with as much haste as he could, short of outright flight.

He reached the mine enclosure, and a greasy halfbreed Mexican lounging before the office grinned at him. Tilford swallowed suddenly and stopped short. Then he waveringly motioned the Mexican to come with him and led the way into his private office.

"Senor Garcia, 'e says," grinned the half breed, "w'at t' hell you goin' do?"

Tilford gnawed at his finger ends. He was shaking all over. The question was clear enough to him. Garcia wanted to know what he was going to do about the guards who had cut off his ore stealing. How was he going to square himself for having double-crossed Garcia? What inducement would he offer Garcia not to have him shot or knifed at the earliest opportunity?

"Look here," he managed to say nervously, at last. "I'm going to be the next sheriff. I'll split the county with Garcia. Tell him I'll give him a free hand rustling and now and then let him get away with a payroll of the mine and I'll promise not to interfere with anything he chooses to do among the Mexicans."

"Si?" queried the halfbreed. "You let heem tek girls hol' up stores an' tip heem off when men chase heem?"

"Yes" agreed Tilford uneasily. "He won't make it too raw, but we'll work together."

The halfbreed rolled a corn husk cigarette and lighted it, sprawling out familiarly in the office chair. "An' w'at else?" he demanded insolently. "Garcia, 'e don' lak you so much now. You are buyin' your life, hombre. Pay high."

Tilford shuddered. He knew he was buying his life. The system of terrorizing that had made the ore wagon drivers docile aids in Garcia's high-grading scheme had proved its efficacy more than once. More than one man had disappeared very quietly. More than one case of "fever" would have shown traces of arsenic if pains had been taken to look. And especially, more than one man had found bullets plopping unexpectedly out of nowhere and singing unpleasantly close to him.

Tilford had ordered enough of these events to know that his life was not worth much if Garcia chose to have his assassinated. A courageous man, of course, would have taken the chance. But Tilford was hardly a courageous man.

"What else does Garcia want?" he asked dismally. "He can't drive me too far!"

The halfbreed grinned at him and spoke one word. And Tilford licked suddenly dry lips and said weakly: "All right. I'll arrange it. I—I—" He choked suddenly. He could not speak any more.

The halfbreed was laughing when he went out. Meeting Janet on her way to the mine office, he leered anticipatorily at her as she passed.

The horse doctor inspected the fore hoof of a big black stallion and stood up with some pride.

"Now you look at that, ma'am," he said proudly. "There ain't another pheesician in Gila County nor the state neither, could ha' done that as neat as I did. You take one o' these here drenchin', physickin' hoss doctors an' he'd ha' used the iron on this animile an' you'd 'a' had a lamed hawss, good for nothin'. But me, ma'am, in less'n a week I got him as good as new if not better. That there leg, ma'am, is somethin' to be proud of."

Janet, her under lip caught beneath her teeth, nodded absently. "Can he be ridden now?" she asked.

"Well, ma'am," said the vet judiciously, "if it was a ordinary hoss, I'd say no, ma'am. But this here is a speerited animile. Keep him stabled much longer an' he'll get to frettin'. It ain't as if he'd lost a lotta blood. That bullet just about nicked his hoof, an' 'twas the shock that numbed the whole hock more'n anything else that messed him up. Yes, ma'am, I reckon you can ride him. I wouldn't be goin' too far, y' know. But I'd give him enough exercise to keep him gentled."

They were in the stables of the Aztec mine and amid the rustling, thudding noises of stabled mules.

Janet nodded again. "Now," she said abruptly, "you'll be going back to Leftover. And you won't mention why you came here?"

"No, ma'am." The veterinary surgeon drew himself up to his full four feet nine. "I'll just say, ma'am, that I was called in as consultin' pheesician on a obscure case among the mine mules." He preened himself. Then curiosity overcome him. "Ma'am, who-all owns this animile? There ain't many more like him."

"I am taking care of him for a friend," said Janet abruptly. "Mr. Tilford will pay you for your trouble. And thank you."

The horse doctor bowed profoundly and departed, though with an expression in which curiosity unsatisfied still lingered. Janet stroked the big stallion's silky muzzle. "I hate to do it, Gunpowder," she said uncertainly. "but I have to."

Gunpowder nuzzled her shoulder affectionately. Janet herself had supervised his removal from Little Canyon after he had been brought down by a bullet from one of the mine guard's pistols, and he had ridden in state in an ore wagon that had been carefully padded. And for a week Janet had visited him daily, bringing lump sugar and tidbits dear to the heart of a horse.

Janet put her arm about his neck. Somehow she was not very happy. "Don't you see Gunpowder?" she asked uncertainly. "My father is in a terrible position. He hasn't been very nice to me sometimes, Gunpowder—but he is my father. If we can't raise some money somehow he'll have to go to prison. And this mine is all we own now. He's lost everything else we owned. Maybe he deserved to, but I can't think of that, can I, Gunpowder?"

The big stallion nosed tentatively at the pocket of her riding jacket.

"It's just that we must have money, Gunpowder. We must have a lot—such a lot, Gunpowder, or he'll go to prison. And your master has been taking so much from the Aztec that the bankers say it hasn't been paying dividends for years and it can't be any good. They won't buy it and they won't even lend us any money on it. So I've got to make your master leave the mine alone. Honestly, Gunpowder, I'll give him a chance to get away. I promise! I'll tell him about your hoofs and I'll promise him that if he'll go away I won't let them chase him."

Ray Penetrates 18 Feet of Lead

Panama City—Dr. Arthur H. Compton, noted physicist of the University of Chicago, said recent investigations by his cosmic ray expedition here and in New Zealand, Australia and Hawaii showed a ray which penetrates 18 feet of lead.

It is definitely affected by the earth's magnetic field, he said, and added this indicated it was not light, but a stream of electrical particles.

From a Window in New York

A certain drab and desolate grandeur was always present in our outlook, but sometimes, at sunset, when slate-blue clouds piled mountain-high in the southwest and the mists of our foreground and softly tinted the blank sides of skyscrapers with violet; or when a flaming vapor drove in across the southern sky and the far-away lights of the Queensboro Bridge sparkled like prodigious loops of diamonds, the city took on the dignity of an imperial capital. It became noble as well as vast.

There was one precise spot in our sitting room from which I could glimpse, across the roofs of my millionaire neighbors, a curve in the Park reservoir. Often at dusk this water took on the appearance of a lamp-lighted bay (with a wall of palaces just beyond) along whose highway a stream of carriages flashed in endless procession It was my habit to sit at this window, permitting myself to imagine that I was looking out upon some lovely Old World town. At times I proudly displayed that bit of water to my guests. It was our noblest possession, one of those outer glories which partly compensated for the plainness of our walls and the narrow spaces of our floors.

At other times, when a robe of new-fallen snow concealed the gravel roofs of lesser houses, the towering hotels of Park Avenue assumed the majesty of citadels. They were especially impressive at sunrise, although no one but myself ever rose in time to enjoy their dawn-lit walls of flame and gold. It was my habit, however, to call the entire family to the window to share in any especially resplendent phase.

At all hours and seasons Central Park was a solace and a refreshment. One of our regular evening exercises was "a spin around the reservoir," which meant a walk along the path which circled the raised bank of the upper pool. Often as we left Fifth Avenue and mounted the embankment we came upon a scene of enchanting beauty. The misty towers and vague battlements of the houses seen across the pond assumed an ethereal alien charm, rising like dim cliffs of Arizonian planes, sparkling with campfires, their images floating softly on the still surface of the water, while below us motor cars flitted among the trees through purple dusk like monstrous, hastening fireflies.—From "Back-Trailers From the Middle Border", by Hamlin Garland.

Canadian Flour Tested in Rome

Rome—The superior qualities of Canadian flour for bread-making purposes were demonstrated in striking fashion before the International Bread-Making Congress here recently by Dr. F. J. Birchard, chemist of the Canadian Grain Commission, Winnipeg, one of the Dominion's delegates to the Congress.

Twelve loaves baked at Bologna with Italian flour, were compared by Dr. Richards with loaves made with mixtures of Canadian and Italian flour, and finally with bread in which the Canadian product only was used.

As the percentage in which the Canadian flour was used was increased, the loaves gained in volume and improved in color and texture. The loaf made 100 per cent from Canadian flour was twice the size of that made entirely from Italian.

Spring Flowers of Australia

Come, roam with me in the wilds of Australia.

In the home paddock, near a house in the western district of Victoria, there grows a tall, wiry grass, and among it, in spring, all sorts of little orchids. There is one tiny green fellow about three inches high with very open mouth (old Nannie used to call him the grandfather); and spider orchis, as though cut out in velvet, in every shade of cream and buff and dark red, with thin, tough stalks. Also a dear little blue one, not unlike an English bluebell, but shorter, more sturdy and of a gentian blue. One is a daffodil yellow and its first cousin has brown on the petals.

It is September, the equivalent of April in northern lands, with glimpses of sunshine and intervals of squally rain. A little later there will be a small flower, possibly of the scabious or cornflower family, but a bright forget-me-not blue with gray stalk and two tiny gray leaves on either side, flat on the groud. A child is with me there. How happily we hunt for the sweet flowers! Overhead the wattle—mimosa you call it—is in full bloom, its fragrance filling the air.

Near by one could find an occasional specimen of what we used to call the she-oak, an untidy, sad-looking tree with long needles for leaves. You know, if you put a cockle shell to your ear, how you get a sound as of the ebbing of the sea? One gets the same soughing of wind and waves under these strange trees. A moment comes back to me, when, riding home in the twilight one summer's evening with a dear compaion, we lingered and listened. What did the tree tell us?

Now let us skip over some one hundred and fifty miles or so to the Grampion ranges, in Victoria still. There, under a big hill called ambitiously Mount Abrupt, we find ourselves at its base among a species of low scrub, with very sandy soil, and all around us heaths tall and short, pale pink, deep pink, white and red, and a bush with spiky red flowers which may be a grevillea. In such country, there will be later a shrub which we called wild fuchia, with long hanging narrow flowers, red near the stem and then soft green; and bottle-brush, resembling its name but a brilliant crimson, and with notches rather like small nuts on its scrappy boughs.

Shall we take a long flight now, right away to the Riverina in New South Wales, where the great plains are? There they stretch before us for miles and miles, covered with myriads of everlastings, white and yellow. Is the [illegible] scent wafted to you on the gentle breeze? In every dampish hollow we shall find a delightful vetch with large flowers, some mauve and some violet, and a delicious perfume is wafted on the breeze, reminding one of wistaria or still more of, hyacinth moreno.

The sun is burning even in spring and the sky is a brilliant, cloudless blue. The crows are cawing lazily. Presently we are baked and wander toward the river which skirts the plain on one side with a narrow belt of timber. There it is cool and shady; not a tidy riverside, as in England, but with great gum trees and fallen logs, where one may rest and dream a little. In the bends there are tall buttercups, two or three feet high, and mallows similar to those in other countries, but a sweet, half-forgotten fragrance seems to come to me from them—that is missing elsewhere. There are patches of mint beneath one's feet.

Long ago one would have come across an occasional mia-mia the temporary dwelling of a native, shaped like a tent but made of green branches.

The mountain thrush is calling to his mate, a wild, beautiful note, echoing down the river.

A deep peace reigns.

How sweet are reminiscences of other days and other climes.—Contributed.

Imperial Conferences Date Back to 1887

Ottawa, Canada.—Evidence of the universal interest in connection with the forthcoming Imperial Economic Conference which opens in Ottawa on July 21 next is shown by the volume of inquiries being received at official and semi-official sources for information concerning it.

Imperial conferences are by no means a new departure. Their origin dates back to 1886 when the first conference of representatives of different parts of the British Empire was held in London. In that year the Prime Ministers of the various Dominions were in London at the celebrations of the Jubilee of the late Queen Victoria and they seized the occasion for a discussion of matters relating to mutual welfare. Another gathering was held in London in 1902. These two assemblies were known as Colonial conferences and were presided over by the British Colonial Secretary. In 1907 representatives of the various parts of the British Empire again met in London, this time as an Imperial Conference with the Prime Minister of Great Britain as chairman. Since then conferences have been held in the British capital in 1911, 1917, 1918, 1921, 1923, 1926 and 1930. The conference in Ottawa will be the first held outside of Great Britain.

The delegates to the conference represent a total population of 450,000,000 persons and countries that occupy an area of 13,909,782 square miles, or about one-quarter of the known surface of the globe, distributed almost equally over the northern and southern hemisphere. Of the poulation of 450,000,000 about 60,000,000 are white, the remaining 390,000,000 include 315,000,000 of the native races of India and Ceylon, 40,000,000 of black races, 6,000,000 Malays, 1,000,000 Chinese and 1,000,000 Polynesians, with various other elements The religions represented include 210,000,000 Hindus; 1,000,000 Mohammedans; 80,000,000 Christians, of which 67,000,000 are classed as Protestants and 13,000,000 as Catholics; 12,000,000 Buddhists; 12,000,000 Animists; 4,000,000 Sikhs, Jains and Parsees; 750,000 Jews, and the remainder Polytheists and others.

There is no fundamental law upon which the constitution of the British Empire rests, but the two main principles underlying its administration are self-government and self-support.

Good sewing machine needs best oil, say repair men

If all housewives knew what repair men know about sewing machines, they wouldn't think "any kind of oil will do." Three-fourths of all repairs on sewing machines are due to neglect or the wrong kind of oil.

There's only one oil good enough for your machine—the best. Regardless of price, you can't find better oil than 3-in-One. It is a scientific blend of high grade animal, mineral and vegetable oils and contains unique properties not possessed by ordinary oil. It cleans and protects as well as lubricates. It is unsurpassed for sewing machines, vacuum cleaners, lawn mowers, washers, electric fans, refrigerators, locks, hinges and general household lubrication.

Don't endanger the life of your sewing machine and expensive household equipment with ordinary oil. 3-in-One Oil costs only a trifle more and will save you lots of money in repairs. At good stores everywhere. For your protection, look for the trade mark "3-in-One" printed in Red on every package.

What Is In a Name?

In the game of Scouting, Troops are divided into Patrols, and each Patrol is called by the name of some Animal or Bird. For instance there is the Bear Patrol, or the Eagle Patrol, etc.

There is a very large variety of names to choose from e l in the no Scout Department also, wherever there are sufficient boys available, Lone Patrols of from four to nine boys are formed and they choose a Patrol Name for their group.

Thes patrols endeavor to collect as much information as is possible about their Patrol Animal or Bird. Some of them are even lucky enough to obtain a live specimen for a Patrol Pet, such as the Bulldog Patrol, etc., whereas others sometimes find a dead specimen of their "name," which they stuff and mount. (Scouts, of course, do not kill animals or birds wilfully).

They study the habits and surroundings of their bird or animal, and learn a lot of useful information in so doing.

How would you like to be as patient and industrious as a Beaver, as cunning as a Fox, as strong as an Eagle, to stalk as well as a Panther, or to be as agile as a Monkey?

Lone Scouts should also individually, where they are not members of a Patrol, select an emblem as do the Patrols, and study the habits of the bird or animal they select, in particular, concentrating on this emblem to a greater extent than on the other live creatures.

From the Stores Department, for a few cents, you can obtain a Flag, to tie unto the end of your Scout Staff, on which is depicted the animal which you select, and which you can use as your banner.

Naval Cutter for Sea Scouts

A fine naval cutter was recently presented to the 1st Barbados Sea Scout Group by the captain, officers and ship's company of H.M.S. Repulse. The presentation was an expression of appreciation of the courtesies extended Deep Sea Scouts when ashore.

English College Scout Visitors

A change of policy to travelling within the Empire instead of visiting Europe is bringing to eastern Canada this summer a Scout party of the 2nd Framlingham College Group, Woodbridge, Suffolk, England, under Scoutmaster the Rev. R. H. W. Kneese. The Suffolk Scouts are anxious to visit a number of Canadian Scout Camps.

Lone Scout Camp

When this paragraph appears in the press the boys who were fortunate enough to spend two weeks in camp at Ebor Park with the Lone Scout Staff from Headquarters will just be thinking of returning to their homes, and we know it will be with regret.

Although the numbers who have attended this camp are not so large as we had hoped for, due, we presume, to the difficult times we have recently passed through, nevertheless there are enough Lones to make the camp worth while, and to have a great deal of fun together.

The park is now at its best, and the swimming pool is great, and there is no doubt that those who attended this year will want to repeat the experience at the first opportunity.

An interesting point which will undoubtedly appeal to all Ontario Lones is that a friend of our Commissioner, Scout Kurt Topp, of Troop 800, Chicago, Ill., has journeyed all the way from Chicago especially to attend this camp. Kurt is 15 years old, and was Capt. Furminger pleased to see him again? Oh Boy, I should say!

Empire Scouts at World Gathering

The number of Scouts to represent the British Empire at the next World Scout Jamboree, in Hungary, next summer, has been increased from 2,500 to 4,200.

Several Scout districts in Hungary are inviting British Scouts to visit them for a few weeks this summer. Their idea is to develop friendships and improve their knowledge of English.

C adia Sc attc in t ummers World Scout gathering in Hungary will go as members of the British Empire group, and probably will be attached in small units to Old Country troops.

Perhaps you too would like to be a Lone Scout, if you cannot join a Regular Troop? If you are interested write for particulars to the Lone Scout Department, The Boy Scouts Association, 330 Bay St., Toronto 2. Full information will be gladly sent, and you will be placed under no obligation.—"Lone E."

Cancer of the Bowels Easily Detectable By X-Ray

This article has been written for the Canadian Social Hygiene Council by an eminent specialist and in addition has received the endorsation of the Provincial Department of Health of Ontario.

The great anatomist and zoologist Leidy of the University of Pennsylvania remarked in 1890 that he would not pass a dental student in anatomy who did not know something about his insides. Leidy did not realize that he was establishing a very important principle in preventive medicine. Dentists must know a great deal about the teeth, because it is their profession to treat the teeth. But dentists, as doctors, need know more about the inside of the body than anyone else. But everyone should know something about the oesphagus which carries the food from the mouth to the stomach and about the stomach and the first portion of the small intestine beyond the stomach called the duodeum, and then there is about thirty-two feet of small intestine and about ten feet of the large intestine called colon, and it more important to know about the ten feet of colon than about the thirty-two feet of the small intestine.

If you place an individual in front of an x-ray machine and have behind him the x-ray tube, and then look at him through the fluoroscope in a darkened room, you can witness the heart beat and see the lightness of the lungs, the darkness of the liver, and if you give him the barium-milk mixture to swallow, you can tell at once the normal oesphagus, and as this mixture passes into, and fills the stomach, and then passes through the pylorus and the duodenum, within five minutes you will know whether there is a filling defect or not. If the filling defect is on the duodenal side of the pylorus, you can say to the patient: "You do not have a cancer of the stomach, but you may have an ulcer or some adhesions about t duodenum which may be cured by treatment, and if not, by operation." But when you see the filling defect in the stomach itself, you must think of the possibility of cancer and the advising of an operation.. Some hours later ou will get the picture of the colon in the fluoroscope or on the film, and if there is a filling defect in the colon, you must make another film by injecting the mixture through the rectum into the colon. With the rarest exceptions is any serious lesion or trouble of the oesophagus, stomach, duodenum, small intestine, or colon overlooked. The chief danger is that this examination will be made too late and not that it will be made in time and misinterpreted.

In years of x-ray studies of these cases the evidence confirms this statement.

Recently the cases of cancer of the colon, occurring in a period of forty years has been studied and cases demonstrated long before the advent of the x-rays and diagnosis by their means. What is the explanation of this? It is very simple. The cancer causes obstruction, if it is at the pylorus of the stomach or in the left colon. Twenty-five years ago Kocher of Switzerland recorded thatin all his permanently cure. cases of cancer of the stomach, the cancer was a freely moveable mass at the pyloric end of the stomach where a little mass produced obstruction early. The left colon is no smaller than the right, but the fecal matter is harder, and the least narrowing of the lumen causes obstruction. Unfortunately nature has not provided that all cancers of the bowel produce obstruction so early that people are forced to the operating room for relief. But fortunately all cancers of the bowel or stomach give symptoms just as definite but not as urgent, as obstruction, and if an x-ray examination is made at this time, the defect will be recognized just as easily as if there were obstruction.

It has been found in the past ten years, more than in the previous twenty years, that more people, when they have trouble ..t the colon and expect to be operated upon for a possible cancer, fear the discomforts of what is known as an artificial anus, fecal fistula, colostomy, or as most of the people say, that the bowels will move in an abnormal place, or that they will have no control. First, this is due to the fact that in the beginning of surgery of the colon practically all the patients came into the hospital with obstruction and had to have colostomy first to save their lives, and usually the tumor was so large that after its removal the continuity of the bowel could not be restored to normal. To-day this temporary colostomy is becoming less and less necessary, because the majority of people are examined with the x-rays before obstruction and in the early stages of cancer. Again, we are learning to perform a temporary colostomy or safety valve of the cecum in the region of the appendix. With the rarest exceptions, we never make a permanent outlet in the abdomen unless the tumor is situated deep in the pelvis, in the lower sigmoid or upper rectum where complete removal and end to end suture restoring the lumen of the bowel is possible, but, very dangerous. Therefore, usually colostomy is an operation of choice to avoid danger rather than an operation of necessity, and none to-day should bother about a moder colostomy. It is much better to choose this than a dangerous operation. It is very important that the press should aid in eliminating the unnecessary fear of colostomy.

Cancer of the large bowel has a very low grade of malignancy, and more cures are accomplished every day and more cures will be made in the future, because this cancer may begin in a polypoid tumor not cancer. This polopoid tumor gives symptoms and, if examined and recognized then, the operation should be as safe and successful as the removal of the appendix.

Remember, it is the x-rays that detect troubles in the oesphagus, stomach, duodenum, small and large intestines. Always ask your physician: "Dd I require an x-ray examination?"

Sunday School Lesson

July 17. Lesson III—The Passover—Exodus 12: 21-28. Golden Text—Even Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us.—1 Corinthians 5: 7.

ANALYSIS.

I. THE PASSOVER AS A RITUAL, vs. 21, 22.

II. THE PASSOVER AS A REDEMPTIVE EVENT, v. 23.

III THE PASSOVER AS A MEMORY, vs. 24-28.

INTRODUCTION—The book of Exodus comprises both history and legislation. The dramatic story of the exodus is broken off here and there to include a section of laws or directions for various institutions. The reason for this is twofold. On the one hand, the historian obviously sought to set forth the inner soul of his people by exhibiting the kind of laws which governed their lives; on the other hand, it was considered that most of Israel's laws and great institutions had their origin in the formative period when Israel was delivered from Egypt. At this juncture of the story, then, we have the directions for observing the Passover. A series of dreadful plagues had failed to convince the stubborn heart of Pharaoh that God really intended to set his people free from the bondage of Egypt. Another plague, more awful than any of the others, was yet to come—the destruction of all the first born of Egypt. It was while Egypt was thus stricken that the Israelites made good their escape. The Passover had its origin in that night of divine triumph for Israel.

I. THE PASSOVER AS A RITUAL, vs. 21, 22.

The deliverance from Egypt was to the Israelites what Calvary is to the Christian. Each of these great redemptive events came to be symbolized in a suitable ritual—the deliverance from Egypt in the Passover, and the sacrifice of Christ in the Lord's Supper. Moses delivered the detailed provisions for observing the rite to the elders, and the elders, as the tribal and clan leaders, would pass them on to the people. Not all of these details are now clear to us, but there is no mistaking the main features of the ceremony. It should be noted that while the Passover was to be observed by the whole people, it was largely a family affair. "According to your families," said Moses, v. 21. Each family, as a unit, was to draw a lamb from its flock. Perhaps the later popularity of the Passover above all other Israelite institutions lay in the fact that it was primarily a family festival. When the paschal lamb was killed, its blood was caught in a basin and applied to the lintel and the doorposts with a wisp of hyssop, a shrub which formed a suitable brush, ef.tation placed on the ritual by faith. Psalm 1: 7. The ceremony was to be held at night. All Israel was to keep indoors that night. Verse 11 further tells that the flesh of the paschal lamb was to be eaten in haste, while those who partook were to be shod and ready, as though for a journey. This trepidation would make the ceremony impressive, but it must have been a gruesome sight to wander through an Israelite settlement and see the front of each house bespattered with blood!

II. THE PASSOVER AS A REDEMPTIVE EVENT, v. 23.

It was a redemptive event which this grim but impressive ceremony symbolized. That night the destroyer (v. 23), sent by God, passed over Egypt and mysteriously slaughtered the firstborn son in each Egyptian home. Appalling as this feature of the story reads, yet it spoke home to Israel a profound truth of life—that a proud and stubborn people, like the Egyptians, who attempt to resist God, come ultimately to destruction. At that time men believed that the world was full of spirits who might work all manner of evil on men. In this case the malevolent spirit, the destroyer, was sent by God himself. Believing as they did in the presence of harmful spirits, men sought to ward them off by means of charms placed at the entrance of their houses. To this day the people of Palestine place charms over their doors to repel the "evil eye." It was blood that warded off the destroyer from the Hebrew households. Blood was, in fact, the essential feature of the Passover ceremony. Blood, to men of ancient days, was mysterious; it was the seat of life (Lev. (17: 11); it could not be eaten, Lev. 7: 26. Further, the blood of the paschal lamb was substitute for the life of the firstborn of the Hebrew households. The great truth of Calvary was thus driver home upon Israel that one life must be sacrificed that other lives might be saved.

III THE PASSOVER AS A MEMORY, vs. 24-28.

It was desirable that each year, as the anniversary of their deliverance from Egypt came round, the people of Israel should re-enact in this solemn and dramtic ritual, the great experience of redemption through which they had passed. The redeeming grace of God would, in this way, be brought vividly to mind. The difficulty of any ritual ceremony, however, is that it may in time lose its original meaning and become just a ceremony—a formal act from which the spirit of life and truth has fled. To overcome this danger, the Israelites were required to instruct their young each year in the meaning of the rite, vs. 26, 27. Under this wise provision, the children of Israelitish parents were well-grounded and informed in the great articles of faith, as well as in the chief historical experiences, on which the nation of Israel was founded. On looking back over the passage as a whole, we can see that there were three constituent features in the passover—first, the historical experience of redemption, then the ritual which symbolized it, and finally the interpre-

Forest Tree Seeds

The Forest Service, Department of the Interior, maintains a plant at New Westminster, British Columbia, for the extraction of forest tree seeds. Following the season of 1930, this plant extracted 2,933 pounds (nearly a ton and a half) of forest tree seed, practically all of which was sent to the Imperial Forestry Commission and the Forest Service of New Zealand for use in reforestation work.

Checking the Compass

Since 1880, field officers of the Topographical Survey, Department of the Interior, in the course of their regular surveying and mapping operations, have made about 30,000 measurements of the direction of pointing of the magnetic compass needle. Such measurements may be taken by the surveyor in a few minutes, at very little additional expense when he is already on the ground with the necessary instruments.

Interesting Wild Life

Many interesting wild animals known to most people only in a zoo can be seen and studied in their natural environment in Waterton Lakes national park in the southwest corner of the province of Alberta. In this reserve there are bighorn sheep, Rocky Mountain goat, black bear, moose, elk, beaver, and many kinds of small fur-bearers.

Astrophysical Researches

Recent researches at the Dominion astrophysical Observatory, Department of the Interior, at Victoria, B.C., confirm the existence, throughout intersellar space, of an extremely tenuous cloud of gaseous particles. So rarefied is this cloud that millions of cubic miles of it would weigh only a fraction of an ounce. Notwithstanding this extreme tenuity it betrays its presence by its action on the light coming from distant stars.

Simplicity

I have grown to believe that the one thing worth aiming at is simplicity of heart and life; that the world is a very beautiful place; that congenial labor is the secret of happiness.—A. F. Benson.

Free Medical Care Advocated in London

London.—The economic situation as it affects the ill is reflected in three schemes for the relief of persons requiring medical or surgical treatment here.

A report to be presented at the annual meeting of the Socialist Medical Association will urge universally free medical service under central and local government supervision. Members of Parliament are being asked to sponsor a scheme which would enable persons who have incurred expenditures for medical care during illness to claim rebate on income tax.

An organization called the British Provident Association has just launched a comprehensive scheme for enabling persons of small means to obtain private beds in hospitals and first-class medical or surgical treament at reasonable prices.

The first scheme would radically alter the medical organiztion of Great Britain. In addition to universally free medical service, a national hospital system is urged. It is proposed that facilities be arranged which would enable all citizens to have continuous medical supervision from birth to death; that scholarships shall be granted to poor students wishing to become doctors, and that the existing "poor law" medical service be abolished.

Game Abounds on Bois.

Paris.—The Bois de Boulogne, a fashion parade and playground by day, is, after nightfall, a game preserve. Deer, foxes, quail and pheasants abound in the wooded coverts and are often seen late at night.

Duty

True life is just a going on
To duties still ahead,
For, when today is past and gone,
Tomorrow comes instead—
And thus the duty I have done
Is prelude to another one.

Thus life's reward for every task
Is that I shall fulfil
The further service life may ask,
And do my duty still—
Since at each morning's opening gates
Another sacred duty waits.
—A. B. Cooper.

The Human Mind

The human mind will become more various, piercing, and all comprehending, more capable of understanding and expressing the solemn and the sportive, the terrible and the beautiful, the profound and the tender, in proportion as it should be illumined and penetrated by the true knowledge of God. Genius, intellect, imagination, taste, and sensibility, must all be baptised into religion, or they will never know and never make known, their real glory and immortal power.
—Channing, (Fenelon.

Sir Walter Scott, while travelling in Ireland, was one day accosted by a beggar. He felt in his pocket for a sixpence, but finding that he had nothing smaller than a shilling with him, gave it to the woman with the words: "You must give me the change next time we meet." "I will, sorr," replied the beggar, "and may yer honor live till ye get it."

TORONTO TP. COUNCIL

An interim report, presented by the firm of Robertson, Robinson, McCannell & Dick, Toronto, now conducting an audit of the books of Toronto township, stated that by their findings to date they expected to find the discrepancies, for the discovery of which the audit was ordered, of several thousand dollars in the tax penalties and discounts. To date they have located 228 errors in entries, the total of which, credit and debit, would not affect the balance of the books by more than $47. The report was emphatic that there has been no defalcation or malfeasance on the part of any of the officials of the township.

In laying the lot of some of the Lakeview unemployed before the council, A. R. Bayles, representing the Workers' Association of the district, commented on the low wage scale paid by Toronto township. Reeve L. H. Pallett referred him to York township, where the wage scale is high, yet where men are living in tents.

"If you do not think that your men are being given a fair break, why not incorporate, and apply to the Provincial Government for assistance?" asked the reeve.

Weed-cutting jobs will be found for the more stringently needy cases of the neighbourhood, the reeve promised.

Albert Crooks, a Lakeview resident, asked if the council had advertised for applications for the position of superintendent of the township water supply system. Reeve Pallett replied that no advertisement had been published, as the man to whom the position was given had been in charge of the work during the laying of the pipes. We will advertise later," he said, "when the installation is well under way."

J. W. Dale, an insurance agent, asked council why there had been no effort to seucure a special rating from the Fire Underwriters board in the recently created water area at Lakeview. He was told that the hydrants on the new system have tested 100 per cent., and that the council will communicate with the underwriters at once to secure a higher classification.

Discussing the question of weed cuttign along the old right of way of the Toronto-Guelph electric line of the C.N.R., Gordon B. Jackson, township solicitor, told council that they had the right to have weeds cut and charge the cost of the operation to the railway.

Council is not in favor of oiling of roads, even if the residents of the road in question are prepared to pay 50 per cent. of the cost.

Salaries Cut

At a recent meeting of the Streetsville High School Board, the question of reducing teachers' salaries was settled, when the teachers agreed to a small cut. The gentlemen will take 8% less and the lady, 5%. The salaries will now be as follows: Mr. McArthur, $2,760.00; Mr. Gerhart, $2,300.00; Miss Hoople, $1,615.00.

One of the beauty spots is the flower garden of Mr. J. Fulton and Mrs. R. Lundy, the variety is unusually large and the bloom at the present time is most wonderful, Many visitors take advantage of its scenic beauty and the beautiful odor which one inhales, especially after a rain. These people are to be congratulated and we are glad to see that our citizens as a whole are taking a pride in the looks of their property, as a result someone was heard to say a few days ago, "Streetsville is such a lovely place", many such compliments are being paid. We like our village and we want everyone who visits to like it also.

The Depression Still Lingers

Last month John Adams on a small farm 5 mills east of London, Ontario had a load of potatoes to sell. He had no bags and no money to buy any. He decided to put them in a large wagon box, and took them to London market. Up to noon, nothing doing. He then tried the private houses until dusk. Not one sale. At last, tired, hungry and vexed, he started home. When he thought he was outside the city limits his patience gave way. He removed the tail board of the wagon, and urged the horses to high speed. The potatoes went on the road. Next morning a constable gave him a free ride to London. He was fined $25 and costs or 30 days in jail. In his extremely weak state he was obliged to stay in jail the full term. He was just released on July 1st and came home a sad but wiser man.

Scout Notes

A Good Scout doesn't let everything that goes into his ears come out through his mouth.

Before going to camp or summer resort freshen up your practical knowledge of artificial respiration by a good workout. It may enable you to save a life.

The July issue of The Swimmer, official organ of the Canadian Amateur Swimming Association, will be devoted almost in its entirety to life-saving. It will contain over 40 pictures showing life-saving methods and resuscitation and should prove highly interesting and instructive to Scouts and Scouters.

So successful was a little exhibit conducted by the Boy Scouts and Girl Guides in the Government Building at the Canadian National Exhibition last year that the Hon. W. G. Martin, Minister of Public Welfare, has arranged that each of the two organizations will have as much space this year as they shared between them in 1931. The Scouts will have the space they shared with the Guides last summer, while the Guides will have a new space separated from that of the Scouts by the beautiful exhibit of the Soldiers' Aid Commission.

THIS AND THAT

Every boy and girl should learn to swim.

Everyday we read and hear of tragic highway tolls, it seems to be the price of dizzy modern speed.

King George revealed himself as a good sportsman as well as a wise Sovereign when he "led in" his own horse after it had won the Jersey stakes at Royal Ascot.

In these days we are hearing a great deal about reducing, fear of superfluous flesh, many dangerous methods are used to bring this about. A young man of London, Ont., who feared he was too heavy, took reducing tablets which meant his death. This should be a warning to all and sundry who are ready to experiment with anything that guarantees a hurried lowering of weight which is not natural.

A Vancouver Judge says that pedestrians are not obliged to get off the highway in a rush because a motorist toots a horn. Perhaps not, but self-preservation is the first law of nature, and it often requires a quick jump.

A few days ago we were informed that $80,000,000 worth of printing for Canadian firms was done outside of Canada. This is a tremendous sum, and should make the powers that be sit up, especially when thousands of Canadian printers are idle.

Scientists often let loose some startling statements, now they claim that they have discovered proof that the human race lived in China one million years ago. Why not? There is every reason to suppose that this old world will last another million years and longer.

Reports from the Dominion Government say there are 500,000 square miles of territory in Canada set aside as bird sanctuaries, in which no shooting, trapping or killing of birds is allowed. We feel this is something for which we should be grateful.

The wisdom of youth was proved when a young man paused before answering a widow who had asked him to guess her age. "You must have some idea," she said. 'I have several ideas," said the young man, with a smile. The only trouble is that I hesitate whether to make you ten years younger on account of your looks or ten years older on account of your intelligence.

The general manager of the Ontario safety League has written a timely letter asking for public assistance to reduce drowning, the number of motor vehicle fatalities and lesser accidents on our streets and highways. He emphasizes the care that should be taken now that schools have closed when thousands of children are turned loose, as it were, to shift more or less for themselves without the protecting influences of the schools and other agencies working in conjunction with the schools. He pleads that teachers, parents and adults be careful themselves and make every effort to instil the lesson of carefulness into the minds of our children during vacation. It is to be hoped that this appeal will have the desired effect.

Your Town

Speak well of your town and your town will be blest,
By other good boosters, admiring your zest:
For boosting is catching, it spreads like the flu,
That town is a dead one where boosters are few.

Act well to the stranger who enters your gate,
He might be a man though from some other State,
And courtesy marks not the stranger, but you,
He'll credit the town for the acts that you do.

It takes men and women to build a fine town;
Who'll give of themselves for their home burg's renown:
A good place to live! you bet it is, where
The boosters are plenty, and Knockers most rare.

Mrs. and Mrs. A. Longworth and family spent the holiday with friends near London, Ont.

Citizens and visitors stop and admire the beautiful flower garden of Mrs. Maria Irvine, which is now in full bloom with a great variety of annuals and perenniels. It is pleasing to note what interest many people take in their property to help and make our town look beautiful and Miss Ada Irvine has taken a lot of time and pains with hers.

500 people attended garden party last night given by the Eden United Church at the beautiful home of Mr. Stanley Hall, Tenth Line. The ladies supplied plenty of good eats and the program was just as advertised—high class. Rev. G. Purchase was chairman.

P. & D. Notes

The Peel and Dufferin Regiment carried off most of the honors at the Brigade Camp at the Long Branch Rifle Range last week. They were awarded the silver trophy for the most points gained in sports events, the musketry trophy for the best rifle and Lewis Gun shooting, and the silver cup for the Grand Mounting Competition.

All these events were keenly contested as there is strong rivalry between the four regiments in the brigade which is composed of the Lorne (Halton) Rifles the Peel & Dufferin Regiment, the York Rangers and the Ontario Regiment.

We extend our congratulations to all the members of our Regiment on their splendid success.

Lausanne Marks Time

It appears unlikely that Britain's plea for complete cancellation of war debts and reparations will be accepted at Lausanne—even within the limits of the powers of that conference.

The greatest obstacle in the way of final and full agreement at Lausanne is the uncertainty over the attitude of the United States. The Government of the latter country has already served notice that the Hoover moratorium will not be extended beyond July 1 of this year. While there is a general suspicion that that attitude is dictated m're by the exigencies of the political situation in the United States than by determined permanent policy, it effectively precludes serious final discussion of the whole question until after the Presidential election.

No one imagines that the Continental European nations will attempt to resume payment to Washington unless and until Germany resumes payment to them. Britain has already declared that she will resume payments, regardless of receipts from her own debtors, if the United States so demands. But there is a vast difference between willingness to pay and ability to pay in the face of virtual temporary world bankruptcy.

It is noteworthy that, while the Hoover moratorium officially ends on July 1st, no further instalments on war-debt accounts are due at Washington until December. Before then the Presidential election will be over. The chief Executive of the United States will then be able to act, in accord with common sense, without fear of having his action made a campaigning football.—Toronto Globe.

One-Eyed Car

Traffic police are checking up closely on motorists whose cars lack proper lights. A "one-eyed" car on the highway at night is a menace.—London Advertiser.

Perils of a Tanker

If man can learn anything from such a catastrophe it is the necessity of eternal vigilance. The money loss is very great, but the loss of precious lives of devoted and innocent workmen, and the implied peril for the future, are of more importance, and this should not be lost on those in charge of such enterprises.

The Montreal disaster, following within a few days after a mysterious explosion on a smaller tanker in Toronto Harbor, adds to the anxiety which must be felt by those engaged in handling such a dangerous substance as oil.—The Toronto Globe.

Planting Canadian Trees

During the last twelve years more than 23,000,000 Canadian trees have been planted in Great Britain, most of them coming from British Columbia.—Vancouver Province.

Canada Growing

The most encouraging feature about the Dominion's population figures just issued by the Bureau of Statistics at Ottawa is the rapid growth of the western provinces. The total population of the Dominion showed an increase of 1,586,427 during the ten-year period from 1920 to 1931, and of that total the four western provinces—British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba—were responsible for no less than 567,128, Quebec accounting for the largest individual increase with 513,590.—Mintreal Star.

Swat the Fly

Flies are prolific, breeding a new generation every two weeks, while the offspring of a pair of flies will number 5,600,000,000 descendants in a single summer. Thus it is readily seen that by swatting the first arrivals that billions may be prevented from invading your surroundings.

Every Inch a King

An incident at Royal Ascot, England's famous race-course, revealed another reason why King George is revered by all his subects. One of the King's horses won an important event, and afterward, amid the plaudits of a great multitude of his people, the Royal owner "led in" the winner.

Little wonder King George is popular. He is in close touch with his people; interested in all their activities, and participating in many of them. He is the wise ruler, the well-informed statesman, and the genuine sportsman: a democratic King. While thrones in other lands have toppled and disappeared, the British Monarchy has increased its hold on the affections of the people. Hence it is that when the King's horse wins a race all the King's subjects are delighted.—Toronto Mail and Empire.

EMPIRE

Empire Markets Best

The foreign markets of Great Britain are declining steadily. To deceive ourselves by arranging costly trade exhibitions abroad is as futile as the old idea of giving the populace a procession when they were hungry. We must sell to those who have the will and the means to buy from us. The Empire markets are growing markets, and under an Empire Customs Union Great Britain and her Colonies and the Dominions will prosper increasingly with the years.—London Daily Express.

Industry On Trial

The economics of to-day—as taught by the orthodox—are out of date, because they were meant for a world situation in which famine and scarcity were the normal conditions and in which mankind was engaged in a fierce struggle against the forces of nature. Men had to save and hoard and put by for a rainy day. But now modern science and industry, with better means of transport and communication, have removed the spectre of famine and want. The need now is to spend, consume, and thereby use up the overflowing abundance which every civilized community can produce. The test of whether our present civilization will survive depends upon our solving the modern problem of under-consumption in a world materially richer than ever before. Is mankind really to sit down and starve because of lack of leadership and courage in the invisible governments of high finance, or will the common sense of the common people demand that a way out of the apparent impasse be found? — Commander J. M. Kenworthy in Current History.

Inefficient Schools

The revelation of the number of inefficient and insanitary private schools that remain in this country made in the report of the departmental committee set up by Sir Charles Trevelyan will surprise those who imagined that the conditions of which Dickens wrote were impossible to-day. The proportion of unsatisfactory schools is not high. The committee puts it at 10 per cent. But the faults, where they exist, are grave. Education that is no more than a farce and school rooms that are a menace to health still persist. — Manchester Guardian.

Foreign Travel

If the French people spoke English, and had the same coinage as the English, far fewer English people would wish to spend their summer holidays on the north coast of France. Even the names over the shops the a source of pleasure to the stranger, and the unaccustomed money tells him as he handles it that he is no longer in the dull, workaday world of the half-crown and the shilling. He is not excited by the speech of his fellow-creatures if he goes to Brighton, since he can understand it; but let him go to Dieppe, and the speech of his fellow-creatures, being as a rule little known to him, delights him like a kind of kaleidoscope of sound, at once meaningless and beautiful. To be in a country where men are actually called "Alphonse"—is not that something for which it is well worth braving the ocean?—Y. Y., in The Statesman and Nation (London).

Hitler's Success

The peculiar strength and virility of the Nazi movement arise out of its connection with pre-war German nationalism. It is a rebirth of that nationalism in terms of post-war idealism, or, in its degenerate form, sentimentality. It is like a militarist Youth Movement, or like a "hike" that suddenly turns into army manoeuvres. Hitler may be a fool. Much that he says and writes suggests that he is a fool. At the same time he has hit on a kind of foolishness that happens to "come off," and he has able men round him who are determined to exploit it to the utmost.—Manchester Guardion.

Art and the Home

If it became usual for persons about to furnish their houses or to decorate one or two rooms to call in a designer or a "consultant house decorator," the additional cost would be an insurance against the feeling that the dining-room walls should not have been painted dark brown or that something was radically wrong with the decorative scheme. The curtains would not then be "a mistake," and life would be worth living. — Edinburgh Scotsman.

The Health of the Nation

Greatest of all the assets of a nation is the health of the people. Health is the basis both of happiness and of efficiency. And to secure and safeguard the health of its citizens should be the first care of every Government. Most important of all is the health of the children. For physical well-being in childhood is the essential basis of physical well-being in adult life. It should, in any civilized community, be a matter of course, beyond doubt or discussion, that the physical conditions of school life are as perfect as possible.—London Daily Herald.

Peterboro.—William J. Conners, 46, a crane operator at the Canadian General Electric Company, was killed Saturday afternoon when a car in which he was a passenger collided with another driven by Charles Sharpe of Detroit on the Port Hope-Peterboro highway, four miles from here.

George Vass, 24, nehew of Conners and driver of the car in which the victim was riding, is being held by the provincial police. It is alleged that after the accident, Vass drove away from the scene, sped down a side road and drove back into town.

In the course of the alleged journey, the body of Connors, the police say, was precipitated from the car, being found shortly afterward on the Tenth Line Road.

Vass reported the accident to relatives and returned in a taxi to where the body was, but found the police in charge, and he was arrested. A third man, Leslie Hayward, who was with Conners and Vass when the collision occurred, reported to the police Sunday morning and is not being held.

The collision occurred when Vass' car came on to the highway from Western Avenue, the Detroit machine being driven into the ditch. Its occupants, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Sharpe and two other Detroit people were not injured. Conners was leaning out of the Vass car when the smash came, and his head was badly crushed.

The dead man was a war veteran, having enlisted in the 93rd battalion here. He saw service at the front with the 52nd battalion. His widow, two daughters and three sons survive.

Hamilton.—One woman was killed and 16 passengers were slightly injured early Sunday afternoon when a truck carrying a party of 22 Brantford and Paris residents to a Seventh Day Adventist service at Oshawa, turned turtle on the Dundas highway one mile east of Waterdown, when a front tire burst.

Mrs. Herbert Avey, of Brantford, about 40 years of age, was instantly killed when the rolling machine passed over her head.

The following were injured: Thos. R. Davidson, of Brantford, driver of the truck, head lacerations; Raymond Avey, aged 9 years, son of Mrs. Avey, abrasions; Mrs. Vera Davidson, Brantford, wife of the driver and herself owner of the truck, slight head injuries; Mrs. Elizabeth Pifher, R.R. No. 2, Paris, back and neck sprained; Harold Pifher, Paris, abrasions; Myrtle Steb, Brantford, right foot cut; Gordon and Mrs. Madden and daughter Irene, of Brantford, badly shaken up; Hiram Hay, of Keg Lane, Paris, and the following members of his family: Doris, Lilian, Evelyn, Isabella and Pharaoh Hay, all minor injuries, and Alec Wheatley, Paris.

The injured were taken to Paris hospital in the Patricia ambulance, and Dr. D. A. Hopper of Waterdown, who rendered first aid, said none was seriously hurt.

New Yorker Killed

Chatham.—Edward Desenhouse, 35, of Chollier Street, Binghampton, N.Y., was instantly killed at Thamseville early Sunday when a large sedan owned and driven by Mrs. Julia Jacek, of Johnson City, N.Y., crashed into a tret after side swiping a car driven by Roy Bishop, of 3495 Cicotte Street, Detroit. The accident occurred at 4 a.m. Mrs. Jacek had taken the steering wheel for Dasenhouse a minute before the fatality. In the car were Mrs. Jacek's children, Genevieve, aged 11, who suffered a broken leg, and Edward, 13, who was badly bruised. Desenhouse was instantly killed as a result of a fractured skull.

Parry Sound Drowning

Parry Sound.—Arthur Mick, manager of the Georgian Bay Creamery at Parry Sound, was drowned at Mill Lake Sunday afternoon about five o'clock from a canoe.

With a companion he was traveling in the canoe when it suddenly overturned, throwing them both into the water. Mick, unable to swim, sank immediately. Diving efforts by his companion and others were futile. Dragging operations were immediately started and are still being carried on.

The young man was about 22 years of age, and came here from Powassan last Winter as manager of the creamery here.

Two Dead Near Chesley

Owen Sound.—An automobile accident claimed two lives Sunday when Milton Dankert and Mrs. Jacob Holler of Hanover were killed and eight others injured in a crash at Dobbington Corners, seven miles north of Chesley in which tree cars were involved.

At the scene of the accident there are three small hills which, while neither steep nor long, make it impossible to see what is coming from the opposite direction. A light sedan driven by Milton Dankert attempted to pass a coupe, driven by Mr. Patterson of Galt, on the incline of the second of the three hills.

Just as it reached the top of the hill it crashed head-on into a heavy sedan, driven by Alvin Muir of this city. The light car was thrown sideways into the path of the car it was passing, wrecking it completely. In the light car were Mr. and Mrs. Milton Dankert, Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Holler, Miss Gross, all of Hanover. Mrs. Dankert was very severely cut and bruished and was rushed to the Hanover Hospital, where latest reports were that she was expected to recover. Mr. Holler, Miss Gross, D. C. Muir and his son, Alvin, were all severely shaken up, Mr. Holler and Miss Gross being the most severely injured. The occupants of the Galt car escaped with a severe shaking up.

Both Mr Dankert and Mrs. Holler had their skulls severely crushed. Mrs. Holler was killed instantaneously, but Mr. Dankert did not expire until after a doctor reached the scene.

Youth is Drowned

Pembroke.—Edward Prang, 17, was drowned in the Indian River here Sunday afternoon while bathing. The body was recovered but efforts at resuscitation were ineffective.

Fatality Near Kemptville

Kemptville.—William Henry Kite, 60, of this village, is dead from injuries he received Saturday evening while returning from work about five miles west of the village. Kite, in company with James Davis, also of Kemptville, was returning home with Harold McGahey, son of Dr. R. P. McGahey, by whom they were employed, when their car swerved on the gravel surfaced road, and the spokes came out of the left rear wheel. Before the car could be brought to a stop, it continued about 150 feet and stopped on its side with the rear end on a culvert.

Cow Kills Farmer

Chatham.—Attacked by a cow he was placing in a stall on his farm at concession 2, Harwich Township, Thomas John Hanson, well-known farmer and cattle breeder, was so badly gored that he died Saturday night. The cow had been in the possession of the family only a few hours, a trade having been made in the afternoon. It is thought that the cow had been angered by separation from its calf.

When the cow caught the farmer unawares and wounded him badly, his sister, Miss Lucy Ann Hanson, ran to his assistance, and with difficulty drove off the infuriated animal with a pitchfork. The hired man was in the house at the time, but did not hear the farmer's calls for help. Dr. Caldwell of McKay's Corners was summoned, but death followed in a couple of hours.

In view of rumors that he may be asked to return as emperor of a dejected Deutschland, ex-Kaiser Wilhelm may be more than usually enjoying his daily constitutional. We see him with the Kaiserin at Zaandvoort beach, Holland.

Cancelling of Debts Termed Essential

New Zealand Bank Chief of Opinion Recovery Depends on It

Quebec.—Write-off "or at least write-down" by France and the United States of indebtedness of other nations as a result of the Great War, was the necessary condition of lasting economic recovery, said Sir Harold Beauchamp, director and former chairman of the Bank of New Zealand, interviewed before sailing for England on Sunday. Sir Harold hoped a lasting agreement in this connection would be brought about by the Lausanne conference.

Worthwhile results were also expected by Sir Harold from negotiations at the Ottawa Imperial economic conference. "Great Britain has changed her fiscal policy and the atmosphere is clearing so that the successful establishment of Imperial preference is on the horizon, but each Dominion must be prepared to make reasonable sacrifices. Without conciliatory spirit the conference cannot succeed," he said.

Great benefits from the recently concluded Canada-New Zealand trade treaty when "normal trade conditions return" were foreseen by Sir Harold.

Cattle Shipped Via Bay to be Fed at The Pas

The Pas, Man.—Cattle shipped the Hudson Bay Railway for export through the Port of Churchill will be fed and watered at The Pas, it was definitely learned Sunday. Construction of stockyards will begin at once.

Decision of the railway authorities to locate the feeding station here ends a battle which has raged for more than a year between this town and Hudson Bay Junction, Sask. At least one cattle shipment will be made to Great Britain over the northern route this year.

25 Lepers Invade Town in Hungary

Vienna, Austria.—Despatches from Bucharest Sunday said 25 lepers from the isolation colony at Tichilesti carried out a threat to "march on Bucharest" and entered the town of I cea, spreading panic.

The news of their arrival flew like wildfire through the town and the inhabitants barred their houses to prevent the lepers from entering. The marchers were in terrible condition, clad in rags and almost dying from starvation, the reports said. They yelled for food, which was thrown to them from windows.

The police investigated and were informed that the colony had been without food or money for months and the only physician had left for Bucharest ten days ago to collect funds, but had not returned. The provincial governor called on the military authorities, who succeeded in transporting the lepers back to their colony.

Georgia City Declares Taxes Off For Year

Fairburn, Ga.—City taxes are a thing of the past as the next twelve months are concerned.

Despite the economic depression, Mayor Guy Hearn explains, the city treasury possesses $5,000 in cash, a sum sufficient to operate the municipality for a year. So the administration deemed it wise to declare taxes off at a time when such action would be most welcome.

The tax exemption applies to railroads running through the city, public utilities and industries, as well as individual property owners. The city has a population of 2,503, according to the 1930 census.

Missouri Plant Provides Food and Movie Tickets for Jobless

St. Louis—A novel plan for unemployment relief is being carried out by the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company of Crystal City, Mo., near here.

In the belief that charity is distasteful to ambitious men, the company is providing 650 employes who were recently dismissed from service with a week's supply of food and other necessities in return for which the men work four hours each week.

The company buys its groceries and other supplies in wholesale lots and makes two deliveries daily of milk and bread. In addition 2,500 tickets for the movies are distributed each week. The company is virtually the town's only industry.

Plan 10-Day Weather Forecasts

Frankfort.—A special bureau credited by the Prussian Ministry of Agriculture in Frankfort to study the possibilities of long-range weather forecasting will this year make public its first attempts along the line. Forecasts for ten days will be made in August for north Germany west of the Oder and for south Germany. Seven such forecasts were made privately last summer for university professors and meteorologists, and it is asserted that every one of them was correct. It is believed that forecasts for ten days in advance would mean a reduction of 50 per cent. in losses caused to agriculture by the elements.

How to play Bridge
AUCTION and CONTRACT
by Wynne Ferguson

Author of "PRACTICAL AUCTION BRIDGE"

ARTICLE No. 30

In the following hand, the Professor of Greek at one of our well-known universities bid one no trump at Auction, all passed and A opened the three of clubs. The Professor's hand and the dummy's hand are as follows:

Hearts—10, 6, 5
Clubs—9, 4, 2
Diamonds—Q, 10, 4, 2
Spades—Q, 10, 9

	Y
A		B
	Z

Hearts—A, Q, 4
Clubs—A, Q, 7
Diamonds—A, K, 3
Spades—J, 8, 7, 2

The Professor should have sized up the hand as follows: "A can have only four clubs, for he has led the three and the deuce is in dummy. Therefore, A B should only make two club tricks and two spade tricks. If the diamonds are evenly divided, I can go game without finessing the queen of hearts. If they don't break, then I will have to finesse the queen of hearts." Unfortunately, he failed to figure out the hand as outlined, and as soon as he got dummy in the lead, led the heart, finessed the queen and A won the trick with the king of hearts. It was now impossible for the Professor to go game as he had to lose two club tricks, two spade tricks and one heart trick. He should have set up his spades and then have played for the drop in diamonds. They were evenly divided so that in this way he could have made game.

If the Professor had been playing Contract, he should have made an original bid of two no trump and partner should have bid three no trump.

The writer has occasionally mentioned the Law of Symmetry in these articles. This law is, in effect, a theory that there is a symmetrical relation existing between the distribution of the four suits in any one of the hands and the distribution of any one of the four suits among the four hands. This symmetrical relation is well exemplified by the distribution of the following hand, which came up recently in actual play:

Hearts—Q
Clubs—K, J, 7, 4
Diamonds—A, 8, 7, 6, 2
Spades—5, 4, 3

Hearts—J, 9, 6
Clubs—Q, 10, 8, 6, 5
Diamonds—Q, J, 9, 5
Spades—7

	Y
A		B
	Z

Hearts—K, 10, 7, 5, 3
Clubs—2
Diamonds—K, 10, 3
Spades—J, 9, 8, 2

Hearts—A, 8, 4, 2
Clubs—A, 9, 3
Diamonds—4
Spades—A, K, Q, 10, 6

Auction Bidding

No score, rubber game. Z dealt and bid one spade. All passed and A opened the six of clubs. Z won the trick with the nine of clubs and proceeded to look the hand over. What would you figure as to probable distribution and correct play of the hand? Z should note that his own hand and Y's were divided 5-4-3-1. He also noted that A opened the six of clubs and that B played the deuce. If B had held two clubs, he would have started an echo to show his partner that he could trump the third round of clubs, so his play of the deuce indicated a singleton. Z, therefore, figured that the clubs were divided 5-4-3-1. He held five spades and his dummy three, so that, if A also held a singleton, it must be in spades. Therefore, the spades must be divided 5-4-3-1. His heart and diamond holding and that of the dummy also indicated a possibility that these suits were divided 5-4-3-1. Z, therefore, who was a very fine player, decided to play accordingly. At the second trick he led the ace of hearts and then a low heart, trumping in dummy. He then led a low club, which B trumped. On this trick, Z played his ace of clubs, so that he could finesse the king jack later. No matter what B now plays, Z must make a small slam. Figure it out. The hand is remarkable in that, after the first lead, the distribution of all four suits can be so accurately determined. It is also a remarkable illustration of the Law of Symmetry. All of the four suits and all of the four hands have the same distribution, 5-4-3-1. It is the first time that the writer has ever noted such a unique hand.

Contract Bidding

Z should bid two spades and Y three spades. A and B always pass. Z should now bid five spades and, if Y is a sporty bidder, he will bid six spades. It is a toss-up; but, as already pointed out, Z can make six spades against any defense.

Problem

Hearts—4
Clubs—8, 7, 6
Diamonds—none
Spades—A, J, 7

Hearts—9, 8
Clubs—4
Diamonds—10, 9, 8, 7
Spades—none

	Y
A		B
	Z

Hearts—Q, J, 10
Clubs—Q, J
Diamonds—3
Spades—8

Hearts—K, 6, 5
Clubs—none
Diamonds—K, Q, 6
Spades—10

If spades are trumps and Z is in the lead, how can Y Z win all of the tricks against any defense?

Solution in the next article.

Stratford Gleanings

In all England there is not a cleaner, more decorous, or more restful town than Stratford-upon-Avon, and even to look upon it is to receive a suggestion of peace and comfort. The red brick dwellings shine among the trees, the flower-spangled meadows stretch away, in every direction, and the green hills, sprinkled with copse and villa, glimmer through mist, all around the lovely Vale of the Red Horse:—Welcome in the north, with its conspicuous monuments; Meon in the south, rugged and bold, Red Hill in the west, and far away eastward, beyond a wide, smiling area of farms and villages, the crests of Edgehill, at Radley and Ri ing Sun, where once the armies of King Charles the First confronted their Roundhead foe. The face of England can wear many expressions, but when propitious, it is a face which to see is to love and nowhere is it more propitious than in stately Warwickshire, and around the home of Shakespeare.

After repeated visits to Shakespeare's town, the traveller begins to observe more closely than perhaps at first he did, its everyday life and its enviroment. I have rambled through fragrant fields to Clifford Church, and strolled through green lanes to romantic Preston, and climbed Borden Hill, and stood by the May-pole on Welford Common and journeyed from the bottle-haunted crest of Edgehill, and rested at venerable Compton-Wynyates and climbed the hills of Welcombe to peer into the darkening valleys of the Avon and hear the cuckoo-t te echoed and re-echoe from rhododendron groves and from the great, mysterious elms that embower the countryside for miles and miles around. This is the everyday life of Stratford,—fertile farms, garnished meadows, avenues of white and coral hawthonr, masses of milky snowball, honeysuckle, and syringa loading the soft air with fragrance, chestnuts dropping blooms of pink and white, and laburnums swinging their golden censers in the breeze.

The building that forms the southeast corner of High Street and Bridge Street in Stratford was once occupied by Thomas Quincy . . . who married the poet's daughter, Judith, and an inscription appears upon it, stating that Judith lived in it for thirty-six years. Richard Savage, that competent, patient, diligent student of the church registers and other documentary treasures of Warwickshire, furnished proof of this fact, from investigation of the town records, that being only one of the many services that he has rendered to the old home of Shakespeare. Standing in the cellar of this house I saw that its walls are four feet thick. Also I saw many pieces of old oak which I was informed had been taken from the bell-tower of the Shakespeare Church in 1887, when a new frame was installed to sustain a chime of heavy bells, and which would, eventually, be converted into various carvings, to tempt the taste of enthusiasts of Shakespeare. In the poet's time the bell-tower was surmounted, not as now by a graceful stone spire, but by a spire of timber, covered with lead. That was removed, and was replaced by the stone spire, in 1746. The oak frame to support the bells, however, had been in the tower more than three hundred years. — From "Gray Days and Gold," by William Winter.

Butter Buried Centuries Unearthed in Scotland

Aberdeen, Scotland.—A remarkable find of bog-butter centuries old from Skye was described by Professor James Ritchie, F.S.A.Scot., of the University of Aberdeen, at a meeting of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland. The wooden keg containing the butter was discovered, during the cutting of peats by Mr. Hugh Mackay, at a depth of six feet. The keg was hollowed from a tree-trunk.

The butter, during its immersion for centuries, had changed into a hard, solid mass, with a somewhat rancid smell and greasy to the touch, like a piece of french chalk. It tasted, Professor Ritchie assured the audience, like slightly sweetened tallow candles.

The keg and its contents, which weighed about 100 pounds, recalled the days when the farming peoples of the Highlands left their villages in spring to migrate to the upland shellings. Here they and their domestic stock remained during the summer, and during that time accumulated stores of butter and cheese which were to last throughout the winter.

The custom of burying the butter in peatbogs was widespread, for it has been found in several parts of the Western Highlands and many in Ireland.

It had been suggested that the burying was simply a device for the preservation of the butter in the absence of salt, but it is probable that prolonged burial, for at any rate a few years, "ripened" the butter and improved its flavor.

It's a consolation to know that those who live by taxes shall perish by taxes. It would serve some of these hoarders right, too, if they forgot where they hid it. A traveling cannery to aid in conserving surplus foodstuffs is an original idea being promoted in Josephine County (Ore.) Boiler, pressure cooker, tin cans, sealer and other needed equipment are being assembled on a four-wheel trailer which will shortly establish a schedule for visits to various communities. Prince is Entitled To All Treasure Trove

London—The discovery of gold bracelets 3,000 years old under a hedgebank in a Cornish village has drawn attention to a little-known privilege enjoyed by the Prince of Wales. As the Duke of Cornwall he is the only one of the King's subjects in England to have the rights of treasure trove.

The British Museum has now acquired this Cornish treasure trove from the heir to the throne. It consists of six bracelets and two torques —twisted gold probably worn as bracelets. On the bullion value of the hoard, which was discovered by a laborer, a considerable sum will be paid to the finder.

Newspaper Ads Increased Sales

U. S. Publishers' Association Announces Results of Bureau's Survey

New York.—Many companies have maintained and even increased their earnings by constant newspaper advertising, the American Newspaper Publishers Association said in announcing the results of a survey by its bureau of adertising.

One automobile concern which increased its newspaper budget 33 per cent., the bureau announced, showed a 40 per cent. increase in earnings during 1931. A manufacturer of electric refrigerators spent $200,000 last year in newspaper space, and dollar sales for the year were 460 per cent. of sales in 1930.

Of four leading tobacco manufacturers who increased newspaper space in 1931, three showed an increase in earnings, and one a slight decline from the high net of a year preceding. Aggregate expenditures of these four companies in newspaper advertising were increased from $20,000,000 in 1930 to $26,000,000 in 1931, and aggregate earnings increased from $105,200,000 to $10,300,000.

On the other hand, the bureau said that four tobacco companies which decreased their aggregate investment in newspaper space in 1931 showed a 45 per cent. decline in combined net earnings.

HOT WEATHER RULES FOR BABY

More babies die during the month of September than during any other month of the year. Towards the end of summer, for one reason or another, many babies become ill and a number of them die because their powers of resistance seem lost as a result of repeated digestive upsets during July and August.

Summer is in many ways an ideal time for health as it provides sunshine and fresh air for us out-of-doors and so we are able to build up our health and energy. September is not a dangerous month for adults, indeed it is a particularly healthy time and the number of adult deaths for that month are comparatively few. It appears, therefore, that without becoming alarmists special care should be given to babies during the summer months. There are some simple, common-sense rules which should be followed since they may save the baby's life and preserve his health.

Keep Him Cool

A good general rule is "the less clothing, the better"; for cool days or nights add clothing. Babies dislike being overheated just as much as adults, and it is most undesirable in every way that the baby should be overheated.

Keep Him Clean

Keep him clean in every respect. Bathe him night and morning, and on hot days, give a sponge bath in between. The bath is refreshing and quieting as well as cleansing.

Keep Flies Away

Flies and other insects carry disease germs and so the baby and his food should be protected from them by screening doors and windows.

Give Him Sunshine and Fresh Air

The great value of fresh air and sunshine is generally recognized. During the hot weather, the baby should have his sun bath in the morning before eleven or after three in the afternoon. Then he should be placed in the coolest spot available, this may be outside in the shade or in a well-ventilated shaded room.

Give Him Water

The baby requires more water when the weather is hot. Give him unsweetened cool water between feedings.

Good Food Regularly

Feed by the clock. The baby requires less food in hot weather, so be content if he takes less and do not try to force him to take more.

The breast-fed baby's chances of keeping well are much better than those of the bottle-fed. If the baby is bottle-fed, be sure that the milk is pasteurized and that the bottles are sterilized before filling and then kept on ice until used.

In case of illness, such as diarrhoea, stop all feeding, give cool unsweetened water and call your doctor. Prompt treatment is needed. Home remedies mean delay which is often dangerous.

NEW $20,000,000 ONTARIO LOAN

Provincial Treasurer Announces 14 Year Province of Ontario Debentures

Toronto, July—A new issue of $20,000,000 Province of Ontario 14 Year 5½% debentures is being offered for public subscription. Bonds are in denomination of $100, $500 and $1,000, and the price is 97 and accrued interest, yielding 5.81% to maturity. Special interest is attached to this issue in that it departs from the usual procedure, being offered direct by the Provincial Treasurer for public subscription. The inclusion of denominations of $100, it is said, will receive a wide response from small investors throughout Ontario.

In announcing the new issue, the Hon. E. A. Durlop, Provincial Treasurer, made the following statement:

"This issue," he said, "is designed primarily to give the citizens of the Province an opportunity of participating at an attractive rate of interest, in the highest grade security available in the Province, namely, the bonds of the Province itself. The debentures, therefore, are made available in three denominations of $100, $500 and $1,000, so that everyone with $100 or any multiple of $100 may share in the loan. The issue price of 97 gives the attractive yield of 5.81% per annum through the 14 year period of the loan.

"Subscriptions will be received by all branch banks throughout the Province, by all branches of the Province of Ontario Savings Office, and by a large list of recognized bond dealers and stock brokers. All together, there will be in excess of 1,600 agencies in the Province through which orders may be placed, thereby providing very extensive facilities to the public for participation in the loan.

"The issue price of 97 and interest is the same to all purchasers, and the small investor obtains his bonds at exactly the same rate and under precisely the same conditions as purchasers of larger amounts.

"The amount of the loan is limited to $20,000,000. While every effort will be made to fill the orders of the small subscribers, I strongly urge all who contemplate investing in the bonds not to delay in entering their orders."

"The proceeds of the loan," added the Treasurer, "will be used to repay existing short term advances incurred for capital expenditure."

IN MEMORIAM

TREANOR—In loving memory of our dear little Marion, who passed away July 19th, 1931.
Father, Mother and Sisters.

A loved one from our midst is gone,
A voice so loved is still;
A place is vacant in that home
Which never can be filled.

Long ere the daylight had appeared,
The white-winged angel came
And touched that frail and gentle form,
And bore her safely home.

Kind parents she has left behind
Who the sting of sorrow felt,
But the love for her who was so dear
From their hearts shall never melt.

Dear Father and Mother do not grieve so,
She is only gone before;
It will not be long till you will meet
Her on the shining shore.

EDEN S.S. PICNIC

The annual picnic of Eden S. S. was held on Friday July 15th at Peel Park about sixty-five attending. A lively softball game started proceedings, the chief feature of which was the extraordinary batting and fielding prowess of Mr. Anderson May, who, despite his ponderous proportions covered ground like a greyhound.

This was followed by a 'sponge-ball' married ladies' game. Mrs. H. Hall amazed interested spectators by knocking a home run and beating the throw to the plate by sheer speed on the bases.

A splendid program of races was then run off, the most interesting of which was the wheel-barrow race in which the early leader collapsed near the finish suffering from a severe attack of convulsive merriment. The races were followed by a plenteous supper provided by the ladies the outstanding feature of which was the incredible gastronic feats of our heavyweights, some of whom must have just completed the eighteen-day diet.

OBITUARY

A wide circle of friends were greatly shocked to hear of the sudden passing of Margaret Ellen Coyne, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Edward Coyne, recently at the Galt General Hospital. Though her condition had been very critical, she was making such rapid progress that her friends were confident of a very speedy recovery, until the end came so unexpectedly.

The funeral service, held in Bethel United Church, on Sunday, July 3rd, and conducted by Rev. J. A. Neill, was attended by an exceptionally large gathering of friends and neighbors. The pall-bearers, first cousins of the deceased, were Mr. Geo. Cheyne, Mr. John Cook, Mr. Ed Orr, Mr. Saul Cordingley, Mr. Thos. Douglas and Mr. John Douglas. The flower-bearers were Mr. Mervin Tuck, Mr. John Lister, Mr. John Colton, Mr. Frank Campbell, Mr. Claude Picket, Mr. Sam Reid, Mr. Clayton May, Mr. Hamilton McLaughlin, Mr. Carlyle Featherstone, Mr. Jack Featherstone, Mr. Alfred Ford and Mr. Jack Ford.

Mrs. Ford was born 65 years ago in Trafalgar on the farm, now her late residence, and it was her privilege to spend her life within a few miles of her birthplace. At the time of her marriage to Mr. Jno. F. Ford, they made their home at Omagh, until recent years, when they took up their residence on the farm which was her former home.

Mrs. Ford was a woman of sterling qualities, and highly respected and esteemed in the community in which her consistent life has been a noble influence. She was a member of Bethel United Church, where she was a quiet and faithful worker.

She is survived by her husband, three sons, Wilbert and Clarence, of Omagh; and Emerson, on the home place; one daughter, Miss Estelle Ford, R.N., at home; also a brother and sister, Mr. A. J. Coyne, Oakville, and Mrs. T. D. Featherstone, Churchville.

John James Crozier

The sudden death of John J. Crozier cast a shadow over the district. After a lingering illness of months, he passed away suddenly on July 9th, 1932, at 10 a.m., at his home, Harris, Corners, near Meadowvale. He was born in County Tyrone, Ireland, 74 years ago. Came to Canada with his parents, two brothers and three sisters, in 1876 He was widely and favorably known, had a sterling character, was a good husband, kind father and brother.

He leaves to mourn his passing, his widow, who was formerly Miss Jennie Shields, of Snelgrove, and two sons, Edgar Graham and John Elgin; also two daughters, Gladys and Viola, at home. Two brothers, A. H., and W. T., of Harris Corners, and three sisters, Mrs. P. Spiers, Brampton: Mrs. I Davidson, of Cresswell, Ont., and Mrs. Samuel Cowan, of Arlington, Cal., also survive. They have the abiding sympathy of the community in their bereavement. The floral wreaths were numerous and beautiful.

The funeral took place on Monday, July 11th, at 2 p.m. Service was held at Trinity Church, Streetsville with interment in the cemetery adjoining. The Rev. R. J. W. Perry officiated. A large number of friends and relatives attended.

Garden Party a Grand Success

Twelve Hundred People Hear Excellent Program

The Review took a well-earned holiday last week, and we missed our looked-for budget of news.

The annual garden party, under the auspices of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, the season's big event, was held on July 9th, on the Church lawn. It is pleasant to sit on the fence and and watch the amount of work the different committees have preparing for a garden-party. The erection of the performer's building was a credit to the builders and meant a great amount of labor to put up and take down. The ladies served lunch on the Manse lawn, which was patronized and appreciated by great numbers of the audience. All the booths were liberally patronized by old and young. Since Arthur Adamson discovered that the church lawn would be a good place to hold the garden parties the average attendance has been 1,000. This year the seating committee had a busy time getting accommodation for 1200. Much of the success of this profitable and pleasant entertainment is due Arthur Adamson for the selection of the high class artists: Weston Silver Band, Gladys Ball, contralto; Robert Haig, boy soprano; Mademoiselle Mason; Percy Smith, character comedian; Bill Ramage, Scotch comedian; Fred and Marjorie Dillon, Maggie and Jiggs; Birsdall's Pupils' national dancing; Louise Tandy Murch, A.T.C.M., accompanist; Frank's orchestra, known over the radio as the Sod-Busters and Mad-Hatters; Old Time Music Hour.

I came near saying that the Scotch lassie in the National Dance was the best performer. Well, I guess I have as much right to say that as Jack Drennan had to say the Irish girl was the best, or Wallie Baillie had to say the English girl was far better than any of the others. There is a great deal of truth in the old saying:

Show me the Scotchman who loves not the thistle,
Show me the Englishman who loves not the rose,
Oh, for the poor man, the son of Old Ireland,
Who don't love the place where the shamrock grows.

The Franks' Orchestra

When Andy, the spokesman was introducing the artists to the audience, he did not include himself, therefore we will introduce Andy according to our observation. He is a young man between 20 and 25 years of age, 5 ft. 8 in. in height, black, wavy hair and looks like he would agree with everything he comes in contact with. His apparel consists of a light colored shirt, black overalls, shoes to match. Ed. Walker said the overalls were silk, but Harry Gill said, No, they are black denim, the same as he wears fixing cars in the garage. It is the oil he gets on them makes them shine and the shirt was wool. Then Andy introduced June, his sister, the pianist. June is a beautiful girl in her 'teens, and was dressed in young men's modern style. Floyd Marlatt and Alan Couse said the material in her garments was silk and these two gentlemen are competent judges of ladies' attire.

Mr. Black came next to make his bow to the audience. He was dressed in silk, which would be of very little use for rough work on the farm. Then came Mr. Franks, their dad. The three men had the good old-time fiddles and would play the good-old tunes the audience would ask for, such as "Turkey in the Straw," "The Irish Washerwoman" "The Soldiers' Joy," "When You and I Were Young Maggie," "The Flowers of Edinborough," and many other favourites were asked for. Then memory wandered back to some of the old tunes on the farm, when the neighbours would come in to talk a little of things that were done and had to be done, and pare apples for a few hours and quarter them and join them with a thread, then hang them over the stove to dry. Then have a few hours dancing to the same old tunes played that night. Or the good old times at the barn raisings, when the barn would be a blaze of light at night and often a hundred couples would enjoy the good old dances to the good old tunes. The favourite dances then were "The Lancers," "The First Set of Quadrilles," Circassion Circle", "The Opera Reel", "Money Musk', "The Scotch Reel", and many others. These old time dances are exactly the same as they participate in at the opening of the Legislature every year. And they were just as graceful, and as good time kept to the music, and I venture to say, were enjoyed then better than they are now.

We saw changes, many changes,
As we travelled life's highway,
Then it brought back many memories
When we heard this family play.

Oh, that charming, old-time music,
That we heard long years ago,
When the neighbours were so social
And the taxes were so low.

We would gather then to parties,
In a pleasant old farm house,
And we danced to this old music,
With our caller-off, Will Couse.

When the girls had finished milking.
Put away their spinning wheel,
And the boys came in from plowing
And Hewgill danced the old Scotch reel.

Oh, those good old happy meetings,
Linger in our memory still,
The Circassian Circle, reels, or step dance
Never seemed to tire George Gill.

I am tired of Sandy's rhymning,
Did I hear some reader say?
Well, I love this old-time music,
When Franks' orchestra does play.

COMMUNITY CLUB NOTES

The last meeting was at the home of Mrs. T. A. Leslie. The programme for the afternoon was a debate—Resolved that cars have been a blessing to the country. Though both sides were strongly upheld the decision went in favour of the negative.

Mrs. Leslie then served a dainty lunch assisted by Mrs. A. May and Mrs. Oscar Cook.

The next meeting will be at the home of Mrs. Anderson May, Tuesday, July 19, at half past two Standard Time.

Members please notice change in day.

24 PERSONS DARTED TO DEATH FROM BEHIND PARKED VEHICLES IN 1931

J. P. Bickell, Registrar of Motor Vehicles, Ontario Department of Highways, reports for the year 1931, a total of 286 accidents caused by persons stepping from behind parked vehicles or stationary objects.

From this cause, alone, 24 accidents had fatal results and 262 persons were injured.

The automobile, truck and bus are no longer novelties on the streets and highways, nor can either pedestrian or motorist claim not to have been warned. The Ontario Department of Highways has, for several years, sought to reduce the number of accidents of this nature by educating both walkers and drivers, using every means available to disseminate information and warning. Also, many men and women of public spirit have given much of their time to the cause of safety on the streets and highways. Judging from last year's accident record, neither wise laws or experience can benefit the man or woman who fails to obey the first law of nature—self preservation.

LET US SMILE

They were about to start on a family outing.

"Let me see," said the woman, "here's the lunch basket, here are the field glasses and the bundle of umbrellas. I think we've got everything, and yet: Children, we haven't forgotten anything, have we?

"Will you get in now, Kate," said her husband, pulling on his driving gloves.

"Why, yes, of course," she said, brightening. "That's it. I felt there was something else."

Gwen, aged six, was chatting with the man who had come to fix the window shades. Little Miss Curiosity plied him with questions about his home and wanted to know if he had any sisters. "Three half-sisters," he told her, "and two half-brothers."

"Goodness!" said Gwen, "are you the only whole one in your family?"

IN MEMORIAM

TREANOR—In loving memory of our dear little Marion, who passed away July 19th, 1931.
Father, Mother and Sisters.

A loved one from our midst is gone,
A voice so loved is still;
A place is vacant in that home
Which never can be filled.

Long ere the daylight had appeared,
The white-winged angel came
And touched that frail and gentle form,
And bore her safely home.

Kind parents she has left behind
Who the sting of sorrow felt,
But the love for her who was so dear
From their hearts shall never melt.

Dear Father and Mother do not grieve so,
She is only gone before;
It will not be long till you will meet
Her on the shining shore.

EDEN S.S. PICNIC

The annual picnic of Eden S. S. was held on Friday July 15th at Peel Park about sixty-five attending. A lively softball game started proceedings, the chief feature of which was the extraordinary batting and fielding prowess of Mr. Anderson May, who, despite his ponderous proportions covered ground like a greyhound.

This was followed by a 'sponge-ball' married ladies' game. Mrs. H. Hall amazed interested spectators by knocking a home run and beating the throw to the plate by sheer speed on the bases.

A splendid program of races was then run off, the most interesting of which was the wheel-barrow race in which the early leader collapsed near the finish suffering from a severe attack of convulsive merriment. The races were followed by a plenteous supper provided by the ladies the outstanding feature of which was the incredible gastronic feats of our heavyweights, some of whom must have just completed the eighteen-day diet.

OBITUARY

A wide circle of friends were greatly shocked to hear of the sudden passing of Margaret Ellen Coyne, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Edward Coyne, recently at the Galt General Hospital. Though her condition had been very critical, she was making such rapid progress that her friends were confident of a very speedy recovery, until the end came so unexpectedly.

The funeral service, held in Bethel United Church, on Sunday, July 3rd, and conducted by Rev. J. A. Neill, was attended by an exceptionally large gathering of friends and neighbors. The pall-bearers, first cousins of the deceased, were Mr. Geo. Cheyne, Mr. John Cook, Mr. Ed Orr, Mr. Saul Cordingley, Mr. Thos. Douglas and Mr. John Douglas. The flower-bearers were Mr. Mervin Tuck, Mr. John Lister, Mr. John Colton, Mr. Frank Campbell, Mr. Claude Picket, Mr. Sam Reid, Mr. Clayton May, Mr. Hamilton McLaughlin, Mr. Carlyle Featherstone, Mr. Jack Featherstone, Mr. Alfred Ford and Mr. Jack Ford.

Mrs. Ford was born 65 years ago in Trafalgar on the farm, now her late residence, and it was her privilege to spend her life within a few miles of her birthplace. At the time of her marriage to Mr. Jno. F. Ford, they made their home at Omagh, until recent years, when they took up their residence on the farm which was her former home.

Mrs. Ford was a woman of sterling qualities, and highly respected and esteemed in the community in which her consistent life has been a noble influence. She was a member of Bethel United Church, where she was a quiet and faithful worker.

She is survived by her husband, three sons, Wilbert and Clarence, of Omagh; and Emerson, on the home place; one daughter, Miss Estelle Ford, R.N., at home; also a brother and sister, Mr. A. J. Coyne, Oakville, and Mrs. T. D. Featherstone, Churchville.

John James Crozier

The sudden death of John J. Crozier cast a shadow over the district. After a lingering illness of months, he passed away suddenly on July 9th, 1932, at 10 a.m., at his home, Harris, Corners, near Meadowvale. He was born in County Tyrone, Ireland, 74 years ago. Came to Canada with his parents, two brothers and three sisters, in 1876 He was widely and favorably known, had a sterling character, was a good husband, kind father and brother.

He leaves to mourn his passing, his widow, who was formerly Miss Jennie Shields, of Snelgrove, and two sons, Edgar Graham and John Elgin; also two daughters, Gladys and Viola, at home. Two brothers, A. H., and W. T., of Harris Corners, and three sisters, Mrs. P. Spiers, Brampton: Mrs. I Davidson, of Cresswell, Ont., and Mrs. Samuel Cowan, of Arlington, Cal., also survive. They have the abiding sympathy of the community in their bereavement. The floral wreaths were numerous and beautiful.

The funeral took place on Monday, July 11th, at 2 p.m. Service was held at Trinity Church, Streetsville with interment in the cemetery adjoining. The Rev. R. J. W. Perry officiated. A large number of friends and relatives attended.

The pall-bearers were: Messrs. S. S. Reeve, J. C. Rutledge, Wm. Chambers, George Crozier, C. J. Crozier and J. Kearney.

Garden Party a Grand Success

Twelve Hundred People Hear Excellent Program

The Review took a well-earned holiday last week, and we missed our looked-for budget of news.

The annual garden party, under the auspices of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, the season's big event, was held on July 9th, on the Church lawn. It is pleasant to sit on the fence and and watch the amount of work the different committees have preparing for a garden-party. The erection of the performer's building was a credit to the builders and meant a great amount of labor to put up and take down. The ladies served lunch on the Manse lawn, which was patronized and appreciated by great numbers of the audience. All the booths were liberally patronized by old and young. Since Arthur Adamson discovered that the church lawn would be a good place to hold the garden parties the average attendance has been 1,000. This year the seating committee had a busy time getting accommodation for 1200. Much of the success of this profitable and pleasant entertainment is due Arthur Adamson for the selection of the high class artists: Weston Silver Band, Gladys Ball, contralto; Robert Haig, boy soprano; Mademoiselle Mason; Percy Smith, character comedian; Bill Ramage, Scotch comedian; Fred and Marjorie Dillon, Maggie and Jiggs; Birsdall's Pupils' national dancing; Louise Tandy Murch, A.T.C.M., accompanist; Frank's orchestra, known over the radio as the Sod-Busters and Mad-Hatters; Old Time Music Hour.

I came near saying that the Scotch lassie in the National Dance was the best performer. Well, I guess I have as much right to say that as Jack Drennan had to say the Irish girl was the best, or Wallie Baillie had to say the English girl was far better than any of the others. There is a great deal of truth in the old saying:

Show me the Scotchman who loves not the thistle,
Show me the Englishman who loves not the rose,
Oh, for the poor man, the son of Old Ireland,
Who don't love the place where the shamrock grows.

The Franks' Orchestra

When Andy, the spokesman was introducing the artists to the audience, he did not include himself, therefore we will introduce Andy acording to our observation. He is a young man between 20 and 25 years of age, 5 ft. 8 in. in height, black, wavy hair and looks like he would agree with everything he comes in contact with. His apparel consists of a light colored shirt, black overalls, shoes to match. Ed. Walker said the overalls were silk, but Harry Gill said, No, they are black denim, the same as he wears fixing cars in the garage. It is the oil he gets on them makes them shine and the shirt was wool. Then Andy introduced June, his sister, the pianist. June is a beautiful girl in her 'teens, and was dressed in young men's modern style. Floyd Marlatt and Alan Couse said the material in her garments was silk and these two gentlemen are competent judges of ladies' attire.

Mr. Black came next to make his bow to the audience. He was dressed in silk, which would be of very little use for rough work on the farm. Then came Mr. Franks, their dad. The three men had the good old-time fiddles and would play the good-old tunes the audience would ask for, such as "Turkey in the Straw," "The Irish Washerwoman" "The Soldiers' Joy," "When You and I Were Young Maggie," "The Flowers of Edinborough," and many other favourites were asked for. Then memory wandered back to some of the old tunes on the farm, when the neighbours would come in to talk a little of things that were done and had to be done, and pare apples for a few hours and quarter them and join them with a thread, then hang them over the stove to dry. Then have a few hours dancing to the same old tunes played that night. Or the good old times at the barn raisings, when the barn would be a blaze of light at night and often a hundred couples would enjoy the good old dances to the good old tunes. The favourite dances then were "The Lancers," "The First Set of Quadrilles," Circassion Circle", "The Opera Reel", "Money Musk', "The Scotch Reel", and many others. These old time dances are exactly the same as they participate in at the opening of the Legislature every year. And they were just as graceful, and as good time kept to the music, and I venture to say, were enjoyed then better than they are now.

We saw changes, many changes,
As we travelled life's highway,
Then it brought back many memories
When we heard this family play.

Oh, that charming, old-time music,
That we heard long years ago,
When the neighbours were so social
And the taxes were so low.

We would gather then to parties,
In a pleasant old farm house,
And we danced to this old music,
With our caller-off, Will Couse.

When the girls had finished milking.
Put away their spinning wheel,
And the boys came in from plowing
And Hewgill danced the old Scotch reel.

Oh, those good old happy meetings,
Linger in our memory still,
The Circassian Circle, reels, or step dance
Never seemed to tire George Gill.

I am tired of Sandy's rhymning,
Did I hear some reader say?
Well, I love this old-time music,
When Franks' orchestra does play.

COMMUNITY CLUB NOTES

The last meeting was at the home of Mrs. T. A. Leslie. The programme for the afternoon was a debate—Resolved that cars have been a blessing to the country. Though both sides were strongly upheld the decision went in favour of the negative.

Mrs. Leslie then served a dainty lunch assisted by Mrs. A. May and Mrs. Oscar Cook.

The next meeting will be at the home of Mrs. Anderson May, Tuesday, July 19, at half past two Standard Time.

24 PERSONS DARTED TO DEATH FROM BEHIND PARKED VEHICLES IN 1931

J. P. Bickell, Registrar of Motor Vehicles, Ontario Department of Highways, reports for the year 1931, a total of 286 accidents caused by persons stepping from behind parked vehicles or stationary objects.

From this cause, alone, 24 accidents had fatal results and 262 persons were injured.

The automobile, truck and bus are no longer novelties on the streets and highways, nor can either pedestrian or motorist claim not to have been warned. The Ontario Department of Highways has, for several years, sought to reduce the number of accidents of this nature by educating both walkers and drivers, using every means available to disseminate information and warning. Also, many men and women of public spirit have given much of their time to the cause of safety on the streets and highways. Judging from last year's accident record, neither wise laws or experience can benefit the man or woman who fails to obey the first law of nature—self preservation.

LET US SMILE

They were about to start on a family outing.

"Let me see," said the woman, "here's the lunch basket, here are the field glasses and the bundle of umbrellas. I think we've got everything, and yet: Children, we haven't forgotten anything, have we?

"Will you get in now, Kate," said her husband, pulling on his driving gloves.

"Why, yes, of course," she said, brightening. "That's it. I felt there was something else."

Gwen, aged six, was chatting with the man who had come to fix the window shades. Little Miss Curiosity plied him with questions about his home and wanted to know if he had any sisters. "Three half-sisters," he told her, "and two half-brothers."

"Goodness!" said Gwen, "are you the only whole one in your family?"

Fair Deals For Tourists

Whether the tourist traffic turns out to be good or poor, the fact remains that now is the time above all others to avoid any attempts at profiteering. The fair return is enough.—Saint John Telegraph-Journal.

British Money Comes to Canada

Alberta is the latest province to leave the United States loan market alone and to turn to Great Britain. It has recently negotiated an issue in London for the amount of one million pounds sterling, which was obtained without any difficulty, and at a lower cost than would have been incurred in obtaining United States money. It is gratifying to know that more British capital is coming into the Dominion. We have been too long dependent on Wall Street for loans, and as there is plenty of money available in the Old Country for legitimate investments, there is no reason why the British market should be neglected any longer.—Regina Star.

Pedestrians Organize

Increasing frequency of motor accidents in which there is loss of life or serious injury has been responsible for the formation of an organization known as the Pedestrians' Rights Association. Headquarters offices have been opened at Ottawa and branches are to be formed in cities and towns throughout the provin.. A similar organization has been in existence in Quebec for several months.

The objects of the association are laudable and its activities should have a beneficial effect in promoting care and caution on the part of motorists and pedestrians alike. The primary purpose, of course, is the protection of pedestrians from traffic dangers on streets and highways, especially the dangers arising from motor vehicles, and from infractions of the law on the part of drivers. Improvement in the methods of prosecution and in the laws for the punishment of offenders will also be sought.—Toronto Star.

Strange Situation

An Alberta man who has lived in Canada 19 years applied for citizenship papers but could not speak nor understand English. It is surprising, not that the application was refused, but that there are communities in Alberta where a man could live that long without picking up enough English to make himself understood.—Edmonton Journal.

A Paradox

Lord Cecil is quoted as having said that the Disarmament Conference is unlike any ever held before in the history of the world in aim and universality. It embraces sixty nations whose representatives assemble for the purpose of abolishing war. On the face of it, this would seem hopeful. Yet Europe alone, according to the Year Book of the League of Nations, is spending £900,000,000 a year for war. Mr. Lloyd George has called attention to the fact that there are today, in the world, 30,000,000 men under arms, or some 10,000,000 more than before the World War. Military men know only too well the tragedy that confronts the world in another war. Thus Field Marshal Lord Allenby has said, "The next war will mean the complete end of civilization as we know it. Everything and every one will be commandeered."

We are confronted, then, by the paradox of greater preparations for peace and greater preparations for war than human history has ever yet known. What does it mean? Are the peace plans insincere? There is no good reason for supposing that they are, but every reason to believe that the rank and file of men, and rulers, and Parliaments long for peace as never before. The unprecedented preparations for war are in themselves a challenge and a call to peace.—Toronto Mail and Empire.

THE EMPIRE

Imperial Unity

Organization is needed for the more thorough exploitation of Empire resources—to mobilize capital, to direct migration, to create means for reciprocal commerce. The Empire has not yet realized itself. This is doubtless a lack due to the haphazard way in which its scattered lands have been peopled. Economic unity, comparatively easy of attainment in a continental country such as the United States, has been difficult to achieve by the British realm. But every year the obstacles to inter-communication diminish.—Auckland Weekly News.

Rash Promises

Most of Britain's troubles in India during the last fifteen years have sprung from making promises or offers which in cold blood it is impossible to carry out without reducing India to chaos worse than China, and undoing all the good and devoted work of 50 years.—Calcutta Englishman.

Buy Imperially

Out of a total of imports worth some $450,000,000 which were brought into Malaya last year, more than $320,000,000 were goods manufactured in foreign countries. There are few things which Malaya needs which cannot be procured from Empire sources and there is room for a very considerable adjustment between the quantities of Empire and foreign imports in this country.—Singapore Free Press.

Immigration and the Dole

As the Homeland alone has, during the past decade, expended in the relief of able-bodied men and women over one thousand million pounds for which there has been no material gain, but much moral and spiritual loss, is it too much to ask that we might contemplate, during the coming decade, the expenditure of a like sum on some constructive and productive Adventures in developing and

Ontario's First Seaport Now Linked By Railway

Premier George S. Henry Drives Spike, Opening Up T. & N. O. Railway at Moosonee

Moosonee.—Before a crowd of 1,500, in which settlers, aborigines and visitors from Southern Ontario all mingled, Premier George S. Henry on Friday drove the last spike of the T. and N. O. Railway, James Bay extension, at this new seaport town. This new line, the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway extension, has cleft the northern forests and ended the exclusion of Ontario's oldest white man's settlement, Moose Factory. The North is now definitely linked with all the great industrial centres of the continent.

Courage Rewarded

In June, 1668, two British vessels headed into the then unknown waters of Hudson Strait. One skipper, viewing the forbidding seas and floating ice, felt the qualms of doubt and turned back. The other, Captain Zachariah Gilman, pressed on and succeeded. His courage and enterprise were linked with the causes which led to the founding of Moose Factory in 1671.

His vessel, the "Nonsuch" ketch, on behalf of the English syndicate headed by the versatile Prince Rupert, the Royalist cavalry leader, sailed to the south of the bay and put in at Rupert River, and the leader there established a port named Rupert House, which has had a continuous trading history to the present time.

Returning the following year with their vessel loaded to the waterline with furs, the adventurers and their backers formed in London the Hudson's Bay Company, whose official name was "The Company of Adventurers of England Trading into Hudson's Bay." In 1671, on an island in the Moose River, they founded the important trading post of Moose Factory, which for over two centuries directed and supplied the fur trade in hundreds of posts stretching far south into Ontario and also along the east and west coasts of the Bay.

It has been said that in its 261 years of existence Moose Factory has found its way to the front pages of North American newspapers but twice. The first time was in 1920 when three American Navy balloonists, forced down in the northern bush, found their way to safety at the friendly Hudson's Bay Company's post.

The other time was when Col. Charles Lindbergh and Mrs. Lindbergh landed in a sheltered cove of the company's island and demonstrated to the world that Moose Factory lay on a great circle air route from New York to Japan.

Though Moose Factory is the oldest white settlement in Ontario, it has hitherto been the least known.

The new townsite of Moosonee is on the west bank of the Moose River, near the spot where for a long time Revillon Freres have conducted their store and trading post. Clearing of the townsite was begun last year, and much progress has been made since.

Six are Drowned In West on Week-end

Winnipeg, July 17.—Six persons met death by drowning in Manitoba and Saskatchewan over the week-end. An overloaded motor boat capsized on Wakaw Lake, south of Prince Albert, Sask., Saturday, and four of the six passengers were drowned.

While bathing in the river south of Minnedosa, Man., Saturday, Frederick Norman Thickson, 47, was drowned. His four-year-old son and two other children who were with him saw him go down crying for help.

At Lemsford Ferry, Sask., to-day, John Findlay, bank teller of Glidden, was drowned.

It is a maxim with me that no man was ever written out of reputation but by himself.—Richard Bentley.

Some Vital Statistics

An interesting bulletin of vital statistics covering forty-two of the world's greatest cities has just been issued by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company. It covers births, deaths and infant mortality in these large communities during the past four years.

Strangely enough—as it would appear to most people—the world-wide depression which has displayed some of its worst effects in the larger centres of population has not, according to the bulletin, sensibly affected either the adult death rate or that of infant mortality. The birthrate in these places has however been adversely affected, probably because of the fact that marriages have, on the whole, decreased in number. Of all the cities studied Berlin shows the most serious falling off in its birthrate. It now stands at 8.7 per 1000 of population, one of the lowest rates of any city in the world. The rate in Montreal is 25.8 as compared with 20.6 in Toronto and 20.9 in Pittsburgh, the highest recorded rate in the United States. The highest birthrate noted by the bulletin is 40.4 in Madras, where, however, the infantile death rate reached the appalling figure of 245 per 1,000 of living births.

There is ground for reasonable encouragement in the Montreal figure, both for adult and infantile mortality. The adult rate is falling steadily although only fractionally it must be admitted. It has dropped from 26.8 per 1,000 of population in 1928 to 26.6 in 1929, 26.5 in 1930, and 25.8 last year. The rate of decrease in Toronto has been in almost exactly the same proportion, although the Toronto rate for 1931 was 20.6, or five points below ours. Similarly we are glad to note a drop in the rate of infantile mortality in Montreal in the last four years. Let us get what satisfaction we can out of this fact, for there is very little to be obtained from the numbers of recorded deaths. Last year there died in this city 112 babies out of every 1,000 born alive as compared with 70 in Toronto, 56 in Chicago, 57 in Detroit, 57 in New York, 72 in Baltimore, 60 in St. Louis, and 71 in Washington.

In Great Britain the only city that comes anywhere near us in this respect is Glasgow, with a rate of 102 per 1,000 living births. London has a rate of 65 and Liverpool one of 93. Sydney, Australia, has far less than half our rate, the German rate, always accounted high, comes in none of her cities to anywhere like that of Montreal. In Amsterdam the rate is only 34, in Rotterdam 48, and in Stockholm 41.—Montreal Star.

England Retains The King's Prize

Canadians Secure One of Largest Collection of Trophies

Bisley Camp, England, July 17.—England retains the historic King's Prize, classic award for the Empire's crack military marksmen, but Canada's teammen leave the 69th annual meeting of the National Rifle Association with a proud record of achievements.

The King's Prize was captured by 58-year-old C. F. H. Bayly of Kent, who has been shooting at Bisley for more than a quarter of a century. Firing at the long 900 and 1,000 yard ranges in Saturday's final of the great match, Bayly recorded a remarkable score of 289 out of a possible 300, despite rain and mist which at times almost obscured the targets.

To Lieut. Desmond Burke of Ottawa, King's Prize winner of 1924, go the all-around honors of the meeting. Burke captured the Grand and All-Comers' aggregates, great tests of consistent marksmanship over a wide variety of ranges in a number of individual matches. Burke also won the Service Rifle Championship, taking the challenge cup, gold badge and a nominal cash award.

Two Canadians—Captain J. W. Houlden of Hamilton and of Sherbrooke, Que., and Sgt. Alec Parnell of Verdun, Que., entered the final stage of the King's Prize with better chances that anyone, for they had the highest totals—146 out of 150—in the second stage on Friday. But the final ranges and the conditions saw four English marksmen forge to the front, Houlden, leading Canadian at the end, being in fifth place.

Winnipeg.—A new departure in aerial photography is planned by the survey branch of the Canadian Airways Ltd., to aid prospectors in the Great Bear Lake mining area.

Through the use of stereoscopic equipment, the new plan will show the area in relief, revealing all the surface features of the country covered. It will reveal surface formations and make possible the prediction of further mineralization at different points.

Experimental Flight of Air Mail Succeeds

Rimouski, Que.—The experimental flight of airmail from Ottawa to the Straits of Belle Isle was successfully completed recently with the arrival of a seaplane at Red Bay. Word of the arrival reached here by wireless. The message relieved some anxiety felt earlier when rumors spread that a plane had crashed at Thunder Bay, Que.

Europe-Montreal Mail in Four Days

Special Plane Relay Service From Belle Isle Sets New Record

St. Hubert Airport, Que., July 17.—Four days from Basle, Switzerland, to Montreal was the record achieved by a mail bag which landed here at 9.30. It bore a July 13 date from the Swiss city.

The bag was part of a cargo of 34 sacks of mail flown from the Straits of Belle Isle, where it was taken from the Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Britain early this morning.

Two airplanes flew here through the dusk from Rimouski, Que., where in the afternoon they had received the mail from another pair of planes which had crossed the Gulf of St. Lawrence from Havre, St. Pierre. The mail had been brought to Havre, St. Pierre, by a couple of seaplanes from Red Bay, in the Straits of Belle Isle.

The air distance covered by the relays of Royal Air Force machines totalled 990 miles.

Baldwin Averts Panic on Ship

S.S. Empress of Britain at Sea.—A minor blaze, started by a fused electric wire in a room of the ship, Sunday night threatened to create a flurry of excitement which was avoided by the presence of mind exhibited by Rt. Hon. Stanley Baldwin, President of the British delegation to the Imperial Conference.

The passengers were gathered for the usual concert in aid of the Seamen's orphanage fund, and the program was almost completed when smoke was seen curling near the stage.

Mr. Baldwin, who was presiding at the concert, announced quietly: "That ends the program."

The crowded room was emptied without a sign of disorder. A water hose and chemical extinguishers quickly ended the fire.

Kaye Don Breaks Speed Boat Mark

London, July 18.—Kaye Don, noted British speed boat pilot, broke the world's water speed record at Lach Lomond early this morning, making an average speed of 117.43 miles an hour over the two-way course.

A despatch to the Exchange Telegraph Agency said Don's speed on the first run, from the south to the north end of the course, was 117.10 miles per hour, and on the run from the north to the south end 117.76 miles.

Heat Prostrates Many in States

Nation Swelters Under Heat Wave — Temperature Records Broken

Chicago.—Temperature records fell, deaths from prostration were reported, and millions of people sweltered last week as Summers' first severe heat wave spread across the nation.

Throughout the south and southwest, the middlewest and the eastern states, record or near record temperatures for July 13 were reported. Records for the season were broken in almost every state. In cities as widely separated as McKeesport, Pa., and Oklahoma City, Okla., there were reports of deaths from heat prostration.

In Chicago, the mercury hovered around the 95 mark, which is the highest temperature ever recorded here on this date.

Thousands of persons sought relief at beaches and resorts throughout southern Michigan as temperatures climbed to record marks for the year. At Coldwater, Benton Fenno, 58, a farmer, died of the heat.

Some of the highest temperatures reported were in Kansas, where the mercury climbed to 102 at Phillipsburg, 101 at Dresden, 100 at Garden City, and 99 at Hayes.

Central Illinois baked under a broiling sun with temperatures around 95 and threatening to climb higher. Many heat prostrations were reported.

Extreme northern states also felt the effect of the wave. At Madison, Wis., the temperature went up to 90.

Refloating Test Proves War Vessel Intact

Midland, Ont. — From the mud-smothered ed where she has lain for 119 years, the Tigress, American war vessel sunk in Penetang Bay, can be raised without difficulty, Captain Robert Carson, of Midland, reports.

Captain Carson, in his survey of the point where the Tigress and her sister ship, the Scorpion, are lodged in the bottom of the bay, recovered several relics, including spokes two feet long, scuppers and iron bars. Barnacles as big as hens' eggs incrusted the iron, which had been softened by the soaking. A chain believed to have been used for securing cannon, also was brought to the surface.

The Tigress is split both fore and aft about four feet below the deck, probably as the result of ice action. The keel and stern post, deck rail and bulwarks are intact, although the greater part of the deck has fallen in.

The ship, now battered, was a trim vessel when she was built at Fort Erie and sailed into the 1812-14 campaign against the British alongside the Scorpion, flagship of Admiral Perry. An American victory at Put-in-Bay and the capture by the Scorpion of the British warship Chippewa elated the United States forces, and they proceeded to attack the naval base at Penetang. Here their success was cut short, however, and the Tigress and the Scorpion were sent to the bottom. Now they are to be raised and maintained as historical relics.

Drownings, Accidents Claim 7 Ontario Lives

Seven violent deaths on Ontario highways, waterways and railways were recorded over the week-end. In addition, the bodies of two earlier drowning victims were found.

Thelmo Richter, a 23-year-old Gah nurse, was drowned in the Conestoge River. Antone Gardi, a Buffalo youth, was drowned at Ridgeway. Joseph Conners, 21, of Buffalo, was drowned at Long Beach. Joseph M. MacKenzie, son of the late Sir William Mackenzie, and Louis Martin of Welland, were killed in motor car upsets. Trains took the lives of Frank Calvello, 64, of North Bay, and Frank Bolton, 41, of London.

The bodies of Harry Pearson, 41, of Toronto, and Bobby Stevenson, nine, of Kingston, drowned a week ago, were found respectively in Georgian Bay and Kingston Harbor.

Goes a Little Too Far In Exterminating Rat

Hamilton, July 17.—A too efficient rat trap caused a fire in the home of Ben Waxman, Cannon Street west, this afternoon and several hundred dollars damage resulted. When the rat decided to sample the cheese bait, the spring was released and the trap was sprung with such force that it dropped into a pile of matches, and fire followed. The flames spread to the living quarters, and were burning fiercely when the firemen arrived.

Wool-Gathering— Soviet Style

They aren't shearing sheep in Russia any more; they have discovered a new method of getting the wool which, they claim, is more satisfactory.

The sheep are dosed with a preparation of mineral salts, which has the effect of loosening the fleeces. In a few days the wool can be peeled off, and the sheep are left completely denuded, with bodies as smooth and shiny as a billiards ball.

This doesn't last long, however, because a new fleece begins to grow at once, and develops very rapidly. So quickly, indeed, that it is claimed that four lots of wool can be obtained from each sheep every year.

How to play Bridge
AUCTION and CONTRACT
by Wynne Ferguson

Author of "PRACTICAL AUCTION BRIDGE"

ARTICLE No. 32

One important point about Auction and Contract that most players overlook is that when you bid, you are trying to buy something. It is really an auction and the privilege of playing the hand is what you are bidding for. Once that point is firmly fixed in your mind, let your bidding mean something, let it be backed by common sense and good judgment. If you attend an auction sale, you go with the idea of getting something for your money and with that end in view you exercise good judgment.

The same business judgment should be applied to the games of Auction and Contract, and you will soon get the good results. Don't make wild bids or take chances unless the angle warrants it. To illustrate: at a void score, don't overbid your hand if game is in no danger; on the other hand, if game is in danger, then it is advisable to overbid. Take no chances of being doubled unless the penalty that you may incur is more than offset by the game saved.

The odds are always against the rash bidder unless he follows the rule just given. On the other hand, don't allow the risk of losing a trick or so to keep you from bidding, when game is in danger. Then you have the proper angle and with any proper justification, "Let there be bidding."

The following hand illustrates the value of the shut-out bid either at Auction or at Contract when properly used:

	Hearts—Q, J, 10, 8, 6, 5, 2 Clubs—K, 10, 8, 4, 2 Diamonds—7 Spades—none
Hearts—A, K, 7, 4, 3 Clubs—3 Diamonds—Q, 2 Spades—A, Q, J, 7, 4	Y A B Z	Hearts—none Clubs—6, 5 Diamonds—K, J, 10, 8, 4, 3 Spades—K, 10, 9, 8, 2
	Hearts—9 Clubs—A, Q, J, 9, 7 Diamonds—A, 9, 6, 5 Spades—6, 5, 3

No score, first game. Y dealt and bid four hearts. B had a freak hand, and hardly felt justified in bidding either four spades or five diamonds, so passed. Z passed and A had no choice except to double, setting Y's contract by two tricks. If either A or B had bid spades, they could have made five odd against any defense and a little slam if hearts were opened. The value of bidding four rather than three hearts with a freak hand of this type is well exemplified. A three-heart bid would have been overbid by B, either with diamonds or spades and thus have given A B a chance for game. In case of any overbid, Y would certainly bid four hearts, so why not bid it at once and have a better chance to shut out the spade bid?

In case of a three-spade bid by B at Auction, A would be in a ticklish position if Y should bid four hearts. His hand is so strong in hearts that it would be a great temptation to double, but a four-spade bid would be preferable. The bidding should indicate a freak hand and that he cannot hope to set the contract more than two tricks. On the other hand, he has a sure game in spades. Under such conditions, he should bid four spades, rather than double.

At Contract, Y should either bid four hearts or pass. A three-heart bid would be very unsound.

The following hand is a good example of what happens to players who are too much influenced by four aces:

	Hearts—A, 8 Clubs—A, 5, 4, 2 Diamonds—A, 9, 8, 7, 5 Spades—A, 6
Hearts—K, Q, 10, 6, 5 Clubs—K, 8 Diamonds—Q, J, 10, 4 Spades—Q, J	Y A B Z	Hearts—9, 4, 3 Clubs—Q, J, 10, 3 Diamonds—3 Spades—10, 7, 5, 4, 3
	Dealer Hearts—J, 7, 2 Clubs—9, 7, 6 Diamonds—K, 6, 2 Spades—K, 9, 8, 2

Z dealt and passed, A bid one heart and Y correctly bid one no trump. One hundred aces are nearly always worth a bid of one no trump unless the hand is so badly distributed that a suit bid is preferable. B and Z passed and A bid two hearts. At this point, Y should pass and let A play the hand, either at Auction or at Contract. There is no chance for A to make game and therefore no reason for Y to risk a big loss by bidding two no trump or three diamonds. Under such conditions, the angle is against an over-bid. With careful play, A can make two hearts. If Y bids two no trump and is doubled, he will lose his contract by two tricks. If he bids three diamonds, he will also lose his contract by two or possibly three tricks.

This hand is a fine example of two good points: first, don't overbid unless the angle is in your favor; second, don't overbid merely because you hold four aces.

INDIAN MAIDEN GREAT ATHLETE

Liza Commander, pretty Indian maiden and outstanding athlete of the French River country, plans to be right up in the front at the finish of the Marathon Swim at the Toronto Exhibition this year. She is a daughter of Peter Commander, famous Ojibway Guide at the Canadian Pacific Railway's French River Bungalow Camp. Liza is training for the contest by packing heavy bags of golf clubs around the French River course, and by spending long hours swimming. She is seen above with Mrs. Jack G. Strathdee, wife of the manager of the Bungalow Camp.

The Golden Province of Canada

In the midst of a world of depression, the Gold Mining industry of Ontario has risen to a new record production. The Gold Mines of the Province in 1931 produced precious metal to the value of 43 Million Dollars, which is 20 per cent. in advance of the output for 1930, and four-fifths of the total gold production by the Dominion of Canada.

Fulfilment

Man wants but little here below,
The poets still profess,
And, taking things as they are now,
He's getting less and less.

The dashing young daughter of a well-known woman appeared at her home recently wearing an outlandish hat.

Practical-Minded Mother — "Where did you get that hat?"

Daughter—"I bought it."

Mother (sneering)—No, you didn't. They sold it to you."

Do you remember 'way back when mother put a chair alongside the bed to keep you from falling out?

Mrs. Mack—"I'm bothered with a little wart I'd like to have removed."

Dr. Williams—"The divorce lawyer is at the second door to your left."

Our idea of a disappointed wife is one who took her man for better or for worse and found that he wasn't even good.

Friend—"Where are you going?"

Mr. F.—To Dabney with my wife—we are going by air."

Friend—"But there is no air line to Dabney."

Mr. F.—"There will be by the time my wife is ready."

Mountain Guide—"Be careful not to fall here. It is dangerous. But if you do fall, remember to look to the left, as you get a most wonderful view."

Little Theodore was always an inquisitive child. One day Theodore and his mother went to a wedding. As the bride and groom walked stately down the aisle, little Theodore chirped:

Theodore—"Oh, Mamma, why does the bride wear a white gown at weddings?"

His Mother—"Because white stands for purity, darling."

Theodore (after being silent for a moment)—"Ooh, Mamma, then why must the groom always wear black?"

No matter how many clothes your wife has she always buys a lot more the minute you offer to take her on a trip.

Dumb Dora—"Isn't Bill just wonderful? He's already been promoted to field marshal."

Horsefeathers—"What! From private to field marshal in two months?"

Dumb Dora—"Did I say field marshal? Well, perhaps it's court marshal—I know it's one or the other."

Here lies the body of William Brace,
He sure was one fine fella,
He said in his sleep: "I love you, Grace,"
But his wife's name was Stella.

An important position is the result of starting in a small way, doing the little details carefully and well, and then being prepared to accept the greater responsibilities.

Doctor—"Ever have any trouble with dyspepsia?"

Patient—"Only when I try to spell it."

She—"I heard you had some trouble with lumbago."

He—"No, that wasn't her name."

An absent-minded man was unloading his brief case after dinner, preparatory to an evening's work.

His Wife (interrupting)—"Have you seen this? There's a report in the paper of your death."

Absent-Minded Man—"Is that so? We must remember to send a wreath."

Gold Boom

Leads to Prosperity

Canada is in the throes of a mining boom and one of the factors in this boom is the rather remarkable record which the producing gold mines of Northern Ontario have created during the past three years. In that period, when the bottom was falling out of security markets, company earnings were falling to nothing and dividends were slashed right and left, the gold securities stood firm, the earnings of these companies yearly set up new records, while in the past year every one of the large operations either increased its dividend or paid a bonus, and in addition, several new dividend payers were added to the list.

To-day the public is becoming gold minded. No wonder. It is the one product that has a fixed ready market with no selling cost or marketing worries. Many new mining camps are coming rapidly to the front to take their place with Porcupine, Kirkland Lake, the Rouyn. The next rich producing area will be Matachewan. This camp fortunately fell into the hands of some of the country's finest pioneer exploration and development operators with the result that it has come to the front rapidly, and this fall Mining Corporation of Canada, one of the last Cobalt companies to survive, will bring its very rich property, the Ashley, into production. The construction of the mill is now being rushed.

Headed by leading mining men who brought along the initial producers in Kirkland Lake, an influential group has Matachewan's outstanding gold showings and attention is focused on the Tyrrell McNeely find, which is coming to the front as an outstanding syndicate because of the rather remarkable consistency of its ore body, which is so shot with free gold, that some samples assayed by the Ontario Government laboratories, ran as high as $2774. Tyrrell Township McNeely syndicate is the name of this venture, and the backers of it say that the property is the best they have seen since they pioneered the Kirkland Lake camp, the home to-day of Lake Shore, Teck Hughes and others, noted as outstanding in the world for the richness of the ore and the great profits per ton of ore treated which accrues to the operators. It is being freely predicted that the Ashley in Matachewan, when it comes into production, will set the pace for the others by rivalling Kirkland Lake in high values.

She—"The chicken at our church suppers is usually tough."

He—"You mean unusually tough."

Author of "Golden Age" Passes at Seventy-two

The death of the British author, Kenneth Grahame, at the age of seventy-two, at Pangbourne-on-the-Thames, recalls the appearance thirty-seven years ago of "The Golden Age," a delightful little book which then obtained and still retains a wide vogue among people of taste. In it the author wrote with sympathetic understanding and unexcelled charm regarding children and their attitude towards their elders. "These elders, our betters by a trick of chance, commanded no respect, but only a certain blend of envy — of their good luck—and pity—for their inability to make use of it. Indeed, it was one of the most hopeless features in their character that, having absolute license to indulge in the pleasures of life, they could get no good of it. They might dabble in the pond all day, hunt the chickens, climb trees in the most uncompromising Sunday clothes; they were free to issue forth and buy gunpowder in the full eye of the sun—free to fire cannons and explode mines of the lawn; yet they never did any one of these things. No irresistible energy hailed them to church o' Sundays; yet they went there regularly of their own accord, though they betrayed no greater delight in the experience than ourselves. . . . For them the orchard (a place elf-hunted, wonderful) simply produced so many apples and cherries. They never set foot within fir-wood of hazel copse, nor dreamt of the marvels hid therein. The mysterious sources—sources as of old Nile—that fed the duck-pond had no magic for them. They were unaware of Indians, nor recked they anything of bisons or of pirates (with pistols), though the whole place swarmed with such portents. They cared not about exploring for robbers' caves, nor digging for hidden treasure. Perhaps, indeed it was one of their best qualities that they spent the greater part of their time stuffily indoors."

When these grown-ups met in the presence of their children they always talked over the children's heads. There was, however, an uncle called the White-Washed Uncle, who was persona grata to this particular family of youngsters, because he treated them seriously as equals and bashfully gave them money to spend as they liked. They were so pleased that they hoped he would die that very night so that he would go straight to heaven, and, finally, they christened the piebald pig after him.

Perhaps the best chapter in the book is that entitled "The Roman Road," in which one of the youngsters comes upon an artist at an easel who also treats him as an equal, and talks with him of the celestial city. In the long run, the artist promises to come and visit him, when they both get to Rome. "Upon this contract we parted and I went downheartedly from the man who understood me to the house where I never could do anything right."

Curiously enough, Mr. Grahame was a brilliant mathematician, and for a long time secretary to the Bank of England. He is said to have turned to writing as a change from his official duties, and to satisfy his love of children and sense of humor. He was one of those numerous Old Countrymen who have more than compartment to their minds, and who excel in diverse departments of life. We recall the author of the life of the great American Alexander Hamilton, whose business in London was that of dry goods merchant, and many public men who, besides being men of practical affairs, were or are men of letters in a creative sense.—Toronto Mail and Empire.

Castoria...for CHILDREN'S ailments

ARE you prepared to render first aid and quick comfort the moment your youngster has an upset of any sort? Could you do the right thing—immediately—though the emergency came without warning—perhaps tonight? Castoria is a mother's standby at such times. There is nothing like it in emergencies, and nothing better for every-day use. For a sudden attack of colic, or for the gentle relief of constipation; to allay a feverish spell, or to soothe a fretful baby that can't sleep. This pure vegetable preparation is always ready to ease an ailing youngster. It is just as harmless as the recipe on the wrapper reads. If you see Chas. H. Fletcher's signature, it is geniune Castoria. It is harmless to the smallest infant; doctors will tell you so.

You can tell from the formula on the wrapper how mild it is, and how good for little systems. But continue with Castoria until a child is grown.

Arising out of the discussions of the evening the following resolutions were moved, seconded and duly passed.

V. C. Johnston and S. H. Foster: That the clerk be instructed to reply to the Hydro Electric Power Commission, acknowledging receipt of their letter re the transfer of Electric Light consumers south of the village to the Hydro System.

C. R. Evans and S. H. Foster. That the account of Gordon B. Jackson for $40.00 covering the cost of defending court action re W. C. Andrews' motion to quash by-laws 704 and 705 be paid.

S. H. Foster and C. R. Evans: That the council indemnify and save lawless the County Treasurer J. J. Jamieson against all mistakes or otherwise which may be made by the Bank of Nova Scotia, Streetsville, in connection with the collection of arrears of Taxes by the said bank.

There being no further business the council adjourned.

No Depression In this Town

Quite a large and influential meeting was held in the town hall a few days ago, for the purpose of improving conditions and helping matters during this general depression.

Quite a number from the country were present and gave some very valuable suggestions.

The following were among those who were present:

The Reeve, Mr. Hope, and the blacksmith, Len Pope,
And our venerable friend, Jim Bailey,
AndD. W. Reid and Mr. Jim Steed,
And the postmaster, Mr. Staley.

Then Councillor Bonham said it was not uncommon
To hear people kicking about taking out their phones,
It was takes for this and takes for that,
Till some people were losing their homes.

Then Mr. Will Cooper went and told them a whooper,
When he said that nothing was lackin',
He said business was looming and egg prices were booming
And that he could prove it by Nat McCracken.

Then Mr. Fred Maas wanted to know the cause
Of such terrible prices for bacon,
When hogs were so cheap that they wouldn't pay for their keep
And that their feed was nearly all taken.

And—George Hamilton was there and I'd solemnly swear,
That there wasn't a man in the hall,
But what said if his chickens didn't scratch up more pick'ems
That they would all starve to death before fall.

Then Mr. John Dowling said, the farmers were howling
About the price of his wire and ploughs,
And young Jim Moore said there was one thing sure,
That there was no money in horses or cows.

And Mr. Stanley Hall said, he thought by next fall,
That wheat wouldn't pay for expenses,
Then where would he get the cash—to settle when he'd thresh,
Or to pay for some new wire fences.

Then Anderson May said he heard someone say,
That prices were coming all right,
But, when he went to sell his cream he found 'twas a dream,
For he would scarcely have enough to get tight.

Then just before night I heard Mr. White
Talking to Mr. McClure;
He said if the council got funny and didn't keep track of the money
That they would go to the wall for sure.

Then long after dark in came Mr. Clark,
With a letter from Beattie, the drover,
And when that letter was read, why—the chairman dropped dead,
Then of course this big meeting was over.

Streetsville Leads Lacrosse League

In pouring rain and on a slippery field, Streetsville defeated Port Credit at Port Credit grounds on Tuesday night.

The Credit boys got away to a flying start, but soon after Harry Hill was sent on, the score was evened up.

Referee Warr and Judge of Play Mullis handled skilfully a game which held its share of penalties.

The final score was, Streetsville 12 Port Credit 7. This win makes Streetsville leader in the League.

Hill scored 6 goals, Nixon 3, Baily 1. Clipperton 1, Steggall 1.

Note to Port Creditors—Even if Streetsville has a one-man team they can lick any 7 man team from Port Credit.

Here and There

Rev. C. S. Jones, of Cooksville was operated on for appendicitis at a Toronto Hospital.

Raymon Conant, aged 11, from Toronto, fell off a raft and drowned at Erindale last week.

Rev. S. G. Steele, pastor of the Caledon United Church, passed away on Tuesday, at Owen Sound while on a vacation. He was 56 and was formerly Presbyterian.

Margaret Esther McIntosh, wife of the late William Baker, passed away at Clarkson on Monday and was buried at St. Mary's R.C. Church Port Credit, this Thursday morning July 21st.

Richard Stanfield of Summerville died in St. Joseph's Hospital on Tuesday night as the result of an auto accident Sunday night at Dixie when struck by a passing car. He was 83. An inquest will be held.

The Council has made quite an improvement on the roadway beside the soldiers memorial and has built up a boulevarde, which has been underdrained. The public are requested not to drive on this new piece of work.

Mrs. Gabriel Ellingham passed away at her home in Cooksville at the age of 68. She leaves husband two daughters and one son. The funeral took place to the Dixie cemetery and was conducted by Rev. G. F. Banks, Erindale.

The Clarkson and Lorne Park Womens Institute entertained about 200 soldiers and nursing sisters from Christie Street Hospital to a strawberry festival at the home of Mr. C.R. Terry, Clarkson. A ball game and a program were features of the afternoon.

The many Peel County friends of Miss Josephine Blake, Canada's youngest solo violinist, will be glad to know that she was the winner over all competitors for the all-Canada Violin Trophy competed for under the auspices of the Home Music Committee at Toronto, last Thursday and also won three gold medals. She always attended the Peel County Music Festival where she received an award each year in the violin contests.

United Church had Good Garden Party

Yesterday morning the weather did not appear very promising for the United Church garden party at night, but the rain ceased and the evening was ideal. Over 500 people gathered on the Church grounds, and some came quite a distance.

Rev. G.H. Purchase occupied the chair. The program lasted two hours and was real good. The famous comedian, Bob Wilson, kept the audience in good humor with his funny sayings and actions. He was accompanied by Miss Grace Bonnick who has pleased local audiences before with her instrumentals and recitals. Miss Margaret McCulloch gave several splendid recitations and is an elocutionist of merit. Mr. Clair Rouse is a born musician and produced familiar tunes from different kinds of instruments. He styles himself the "one man band." The New Harmony Orchestra supplied excellent music for the occasion. All the artists were appreciated, and all were encored. The refreshment booths were well patronized, and the ladies of the church who conducted the event, are well pleased with the receipts.

THIS AND THAT

A good song is a healthful tonic, the singer forgets his sorrows.

In 1921 the rural population of Canada was more than 50 per cent. of the whole population, in 1931 it was just 46.29 per cent. Our urban population increased in ten years by one and a quarter million, our rural population increased 365,000.

The success of the recent Ontario loan goes to prove that investors have a great deal of ready money and they know a good place to put it.

Germany is said to have this year plenty of food for all her people. If she gets her war debts cancelled, and has plenty to eat, what more can she expect just now?

The press informs us that the Y.M.C.A.'s of Toronto have decided to provide free swimming lessons for all boys of that city who will take the trouble to attend, this is the beginning of a splendid service. But it is not only necessary to learn how to swim but to be cautious as well.

During these summer months many family re-unions take place. We think it very fine to have such gatherings when many of a connection can only meet at such a time. It is very true that blood is thicker than water and one's own coming together binds these ties of nature which are precious to Anglo-Saxons.

Low prices for farm produce had little effect in the attendance at Farm and Home Week at O.A.C. The change from regional gatherings in previous years worked out well and the short courses in animal and field husbandry, home economics, and horticulture were eminently successful and carried out. As a result many farmers and their wives secured essential information about various phases of farm life and work which they could have derived in no other manner.

The first shipment of Ontario strawberries to the West for a number of years was made by the Vineland Growers Co-operative Ltd. The shipment consisted of 500 crates of carefully selected and packed strawberries, pre-cooled at Grimsby and shipped via Canadian National Express refrigerator car. It is stated that this is a trial shipment and if these prove satisfactory a future market, it is hoped, will be opened up which will not only apply to strawberries but other fruits as well. As yet we have not fully grasped the possible outlet for various things grown in this Province.

It is estimated that by next spring Canada will have spent 200 million dollars in relief for the unemployed. It is stated by those in a position to know that it has cost $7 per day to give work to one man, hence it is considered that direct relief is the cheaper. It looks as if all relief this coming winter will be that of a direct nature excepting, possibly, any work which will be done on the Trans-Canada Highway. The problem of relief is before us and we shall do well to prepare for it and meet it in a way of cheerfulness as well as cautiousness.

The changed conditions of the world at the present time have made their impress upon all lines of commercial activity, especially is it noticed in the newspaper world. Old landmarks are being removed, word has reached us that another newspaper amalgamation has been announced and it has taken place in Collingwood. For 75 years the Enterprise carried on, the Bulletin had a life of 62 years but present day conditions called for an amalgamation. The Review extends best wishes to our worthy contemporary.

Car Bursts Into Flames

A light coach, owned by Gordon Armstrong, Georgetown, was completely destroyed when fire broke out from an overheated exhaust pipe last night. Reginald Bailey, Brampton, a passenger in the car, first noticed the flames, and was able to warn the driver in time for both to jump clear of the car before it burst into flames.

Induct New Minister of Windermere Church

Succeeding Rev. Dr. Patterson, who resigned last fall as minister of Windermere United Church, Rev. W. L. L. Lawrence, B.A., from Sault Ste. Marie was inducted as Windermere Church new minister. Rev. Murdock MacKinnon, newly appointed chairman of the West Toronto Presbytery conducted the ceremony. A brief address was given by Rev. J. Ewing Reid, M.A., of Alhambra United Church.

"Seldom before has the modern minister had such opportunities and responsibilities in the discharge of his duties," said Rev. Mr. Reid.

Rev. Hiram Hull, B.A., of Perth Avenue United Church, asked the congregation to support their new minister in every way possible.

HUTTONVILLE

Breaks Arm in Fall

When she fell as she was practising gymnastic stunts with "Red" George, at Huttonville Park, Vera Dawson, daughter of Bert Dawson, manager of the park suffered a compound fracture of the right arm. She was attended by Dr. Colin Heggie, of Brampton, Vera, who is only nine years old, is a member of the Dolphinets Swimming Club of Toronto.

A STUNT MAN'S JOB

Has to Defy Death In Many Forms

—Hung by One Hand From a Wire Half a Mile In Air.

Because he can balance on a roller skate at the edge of the roof of a skyscraper, and dive from a cliff into a lake without breaking anything but a record, Harvey Parry is now a technical director at one of the largest studios at Hollywood.

One of the two or three greatest stunt men in Hollywood or anywhere else, Parry has risked his life on an average of a hundred times a year for the past ten years.

"Nerves!" Parry dismissed the entire nervous system with a shrug. "What you need most for stunts is agility and an accurate eye. You have to gauge distances right or something happens."

As a professional stunt man he has been known to dive off tall buildings into a net, which in two instances was not there when he landed, and to swim apparently unswimmable rapids in mountain rivers by the aid of safety wires which, as it happened, somebody had removed before he plunged in.

The absence of the net from the spot where it should have been gave Parry a bad shakeup the first time he jumped. But after instructing the men as to the exact location for the net, he tried the jump again, from the roof of a house. When Parry, head first, was within 15 feet of the ground he saw that the net was far to his left. It's a tribute to his training as a diver that within those 15 feet he was able to somersault and land on his toes. Nevertheless, the impetus threw him over on his back with such force as to render him unconscious.

"My moment of greatest danger," Parry told an interviewer, "was five minutes long. I had done a stunt three times on the wing of an airplane. On the third attempt, the cameras caught it all right and I started back across the wing to the cabin of the ship. But I was tired, and when the plane hit an air pocket, I fell off. In dropping, I just managed to catch a wire with one hand. And there I was, my body blown straight backward by the rush of air from the propellors, hanging by one hand 2,500 feet in the air. I owe my life to Frank Clark, a cracker-jack aviator. The wire was cutting through my hand and I was set for the world's highest dive—without a parachute—when Clark tipped his plane and threw me against the side with such a bang that my feet went right through the fuselage. And then, of course, they hauled me in.

"Was I scared? You said it!"

JAP PHOTOGRAPHS SOUND.

Unusual Shadows Formed by Vibrations Photographed by Camera.

Sound and even its echo have been made visible by a camera designed by Baron Shiba in the Japanese Imperial Institute in Tokio. They are made by producing 40,000 intense flashes of light a second in front of a moving film and lens.

On being reproduced on the screen the sound was a moving shadow, behaving much like the waves that result from dropping a pebble into water. The sound was produced by an electric spark in a transparent, oily liquid. Before the sound, nothing was to be seen on the screen except a dark spot, which was the spark apparatus, and the outline of the glass vessel holding the liquid.

The effect of the spark was to compress the invisible particles in contact with it. This momentary change altered the angle of the light rays shining through them. Such an alteration ordinarily is invisible, being too rapid for the eye. But at 40,000 pictures a second, the light changes showed plainly as shadows ranging from a smoky looking line to occasional blackness. The shadow of the start always was ring-shaped, widening rapidly.

All the sounds were made in glass containers, so that when the widening ring reached the glass walls, it rebounded. This rebound also could be seen plainly. Actually it was the picture of an echo.

GHOSTS OR BIRDS.

Feathered Folk Seen In Dim Light Assume Uncanny Appearance.

Birds are responsible for more ghost stories than any other creatures of the wild.

In all parts of the world the weird cries of night birds, or their rather unearthly forms when seen, apparently double their size in the gloaming, have been the origin of superstitions.

Some time ago in Scotland there was a sensational report of a great bird that had arrived in a certain district. Those who were supposed to have seen it were interviewed, and they described it as a gigantic kind of eagle which stood six feet in height!

At the time a mist enveloped the mountains and valleys, and all these observers had seen the bird through the mist. But their stories were believed, local children were only allowed to travel under armed escort, and there was talk of closing the school.

The cry of the bird was described so well by those who had heard it that a naturalist was able to reassure the scared inhabitants. Their visitor was a harmless buzzard which had been magnified into an impossible creature by the fog and their imagination.

SPARROWS CLEAN RADIATORS.

At last the sparrow, generally regarded as a pest, is useful to mankind. Motorists, who dislike to see the front of their radiators strewn with butterflies, moths and fleas, need worry no more, for the sparrow loves such delicacies. Some have been seen perched on a radiator, pecking away at the dead insects.

Moving pictures shows in Great Britain are visited by something like [illegible] people every week.

IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE

The Aztec Mystery

A Thrilling Story of the Old West

BY MURRAY LEINSTER

SYNOPSIS.

Sonny Holman, believing he is the rightful owner of the Aztec mine, holds up the mine's payrolls. Janet Laurier, who holds legal title to the Aztec, offers a reward for his capture. Janet is kidnapped by Garcia's gang and Sonny rescues her. Tilford, manager of the mine, announces his candidacy for sheriff, and Sonny decides to run under the name of John Doe. Garcia's men run off some cattle and Sonny riding in pursuit, is cornered by some of Janet's mine guards. He escapes but his horse is shot. Janet has the horse doctored, intending to give it back and at the same time plead with Sonny to leave the country. Tilford apparently falls in with her plan but in reality schemes to deliver her over to Garcia.

CHAPTER XVIII.

The horse pricked up his ears and mended his pace again. But just here he elected to turn into a narrow defile where it was necessary to pick his way very carefully indeed, and he moved with what seemed snail-like slowness to the suddenly white-faced girl on his back.

Out of that, he moved more rapidly, but his forehoof seemed to bother him considerably. Once he stopped as if to rest, and Janet urged him on frantically. She shook the reins and he began to lope dutifully, but she could feel that he considered himself being ridden and was no longer picking his own path. When she let the reins lie slack again he slowed up and stood stock still again, looking around at her inquiringly. With clenched fists she resisted the temptation to drive him on at random. Presently, meditatively, he ambled back a part of the way she had ridden him and again began to move up a small side valley.

He forged steadily ahead here, but once when he was moving quietly across soft earth Janet heard the faint but unmistakable clatter of horses' hoofs echoed bewilderingly from behind her.

Her teeth began to chatter then, and she drew out the small revolver Tilford had given her. She was deathly pale. The big stallion stopped again and lifted his injured foot from the ground.

"Gunpowder! Please! Gunpowder! You must go on! Oh, please—"

And then, quite suddenly, she heard the clattering of hoofs upon stone, and a laugh. The rocks echoed and re-echoed the sound as if in demoniacal mockery. She heard the smack of a quirt against a horse's side. She turned, desperately.

Men—Garcia's men—were racing toward her, grinning. They called to her unspeakable things.

She raised her tiny revolver in a panic and pulled the trigger. It clicked futilely. She pulled the trigger again, again.

The empty clicking that showed her helplessness was drowned out in a shrill whistle that seemed to come from far ahead and high above. Somewhere a gun bellowed, and simultaneously the black stallion pricked up his ears and plunging forward at top speed, almost jerking Janet from her saddle.

A revolver exploded with a shattering roar almost beneath Gunpowder's feet as he breasted the top of the rise, and there was Sonny Holman, lying at full length and sighting for another shot into the yelling, milling mass of men below.

"Go on ahead, ma'am," he drawled. "I'll be with yuh in a minute. This here world, ma'am, is gettin' smaller an' smaller."

The revolver went off again, and somewhere down below a horse screamed. Popping sounded, and the air began to be full of tiny whining noises which went spitefully overhead. Once something struck a boulder with an eerie screech and went whizzing erratically off into nowhere by itself.

Janet saw Sonny's mount then, a straggly cowpony with its reins tossed over its head. She dismounted and picked up the reins. When Sonny came bolting from cover after half a dozen shots, she tossed them to him.

"That there's co-operation," he drawled as he swung into the saddle. He leaned over to pat Gunpowder's neck with his hand, and his eyes were luminous. "You brung yourself a welcome, ma'am. What's all happenin'? Those are Garcia's men, I know, ma'am, an' seein' you tryin' to shoot at 'em proved it. But howcome you're out thisaway an' right on my very doorsteps, so to speak? Until I get a good shot at Garcia, it ain't healthy none around here for ladies."

"I was trying to find you." Janet forced the words out, though she was half choked by the reaction from her terror of a moment before.

"To the right here, ma'am," drawled Sonny. "An' why were you kinda huntin' me up? You needn't ha' come here. A postcard care of the Gila County Outlaw's Association would a found me."

"I was going to give you Gunpowder—and tell you to leave the country," Janet managed to say. "That you had to go."

Sonny turned to look behind. The way was still innocent of pursuers. He smiled with a trace of grimness. "I've heard you say that before, ma'am," he drawled. "Right now it ain't possible. Besides those fellers behind—"

"My mine guards are following my trail," Janet broke in anxiously. "They'll get rid of the men who are chasing us if we can elude them a little longer."

"Yeah?" Sonny's tone was indescribable, but it at least implied doubt. "Only, ma'am, we're boxed in right now. There ain't any side ways for us to turn off. We got to go to my hangout. An' this mornin', ridin' back home, I found that li'l thread I always stretch across the trail was broke. I hunted for sign, an' I found it. There's two hombres in my hangout now, waitin' for me to walk in an' get shot."

He inspected his revolver thoughtfully. "I'm right much obliged for Gunpowder," he said abruptly. "I rek'n y' didn't know what yuh was doin' when yuh rid him this far."

The way swerved sharply here and they were in a little canyon with precipitous sides, practically blocked by a monster rock slide from above.

Faint yells of rage came from far behind.

"They've found we've gone on," said Janet faintly.

"Yes'm," agreed Sonny grimly. "They have. An' yuh see how much cover there is. There's my hangout, with Garcia's two hombres waitin' for me. They're watchin' us now. I'm goin' t' walk in on 'em."

"They'll kill you!"

"That's the object," agreed Sonny. "Mebbe they will."

He rode in a leisurely fashion up to the very mouth of a cavern which yawned at the base of the chaotic rock fall. He dismounted and seemed to make some minor adjustment to his saddle. Janet's hand went to her throat.

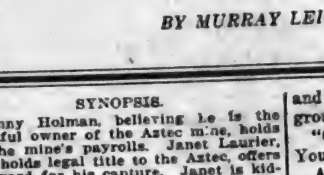
"I'm afraid!" she gasped. "Please—oh, I don't want you to be killed!"

Sonny lifted his head and smiled curiously at her over the neck of his mount. "Ma'am," he said gently, "I got a lot o' reason to dislike you, an' I ain't got a reason in the world to love you. But somehow, I kinda got an idea that there ain't any bullets can kill me until you're safe again."

He turned and walked toward the mouth of the cave. There was no reason why the men he knew to be waiting should not kill him as he good. Had he given the least sign of knowing they were within, they would have fired at once. As it was, however, he rolled a cigaret with steady fingers and paused to strike a match. He flicked the match away and went on. Perhaps some Latin love of the dramatic inspired the men in wait to hold their fire. Perhaps his carelessness suggested a lingering instant of gloating before the shots were fired. But he moved jauntily up to the mouth of the cave. He disappeared into the blackness inside. A puff of cigaret smoke drifted out an instant later, and curled away and dissipated itself with terrifying slowness before Janet's agonized eyes.

She pressed her hand against her mouth to keep from screaming. There was silence—silence. And then, dull and muffled, there was an explosion. Next a sudden roaring of shots in such quick succession that they seemed one continuous detonation. A long time later, a single shot. Then silence again.

It lasted for a time that seemed an age. Janet closed her eyes, unable to endure the emptiness of the cave mouth. She heard a yell, a triumphant yell. Her head jerked about. Men on horseback, Garcia's men, were riding toward her in grinning confidence. Janet alone before the cave that was Sonny Holman's hiding place, and Sonny Holman's mount standing idly by, could mean but one thing. Sonny had gone inside. And Garcia's followers were thoroughly informed about what had awaited Sonny inside that cave. Perhaps they had heard, however faintly, the explosions from within. They trotted forward without haste. Janet could not possibly escape. The canyon ended in blindly tumbled rocks.



They were a hundred yards away and she was paralyzed with fright. The revolver Tilford had given her came into her hand seemingly without volition. They were fifty yards away. Twenty-five——

Sonny's shrill whistle sounded. Gunpowder twirled and streaked for the cavern opening as Sonny's gun bellowed. The big stallion crowded inside, the other horse after him, instinctively following any motion made by another animal.

"Duck down, ma'am," drawled Sonny unsteadily. "The roof drops there."

Janet nearly fell from the big horse's back as he came to a halt in what seemed a spacious chamber hollowed from the living rock. The sound of Sonny's gun reverberated deafeningly from the opening. Janet staggered to the side wall and leaned against it.

Deserted

The robin's nest beneath the eaves
Is vacant now—its cheery note
Is silent, naught but rustling leaves
Replace the music of its throat.

The wren's house, too, is desolate,
Its tiny windows dumbly stare
And wonderingly seem to wait
Its thrifty tenant's love and care.

And often, when the skies were gray,
Its singing brought a gleam of light,
I was amazed that such a lay
Could issue from a form so slight.

Hushed stillness now is everywhere;
And though I miss each bright refrain,
My heart enshrines their songs, I share
This rapture till they come again.

Ocean Floor Still Shifting

Washington.—Shifting and heaving of the ocean bottom which forms the five-mile-deep Bartlett trough south of Cuba still is going on, causing earthquakes in that region, says a report to the American Geophysical Union.

This shifting of two blocks of the earth's crust is called faulting.

"This is the explanation of the earthquakes that occur frequently along the borders of the Bartlett trough," says Dr. Stephen aber, of the University of South Carolina. "The recent Santiago earthquake was due to a displacement along a fault within the Bartlett trough a short distance south of Santiago Bay."

The Bartlett trough, sometimes called a "deep," is 1,000 miles long and 100 miles wide. It lies between Cuba and Jamaica. The tidal waves that accompany many earthquakes in the region of the trough show that the ocean bottom is heaved up and down as well as moved horizontally during the faulting.

Charlie Chaplin is Hollywood's Richest Actor

Hollywood.—If the assessor's figures for 1932 are correct, Charlie Chaplin is the wealthiest member of the screen colony. The comedian was credited with stocks and bonds valued at $7,687,570, and cash and money owed amounting to $295,000. He had an automobile appraised at $770.

The only thing Gloria Swanson had that was taxable was a gold harp, assessed at $350. Greta Garbo's automobile was figured at $220. Her securities were listed at $122,010.

Douglas Fairbank had $698,690 in securities. Harold Lloyd was credited with $109,940 in furniture, $174,450 in bonds, and a $341,000 home.

Zings and Zutes

Twentieth century hunters of the lower calibre in Trinidad, southerly island in the British West Indies, have this quatrian to keep fresh in their minds their scale of values.

Two zings one zute,
Two zutes one maharo,
Two maharos one cigarette,
Two cigarettes one cent.

A zing is a cigarette butt, so small as to call for the aid of a pin in smoking it; a zute is a slight improvement over a zing, and a maharo is that rare find, "a whole half fag."

Vacation Automats Appear in Germany

Facilitate Choice of Holiday —Horse Coming Back— Other Notes

Berlin.—Press the button and up bobs a vacation—at least the place where a vacation or week-end may be enjoyed. For under one roof in Berlin, almost the whole of Germany has been assembled in miniature to aid those who are searching for a place for their week-ends. The display—part of Berlin's summer exhibition, "Sun, Light and Homes for All"—makes use of elaborate relief maps equipped with electric lights. The visitor who wants, for instance, to know the location of a watering place or mountain resort, simply presses a button on an alphabetical list. The light flashes on upon the map. But "Sonne, Luft and Haus fur Alle" goes further than merely telling the visitor where to go for a week-end. Static and animated exhibits in a large hall depict the workman at his tasks and show advantages of rest and recreation. The means of transport are also suggested — ranging from full-sized Luft-Hansa transport planes to mahogany and rubber "kayaks" or canoes, to be shot over placid waters with the aid of a double-bladed paddle. But when one arrives—where does one stay? The exhibit also answers this question with an elaborate display of "growing" houses. They are designed especially for week-enders, and priced at reasonable figures. First the purchaser buys a single room. It is a complete house. As he desires to enlarge he buys another room. The French door that led out into the garden now leads into the bedroom. Other sections may similarly be added, until the house has completely "grown up."

Water Fuel For Motors

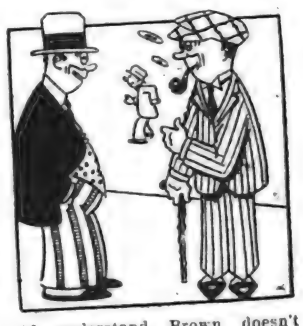
A "gasoline" engine which uses water for "fuel" has been developed by a Berlin engineer. The engine is designed to take the place of small turbines and to operate under very light pressure. The inventor, who claims to have already submitted models to practical tests, desired to make use of water pressures comparable to those found in the ordinary kitchen water tap. He discarded the customary turbine technique and designed an engine with pistons that operates almost on the same theory as a gasoline motor, except that hydraulic pressure takes the place of gas explosions. The engine is said to be adapted to providing power for varoius household devices, such as washing machines and vacuum cleaners, and even for generating electric power.

The Horse Comes Back

Horse cabs are now used instead of rubberneck cars to convey sight-seers through the old sections of Berlin. hTe first attempt was recently made with much success. Old Berlin rubbed its eyes and looked with amazement at forty tumble-down horse cabs rumbling through its quiet streets. The sleepy courts woke up at the familiar sound of wooden wheels rumbling over cobblestones, and joyfully re-echoed the clatter of the horses' hoofs and the crack of the whips. The strains of an old hurdy-gurdy playing long-forgotten Berlin melodies floated through the air and the chimes of the Nikolai church began to ring out quaint old tunes. The people in the forty cabs certainly must have thought that the '90's had returned. They reveled in recollections as they drove down the old Splittberg-Gasse where Frederick the Great had founded the first Berlin sugar refinery and passed the remnants of the city wall nea rthe old Koelnische Park. And that exactly was the purpose of this strange ride; to enable people to view the old parts of the city in a way which would make them forget that just around the corner cars and subways, stop and go signals, and dazzling signs bespoke the age of engineering. Incidentally, the few remaining horse cabs which have fought a brave fight against the advancing taxicab are given some work to do. Twenty years ago driving in a motorcar was a thrill. To-day a ride in a horse cab is almost as great an adventure.

Electrical Anniversary

Pioneer electric lights, shining with brave steadiness in a curious world, were recalled as members of the Society of Electrical Engineers celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of an international electrical exhibition held in the Bavarian capital in 1882—the first of its kind in Germany. From it sprang the beginnings of German electrification of devices, organizations, and plans which have endured to the present day. It was there that Herr Sigmund Schuckert—who became a member of one of Germany's largest electrical concerns—exhibited a pioneer dynamo. And Dr. Oscar von Miller, founder of the German Technical Museum, presented the first German experiments in long-distance power transmission, sending 1500 and 2000 volts over a fifty-seven-kilometer (thirty-five-mile) line. Herr Emil Rathenau and Dr. von Miller the next year formed the German Edison Company, which later became the General Electric Company in Germany.



Scientists Manufacture Vitamins From Light

Cambridge, Eng.—Two young Cambridge scientists have made the important discovery that vitamins, the presence of which in food is necessary to health, can be "manufactured" with the aid of light.

The scientists are Dr. F. B. Bowden and Dr. C. P. Snow. Their discovery is the outcome of research work at the laboratory of physical chemistry at Cambridge.

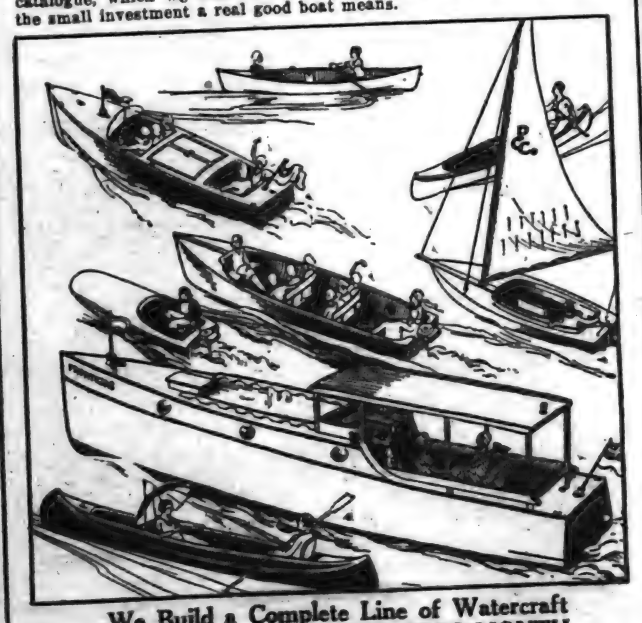
Their chief find is that vitamin A which especially helps the body to resist infection, can be made from carotene—the substance which gives the color to carrots.

The carotene (called a pre-vitamin) was converted into vitamin A by the absorption of ultra-violet rays of a particular wavelength to which it was subjected. They are also experimenting with wavelengths for other vitamins.

"I understand Brown doesn't stammer so much since he got married."

"Of course not. He gets fewer chances to talk."

Women's Clothes



Sir Ernest Graham-Little, in delivering the Malcolm Morris Memorial Lecture in London last month, said that women were very much healthier and physically stronger, because of the adoption in recent years of female fashions which exposed considerable surfaces of the body to light and air.

The ancient Egyptians, Greeks, and Romans were much more alive to the beneficial action of sunlight and cool air upon the skin, paid much more attention to baths and physical exercises, and were much more natural in the simplicity of their foods. The vogue of sun-bathing, of spa treatment, of hiking, represented modern rediscoveries of tonic influences, much better understood by the ancients than by moderns of a generation ago.

The Aztec Mystery

A Thrilling Story of the Old West

BY MURRAY LEINSTER

SYNOPSIS.

Sonny Holman, believing he is the rightful owner of the Aztec Mine, holds up the mine payrolls. Janet Laurier offers a reward for his capture. She is kidnapped by Garcia's gang, but Sonny rescues her. Tilford, the mine foreman, imports some mine guards. Sonny is visiting a ranch when news comes of cattle rustlers. Sonny rides after the rustlers and brings back the stolen cattle, but his horse, Gunpowder is shot. Janet secretly has the horse doctored.

CHAPTER XVII.

Gunpowder lifted his head suddenly and gazed at the entrance to the stable. Tilford was coming in. He looked acutely nervous and he was fidgeting with his watch chain as he came toward Janet. The stallion jerked his head away and moved aside as the mine superintendent drew near.

"I paid that vet, Miss Laurier," said Tilford uneasily. "He's on his way back to Leftover. When do you intend to start?"

"In about an hour," replied Janet.

"I'll get the men and dogs out at once then," said Tilford. "We're going to use liver and aniseed boiled together," he announced. "Any dog in the world will follow that scent anywhere, just as a cat will follow catnip. You won't be in any danger, Miss Laurier."

"I'm not afraid," said Janet slowly. "Somehow I don't think Mr. Holman would harm me."

"You forget," Tilford interposed harshly, "that he has been robbing your mine, and in company with Garcia."

"I wonder if he is really helping Garcia," said Janet uncertainly.

Tilford moved uneasily. "There can't be any doubt about that. Your kidnapping—"

"He saved me then," Janet shivered a little.

Tilford waved his hand impatiently. "That was jealousy," he said brutally. "I have a small pistol for you. You can hide it somewhere, in case of need."

"I'll take it." Janet reached out absently to touch Gunpowder. "But I don't think I'll need it. I'll get ready."

She stroked Gunpowder's muzzle again almost apologetically, and went slowly out of the stable. Tilford watched her go and when she had disappeared his expression changed. He drew a handkerchief from his pocket and mopped his forehead. He began to tremble.

A grinning halfbreed appeared from nowhere and regarded him insolently, with his hands in his pockets. "Bueno, hombre," he said amiably, "but w'y you geev' 'er a peestol?"

"It—it won't shoot," said Tilford harrassedly. Good God! What a thing you've made me do!"

The halfbreed laughed. "There ees more," he said pleasantly. "The Senor Garcia, 'e is vairy angree, So 'e asks one more theeng, an' then 'e weel be frien's weth you again."

Tilford shuddered. "It's not too late to stop now," he said suddenly, in weak desperation. "I warn you, you can't drive me too far! I can tell Miss Laurier everything."

The halfbreed grinned once more. "W'at deed you fin' in your desk thees morneeng?"

Tilford clenched and unclenched his fists. "A rattler," he groaned. "A rattlesnake—dead."

"Si!" The halfbreed nodded and grinned. "Eet was shedding eets skin, too, Teelford. Eef eet had been put in there alive?"

The flare of desperation that had made Tilford seem about to issue a fierce defiance evaporated. He shivered, but strove to keep up a pretense of resistance. "Well, what more does he want?"

"The nex' ore sheepment," said the halfbreed calmly.

Tilford clenched his hands. Then he said: "And what is my split?"

The halfbreed grinned.

"You?" His air was insolence undiluted. "Why, hombre, you leeve!"

He swaggered to the door of the stables, swept off his sombrero with ironic politeness, and was gone.

Tilford shuddered and ground his teeth at the same instant. This was a clear enough indication of Garcia's future intentions. He, Tilford, would be less than a tool from now on. Now he was reduced to the status of a servant. The ore stealing had been Tilford's idea from the first. He had promoted Garcia from the lowly way of horsethief to the nobler estate of mine robber. The rise of Garcia to power and even his safety up to the present time was due solely to Tilford's assistance and advice.

And now Garcia had turned the tables neatly. The six guards Tilford had hired with Janet's funds would not protect him against such tricks as half-blind rattlesnakes in his desk. Tilford's life hung by a thread which a word from Garcia would snap. And now he would receive as his reward for more dangerous criminality than eve before, not larger sums, nor even the same, but simply the privilege of continuing to live as Garcia's most despised underling.

Rage swept over Tilford, while terror invaded the very marrow of his bones. He knew Garcia too well not to fear him. But even a coward has his courage if pushed far enough, and the desperation only a coward can feel was possessing Tilford just now.

He went back to his office, casting wildly about for plans. From the office window he watched Janet ride out of Moleville and toward the hills. He watched until she was out of sight, biting at his finger ends in an agony of indecision.

But when she had vanished he reached for the telephone on his desk. He called for the Circle Bar, trying to make his voice steady as he did so. And he asked for Thompson, who a week before had shown his scorn and distrust as plainly as it was possible for a man to do.

Janet rode slowly but steadily toward the hills until the first gentle rises of the slopes were under Gunpowder's feet. Then she let the reins hang slack, though from time to time she urged the big stallion onward with her voice. He hesitated more than once, uneasy at the lack of guidance. Each time he halted she spoke for him to move on. And presently he seemed to make up his mind what was wanted and walked steadily forward. He found what seemed to be a trail, though no sign was visible to Janet, and he followed its ramblings here and three, picking his way as if he knew just where he was going. Once, indeed, of his own volition he broke into a trot.

And this was just what Janet had expected and was counting on. Knowing the stallion's intelligence, she had believed that if he were released he would find his way to Sonny Holman's hangout. And the stallion's hoofs had been soaked in a mixture of boiled liver and aniseed which to a dog is as fascinating as catnip to a cat. Any dog will follow that scent anywhere. To make assurance doubly sure, the bandage still about Gunpowder's forelock contained a sponge soaked in the same pungent liquid. Drops would fall from that with sufficient regularity to leave a trail irresistible to a canine nose.

The mine guards were waiting somewhere along the route with a motley of Moleville dogs. They would pick up the trail and follow it leisurely. When they judged the sign was fresh, the dogs would be muzzled and the pursuit would be more swift. And even Sonny Holman would be forced to surrender by such overwhelming force.

Janet counted upon encountering Sonny Holman either at his hangout or before it and she was resolved to give him his choice of flight, immediate and final, or combat with the six pursuers. She could not explain even to herself why she was willing for him to escape punishment for what she considered his crimes. She assured herself, without conviction, that it was because she did not want to be the cause of a battle in which men might be killed and in which Sonny would surely die.

The way was long. Gunpowder had started out more than usually mettlesome, from his week's confinement, but as he made his way up into the mountains the recurrent shocks of his injured hoof striking upon unyielding stone tended to make him favor it a little. Perhaps from pride, he would not limp, but his pace was undeniably slower as he wound deeper and deeper into the hills.

The sun had been little past the zenith when Janet set out, but it moved slowly onward and began to decline toward the west. Shadows appeared and lengthened in the canyons that had been places of a curious baking heat at midday, despite the thinness of the mountain air. A peculiar chill seemed to gather beneath the frowning cliffs. Janet felt a momentary chill of fear. But then Gunpowder, with the air of a horse who knew exactly what he was about, turned to follow a dried up stream bed that went where no horse would ever go unless bound for a definite destination, and the certitude of his action comforted her.

He picked his way among the boulders and scrambled up what must have been a rushing cascade in the spring thaws, and came out suddenly upon a shoulder of rock that gave a limited but clear view for a long way back along the trail he had followed. Janet looked back and down and saw the last of a cavalcade of horsemen just disappearing behind an intervening upreaving of rock. She saw only the last two or three of them and was frozen for a moment.

"But—but I guess they are our men," she said uncertainly. "They must be. Their hats looked very big—like sombreros, and our men wear Stetsons. But it must be our men—Gunpowder, hurry. Hurry!"

Declares Tree Housed One Thousand Birds

The Sunday Oregonian of Portland recently held a contest for strange and true wild life stories. The following, by J. R. Molyneau, won first prize:

"With several friends I was on a fishing trip to Lost Lake in the eastern part of Clark County Washington recently. We were all busy casting when all of a sudden from a hole about two-thirds of the way up an old dead fir tree probably 150 feet high birds started to come. They literally poured out for five or six minutes, until the air was positively alive with them. A conservative estimate of their numbers, as they soared over the little three-acre lake would have been from 1,000 to 1,200.

"They would fly down to the water and skip along the top, evidently drinking or bathing.

"The birds continued to fly around in this manner until each one had had its turn at drinking and bathing, and then, at a signal from the flight commander (if there was one), they started pouring back into the hole in the tree. In five minutes or more there was not a bird in sight.

"After a few minutes members of our party, desiring to see the same performance again, went to the foot of the tree, endeavoring to frighten the birds out, but there were no results.

"If anyone doubt this unusual story, there are three other eyewitnesses will corroborate my statement.

"I would like very much to know what kind of birds these are and their habits also. How could so many birds possibly live in one hollow tree?"

Advertising Boosts Sales In Britain

London.—Proof that a vigorous and systematic policy of advertising can offset the effects of even acute and widespread business recession is found in some commercial figures recently published here.

Of a number of leading business firms in Great Britain which increased their profits last year over the preceding one, at least two-thirds attributed this success to increased advertising persistently carried out over a full year's schedule. One of the most conspicuous examples of this was Upsons, Ltd., shoe manufacturers, which last year opened nine new branches.

The chairman of the company stated: "In pursuance of a vigorous policy of expansion, advertising was increased with excellent results especially from newspapers and periodicals. Both the number of customers and the turnover of the business have greatly increased."

More Speed

By Sir Malcolm Campbell in Popular Mechanics.

World's record speeds are decided by fractions of a second. Tuning a car for a world mark is therefore a battle against time. To win, you must have a combination of a perfect car, the right course and favorable weather. And I am going to add another requisite—luck, which always plays a large part in such undertakings. By luck I mean what Americans call having the "breaks."

Daytona Beach, Fla., is the only place I know where it is possible to make world's land-speed records. The sand packs almost as hard as cement, and there is sufficient length to get up speed. The measured mile is set as near the centre of the 12-mile course as possible. There is a wire stretched at each end of the measured mile—or any other distance that may be wished—and the impact of the car's front wheels on the wire is transmitted to the electrical timing machine. One trip is made in each direction, and the average for the two is the official speed made. This is done so that no advantage may be had from the wind.

I have been making records with the "Bluebird" for six years. My first trip to America was in 1928, when I made a world mark of 206.95 miles an hour over the measured mile. The following year I went to South Africa to try a dry lake bed for speed, because my record had been beaten by an American driver, Ray Keech. I used the same engine as the year before and made a new record of 211.491 miles an hour. In 1931 I came to America again after the record, which in the meantime had been raised by my fellow-countryman, Major Segrave, to 231.626 miles an hour. I knew that my old car as she was could not hope to equal that record, so I installed a new engine of 1450 horsepower with a supercharger. The frontal area was cut from 1 to 15 square feet by changing the body design. The driveshaft was placed to the left of the centre of the car and a larger stabilizing fin was built at the rear. This car did 245.733 miles an hour at Daytona. Afterward I felt the "Bluebird" was good for a few miles more and we reduced the size of the radiator somewhat and dropped the lines of the nose. The result this year was my mark of 253.968 miles an hour.

he motor of the "Bluebird" is a 12-cylinder supercharged Napier with three banks of four cylinders each the centre bank vertical, the two outside banks at 60 degrees. The engine has a safe speed of approximately 3,700 revolutions a minute. At this speed each piston changes direction 7,400 times a minute. Gas consumption is approximately 45 gallons an hour. Eight or ten minutes is required to warm up the motor properly.

A car is only as fast as its tires will permit and only as good as its component parts. The "Bluebird" tires are of 12-ply construction with a two-ply construction with a two-ply breaker strip. Each cord is the size of the lead in a normal pencil the pressure is 120 pounds. The tire-sizes are 35 by 6 inches front, and 37 by 6 inches in the rear. These tires served me for one complete round trip of the course, roughly about 24 miles. They are built to withstand a speed of 300 miles an hour and, to do this, they are all carcass—they have only enough rubber over the cords to make a smooth surface and keep dampness out. They revolve at a speed of 2,600 times a minute during a world's record trial, and that is one reason their air pressure is so high—to prevent flexing due to the terrific centrifugal pressure occurring while they turn.

A record-speed car is the result of evolution. I do not say that one could not be built without previous experience, but I do say that experience is a great help. It is my hope to be the first to drive an automobile 300 miles an hour. There is no question at all that someone is going to do it within the next five years. I believe that there is no limit to the ultimate speed of a land vehicle. If one can drive 200 miles an hour, why not 250? And thence onward to 275 and 300? I have actually reached a top speed of 275 miles an hour in my present car. I can't see any problem of stability, of tires, nor of mechanical perfection that can't keep abreast of the increase in speed.

Body design is most important. As the speed increases one must increase the horsepower or decrease the head resistance, or both, and at the same time design the body so that the car will maintain close contact with the ground. It is not enough merely to make a sloping nose and tail. It is not enough to figure that the downward pressure of the atmosphere will hold the nose of the car down, and that the sweep of the body to the rear will hold the rear end down so that traction may be maintained. There is a delicacy of design required to accomplish this; the car must not be heavy from pressure at either end—it must be balanced exactly, weight distribution must be correct.

This year I made five records, the longest of which was 10 kilometers (6.2 miles). I did this on a 12-mile course. This brings in a very fine point of acceleration and deceleration. One cannot guess at the distance required for these two—he must know. If my car is travelling say, 250 miles an hour, it is going to require approximately two miles for it to decelerate to 200 miles an hour. To decelerate from 200 to 100 miles an hour, and on down to zero, requires another three miles. Take the ten-kilometer distance on a 12-mile course. Running southward at Daytona Beach, the ten-kilometer distance starts at approximately the third mile and ends at the ninth. Since it takes the "Bluebird" between four and five miles to get up speed, I am not travelling at near top speed when I enter the ten-kilometer. Instead of going 250 miles an hour, I am travelling at approximately 230 miles an hour. My speed increases as I go. Now in order that I may be able to decelerate safely and come to a stop, I must back off the throttle while I am still in the ten-kilometer distance. In fact, I begin backing off a mile or so before I reach the end. This must be done gradually—to lift the foot entirely and instantly would mean disaster. I begin gradually, and have not entirely released my pressure on the throttle pedal until I have gone a full mile. Even then I am travelling about 200 miles an hour. Leaving my engine in gear to get its braking effect, I do not use my brakes until my speed has been reduced to 100 or 125 miles an hour. They would not be much use above that and would only be burnt up by applying them. By slowing up before the end of the ten-kilometer, I cheat myself of quite a bit of speed, but I make stopping safe. In the case of the kilometer and the mile, I enter them going practically at full speed and come out the same way.

To make a perfect record, one must have a perfect beach. In addition, visibility must be good and there should be no wind. This is a difficult combination to realize—almost impossible. I never have had it. On the first day of my trials this year, the beach was in good condition, visibility was poor and the wind was decidedly bad. Peculiar thing about the wind; it appears to help very little, but to retard a great deal when driving into it. Two days later the wind was just as strong and the beach was rough. I got a terrific bumping; my wheels left the ground at points and spun free, yet my southward run was made in 14 seconds over the mile, an average of 257.142 miles an hour.

Tests Assist Youths To Shape Careers

London.—As the result of an experiment, recently conducted in Birmingham, it has been established that children leaving school can be fitted into suitable occupations more readily by the help of tests of "bents" and "aptitudes" than by the usual methods of school reports and "impressions" at interviews.

The experiment has been conducted jointly by the Birmingham education authority and the National Institute of Industrial Psychology. The 300 boys and girls leaving three elementary schools in 1928 were divided into two groups, one forming the "tested" and one the "control" group. The children in the "tested" group were examined for intelligence and other special aptitudes, and a "rating" was made of outstanding temperamental traits. The vocational recommendations was based on these findings. The "control" group were not tested, but were advised in the ordinary way at the school-leaving conference.

The careers were followed up over a period of two years and comparisons were made, which showed in all classes the superiority of the advice based upon tests.

Co-operative Cattle Shows Popular In Hungary

A noticeable change in agricultural shows held lately has been that co-operative societies of cattle farmers and breeders are gradually superseding big estate owners in both number and quality of cattle exhibited, and they are carrying off the principal prizes. It is a slight but sure sign of the gradual change coming over the Hungarian countryside, due to post-war economic conditions. At the same time, where horses are concerned, such fine teams as those of the five white "Lipizzaner" of Count Franz Esterhazy or the four dapple-greys of Count Johann Hadik have not yet been equalled by any teams from these organized societies. Horsemanship is deeply ingrained in the Hungaran nature, and all classes in the nation unite in enthusiastic appreciation of good jumping and riding. The keen ambition of the young peasant farmer, anxious to carry back to his village the chief prize of the day, leads often to excellent equestrian displays, accompanied by much good-humored comment from competitors and onlookers.

Boy Scouts of Montreal Will Watch Eclipse

Montreal.—The Boy Scouts of this city have been given perhaps one of the most unusual "jobs" ever given to a troup of that organization. During the total eclipse of the sun on Aug. 31, Boy Scouts will be stationed along the edges of the predicted path of the eclipse to establish definitely the actual limits of the darkness area. The boys will attend a lecture at McGill University before the eclipse to learn about their duties. The darkened area will stretch from the Arctic by way of Hudson Bay and James Bay, across the St. Lawrence River east of Montreal, over the northeastern part of Vermont, all of northen and central New Hampshire and the southwest corner of Maine, darken Cape Ann and the eastern part of Cape Cod and then pass out to sea.

The duration of the total phase of the eclipse along the central line of the path will be about 100 seconds. The eclipse will occur about 3.30 o'clock in the afternoon, eastern standard time, when the sun is more than halfway down the sky.

Due to competition by buses and a falling off of freight business in 1931, the report of the privately owned railroads in Sweden, recently made public in Stockholm, shows a net loss of 5,160,000 kronor (about $1,000,000) last year, compared with a net profit of 1,191,000 kronor in 1930.

The people of Great Britain are living much longer. In one big friendly society there are 21,616 members over seventy years of age; 3,772 over eighty, and 106 over ninety.

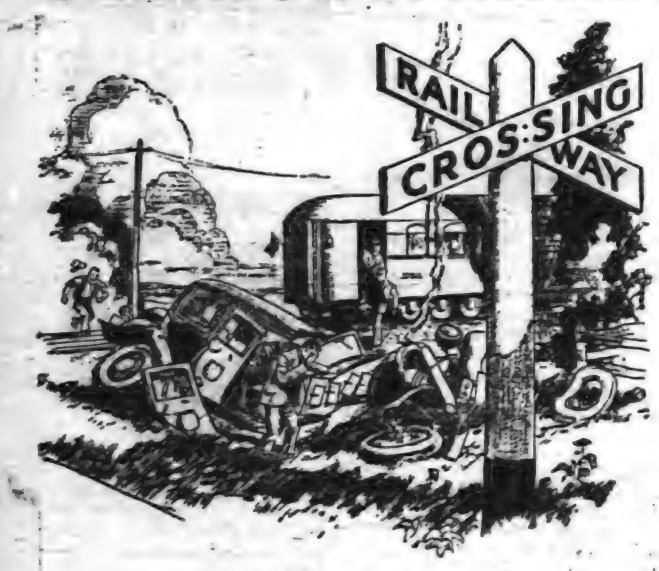
Only best oil gives proper lubrication, says expert

If housewives only realized they were buying lubrication instead of "just oil," few of them would use anything but the best. Here is one place you can't "cut corners," for anything less than the best lubrication endangers the life of sewing machines, vacuum cleaners, lawn mowers, electric fans, washers and other household equipment.

3-in-One Oil is made especially for such devices and for 35 years it has been recognized by housekeeping experts as the best. It is a scientific blend of high grade animal, mineral and vegetable oils and contains properties not possessed by ordinary oil. It does more than lubricate. It also cleans and protects.

Don't be satisfied with anything but the best. Ask for the old reliable 3-in-One Oil and get the most efficient service from your mechanical devices. At good stores everywhere. For your protection, look for the trade mark "3-in-One" printed in Red on every package.

"Yes—they're fine young chickens!"



It was Joe Kingsmill's wife who spotted the advertisement — a firm in town offering to buy 60 young chickens. She showed it to Joe.

"Every poultry farmer in the province will be writing," Joe said. "I'll telephone right now and beat the crowd."

So he did. And got the business too for his alertness. The Long Distance telephone call cost him 35 cents.

PASTEURIZATION OF MILK

In this country, opposition to compulsory pasteurization laws frequently came from those who lived for some years in the British Isles. There they had used raw milk, very often dipped from a can, and they found it difficult to believe that pasteurization was necessary, since it had not been required in their home land.

We have learned a great deal in public health matters from the British Isles. No one who reads the story of the development of the modern public health movement could fail to be convinced of our debt to the home of public health. Nevertheless, during past years, valuable contributions have come from this continent and we are now able to repay some of our debt.

Pasteurization fo milk is one of the greatest contributions to public health and particularly to the safeguarding of infant lives. A safe milk supply, secured through inspection and pasteurization, together with the education of mothers in the care of infants, secure for the infant, protection from disease and a better chance for good health. It is the safe milk, safe because it is pasteurized, that has largely banished t he dangers of the summer for babies.

Acceptance of pasteurization as a necessary public health measure has been slow in the British Isles. At the present time it is accepted and the Manchester city council is asking Parliament for the power to compel pasteurization of practically the whole milk supply of the city.

The milk-borne epidemics which have occurred in Britain, have convinced those who believed that a safe milk supply could be secured through the enforcement of strict regulation, that pasteurization is absolutely necessary. The Medical Officer states in a recent issue that since the Brighton sore throat epidemic, "no medical authority has stood out seriously against pasteurization".

Public Health workers on this side have long wondered at the failure of British workers to adapt pasteurization. It now appears that they have been giving a great deal attention to the subject but that they first had to be convinced that their own methods of milk control were unsatisfactory.

Pasteurization of milk supplies provides a safeguard that no other method provides. Through inspection, as clean a milk as possible should be secured, and then it is to be rendered safe by pasteurization. The time is close at hand when travellers will be able to have safe milk whereever they go because pasteurization will soon be a universal public health procedure.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

Scout Notes

Hungarian Scouts Learn English

Several Scout districts in Hungary are inviting British Scouts to visit them for a few weeks this summer. Their idea is to develop friendships and improve their knowledge of English.

How many Scouts in South Africa?

There are 14,516 Scouts of all ranks in the Union of South Africa—in Cape Western, Cape Border, Cape Midlands, Griqualand West, Natal, Transvaal, Orange Free State and S. W. Africa.

Naval Cutter For Sea Scouts

A fine naval cutter was recently presented to the 1st Barbados Sea Scout Group by the captain, officers and ship's company of H.M.S. Repulse. The presentation was an expression of appreciation of the courtesies extended Deep Sea Scouts when ashore.

English College Scout Visitors

A change of policy to travelling within the Empire instead of visiting Europe, is bringing to eastern Canada this summer a Scout party of the 2nd Framlingham College Group, Woodbridge, Suffolk, England, under Scoutmaster the Rev. R. H. W. Kneese. The Suffolk Scouts are anxious to visit a number of Canadian Scout Camps.

The two 8-week old Eastern Canadian black bear cubs seen above were born on the Wedgewood Hunting and Fishing Club grounds at Bissett, P.Q. They arrived in Montreal accompanied by Arthur Beauvais, well known guide. They've been called Michael and Mary. As shown by the photograph, and photographs cannot lie, these two babies took early advantage of their first introduction to civilization to telephone Mother, though a little late for Mother's Day, to assure her they were being well looked after. Michael is listening in while Mary is doing the telephoning. They have been fed on tinned milk since their capture, but sugar is also a favorite article of diet.

The cubs were brought to Montreal by Canadian Pacific Express and went on to New York from the Windsor Station.

Here and There

Captain L. D. Douglas, R.N.R., recently named commander of the Pacific speed Queen, the Empress of Japan, largest of Canadian Pacific liners on the Pacific, recently brought his 26,000-ton charge alongside Pier B, Vancouver within 44 minutes of the Pacific record.

His Excellency Rana Phagat Chandra Bahadur, Rajah of Jubbal, was a traveller on the Empress of Japan from the Far East, recently. He might have been taken for any business man but for the presence of his wife, daughter of the Maharajah of Kathlaad, India, who was attired in Indian garb.

Crop conditions in western Canada are most encouraging and, given normal weather conditions, the quantity and quality of the harvest will go a long way towards restoring confidence and prosperity, Grant Hall, vice-president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, stated recently on his return from a tour of inspection of the company's property.

Final figures of butter production in Alberta for 1931 amount to 22,957,922 pounds, which is more than 600,000 pounds above the previous highest year's record for the province. Closely associated with butter production is a movement inaugurated by the Federal and Provincial Departments of Agriculture to encourage farmers to enlarge their forage crop areas.

Major "Bill" McGeehan, one of America's best known columnists, and Lionel Hitchman, veteran defence man of Boston Bruins, landed a 19 and a 30 pounder salmon from New Brunswick waters respectively in May. The Major got his fish with a four-ounce trout rod on the Cain's River; Hitchman was fishing at Hartt's Pool near Fredericton on the Saint John River.

John Cudahy, of Milwaukee, hunting across the Great Divide near Banff, and faced by a furiously charging wounded grizzly almost within striking distance and with but one cartridge left in his rifle, coolly stood his ground and dropped the monster at his feet. Mr. Cudahy has hunted in India, Africa and Alaska, but said he had never had the thrills he experienced on this recent grizzly hunt.

Success of the bargain trips over week-ends and holidays which the Canadian Pacific has put into effect this year was further attested by the great popularity enjoyed during the recent Victoria Day holiday and in week-ends following. To take one large centre—Montreal—the city was literally invaded by the great influx of visitors from eastern Canada and the United States and other big Canadian cities report similar conditions.

Brother officers of the Canadian Pacific Railway, representatives of transportation systems in Canada and the United States, members of the Masonic Order and of Rotary and sorrowing friends from virtually all walks of life united in an impressive tribute to the late George A. Walton, general passenger agent of the railway at his funeral in Montreal recently. The remains were taken to Winnipeg where burial took place in the Elmwood Cemetery with His Honor James D. McGregor, Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba, Mayor Ralph H. Webb, of Winnipeg, and many officers of the company in attendance. His Grace Archbishop Matheson, assisted by the Rev. H. S. Reed, of St. Luke's Anglican Church, conducted the funeral service. (847)

FAMOUS JEWEL FOR SALE

Princess Mary's Husband to Sell Canning Jewel, Said to Have Been Present to a Mogul Emperor.

One of the most famous and historic jewels in the world is to be sold by its present owner, the Earl of Harewood, Princess Mary's husband.

It is the Canning jewel, and its value, intrinsically and because of its history and workmanship, is almost incalculable. Benvenuto Cellini, the sixteenth century master craftsman in gold, silver and precious stones, is said to have fashioned it for one of the Florentine Medicis.

EARL OF HAREWOOD

who, according to tradition, presented it to a mogul emperor of India.

Experts have described the Canning jewel as the "supreme example of renaissance jewelry." It is set with pearls, diamonds, and rubies, and parts of it are in encrusted enamel.

It is in the form of a Triton, the torso being a large single pearl.

The jewel remained in possession of the moguls for 200 years, and when their capital, Delhi, was captured during the mutiny, it was found in the treasury of the King of Oudh and appropriated by the Indian Government. Earl Canning, the viceroy, bought it from the Government.

Eventually the jewel passed from his collection to that of his brother-in-law, the first Marquis of Clanricarde. The second marquis, who died in 1916, bequeathed it to his great-nephew, the present Earl of Harewood.

CANADA'S "WHITE COAL."

Electrical Power Used to Produce Multitude of Goods In Dominion.

A review of the electrical industry in Canada discloses the degree to which electricity is displacing other power in the Dominion. Canada's immense resources of cheap power are being turned to full account in an industrial way. Cheap electrical energy is the factor which has made possible much of the efficiency of modern methods of manufacture.

All the power utilized in the production of automobiles, clay products and rubber goods in Canada is electrical. Sugar refining, printing and publishing, and plants manufacturing hardware and tools, brass and copper products, coke and gas products, electrical apparatus and supplies have 90 per cent. electric power installations. In the long list of industries mentioned in the table of power equipment published by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, the manufacture of feed and grist is the only one which utilizes less than 50 per cent. of electric energy. Seventy per cent. of all the energy used throughout the mining industry of the country, including coal, metals and petroleum, is electrical. Manufacturing and mining have come into the electrical age.

The total installation in lumber, pulp and paper mills, 1,250,000 horse-power, far exceeds that in any other industry. The rate of expansion in non-ferrous metals and in miscellaneous uses has been most rapid.

ADVICE TO MOTORISTS.

Timely Traffic Rules Which May Prevent Numerous Accidents.

Advice to motorists pours out from all directions, but, apparently, judging from the frequency of accidents, some rules are still necessary. Here are a few from an exchange:

Look out for children. You can never tell what they will do.

Don't pass a standing trolley car. Some day the jury may call it manslaughter.

Don't speed around corners. It's a straight route to the hospital.

Drive on the right side of the road. It's the only safe side.

The fact that you had the right of way won't bring anybody back to life, least of all yourself. Use discretion.

Do not stop short without giving warning. The other fellow isn't a mind reader.

Do not back up without looking to the rear.

Do not park or pass on a curve or hill.

Slow down when approaching a cross road. It's nearly as dangerous as a railway crossing.

Be courteous to other drivers and traffic officers. Courtesy prevents accidents.

WAKING HOURS STANDARDIZED

Patients' waking hours should be standardized, according to a report filed by the special committee appointed to inquire into the matter by King Edward's Hospital Fund for London, England. Reveille in all London voluntary hospitals should be 6 a.m., says the report. The committee found that four hospitals awakened their patients between 4 and 4.30. Forty institutions did so between 5 and 5.15, while 82 chose between 5.30 and 5.45; eight between 6.30 and 6.45, and six, 7 o'clock.

Toronto Citizen Drowned Here

Yesterday evening there was a tragedy at Creditvale when a happy picnic party terminated suddenly with the drowning of one of the members.

Mr. McVicars and wife, Toronto, picked up Mr. and Mrs. Albert Wright, and family, 2 Rolyatt Ave, about three o'clock, and drove out to Creditvale. The men went in the Credit River above the dam for a swim about 4 o'clock, both feeling good. McVicars could swim, but Wright could not. McVicars swam across the pond to the other bank. The women were below the dam. When Mrs. Wright came up above the dam, she could not see her husband, and she asked Mr. McVicars where he was. He had left him on the other side of the water. He then swam back to look for him, and was horrified to find him in five feet of water about 12 feet from shore. He had left him only a few minutes before, and was apparently alright at the time. He pulled Wright out and Dr. Hills was called. The Dr. arrived in 15 minutes after Wright was taken out of the water. It was then 5 15. Mr. C. D. Evans, who is a Hydro employee, was working nearby and endeavored to bring the man around by artificial resuscitation until the doctor arrived. The doctor gave him hypodermics to stimulate heart action and worked with him for an hour, when it was evident the spark of life had fled.

He then called Dr. Lawson, of Brampton, Peel County Coroner, who sent down his assistant, Dr. Maguire, who released the body. It is not likely there will be an inquest.

Deceased leaves a wife and three children, who are practically penniless. He had no insurance, and did not belong to any society. He was born in County of Antrim, Ireland, where his mother still lives. He was 28 years old and had been in Canada five years. He was an attendant at the Asylum, Queen St. West.

"Left the stage, have you?" said the first actor. "Why have you done that?"

"Oh—er—I had a hint that I wasn't exactly suited for it."

"A little bird told you, eh?"

"Well, no, not exactly," was the reply; "but they might have become birds if they had been allowed to hatch."

Streetsville Oddfellows entertained the brethren of Toronto District No. 37, at a picnic at Peel Park here last Saturday, when upwards of two hundred were present. The event was sponsored by Albert Suttee, of Toronto, D.D.G.M.-elect, and was a very pleasant affair. After the picnic, supper was served in the Oddfellows' hall, which was followed by a dance and euchre party. The prizes for euchre were presented by Bro. J. Whitton. The Streetsville Alfalfa Boys' orchestra furnished excellent music for the dancing and everybody enjoyed themselves.

Following is the list of winners in the program of sports:

Boys and girls, 5 to 7 years—Bob Robertson, Toronto; Bob Rice, Streetsville; Verna Stanfield, Port Credit. Girls, 7 to 10 years—Betty Turner, Toronto; Grace Walsh, Toronto. Boys, 7 to 10 years—Raymond Hayward, Toronto; Bill Rice, Streetsville. Girls, 10 to 12 years—Marion Calder, Mt. Dennis; Olive Walsh, Toronto. Boys, 10 to 12 years—Bernard Pope, Streetsville; Donald Hayward, Toronto. Girls, 12 to 15 years—Dorothy Stanfield, Burnhamthorpe; Mary Switzer, Streetsville. Boys, 12 to 15 years—Douglas Walsh, Toronto; Frank Hayward, Toronto. Single men—Aubrey Pope, Streetsville; Ian Johnson, Streetsville. Peanut race—Mrs. Hayward, Toronto; Miss Thurston, Toronto. Potato race, men—Ken Martin, Toronto. Tug-of-war, between teams captained by Bro. W. Marshall, P.D.D.G.M., and Bro. F. Nightingale, P.D.D.G.M., Toronto, was won by the former team. This was a real tussle and provided much merriment.

Every lodge in the district was well represented and the visitors thought Peel Park was an ideal spot for a picnic.

Many of the Oddfellows who enjoy athletic sports, were seen watching the game of box lacrosse after supper between Streetsville and Brampton.

The visitors were pleased with the reception given them by the Streetsville lodge and said they would like to come to Streetsville every year for a picnic.

Members of Port Credit lodge turned out well and brought some of the older boys and girls with them.

1,283 MOTOR VEHICLE ACCIDENTS OCCURRED IN EARLY MORNING HOURS

If you drive a motor vehicle of any kind, the next time you are tempted to relax vigilance because the hour is early and traffic light—don't.

1,283 accidents occured in the province of Ontario last year between midnight and breakfast time. Most of these accidents took place because drivers, concluding there wasn't much competition for right-of-way, stepped on the accelerator just a little harder than usual and took it for granted that the approaching intersection or blind curve would be clear

This attitude resulted in 82 known deaths and known injuries of 768 persons in 1931. An analysis of the accident statistics furnished by Motor Vehicles Branch of the Ontario Department of Highways, indicates clearly that there is no hour during night or day, in any season or under any conditions, when either motorist or pedestrian can afford to take a chance.

Streetsville-Creditvale football team will travel to Lakeview on Saturday to play Lakeview for the Kennedy Challenge cup, at the Conservative Field Day sports.

All contestants in the Olympic swim, which takes place at Los Angeles, will be at Huttonville Park after this big event, which is very gratifying to the proprietor, Mr. Bert Dawson. Miss Irene Pirie, who won the 220 and 440 yard swim, at Vancouver, will be there also. Watch for further announcement.

OUR MANITOBA LETTER

Clanwilliam, Man.,
July 21st, 1932.

Dear Editor:—

We like the country so well we are still here, but expect to return to the city pretty soon. The weather has been rather cool and wet until recently, and has been quite warm enough to make a person know what the sun can do, making everybody seek shelter. But the crops are just splendid, at least, from present appearances; so heavy, big heads, and beginning to turn. There will be an early harvest, and the gardens are giving renewed hope of full cellars this year. Wild fruit is very, very plentiful. Wild strawberries at Saskatoon, are the best in years. Hard times are making it impossible for a good many to buy sugar, so are putting them down without sugar. Farmers are almost giving their cream away, as a can brings less than one dollar, and cannot sell their butter. Eggs are ten cents a dozen now; have been four and five cents dozen. So, no wonder fruit must go sugarless in the jars.

Haying has commenced and pasture has been excellent.

Mr. Bruce Shaver and children have been down visiting his old home for a week. Came down in a truck, from Bengough, Sask. Mrs. Bailey, his sister, in Minnedosa, returned with him for a visit to her two sons, Clifford and George Bailey, who live near Bengough, Sask. Cliffo.. was married on the 22nd of June, to Mamie Hackett, of Waniska, Sask. Mrs. Bailey will have the pleasure of visiting with her new daughter.

The death of Mrs. Roy Turner, nee Miss Annie Madill, took place on May the 28th, at Mawer, Sask. She was a resident here for years, until her marriage with Mr. Turner. Besides her husband and two grown-up daughters, she leaves her aged mother, Mrs. Robert Madill, who was eighty-three last 26th May; Annie was forty-one on the 22nd May, just dying a few days after her birthday. There are also eight brothers and one sister.

Saturday, 16th July, Mr. Thickson was drowned in Minnesdosa Lake. He leaves a wife and two children.

I was quite interested in a small report of the Culham Clan gathering at Summerville. I remember the place quite well. I also belong to the same clan, and have always wished I might have the pleasure of attending one of the gatherings. I always live in hope I may still do so. When I see so many names, that I have not the slightest idea who they may be, I think it high time I was going down to find out.

I also saw the item speaking of the beauty of Mr. J. Fulton's and Mrs. R. Lundy's flower gardens. Just come with me into Mr. M. Johnson's flower garden in Minnedosa. My daughter and I were taking a walk through the residential part of the town, when we spied through the trees, the most beautiful garden, so we walked in to ask permission to look at the flowers. First there were two stone gate posts, with arch over the entrance, with climbers covering it. We found Mrs. Johnson and her mother busy in the garden. Mrs. Johnson very kindly took us around her garden. First, there was a beautiful bed of peonies; a little farther on, a lily pond with lilies just coming through the water, and on the cement rim were shells, imitation birds; large spaces had transplanted flower plants; a summer house, with a comfortable seat in one end, and I think an outside meal might be eaten there. It was covered with trailing vines, a bed of lily-of-the valley, roses everywhere, and shrubs of every kind here and there through the beds. Another arch covered by vines, led into the vegetable garden. Two sunken gardens, covered with wire netting, to protect moss and ferns. At one end of one was a miniature pagoda, and all kinds of shells and barnacles around the edge, and the lovliest bleeding heart I have ever seen. I said to Mrs. Johnson, I had never seen a flowering almond in Manitoba. She said she had one, but it was through blooming. Every path was laid with stones, each had a history. It sure was the most wonderful private garden we had ever seen, but quite fitting for Minnedosa, the beautiful

The Kolapore Cup Again

Canadian marksmen at Bisley have once again carried off the senior trophy for team shooting. The Kolapore Cup has been won so often by this country that we are beginning to regard it almost as a Canadian possession, forgetting perhaps that it is won only after increasingly severe tests and against the pick of the marksmen of the Empire. This year the Canadian win was decisive and prospects for further victories are bright. Lieut. Desmond Burke is, as usual, "going great guns" and his total of 146 out of a possible 150, including a perfect score at the opening distance in the Kolapore Cup event, was a great achievement.—Montreal Daily Star.

We Have the Goods

The five-year plan of national advertising which is shortly to be launched by 40,000 Canadian growers, in cooperation with jobbers and shippers throughout the Dominion, will give, we think, a very real impetus to the fruit and vegetable industry. Canada, whose products of the soil are unexcelled, for too long has been hiding her light under a bushel. There have been many striking illustrations of the power of publicity, expertly applied. The California growers, for instance, have made this continent citrus-fruit conscious. Much of the success of their publicity campaign has been due to the fact that new uses for oranges, lemons and grapefruit have been developed. Oranges, for a long time, were just a luxury to be put in Willie's stocking at Christmas time, or take in to a sick friend at the hospital. Today oranges are an important item of the daily diet.—Hamilton Spectator.

Return to Horse and Buggy

It is an ill wind that blows nobody good. Hence, the County of Middlesex congratulates itself that road maintenance costs will be cut nearly 30 per cent. this year because of the decrease in traffic on the county roads. Mr. Charles Talbot, county engineer, explains that many farmers are going back to the horse and buggy, particularly for short trips, and, therefore, there is not the same wear and tear on the roads. "It isn't costing half as much to keep the Hamilton road in shape this year as two years ago. This is one of the busiest county roads, but there simply isn't the traffic this year," he said. Conditions in Middlesex will, no doubt, be duplicated in many other counties."—Mail and Empire, Toronto.

Bright Prospects

Alberta is congratulating herself that never before, since the province became a grain producer, have the prospects for a heavy crop been more promising than they are to-day. Saskatchewan conditions are very similar. If all goes well, as it is doing now, the wheat growers of this province have the same prospects before them to to make them content and happy. Almost every district has been revelling in unaccustomed rains and the outlook is for more yet to come.—The Regina Star.

Noiseless Milk Wagons

Those ninety-five per cent. of Vancouver citizens who prize above all treasures those last two or three hours of precious asleep between five and seven or eight o'clock in the morning will rise up and bless that inspired dairy company which has installed small pneumatic tires on its milk wagons. For nothing murders sleep so bloodily as the steel-rimmed wheels of milk wagons grinding and squeaking to and fro in the early hours of the day. These rubber-tired milk wagons are now things. They are things to be imitated. Tires are dirt cheap now. And the noiseless milkman would be the popular milkman in residential districts. Cannot some of the other dairies do something about it?—Vancouver Sun.

Whining Unpopular

Many men and women are a prey to their moods. They don't handle life but are handled by it. As a consequence they are often badly treated just because they have let life get a strangle hold on them rather than keeping the upper hand themselves. One of the most devastating moods that one can indulge in is the mood of self-pity. Nobody loves a whiner. Complaints are often made that a man loses his friends when he falls into misfortunes. That is a sad and often true commentary on the constancy of human affections. But the men who are most loud in this complaint fail to recognize that often they have not lost their friends, but that they have driven them away by their own complaining.—Halifax Chronicle

EMPIRE

Spending a Virtue

"Increased Saving" from lessened incomes involves a drastic cutting down of ordinary expenditure, which is the reverse of beneficial for the general community. We are not, of course, speaking of luxury spending or miscellaneous outgoings, but of spending on the general maintenance of one's proper standard of life. To restrict that—if one's income is reasonably secure—is most unhelpful to the general recovery. Thrift is so excellent a virtue that one is reluctant to believe that it can ever assume an anti-social shape. Yet there is little doubt that the deliberate curtailment of normal, judicious, private expenditure is at this juncture as bad for the country as it is obviously bad for trade.—London Daily Telegraph.

A Land of Cheerful Givers

Though we, maybe a little enviously, have shown in earlier years a superiority over the land of dollar chasing, we must look to what was done with it. There is no nation, not even our own, where the rich men are so anxious to benefit not only the community but humanity. Great Americans reap distinction, not in conferred honours, but in conferring blessings, libraries, museums, public galleries, paying for scientific expeditions, giving millions to Britain as well as to their own people for research in highly-equipped laboratories so disease may be banished. To endow a hospital provides a finer memory than to have a bronze monument. And the light of well-doing still shines. No; America has not lost its soul.—Sir J. Foster Fraser in the Sunday Graphic (London).

Britain's Lead

As a matter of fact, Great Britain ever since the Armistice has been disarming on the most extensive scale. Other Powers have not so far followed her example. Figures given by the Italian representative, Signor Grandi, at Geneva, showed that between 1925 and 1930 the world's total expenditure on armaments rose by £126,000,000, while British expenditure fell by £3,000,000. Can we go further in one-sided disarmament without risk of disaster —London Daily Mail.

Women in Public Life

Women who have learned the business of managing the family life have a very great deal to teach to men. The trouble is that these women are generally too busy and too happy in the home to want to enter public life. The majority of those who do, it appears, bring little that is new in practice to public affairs. For originality in itself is not the strong suit of women. They are changeable only in the sense that the multitude is changeable—in the mass. Fashion proves that. A man designs a hat or dress for one woman, and ten million wear it. Next week he may design another model. If it looks right the ten million will wear that one.—London Daily Express.

London's Population

A continuing decline of population in the administrative County of London, coupled with a large net increase in the whole of Greater London, is revealed in the tables for the county which have been compiled from the 1931 census figures. The persons counted in the city and the 28 metropolitan boroughs numbered 4,397,003. The decrease in the 10 years since the census of 1921 was 87,520, a figure commensurate with the population of a good-sized town like Ipswich, Newport (Mon), or Wigan. In the Greater London area—comprising the city and the Metropolitan Police districts, and included roughly in a circle of 15 miles radius round Charing Cross—8,203,942 persons were enumerated. The increase here since 1921 was 723,741, a number comparable with the population of Liverpool or Manchester. Expressed as a percentage of the 1921 population, the increase in Greater London amounted to 9.7 per cent. This is three times as great an increase as occurred in the previous 10 years, and nearly twice as great as the current increase for the country as a whole.—London Times.

OTHER OPINIONS

Something To Remember

The United States Department of Agriculture reports that last winter, just as in previous winters, numerous colonies of bees were lost from starvation because in the autumn their keepers did not leave enough honey with the bees to furnish food for them until spring. The greedy beekeepers overreached themselves, though it is unlikely that any of them had not heard of the man who killed the goose that laid the golden eggs. There are law-makers who should consider what befell the man who killed the goose that laid the golden eggs and the losses that came on apiarists too grasping to feed their bees. Even a taxpayer may collapse under increasing pressure of bureaucratic attention.—N. Y. Sun.

No Weakening

If the work now being done in furthering economy in public expenditure is to be of lasting value it must be a continuing work. For the temptations to extravagance are constant. Eternal vigilance is needed if they are to be successfully resisted. — Boston Transcript.

Help Communities Over Rough Spots

Loans for Relief in Municipalities

Legislation to allow municipalities to issue short term debentures to raise funds for direct relief purposes will be introduced at the next session of the Ontario legislature, it was announced Sunday night by Premier George S. Henry.

The government's action follows representations from a number of municipalities which claimed they were unable to meet their share of direct relief costs out of current revenue because of present financial conditions. Discussions with the recently created Ontario Municipal Board resulted in the government's decision to introduce the bill.

Applications will be made by the municipality which desires to issue the debentures. The board will consider the application and the municipality's financial and credit condition before permission will be granted for issuance of the bonds under the new legislation. The authority will be given only in cases where the board feels that the municipality's financial condition warrants it.

Mountaineer Trapped On 1,200-foot Ledge

Field, B.C., July 24.—Perched on a narrow ledge of the Rocky Mountains for 22 hours, Dennis E. Hanley of Toronto was finally rescued by a mountain-climbing party aided by a Swiss guide. For nearly a night and a day Hanley was forced to stand carefully on the ledge, 1,200 feet high, always in danger of death from a landslide. Attempting to climb Mount Dennis with two companions, Hanley had slipped in loose gravel and slid quite a distance before coming to rest on the ledge.

Boy Suffocates On His Birthday

Buried by Sand Pit Cave-in Near Cornwall

Cornwall, July 24.—Arthur Brooks Markell, the 11-year-old son of Mrs. Delbert White, of Dickinson's Landing, 12 miles west of Cornwall, met death under particularly sad circumstances on Saturday, which was his birthday.

The boy went to a sand pit, close to his home, with his stepfather when the later went to get a load for delivery. On completing loading White left the boy alone at the pit and on his return, three-quarters of an hour afterwards found the boy partially buried in the sand, a cave-in having occurred in the meantime. All that could be seen of the boy was his legs.

White removed the sand from the body and word was despatched to Dr. Moodie, of Wales, who hastened to the scene, but death had resulted from suffocation.

Condensed Milk Sale to Britain Increases

Brockville.—What is characterized as a very substantial volume of new business" in condensed milk for export to Great Britain is reported by the Laing Produce and Storage Company of this town, which has extended production to provide for this additional business. Officers of the company attribute the receipt of these orders to the ten per cent. tariff which the British Government has imposed upon condensed milk imported from countries outside of the Empire. A much larger volume of fresh milk is now being received at the condensary in order to fill these orders.

Specific Favors Asked of Britain

Preferences Offered in Return for Admission of Farm Products

Ottawa, July 24.—South Africa joins Canada and Australia in soliciting for its natural products preferred entry into United Kingdom markets.

Very definite and specific in her requested favors, South Africa, however, is not nearly so clear as either Canada or Australia in her intimation of what she is prepared to give Britain in return.

"If the United Kingdom is willing to make further concessions in these matters (meats, dairy products, fruits and revision of the Dominions preferences under the Import Duties Act)," says the South African statement, "the Union will be prepared to give favorable consideration to requests for additional preferences on commodities which offer the greatest possibilities of an increase in trade to the mutual benefit of both countries."

Visualizing little or no opportunity of her inter-Dominion trade development because of the similarity of commodity production, South Africa sees in Canada the best prospect of extending her trade with the overseas portions of the Empire. The Union, says the statement, is interested in the possible increased export to Canada of maize, sugar, wines, fresh fruit, especially citrus, dried and canned fruits, fruit juices and cordials.

Railways Preparing For Record Grain Haul

Sudbury.—New markets to be created as a result of the Imperial Conference now in session at Ottawa and indications of a bumper wheat crop have been major factors in forecasting an unusually heavy freight movement from the prairies. The C.P.R. is sending 70 high powered locomotives there from various centres throughout Eastern Canada.

Railway officials stated here that reports from the west are that farmers expect to harvest a crop so great that the facilities of both railways will be taxed to capacity moving the wheat to Atlantic ports. Also the farmers are very hopeful that the Empire Conference will conclude with ready markets at favorable prices being opened overseas to consume the entire production. The traffic from the west will, according to present tabulations, be the heaviest in four years.

Launch Sinks Suddenly in Lake St. Clair

Detroit, July 25.—A river tragedy marred Detroit's week-end for the second time within seven days, when two persons were drowned as an 18-foot cabin cruiser sank suddenly 200 feet off shore in the St. Clair River.

A moment of confusion occurred when the 13 passengers of the cruiser, including six children trapped in a cabin, felt the craft list suddenly and water begin to creep over the floor of the deck.

Screams from the cruiser brought canoeists and a launch crew from the yacht Delphine, largest private craft on the Great Lakes.

Carl Chors, skipper of the cruiser, dashed into the cabin where the children were and pushed them all through the window. As he got out, treading water, the boat tipped its occupants into the river.

Lenore Swartout, 11, and Mrs. Alice Black, 30, a school teacher, were drowned. Mrs. Black lost her life saving her 11-year-old crippled son.

Four Children Drown In Ontario's Waters; Two Other Fatalities

Six violent deaths occurred in Ontario, exclusive of the Toronto and suburban area, over the week-end.

Four young children were drowned: Michael Kirby, 9, of Cartier; Paul Tremblay, 11, of Sudbury; Jack Doolittle, 7, of Belleville, and Margaret Mills, 7, of Galt.

One motorist, Charles Doyle, 25, of Maidstone township, was killed in a smash-up. A. V. Messinger of Dearborn, Mich., dropped dead while bathing.

Customs Overtime Pay Reduced by 10 P.C.

Toronto. — Customs Department overtime salary rates have been reduced 10 per cent., according to instructions from Ottawa. Overtime is charged to railways, steamships and airplanes for services of officers after regular hours, and for Sunday work. On holidays the extra charge is paid by the Government. The steamships railways and airports will continue to pay the regular charges, regardless of the overtime cut.

Zep Commander Knocks Tree Down With Car

Kenpten, Germany—While driving his own automobile recently, Dr. Hugo Eckener, who has commanded the Graf Zeppelin on many flights without having an accident, tried to pass another motor-car and ran into a tree with such force that he knocked it down.

Dr. Eckener, his wife and his daughter were hurled out of their car, but they suffered only slight injuries. The automobile was wrecked.

Week-end Traffic Takes Heavy Toll

One Dead, 19 Hurt in Seven Crashes

One person was killed and 19 were injured—several of them seriously—in a series of seven accidents involving single automobiles over the week-end in the Toronto district. In only one instance did a second car figure, when, it is believed, an automobile was ditched when another car cut in in front of it.

A province-wide totalling of week-end fatalities showed that, outside the Toronto and suburban area, four persons—all children under 12—had been drowned, one motorist had been killed in a collision, and a sixth death had been that of a Michigan visitor stricken with heart failure while bathing. In addition, a Kingston woman was killed by a car in Montreal.

In the Toronto area a woman died after her son's car somersaulted and slid along the highway after blowing out a tire; a cabriolet plunged through a bridge railing and dropped upside down in a creek; one car rolled into the ditch, pinning its driver underneath and seriously injuring him; another car demolished a toy wagon and seriously hurt its seven-year-old occupant; a woman was struck by a motor-car as she walked along the highway; a Toronto motorist sought to avoid a cyclist at Port Credit and rammed a hydro pole, injuring his son and another passenger; a motorcar rolled into a ditch near Willowdale, pinning four women under it.

The dead woman was Mrs. Josephine Hanson, 50. She was riding with her son Frank, en route to Toronto on the Kingston highway near Highland Creek, when a tire blew out and the car somersaulted and slid along the pavement. Her son was injured; her son-in-law, Kenneth Watson, severely hurt; his wife badly shocked and bruised; and her two daughters, Kathleen and Ruth, and their friend, Lillian Waller, severely bruised and cut. The car was almost demolished.

Harry Bolton, 34 Lorindale Ave., was driving the cabriolet which smashed through the railing of the bridge on the Third Line, Dixie, early Sunday morning. The car pitched into the creek below as it turned over. Misses Jean Blakeley, 169 Shaw St., and Edith Norley, 1014 Pape Ave., were badly hurt, the latter suffering a compound fracture of the leg in addition to head injuries. Kenneth Odette, said to have been riding on the running-board, lost considerable blood from cuts about the face and head before reaching hospital. Bolton was released on $6,000 bail on a reckless driving charge.

SKULL FRACTURED.

John Campbell was rushed to St. Joseph's Hospital in a serious condition, suffering from a fractured skull, a fractured leg and bad gashes. His car overturned in the ditch on North Dufferin street after, it was believed by police, another car had cut in front of him.

Frank Lowther, of Scarboro Road, Toronto, was driving the car which sought to avoid a youth on a bicycle on the highway in Port Credit. Lowther was forced across the curb and into a hydro pole. He escaped injury, but his 10-year-old son, Bruce, suffered severe facial lacerations and a woman passenger suffered head wounds. Police investigated.

Jimmy McIlroy, seven, 29 Kane Avenue, was riding in a wagon which his nextdoor neighbor, Frankie Attard, also seven, was pulling across Rogers Road Saturday afternoon. A motor car bore down on the wagon end Jimmy could not leap in time.

Mrs. W. Boots of Georgina was walking with her husband along the highway four miles from Sutton when a car driven by a Pefferlaw man struck her.

Provincial police were investigating after the car driven by Miss Mattie Harrison of Sandwich went over the ditch and turned over on the highway near Steel's Corners. Another motorist was accused of having cut in front of Miss Harrison's car forcing it into the ditch, where it pinned the driver and her passengers beneath it. The passengers were Misses M. Barker and C. Harrigon of Richmond Hill and Helen Hughes of Windsor. Miss Harrison suffered the most serious injuries, her nose being broken and face badly lacerated.

Collingwood Vessel Safely Reaches B.C.

Victoria, July 24.—Completing her 7,500 mile voyage from Collingwood, on Georgian Bay, where she was built, the Dominion Government hydrographic survey steamer William J. Stewart arrived at Victoria yesterday. Capt. A. Storey, her commander, reported a reasonably good trip, with the exception of stiff winds and fog coming up the coast from California.

The ship left Collingwood on June 5 and came via the Panama Canal. She will be commissioned in survey work on the coast, replacing the veteran steamer Lillooet.

The Stewart has a length of 223 feet and has accommodation for a crew of 66.

How to play Bridge AUCTION and CONTRACT

by Wynne Ferguson

Author of "PRACTICAL AUCTION BRIDGE"

ARTICLE No. 33

In every locality where Auction or Contract is played there are one or more players who refuse to conform to the recognized conventions of bidding. They all have their reasons for not doing so, but none of more originality than the following. A player who had just bid one club without a club in his hand and was criticized for the bid by his partner, replied: "Your criticism is unreasonable. I have only on partner and two opponents so that if I fool you, I am also fooling them, so the odds are just two to one in our favor."

Needless to say, his argument was faulty in that it is much more dangerous to fool your partner than your opponents. Fool your opponents whenever you have the opportunity of doing so without also fooling your partner; but tell your partner the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. In no other way can you obtain the best results. Camouflage bids are occasionally successful, but much more often they are boomerangs and the source of big losses. Let the other fellow take such chances and you will take the money in the long run.

The writer has referre many times in these articles to the tendency of Auction and Contract players in general to overbid no trump hands that contain four aces. They seem to be hypnotized by the four aces and overbid a sure game bid by their partners just so they can score the four aces. They seem to forget that the value of a game is much greater. This tendency was exemplified three times during the last week in games in which the writer was playing.

Hand No. 1

Hearts—A, 10, 4
Clubs—A, Q, 10, 2
Diamonds—A, 7
Spades—A, K, 4, 2

With the foregoing hand at Auction, the dealer bid one no trump, second hand passed and the dealer's partner bid two hearts. Third hand passed and the dealer gaily bid two no trump and all pass. Hi partner had a blank hand with the exception of six hearts to the queen and the dealer failed to make his contract by one trick. At hearts, they would have scored four odd.

At Contract, the dealer should bid two no trump and, when partner overbids with three hearts, he should bid four hearts.

Hand No. 2

Hearts—A, K, J, 2
Clubs—A, Q, 7
Diamonds—A, Q, 2
Spades—A, Q, 10

The dealer at Auction bid one no trump, second hand passed and the dealer's partner bid two spades. Third hand passed and the dealer bid two no trump although practically certain that his partner could score game at spades. He managed to make two odd at no trump, but his partner could have made four odd at spades, of which he held six to the jack.

At Contract, the dealer should bid two hearts and when his partner responds with the minimum bid of two no trump, the dealer should bid three no trump. His partner, holding six spades to the Jack, should now bid four spades. The bidding at Contract is thus much more accurate with this hand.

Hand No. 3

Hearts—A, 9, 6, 2
Clubs—A, 9, 7
Diamonds—A, Q
Spades—A, 10, 9, 4

The dealer at Auction bid one no trump, second hand passed and the dealer's partner bid two spades. Third hand passed and the dealer bid two no trump. This is the worst bid of any, as he holds fewer supporting cards than in the preceding hands. This bid was defeated by two tricks while, at spades, they would have scored five odd. Don't let four aces lead you on to a bad bid. Always make game the objective and consider four aces only as an incident. A game is worth 125 points, or just 25 points more than 100 aces; so, from that point of view, the odds are five to four in favor of a sure game at a suit bid, rather than a doubtful game at no trump.

At Contract, the dealer should bid one no trump and, if partner should bid two spades, he should bid four spades.

The following hand is another good example of overbidding when the angle did not justify it:

Problem

Hearts—3, 2
Clubs—A, K, 10, 6
Diamonds—K, Q, 8, 3
Spades—5, 3, 2

Hearts—9, 5 Clubs—J, 7, 5 Diamonds—A, 10, 9, 7, 4, 2 Spades—6, 4	Y A B Z	Hearts—A, K, 8 Clubs—Q, 9, 4 Diamonds—J, 6 Spades—K, Q, 10, 8, 7
	Hearts—Q, J, 10, 7, 6, 4 Clubs—8, 3, 2 Diamonds—5 Spades—A, J, 9

B dealt and bid one spade, Z doubled, A bid two diamonds, Y and B passed, and Z bid two hearts. A and Y passed and B now had the choice of defending the hand with a certainty of saving game or of trying for a problematical and very doubtful game in no trump. He chose to bid two no trump, which Z doubled and set for 500 points. There was no excuse for B's bid as the bidding indicated that Z held a big hand. It is a good example of the wrong angle, too much to lose and too little to gain, and is applicable either to Auction or Contract.

The play of the hand was interesting because it developed the double "squeeze," one of the rarest situations to arise in Auction. Z opened with the queen of hearts, which B won with the king of hearts. B then led the jack of diamonds, allowing Y to win the trick with the queen of diamonds. Y now led the king of clubs and then the trey of hearts. B played a low heart and Z won the trick with the ten of hearts. He then returned the low heart on which A discarded a low diamond, Y a low club, and B won the trick with the ace of hearts. He now chose to lead the diamonds and, when Z discarded a low club, won the trick with the ace of diamonds and led back the ten of diamonds, Y winning the trick with the king of diamonds. On this trick, B discarded a low spade and Z the nine of spades. Y now led a spade, B played the queen and Z won the trick with the ace of spades. The cards now remaining in the various hands are as follows:

Hearts—none Clubs—J, 7 Diamonds—9, 7 Spades—6	Y A B Z	Hearts—none Clubs—Q, 9 Diamonds—none Spades—K, 10, 8
	Hearts—J, 7, 6 Clubs—8 Diamonds—none Spades—J

Hearts—none
Clubs—A, 10
Diamonds—8
Spades—3, 2

Z is in the lead, there are no trumps and Y Z are to take every trick against any defense. This is a very pretty problem in discarding and a perfect illustration of the double "squeeze"; that is, [illegible] opponents' hands are forced to discard to give up winning [illegible].

The solution will be given in the next article.

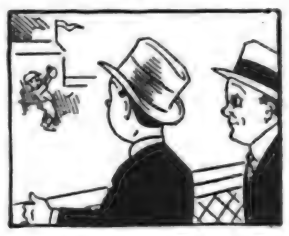
Ancient Craters Caused by Meteors

The fourth of the remarkable craters now known on the earth's surface and believed to have been made by gigantic meteorites or by swarms of these objects perhaps resembling the heads of comets apparently has been discovered in the almost unvisited centre of Arabia. Some months ago the British explorer, H. St. J. Philby, crossed parts of Arabia never before explored by a modern geographer. At one spot he found a set of craters provisionally identified by him as volcanic. He also found specimens of iron, apparently meteoric, and many pieces of glassy material, like fused sand. These specimens now have been examined by experts at the British Museum in London, and lead to the conviction that the Arabian craters really represent the landing spot of another gigantic meteoric body resembling those which made the similar meteor craters in Arizona and in Siberia and the third set found only a few months ago in the wilds of central Australia. The Arabian craters, Mr. Philby reports, may be the largest of all. The Siberian fall, which happened only a few years ago, was visible for hundreds of miles and was accompanied by an enormous explosion and a considerable earthquake. Undoubtedly it would have wiped out any modern city had it chanced to strike in such a neighborhood. It is a remarkable coincidence that all four of these dangerous falls, including the newest Arabian one, selected the most completely deserted parts of the earth's surface. It begins to be evident, however, that such giant meteor falls are commoner than once was believed. Sooner of later one probably will strike a city and cause an enormous catastrophe. Perhaps the story of Sodom and Gomorrah may be a memory of some such ancient event; possibly even the Arabian fall the craters of which have been discovered.

Assistant: "Have you an account with this firm, madam?" Customer. "No, but maybe I can arrange matters with your manager." Assistant (to manager): "A lady of no account to see you, sir."

Thomas: "What towns did you go through on your motor tour," Till: "I don't know. We lost our road map."

The Tool-Shed



The gardener thinks it belongs to him. The owner of any garden believes that it is when a bright-eyed mouse considers it his home, and other small inhabitants regard themselves as the rightful proprietors; but it is really the child to whom the tool-shed belongs. He is not as small as the mouse, but he knows of many a delightful corner where he can squeeze himself in, where neither the gardener nor the owner of the garden can follow.

Once the tool-shed was a ship. A great gale raged outside; waves washed over the gallant little craft which trembled from stem to stern. The skipper, red in the face, and with grimy hands, clung to the rigging and shouted: "Ahoy, my merry mariners!" And the merry mariner, under a cobweb-draped shelf, responded with an earnest invitation to join her and her dolls at a tea-part in Buckingham Palace.

That is the charm of the tool-shed. It can be two places at once. At times it is a subterranean passage to a cave, glittering with red and blue jewels; or it is a grim castle, perched on a dark mountainside. It is the coziest little shelter in the world, when the child lies curled up on an old sack reading Robinson Crusoe, by the aid of a flickering candle-end. The things in it are mysterious, and never what they seem to be. The lawn mower once became an airplane in its hangar, resting after a journey round the world. A stack of flower pots has been a Red Indian's stockade, and a friendly wheelbarrow can never be left out of any enterprise. It is indeed astonishing that the gardener can suppose the wheelbarrow is his. There are other things, too, in dusty corners, forgotten things that nobody else wants, like rusty old watering cans, and broken rakes and spades, wicker baskets, twine, and wooden pegs. They all come in usefully on a desert island, or at the banquet of a Highland Chief. There are books, too, that have lost their covers and most of their leaves, so are no longer fit for drawing-room use. Many a broken but precious toy lies among last year's leaves, and once an infant rabbit was reared there on carrot tops until it grew too sportive for further concealment.

In spring an apple tree throws its pink and white blossoms across the tiled roof. This is the signal to climb the roof, and from its heights explore the neighboring territory through a toy telescope. Never again, perhaps, is the world so interesting as from that roof. A Chinese Mandarin would seem to dwell in the next garden, and a burning desert, a bamboo grove, thick tropical forests, and winding rivers lie on every hand. The child's sister, the other child, listens wonderingly. She has not yet ventured to climb the roof, and must stay below, occupied in the womanly duty of cooking the dinner. But one day she will climb the roof, and it may be that she will see yet more wonderful things to tell the bewildered gardener below.

In the meanwhile: "Ahoy, my merry mariners!" Adventures are here in plenty, and never did a dim dirty little window open upon fairer visions. Never did a dark cobwebby shed hold more radiant dreams. The gardener may grumble when he is told his wheelbarrow is something else, and cannot be spared, for undoubtedly the tool-shed belongs to the child.

Scotch Arran

Oh I would like to tread once more
The weedy strand of Arran's shore,
And I would like to set my feet
Down where the sand and heather meet.
And once again in rocky glen
I'd like to meet with faery men.
Chasing the white does through the mist.
But more than all, oh, I would list
A voice that called me by my name,
Shot through the air like holy flame.
Then I forgot the things that seem,
And wandered in a happy dream;
And saw a door that opened wide,
Set in the craggy mountain side;
And knew that joy for ever more
Was just the other side the door,
And I should walk with Aengus there,
And Etain of the yellow hair.

Oh, would that I could tread once more
That weedy strand, that heather shore.

Parents and Children

By GEORGE BERNARD SHAW

Thoughtless people will tell you that children are a great responsibility. That is nonsense. Children are a great expense until they are able to support themselves, and parents should not have to bear that expense. But the notion that parents are responsible for the conduct of their children or for their character in future is rubbish and often very mischievous rubbish.

Our children come into the world, whether we like it or not, with characters which we have not made and cannot unmake. . . .

Your honest impulse is to tell your sons and daughters to speak the truth fearlessly, but if the best you can do for them after that is to start them in life as salesmen or shop assistants or in the great publicity industry of advertising or diplomacy, you are checked by the reflection that only as shameless liars can they hope to succeed.

I am afraid we must make the world honest before we can honestly tell our children that honesty is the best policy. . . . .

You had really better give your children no advice at all, but go your own way and leave your children to go theirs and form their own conclusions. Let us hope that their conclusions will be wiser than ours.

Plankton, a food of the seas, is grown under the sun's rays.

Beautifying the Radio Voice

We are fairly well accustomed to retouched photographs, color changes for ladies' hair, etc.

But there is a sense of shock in the idea that radio voices of speakers can be beautified.

A former Federal radio commissioner, now editor of Electronics, Orestes H. Caldwell, lets the public in on the secrets of radio's voice beauty parlors in a broadcast. We read:

"Plug in the proper combination of electrical gadgets in connection with the microphone, says Mr. Caldwell, and almost any political speaker's voice may be given charm and persuasiveness.

"Vocal roughness can be ironed out and weak tones of pink-tea chatterers can be built up to oratorical heights.

"Sounds over the radio can be changed by placing in the broadcasting circuits devices that vary, permanently or at the discretion of the radio-control engineer, the frequency and volume. The electrical devices, compensators and filters, have been in common use in connection with commercial radio programs and in the making of talking motion-pictures. Whether they have been used as yet to build up the vocal personality of any of our prominent public men is a matter of conjecture. It is certain that the radio, even when not doctored, does change the speaking voice, sometimes for better and at other times for worse.

"Radio and other electrically transmitted sound devices are much kinder to high-voiced individuals than they are to deep-voiced 'he-men' speakers. They have placed on pinnacles of momentary fame singers and announcers who must carry with them amplifying devices in order to be heard by audiences of their 'personal appearances.'

"There is even the possibility of appeal to sectional feeling, for Mr. Caldwell suggests that appropriate compensators placed in branches of broadcasting networks would make the political candidate speak simultaneously with a shrill Yankee twang in New England, a Southern drawl in Dixie, and a breezy Western accent in the West."

First Caddie: "What's your man like, Skeeter?" Second Caddie: "Left-handed, and keeps 'is change in 'is right-hand pocket."

THIS AND THAT

No one can question these words: "No country can live within itself in this complex age."

Premier Bennett in his remarkable address at the opening of the Imperial Conference used this striking phrase, "By each one making some contribution to the whole, can the whole make a contribution to each one."

Many banquets are being held in Ottawa in honor of the delegates attneding the Imperial Conference. These may be all right, but an attack of indigestion will not increase the good humor of men who are wrestling with tariffs and their ramifications.

Word reaches us that the North Dakota farmers have signed an agreement on a price of $1.00 per bushel for wheat, and they will sell only 10 per cent. in one month. This sounds like a reasonable price and orderly marketing.

Much has been written and spoken concerning the recent resignation of Sir Henry Thornton. He is just like the rest of us. He made things go when times were good, but in these bad times he cannot. He knows it and quits. Not many of us would want to quit a $75,000 job, plus, until the time is up anyway.

If Premier Bennett can make as good a bargain for Canada at the Imperial Conference as he did for the Waterways treaty, he will have accomplished something big. Without any doubt, the Waterways treaty is one of the big things in statesmanship in Canada, second only to the construction of the C.P.R.

LACROSSE

In an exhibition game played at Streetsville box on Saturday, the Thistles lost a very tight game to Brampton Juveniles, by a score of 12-11.

Brampton led in the scoring most of the game, but the Thistles were not far behind at any time.

Anthony, in the Brampton nets, played a wonderful game, making some sensational stops. Bill Mullis, Carman Kellam and Jim Clevely also played a wonderful game.

Hill, Nixon and Dean were the stars of the Thistles.

It was a very clean and well-managed game. Each team had only one penalty. No serious injuries were sustained.

Goals scored:

Brampton—Mullis and Kellam, 3; Clevely and Thompson, 2; Burke and Hore, 1; total, 12.

Streetsville—Hill, 5; Dean and Nixon, 2; Wheeler and Steggall, 1; total, 11.

On Friday night, Port Credit and Malton staged a battle for second place in the league. It was a hard-fought battle all the way. At the end of full-time the score was 9-9. Port Credit scored a goal in the first overtime period, and Malton was unable to tie them again.

These teams are very closely matched, and will put up a great fight for the title.

The Nova Scotia Dairymen's Association will hold their next annual convention, in 1933, at the Cornwallis Inn, Kentville, N.S.

Shipments of celery to Canada this year from Bermuda totalled 25,000 crates in contrast to last year when the shipments were virtually negligible.

Eastern Steamship Lines, Inc., had heavy traffic on an excursion from New York to Nova Scotia on the occasion of the first trip in June of the S.S. Acadia from New York to Yarmouth, N.S.

Railroad transportation is an essential economic function on this continent and given reasonably free rein should speedily show good recovery using it to increase buying of materials and employment of labor, says the Greenville (S.C.) News editorially.

Total production of honey in Canada in 1931 amounted to 27,867,397 lbs. valued at $2,058,094. Ontario led the Dominion with a production of 12,000,000 lbs. with Manitoba second with 7,367,375 lbs., and Quebec third with 5,633,400 lbs.

Ten thousand rainbow trout fingerlings have been deposited in the French River in June, following 7,500 fingerlings deposited last year. The previous experiment was so satisfactory that the present action has been taken and if success still attends these efforts, the French River Bungalow Camp will have added rainbow trout to its already well diversified angling attractions.

Bob Davis, globe-trotting New York Sun columnist, is back in his beloved British Columbia, having recently arrived from Honolulu aboard the Empress of Canada, of the Canadian Pacific fleet. He proposes to spend some time in fishing expeditions both in the province and also in the Rockies where he will meet Irvin S. Cobb and Courtney Riley Cooper, also famous American publicists.

Tourists spent almost one million dollars for every working day in Canada last year, a sum virtually equal to $280,000,000, the Cannington, Ontario, Gleaner, points out and claims that this puts it into the class of big business which should be carefully fostered. Commenting on the same subject, the Nelson, B.C., News states that there are numbers of small towns throughout Canada which have not yet realized what the tourist business could do for them.

Evidence of the growing popularity of the Canadian Pacific Railway low rate bargain return trips, inaugurated this year, was again furnished by the success of the Quebec Province and Montreal excursion to Toronto and Niagara Falls, June 17, when no fewer than 2,500 Quebeckers took the trip in four specials on the Friday, returning the following Sunday night. His Honor the Mayor of Toronto issued a hearty welcome to those making the trip.

The thirty-two business and professional men and women from the British Isles now touring British Columbia under provincial government auspices found Victoria much to their liking and quite up to advance notices of being the most "English" city on this side of the Atlantic. They were particularly impressed by the beauty of the formal gardens at some of the homes they inspected and specially with the famous Butchart Gardens. They are travelling by Canadian Pacific Railway. — (853)

CLARKSON

Delivery Truck Strikes Woman

Clarkson, July 26.—Struck down by a truck as she was walking back to pick up a wheel dropped by the car in which she was a passenger, Mrs. K. C. Davidson, 481 Bloor west, Toronto, received severe head and shoulder injuries. After first aid by Dr. L. G. Brayley, she was taken to St. Joseph's Hospital, where her condition is reported as fair.

With five other women, Mrs. Davidson was on her way to Buffalo in a car driven by Mrs. R. A. Shore, Queen Street West.

They made an early start, and were between Clarkson and Oakville when the accident happened at 3.30 a.m. When the car lost a wheel Mrs. Shore stopped it by the side of the road and Mrs. Davidson got out to walk back for it, on the opposite side of the road.

Two heavy trucks pulled up behind the car, and behind them came a Toronto newspaper delivery truck, which, according to police, swerved so as to nearly hit the trucks, then swung across the road and hit Mrs. Davidson, knocking her into the ditch.

Mother Forced to Leave Fatherless Children

Annette looks at you gratefully as you pause at her bedside to admire her needle work. So expert has she become that she feels sure a table runner she has made will win a prize at the fair back home. "Back home"—words that bring tears as she tells you how she longs to be there to look after her family once more.

Annette's husband died of tuberculosis, leaving her to care for the children as best she could.

It was not long, however, before she too was claimed by this disease, when she was sent to the Toronto Hospital for Consumptives with no great prospect of recovery. Here, the careful regimen, the quiet, the fresh air and patient nursing are greatly helping Annette to climb the steep road back to health.

Such work can only be continued with the aid of many generous friends. Will you please send a gift to Mr. A. E. Ames, 223 College St., Toronto.

That he writes one million words per year, has written one hundred and thirty novels and many plays and finds time between whiles to edit a Sunday newspaper with a million circulation was part of the confession which Edgar Wallace made on the witness stand in London. He has offered $25,000 to anyone who can prove he has ever employed a "ghost" to write his works, and now he offers a like sum to any one who can prove all his plots and ideas don't originate in his own mass production brain.

All this formed part of the evidence in a libel suit which Wallace brought against one Lewis Charles Glodfiam who declared Wallace cribbed a plot and dialogue from his novel "The Lucky Fool," and made of it a successful play, "The Calendar."

Goldfiam sent a letter to the newspapers and theatrical people declaring that Wallace was a "mean cribber" and one who had cribbed all he required from the "Lucky Fool" to make up "The Calendar". Wallace in his evidence, said actually he wrote "The Calendar" in four days at the request of Sir Gerald Dumaurier two years before Goldfiam's novel was published. Part of it he scribbled on the back of telegraph forms in Berlin and produced manuscript to prove it.

FLEECED OF SAVINGS

Confidence Game Worked on Toronto Shoemaker.

Nicholas Kowalski, a Toronto shoemaker, fell victim to a time-worn "con game" worked from coast to coast. Two men walked into his store. Both were well dressed, and pretended to be strangers. One of the men inquired for a Dr. Bull. He said his father had robbed the doctor of $10,000, went west, and through good luck in investments, made $100,000. Upon his death, he asked that the doctor be located and paid back the money. In the event of his not being found, the money was to be distributed in Toronto to charity.

The flimflam trick was for each of the men to make deposits of $250 as a bond of good faith that they would help dispose of $10,000 for a reasonable cash consideration. Kowalski sought time to go to the bank and draw his money. A meeting was arranged and Kowalski handed over his $250. He was then asked to go on an errand. When he returned the two strangers were gone, and so were Kowalski's savings.

THE BOON OF HEALTH

About Half the Sickness Is Preventable, Doctor Believes.

The value of health is realized to some degree, at least, by every thinking individual. But not everybody has imagination enough to appreciate the tremendous monetary loss to the nation caused by sickness and deaths from disease. The loss to the nation represented by the deaths from preventable diseases yearly is estimated by Dr. Gordon Bates at more than a billion dollars and the loss due to sickness, of which 45 to 60 per cent. is preventable, at $300,000,000. The upkeep of our hospitals, sanitoria and asylums costs $50,000,000 yearly and the buildings and equipment involved an investment of $200,000,000.

During the four years of the great war the names of 160,000 Canadian soldiers appeared on the list of wounded, the number including some men several times. Yet on any given day across the Dominion no less than 180,000 Canadian citizens are temporarily disabled because of sickness. —From the Toronto Star.

NORMANS IN CANADA.

French and English In Dominion Have Common Origin.

Four-fifths of French-Canadians are of Norman blood, being descendants of the very Normans who in 1066 conquered Britain. Dr. Emille Vaillancourt, of the University of Caen, France, submitted this argument in a lecture at Montreal. He explained that originally there were 1,350 individuals from Normandy who took part in the conquest of Canada following the discovery by Jacques Cartier. Of this number 1,150 were men and the remainder women. They had 501 descendants in the following generation, and according to Dr. Vaillancourt, who is a noted historian, the progeny of these families form the majority of French-Canadians, or Canadiens, today. Thus, it may be said that the French and English in Canada have a common origin.

PROVING OWNERSHIP.

Rooster Joins In Chorus to Convince Judge.

When a rooster under his very ears harmonized the chorus of "Old Black Joe" as Reese Dupre crooned the words, Recorder Peter F. Dodd of Detroit decided that the bird belonged to the crooner. Dupre, a negro concert singer, had gone to court to claim ownership of four fowls which, he said, had been stolen from his yard.

When the Recorder asked Dupre to prove his claim the singer bent low toward the rooster, while the three other birds, each a hen, watched attentively, and started to sing "Old Black Joe." Without any prompting the rooster blended its voice with Dupre's. Recorder Dodd gave him the four birds without asking for an encore.

Vagaries of a Flood.

When the River Usk overflowed its banks recently an attendant at the mental hospital at Abergavenny, England, caught a live trout in his room, and children picked up a large number of fish in fields after the water subsided.

Haying is nearly over in this section, but the weather has been very catchy. The wheat is ready to cut, and some has been harvested. The farmers say it does not pay to grow wheat at present prices, about 53c. bushel. Cherry picking is done and the fruit growers are busy with berries, currants etc. A few young people of the village are employed picking, but they report the wages very low. Of course the wages must correspond with the price received for the fruit.

Alfred Warren

Alfred Warren, of No. 6 Norwood Rd., Toronto, came out to spend Tuesday afternoon at the farm of Mrs. Davis, near Streetsville, and took a weak spell about five o'clock, collapsing on the floor. Dr. Hills was hastily summoned. He could see the man was seriously ill and called up Dr. Armour at Toronto and arranged for his admission to the General Hospital. Woodruff's ambulance took him in. He passed away yesterday morning about five o'clock at the age of 53, the cause of his death being cerebral haemorrhage. He leaves a wife and one daughter. He was employed as a gardener for Mrs. Davis.

His death was very sudden. He had no symptoms of disease and no warning that his end was so near.

"BOX LACROSSE"

Speaking of Lacrosse, we think the Streetsville Thistles deserve a lot of credit for the way they held down the Brampton team here last Saturday night. The game has not been played here for several years and this young team is coming to the front fast, under the management of Councillor C.R. Evans. The large crowd of spectators saw some real thrills and spills, and more are awaiting them. The Brampton team come from a town of born lacrosse players, and that is a reason why the Thistles deserve so much praise for the game they played. The score 12—11, shows that the game was evenly contested. There was a time when Brampton had to depend on such well-known followers of the national game as the late Joe Phair, Will Allen, Jim Benzie and others to win a game—and they may have to call on this town again for assistance when they want to win in the Dominion finals—because Streetsville possesses the kind of men who can win championships.

The Aztec Mystery

A Thrilling Story of the Old West

BY MURRAY LEINSTER

SYNOPSIS.

Sonny Holman, believing he is the rightful owner of the Aztec mine, holds up the payroll. Janet Laurier, who holds legal title, is kidnapped by Garcia's gang but Sonny rescues her. Garcia's men run off some cattle and Sonny, riding in pursuit, is cornered by some of Janet's mine guards. He escapes, but his horse is shot. Janet has the horse doctored and pleads with him to leave the country. Janet finds Sonny, just as Garcia's men close in on Holman's hiding place.

CHAPTER XIX.

Smoke drifted back to Janet, and Sonny's gun spat viciously from time to time. She could hear the firing outside and once a ricochet came whizzing within to fall at her feet.

"Y' all right, ma'am?" asked Sonny after a little. He was crouched close beside the cavern opening, a grimly alert figure, firing when he saw a chance at a target. But there were few chances now. The Mexicans outside were in hiding behind the boulders of the rockslide.

"Yes," said Janet summoning her courage.

Sonny slipped away from his sentry post and went to a dark heap on the floor. He raced back with a repeating rifle and a belt of cartridges. "I can hold 'em off easy till dark," he said briefly. "Then we'll see."

"My mine guards will be here before then," said Janet. "They'll drive these men away and take me back to Moleville."

"Maybe," said Son, obscurely. "I'm kinda losin' my temper with that Tilford feller. How they followin' your trail?"

"Liver and aniseed," confessed Janet miserably, "boiled together. Gunpowder's hoofs were soaked in it. We thought he would find his way here and dogs could follow the scent."

Sonny fired the rifle and snapped the empty shell out of the chamber. "Yes, ma'am?" he queried grimly. "The idea bein' that you was to come an' argue with me an' hold me in talk while they was to follow yuh with dogs? A bright idea, ma'am. Only Garcia was most suspicious wise. Who tipped him off?"

"I was going to give you your chance of getting away" protested Janet desperately anxious to be believed. "Truly. But if I—if you were in such a position that I could capture you, I thought you might promise to stay away. And if you promised to leave the mine alone I was going to keep the guards from following you—so you could get away."

"I got my own ideas of how much control yuh got over them guards," drawled Sonny. He rested the rifle while he rolled a cigarette, his eyes never ceasing to search the open space before him. He lighted up. "This here is a right good fort, ma'am. If your guards turn up I'll sure let yuh go out to join 'em, but I'll stay right here." He drew a fine bead upon a certain spot and waited for a long time, but the target seemed to have disappeared. "Who's handlin' the dogs?" he asked abruptly.

"One of the men," said Janet unhappily. "Mr. Tilford gave orders that they were to be given a taste of the liver and aniseed and then shown the trail. They'd follow that for more."

Sonny was silent a little while. "That was a right bright idea," he said, drawling. "A dawg that's eaten ain't got any sense of smell to speak of. Givin' 'em a taste of that there stuff was just the surest possible way of keepin' 'em from followin' any trail whatsoever. It'd be so strong on their breath they couldn't smell anything else. Those dawgs ain't followin' your trail, ma'am. They can't."

Janet stared, then paled a little. "I never thought of that," she said miserably. "You must be right. There isn't any help coming then?"

"I'm wonderin' if Tilford hadn't thought of it," drawled Sonny. He fell silent, watching the tumbled rocks outside the cavern with a grim attentiveness.

Janet's eyes were growing accustomed to the darkness now, and the darkness was not complete. From somewhere high above, a little light trickled in through vaguely outlined crevices. She could see that the cavern was not a hollow in the rock, but a leanto of stone, formed by one of the monster monoliths of the rock slide landing in such a fashion as to lean against the canyon wall, closing in a space perhaps ten feet by forty or more, of an irregular shape. The floor was fairly smooth, of earth, and there were a few boxes here and there and a bunk for Sonny to sleep on.

These things, though, did not hold Janet's eyes. Two crumpled shapes upon the floor did. She drew in her breath with a little gasp as she realized what they were.

"It's gettin' twilight," Sonny observed. "I'm wonderin' if this gang'll try to rush me. It ain't hardly likely. They know I'd get a bunch of 'em an' they ain't anxious to risk their skins when they don't have to, 'spite of Garcia wantin' us right bad."

He took up his vigil again. After a little he raised his head above the stones. Two bullets ripped through his Stetson. A little later Sonny fired deliberately.

"Did you get hurt—just now?" Janet managed to ask, not daring to speak directly of the things that held her gaze fascinated.

He flipped his cigarette butt away. "Yes, ma'am," he said firmly. "My tummy hurts me an' my feelin's are considerable lacerated. I see where I got to hunt up a fellow called me a bonehead one time an' get him to mend the complaint. I just discovered, ma'am, that my head ain't bone. It's granite, an' I'm almost disgraced to be alive. Lordy, what a wallop I got!"

He rubbed his head tenderly. "I come inside," he said meditatively, "an' began most immediate to scratch a li'l hole in the floor. Those fellers were watchin', of course. I hoped they'd think I was diggin' up a payroll from the Aztec, or somethin' similar. I rek'n they did. Anyhow they didn't shoot for a while. I come on a rock presently, an' I hid it in my shirt. An' then I began to scratch another hole, like I was goin' to dig up everything I'd ever taken. I got another rock there. All the time I was getting' my eyes used to the darkness. I spotted one hombre right away, squattin' down with a sickly grin on his face an' his gun aimed straight at my vermiform appendix. But before I'd located the other I sure had filled my shirt full o' rocks."

He stopped to aim deliberately and fire. He grunted in satisfaction. "Smoked him then. Gave him a bank shot against the cushion. I bet he's cussin' an' pickin' lead splinters out of himself." He began to roll another cigarette. "Yes, ma'am, it was right interestin' to be diggin' up rocks outer the floor with them fellers thinkin' they was a cache of gold an' waitin' till I'd finished to plug me. When I started shootin' one of 'em let go right prompt an' it hurt my tummy scandalous. I don't advise nobody to stop bullets with a pack of rocks next to his skin. Then the feller that was left, he mixed it with me. He had to. An' he made a lump on my head with the butt of his gun that's the size of a egg laid by a right ambitious hen. He was just borin' into my neck with a knife when I managed to grab the knife outer the other fellers belt as we was squirmin' on the floor. Then I picked up my gun again an' come runnin' to the door."

"You were just in time," whispered Janet.

"Rek'n I was" admitted Sonny. He smoked in silence for a time. "I wonder if yuh'd let me see that li'l gun y' tried to use on these hombres outside."

He reached back and Janet laid the little weapon in his hand. He squinted at it momentarily in the deepening dusk. "Firin' pin filed off" he said grimly. "It won't shoot, no matter what kinda ammunition y' put in it. Who gave it t' yuh?"

"Mr. Tilford," said Janet slowly.

"I rek'n," said Sonny coldly, "I'll have t' put him on my li'l list along with Garcia. Sendin' yuh out with a gun that wouldn't shoot, an' feedin' the dogs so they couldn't trail yuh, an' Garcia's gang waitin' most suspicious ready for yuh to come along. Ma'am, how do you figure that out?"

Janet bit her lip.

Sonny stared far down the canyon. "Some of Garcia's gang ridin' away," he observed suddenly. "Not all of 'em, I rek'n, but if I can keep 'em from gettin' in, they can sure keep us from gettin' out. Nobody knows where we are, ma'am. Nobody knows the trail in. So Garcia, he figures he can keep us holed up in here until he's all set to pry us out."

A gun flashed fire from rocks hardly forty yards from the cavern mouth. Darkness was deepening in the little canyon, though overhead the sky still shone with the clear, unilluminating light of the sunset afterglow.

"Ma'am," drawled Sonny, "we're holed up. You an' a outlaw that yuh've offered a thousan' dollars reward for, dead or alive. I got a kinda bulkhead I can drop over this here openin' insurin' privacy. I'm goin' to drop it down. I need a li'l rest."

He drew back from the opening of the cavern. A rope by the side wall was unknotted and a heavy mass of timber descended from a dangling position aloft. It landed upon the dirt floor with a soft crunching sound.

There were noises as Sonny moved about in the utter blackness. The sound of bolts and bars being forced into place.

"It 'ud take 'em quite a while to bust that down," drawled Sonny from the stygian darkness of the cave. "I waited until dark because I didn't want 'em to know it was there. It might give 'em extra confidence."

(To be continued.)

In British Columbia

Through the glooms
Of the dripping, sun-shafted forest
We saw suddenly the dappled hide of a deer.
He stood a moment, stone-still, and then silently
Drifted over the colossal wreckage of fallen trees—
Without effort, without visible weight,
And moved like a red shadow
Through all the reappearing lights and darks.

We turned to each other,
Letting out the pent breath of suspense.
"Look!" whispered Florizel, standing quiet.
I followed the motion of his eyes—
To the right was a little wild clearing
Lit from above by one flood of light,
(The green tops upheld by colossal pillars,
Each disappearing into the roof of green).
There stood within the lonely, sun-flecked space
A solitary form, grim, erect; and grey—
An enormous timber-wolf!
Rooted stone-still, and with one uplifted paw
Held from the mossy ground, he stared at us
For a moment,
And then stark and strong as steel
Hurled his lithe volcanic body
Back into the void and the dark.
I felt a touch on the shoulder
And looked up, startled.
"Let us go," said Florizel,
"The sun is low in the west,
And to-night we must camp
On the floor of the pine forest."—
I turned and we moved on.
From the west a strong splendor of dazzling rays
Fell down through dense, green tops,
And splashing on the mossy floor
Made long, radiant, deflected pillars of light—
And from this sea of sun and shadow
Rose high the trunks and moving branches of the forest.

KRAFT CHEESE

A Business Woman

Accurate, acute, and quietly self-possessed, she gives all who know her the impression of one who has found her true place in the world. She could not go about her work more serenely or with less suggestion of the unusual, if women had been engaged upon such tasks as hers for thirty centuries instead of thirty years. No special privilege will she either ask or accept—partly because she needs none and partly because to do so would lessen her pride and pleasure in her work. Not at all amazed at her own achievements, she does not take it as a compliment when successes which would win little notice, if gained by a man, are made much of in her. It is one of her concern to show that she can do her work as well as men are doing theirs, or better than they, for all her strength and skill is given to doing it as it should be done. Men and women alike are her companions, with whom she works on terms of hearty comradeship, with a deep pleasure in the assurance that she is pulling her weight in the world's boat. What she asks from men is what men ask of each other—honest dealing. And yet, having neither surrendered nor denied any whit of her womanhood, she brings into the mart and counting house a novel grace, a tone and manner that were not gained there. What the ages have dowered her with she will not abandon now. Rather, she will make it flourish and spread in a new ground. She can be clear-eyed without loss of tenderness and serious without lack of humor. She carries into business the courtesy and patience and human understanding that have served her well elsewhere, seeing no reason why they should not serve here as well. She learns from men without self-abasement because she knows that she, too, can teach. In reality, there is little that is new in her position, for during all human history there has been much of this same partnership. Women have always been the chief chafferers in the market-places, at least of the western world, and their business experience began with business itself. If the bonds of this ancient partnership are now drawn somewhat closer, the gain to her is no more manifest than the gain to those with whom she works.

An English Village Green

Happy the village which is built round a green one of ample size, on which one may stand and look round on a circle of high oak and poplar, between red and white cottages and farms and inns, and all that has satisfied generation after generation, from church and chapel to forge and mill. How beautifully, from such a centre, the tracks lead away through five-barred gates under colonnades of elms, or beside the ridges softly curved by the perpetual plough! Here, too, when it is a day for cricket or football, or for the swings and roundabouts, there is a special sense of the village community; all the houses have a share in the matter in hand, great and small, forming one harmony, acknowledging one sympathy. In many places, too, a great tree stands in the middle of the little square, with its seats built beneath its broad canopy as a constant and general invitation to leisure and talk. Gilbert White, the good parson, delighted to dream of such a tree at Selborne: "a vast oak, with a short, squat body, and huge horizontal arms extending almost to the extremity of the area. This venerable tree, surrounded with stone steps, and seats above them, was the delight of old and young, where the former sat in grave debate, while the latter frolicked and danced before them." We do not only see with the eye, and since these old Druidical fathers of the village are not all overturned by gales or felled by modern needs, we hear when we come towards them, clearer than the rattle of the lorry bumping round the corner, a tune of frolic and dance.—From "The Face of England," by Edmund Blunden.

Princes Favor "Boaters"

The Prince of Wales and Prince George, by wearing straw hats in public recently, have set an example that has given new heart to the manufacturers of "boaters."

Apparently, too, the example is being followed. More straw hats are being seen about—they have even made their appearance in the House of Commons.

From the point of view of coolness there is a good deal to be said for the boater. It is the second coolest of all forms of headgear—only a panama beats it in this respect, and the boater is much cheaper than the panama.

The hottest headgear is a cloth cap. When tests were made of the temperature under different types of hats some time ago, the cloth cap registered 37 degrees Centigrade; a peaked cap 36.5 degrees; a bowler 33.5, a silk top-hat 32, and a soft felt 30. The straw boater and the panama were 26.5 and 25 degrees respectively.

Muriel (who has gently but firmly rejected an offer of marriage): "What do you want the waitress for?" Robert: "To alter my order. If I've got to look on you as 'just a sister,' those shilling sundaes are going to be threepenny ices."

Daffodils

I planted many daffodils
Upon a mellow hill;
For once I'd own a hundred blooms,
Of fragrance have my fill.
And I would keep the fragile flowers
Until the petals fell—
Such treasure I would never give,
Would never lend or sell.

And then I saw a little child
With empty hands at play;
A curtain drawn above a sill,
A man grown old and gray.
I could not keep my yellow flowers—
At night I dreamed they ran
To kiss the child, to paint the sill,
To cheer the tired man.

And now I own a naked hill;
The wind sighs for perfumes.
I gave the flowers to children's hands,
Old men and darkened rooms.
But when the springtime comes again,
I'll have them row on row—
And if my heart beats selfishly,
No one shall ever know.

Europe's Longest Bridge

The longest bridge in Europe is to be built in Denmark by a British firm.

It is to be a combined railway and highway bridge, connecting two Danish islands, and will be 2 miles 336 yards in length, 263 yards longer than the Tay Bridge, which now has pride of place. The fact that the contract for building it has been placed with a British firm is a tribute to our high reputation for work of this kind.

The new Danish bridge will not, however, break any world record. A longer bridge is now under construction in Africa. This is the Zambesi Bridge, also British built, which is to be two miles 502 yards long.

Beauty in the Jungle

I know of no spot, easy of access, on the Isthmus where an idea of the beauty and the terror of the jungle can be better gained than on the lower Chagres. The stout green barrier comes flush to the water's edge, the mangroves at places wading out on their stilt-like roots into the stream like a line of deployed skirmishers. That green wall looks light, beautiful, ethereal even, but lay your boat alongside it and essay the land. You will find it yielding indeed, but as impenetrable as a wall of adamant. It will receive you as gently as the liquid amber welcomes the fly, and hold you as inexorably in its beautiful embrace when you are once entrapped. The tender fern, the shrinking sensitive plant, the flowering shrub, the bending sapling, the sturdy and towering tree are all tied together by lithe, serpentine, gnarled and unbreakable vines which seem to spring from the ground and hang from the highest branches as well. There are not enough inches of ground to support the vegetation, so it grows from the trees living literally on the air. . . .

And how beautiful it all is! The green alone would be enough, but it is varied by the glowing orange poll of a lignum tree, the bright scarlet of the hibiscus, the purple of some leafy tree whose name the botanist will know but not the wayfarer. Color is in splotches on every side, from the wild flowers close to the river's brink to great yellow blossoms on the tops of trees so tall that they tower over the forests like lighthouses visible for miles around. Orchids in more delicate shades, orchids that would set Fifth Avenue agog, are here to be had for a few blows of the machete. It is a riot and a revel of color—as gay as the decorations of some ancient arena before the gladiatorial combats began. For life here is a steady battle too, a struggle between man and the jungle and woe to the man who invades the enemy's country alone or strays far from the trail, shadowy and indistinct as that may be.—From "The Panama Canal," by Willis J. Abbot.

Proper Food Vital In Keeping Healthy

Milk Lauded — Described As Rich in Minerals and Vitamins — Advice Menus Offered

New York.—The question of food is one that too frequently is decided on the basis of convenience instead of logical thinking and accurate knowledge, says the United States Public Health Service on a paper on "The Food We Should Eat." The food we eat has much to do with whether we shall have a healthy body or a sick one and improper food selection often leads to conditions that can be corrected only by long periods of proper food adjustment.

"A little too much fat or carbohydrate in the diet may eventually result in obesity which is frequently never properly corrected," says the service. "An insufficient amount of certain of the vitamins may produce serious disease, permanent deformity, and sometimes death, if not corrected in time. It is indeed fortunate for our well-being that the selection of the proper food is not difficult. The foods we should eat can be determined without the aid of a dietitian and are available in every city.

"In addition to water there are five groups of substances that must be present in our diet if we are to remain healthy: Vitamins, minerals, proteins, fats and carbohydrates. Diets, when deficient at all, are likely to be deficient in minerals and vitamins, and the housewife should be particular to secure an adequate supply of these substances.

"We now know of several different vitamins, all of which must be in the diet if health is to be maintained. These can be conveniently considered in three classes: First, those obtained with fats—such as butter, cream and fish-liver oils; second, those which are destroyed by cooking and which are obtained with fresh, uncooked vegetables and fruits, such as lettuce, cabbage, tomatoes, oranges, apples, etc., and third, the vitamin not harmed by cooking and obtained principally with lean meats and milk.

MINERALS ARE NECESSARY.

"Minerals are necessary for the proper formation of bones and blood. Milk is one of the most important foods we have for richness in minerals and vitamins. It supplies most of the vitamins and all of the minerals we need except iron. It is especially rich in lime. Oatmeal is fairly rich in vitamins and minerals. Dried beans contain iron, phosphorus and calcium. Spinach, lettuce, cabbage and other green leafy vegetables provide minerals and vitamins. Tomatoes, oranges and apples are also to be recommended.

"The next most important thing to be considered is the protein. The proper kind and amount of protein must be present or normal growth and development will not take place. It has been estimated that the daily diet of an average man should contain about three and one-half ounces of protein. If we secure our protein in the cheapest manner (that is, in vegetables, particularly beans of various kinds), we obtain a protein of poor quality, and in order to make the diet correct we must add protein of higher quality, such as that from milk, milk products, meats, fish and eggs. Those who can afford it usually prefer to have most of their protein in the more costly form of eggs and meat on account of their palatability. Protein from milk and meat is known as complete protein, on account of its good quality and the fact that it does not require the addition of protein from other sources.

"After attending to these items, the energy value of the diet should be taken into consideration. We must know how much to eat in order to have enough fuel to do our work without using the body tissues. In order to know this we estimate the fuel value of the diet in calories. The calorie is simply a convenient unit of measure. One ounce of protein or carbohydrate supplies about 115 calories, and one ounce of fat about 264 calories; and so all that we have to do is determine the composition and amount of food we eat in order to know the fuel value of our diet. Most books on nutrition and dietetics give tables showing the caloric value of definite amounts of the common foodstuffs. It has been estimated that a man or woman living a quiet life at home, with little exercise, needs about 2,500 calories a day; if working, without much exercise, 3,000 calories; on light work, 3,500 calories; and if doing hard work, 4,000 or more calories are necessary.

"Fats are important additions to the diet on account of their high energy value. They supply about twice as much energy as an equal weight of protein or carbohydrate, and thus relieve the body of the necessity of dealing with an excessive amount of material in order to obtain a large number of calories. The most important fatty foods are butter and cream because of their palatability and ease of assimilation, and because they carry vitamins with them. It is difficult to obtain a sufficient caloric intake in a diet which is without fat. However, an excessive amount of fat tends to cause digestive upsets in certain individuals and gives a disagreeable feeling of heaviness after eating. On the other hand, a proper quantity gives a desirable feeling of comfort and wellbeing. Improperly fried foods should be avoided, since grease soaked through the food tends to obstruct the work of the digestive fluids.

"Carbohydrates are necessary in order for the body properly to use the protein and fats in the diet; and for this reason the bulk of the diet should be made up of carbohydrates, which may be obtained from the large number of starchy and sweet foods.

"In addition to making the diet nutritionally sound, there are other important things to be considered. A certain amount of bulk seems to assist the body in handling the waste products of digestion. A sufficient quantity is usually obtained from the green vegetables in the diet.

"Another factor is palatability. An attractive table of well-prepared food tends to increase food consumption. The diet may also be planned so that there will be no feeling of hunger at the end of the meal. Certain foods are known to have a greater satisfying value than others. Meats of various kinds are most important in this respect. Butter and others fats and soups containing meat extractives, are also valuable; and a dessert or other sweet food taken at the end of the meal, increases its satisfying effect. Thus, a prominent nutritionist states that a meal consisting of, first, a soup containing meat extractives; second, meat and potatoes, to which may be added starchy vegetables; then a salad with an oil dressing, and ending with a dessert, gives the greatest degree of satisfaction.

Brilliant Colors Have Highest Sales Appeal

To sell chocolates the best colors for covers or boxes are red, orange, or bright yellow. Brown is next, but green or blue have no sales appeal, according to manufacturers.

It is said dull colors will actually deter a purchaser, even though the contents of the package are of the highest standard.

Manufacturers are only just beginning to realize the importance of colors in the sale of their wares. Red and orange are warm colors; they excite enthusiasm.

Green is an excellent color for the walls of a room; so is pale primrose. These are soft, restful colors, and good for the eyes. You do not want a wall which constantly attracts the eyes but you do want warm, bright, striking colors to attract purchasers to goods displayed in shop windows.

In the matter of books—reds lead and the more brilliant the wrappers the higher the sales. The salesman who studies colors and who understands them is the one who leads the field.

Sunday School Lesson

August 7. Lesson VI—The Ten Commandments—1. Exodus 20: 1-11. Golden Text—Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might.—Deut. 6: 5.

ANALYSIS.

I. DIVINE GRACE AND HUMAN DUTY, Vs. 1, 2.

II. UNDIVIDED LOYALTY, v. 3.

III. TRUE WORSHIP, vs. 4-11.

INTRODUCTION—The law was given amid scenes of great solemnity. The people were made to remain at the foot of Mount Sinai, while Moses, their leader, went alone up the mountain to the presence of the Most High, 19: 12, 13, 20. Meanwhile the mountain shook with a quake; it was filled with smoke, fire, lightnings, and was shrouded with a thick cloud, 19: 18. In these mighty convulsions, nature was declaring its solemn Amen to the law of God.

The commandments are a condensed manual of right conduct. They set forth in the first part (vs. 1-11) man's duty to God, and in the second part, his duty to his fellow men, vs. 12-17. They are, properly speaking, prohibitions rather than commandments. While brief in form, they are yet comprehensive enough to cover almost the whole of man's life.

I. DIVINE GRACE AND HUMAN DUTY, Vs. 1, 2.

In this preface, regarded by the Jews as the first commandment, God suggests the motive which should inspire Israel to observe his law. He had rescued his people from the slavery of Egypt. Since he had secured their redemption, he had the right to claim his people's obedience. Before he had given the law he had shown his redeeming love. If viewed in this light, his law could not seem harsh to Israel. It was their reasonable service to him who had redeemed them.

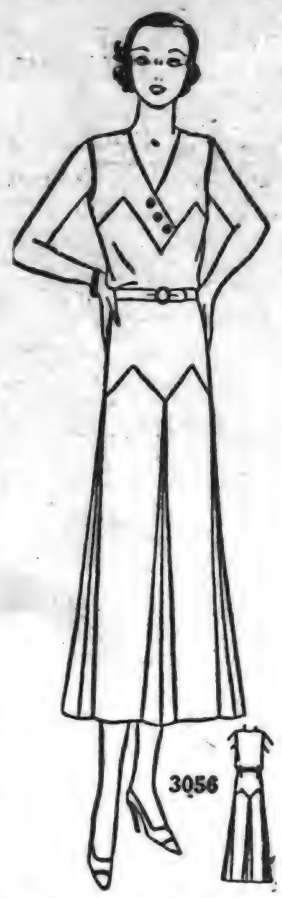
II. UNDIVIDED LOYALTY, v. 3.

God's first requirement is the worship of himself alone. To us it seems so obvious that there is only one God, that we can scarcely conceive how Israel could be tempted to worship a number of gods. Yet that temptation was very real throughout her history. The reason was twofold. Many of the surrounding peoples had gods which, like the Baals, were merely the deification of the forces of nature; if Israel desired the products of the soil she had better some argued, propitiate these divinities who presided over its fertility. Further, when a people like the Assyrians triumphed over Israel in war, there was a strong temptation to regard the national god of Israel's foes as stronger than Jehovah. Israel was saved from the temptation to go after strange gods so long as she remembered the majestic moral personality of God, and his redemptive acts in her history.

III. TRUE WORSHIP, vs. 4-11.

Not only must God be worshipped, but he is to be worshipped worthily. This excludes the use of images. The great moment in the worship of Israel's heathen neighbors was when the image of their god was exhibited and all the people did homage. But such worship is apt to become materialized. Now God is a Spirit (Deut. 4: 12), a free and moral personality; he must therefore be worshipped in a spiritual rather than in a material way. Nothing in nature, either in the heavens with its sun, stars and birds, or in the earth with its beasts, nor in the sea with its fish, can adequately represent him who stands above nature and is not exhausted in it. To this commandment is attached an appendix (vs. 5b, 6), setting forth the penalties of disobedience, and the mercy that blesses widely all obedience. In Hebrew society the unit was the family rather than the individual. The child who was born into a family entered, therefore, into the consequences of that family's past.

The third commandment had to do with God's honor. In ancient society men regarded the name as of peculiar significance. It usually described the characteristics of him who bore it. Hence God's name stood for his character as the guardian of righteousness, truth and goodness. Israel was warned against dishonoring God by uttering his name magically, frivolously or profanely. Probably "in vain" meant "without result." In this case this commandment would warn Israel that they were not to make a promise confirmed with the holy name of God and then never carry out that promise. Promises must be regardod as sacred and binding; otherwise God is dishonored. In the fourth commandment (vs. 8-11) God claimed for himself one day of the seven, in order to show his right to all the days. The seventh day is kept holy when it is set aside for God. Men set it aside for God when every member and dependant of the household ceases from all forms of work. The reason given for restraining from work on the Sabbath is that God himself rested at the end of his week of creative work, Gen. 2: 2, 3. By tracing the Sabbath back to the creation, the suggestion is conveyed that the Sabbath was wrought into the very structure of the universe. It rests on no arbitrary whim, but upon a deep and abiding necessity, ordained of God.



FRIENDSHIP

Of all felicities, the most charming is that of a firm and gentle friendship. It sweetens all our cares, dispels our sorrows, and counsels us in all extremities. Nay, if there were no other comfort in it than the bare exercise of so generous a virtue, even for that single reason a man would not be without it; it is a sovereign antidote against all calamities—even against the fear of death itself.

A Canoe Adventure

"Do you think we'll be perfectly safe in camping out to-night " asked Lucine, as we paddled off in the dusk.

"Safe as in a church" I answered cheerily. "We'll sleep on the bank, and,—" But, upon looking about me, I could perceive no bank, only a stretch of low, flat rocks. "Weren't there banks when we started this afternoon?"

"Yes, quite high and steep. I remember wondering why there weren't any houses on them."

Certainly the landscape was quite houseless, even forlorn; and so, as there was no good camping spot, we made shift for the night by anchoring near the rocks. We stretched out in the Nageoma's sixteen feet of cushioned length, and fell asleep.

It was a few hours later when we awakened to face something as unexpected as an earthquake. Foot by foot we, in an appallingly tilted canoe, were slipping downhill over slippery rocks, borne by the fast-retreating waters. Then, before you could say "Tide" the Nageoma jammed and we were left high and dry among oozy boulders, limpets and seaweed. Out upon that uninviting prospect we sprang, fearing to strain the heavily laden canoe, and there we huddled for three pitch-black hours, while the water sank downhill as if mermaids had pulled the stopper out of their bathtub.

"Oh, why did we ever start this canoe-trip " moaned Lucine in the darkness. "Beds, dress-closets, kitchenette, running water—will I ever see such things again?"

"Don't mention running water," I replied. "What we need is some water that'll stand still for a moment."

At dawn we perceived that we were lodged halfway down the slant of a rocky precipice, at the bottom of which that innocent-looking LaRance meandered sweetly past its outflung banks. For there were banks, forty feet high, the only drawback being that La Rance swallowed them up twice in every twenty-four hours. Hastily we unloaded the Nageoma, launched her, then set off on that all too brief incoming tide.

That afternoon we found ourselves gliding along between cornfields where farm-houses and fishing-smacks, curiously intermingled, lay perched above La Rance on such steep heights that we had to crane our necks for a glimpse of them. We crossed a wide lagoon, then went ashore and climbed up thirty feet, being curious to know just why Breton farmers kept fishing-smacks in their vegetable gardens. We found a man seated on a good-sized smack, whetting a scythe, while behind a ten-foot wall his wife was hanging out fish-nets in a cornfield.

"Pardon," we said, "but are you a fisherman or a farmer?"

"That all depends on the tide, monsieur," he answered. "At low sea one farms; at high sea one fishes. That is because at low sea there is no water at all, and at high sea there is no land."—Melville Chater, in "Two Canoe Gypsies."

Where Kipling Edited "Copy"

Simla, India.—The newspaper on which Mr. Rudyard Kipling once served as an assistant editor, the Pioneer, has passed from British control to Indian—making one of the most significant pieces of "Indianization" that has occurred in this country in recent years, writes the Simla correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor. First published in 1865, the newspaper has conscientiously served Anglo-Indian interests in India, and its change to an Indian-owned publication is viewed in India as something in the nature of a minor imperial event. Since its foundation, the Pioneer has virtually always represented the best characteristics of the British connection with India, and for many years was considered the most important newspaper in the country. Kipling served on the Pioneer, at Allahabad, and the Civil and Military Gazette, at Lahore, between 1882 and 1889. It was as a result of his connection with these newspapers that he developed his flair for portraying Indian life and manners, and it was in the columns of the two newspapers that his first sketches of the Indian scene were produced. It is a popular habit with tourists and others in the country to drop in at the offices of both newspapers to see where Kipling wrote, and an editor of one of the journals recently said that scores of Americans make pilgrimages to the offices in Lahore and Allahabad for the purpose of seeing where Kipling actually wrote. The office of the Pioneer today is virtually unchanged since the time when Kipling worked there.

"Whipping" is Lauded By House of Lords

London.—The Lords and the Commons are at odds and all over the question of whether whipping is good for the juvenile offender.

With several peers testifying they had a birching in their youth and it did them good, the House of Lords inserted a provision in the Government's children's bill that children should be subject to a birching by the police if the magistrate so orders.

The bill, as sent up from the Commons, contained no such provision, the Commons having taken it out. Then the bill was sent back to the Lower House which will consider the question again.

DUTIES.

You picture to yourself the beauty of bravery and steadfastness. And then some little, wretched, disagreeable duty comes which is your martyrdom; the lamp for your oil; and if you do not do it your oil is spilled.

—Phillips Brooks.

Queer Inventions Found Among U.S. Patents

New York.—People who have been looking for an air-cooled rocking chair, goggles for their chickens, bullets that shoot around corners, or even a device for creating and maintaining dimples, are herewith referred by H. A. Allen Smith, U.P. staff correspondent, to the United States patent office where specifications of such articles are on file, duly stamped with the government's approval.

Two men have pried into the patent office records and out of their labors has come a compilation of strange inventions.

The contrivances have been designed for a wide variety of problems. There is, for example, a combination grocer's package, grater, slicer and mouse and fly trap. A balloon propelled by harnessed eagles or vultures, patented in 1887, is pictured and described.

Two methods of awakening the commuter are included. One is an alarm clock attachment which squirts water on the sleeper's neck, while the other drops 80 or 90 wooden blocks in his face.

A self-tipping derby hat, patented in 1896, contains a mechanism in the crown. The gentleman, when the lady approaches, bows slightly, whereupon his hat tips by itself, leaving his arms free.

An electric bedbug exterminator is so designed as to "kill or startle" the bug, in which case "it will more than likely change its mind and return in the direction whence it came."

In 1868 a novel idea on coffins was born. It has a turret at the head, extending to the surface of the ground, and is equipped with a small ladder for climbing out and a bell for attracting attention in case the occupant happens to be buried prior to demise.

The problem of shooing horses and cows off railroad tracks was solved in 1884 when a patent was issued for a locomotive attachment which throws a stream of hot water some distance ahead, thereby scalding the animals and warning them to keep their distance.

The air-cooled rocking chair is equipped with bellows beneath the seat and a snake-headed pipe running up the back and out over the rocker's head, so that he gets puffs of air on his scalp with each rock.

And an improved foot-warmer consists of two tubes extending to a single mouthpiece through which the sleeper breathes his warm breath onto his heels.

The illusion that times that were are better than those that are has probably pervaded all ages.—Horace Greeley.

HOT WEATHER PRECAUTIONS

The summer season is a healthful time. Summer offers many advantages in the abundance of fresh fruits and green leafy vegetables provided, as well as the comfort secured out of doors in the fresh air and sunshine. Just because summer means hot weather, and because hot weather means not only fresh fruits and vegetables but such unpleasant things as flies and mosquitoes, attention should be given to certain precautions which will make for a more comfortable summer.

sunshine is a giver of health. An overdose of sunshine will cause harm, however, just as will an overdose of a drug which, when taken in the proper amount, does good. Get out into the sunlight every day, but be moderate, and take time to acquire a coat of tan.

Souring and putrefaction are due to the action of certain bacteria which multiply with incredible rapidity when warm. This is the explanation of many of the cases of what is commonly called ptomaine poisoning. As a matter of fact ptomaine poisoning does not occur. The condition is due to bacteria or germs found in food which has been allowed to get stale.

At all times, but particularly in summer, sufficient care should be taken to make sure that food is strictly fresh. Food that is tainted, soft or mushy should not be eaten, as such food has evidently not been kept properly.

When vegetables are eaten raw, it is necessary that they be thoroughly washed. This is true the year round, and is mentioned here only because raw vegetables are used in summer.

Poison ivy should be known, as for obvious reasons it should be destroyed, or if that is not possible, it should be avoided. Poison ivy usually grows as a long bushy plant, but it may grow as a vine trailing on the ground or over other objects. It is recognized by the arrangement of its leaves in threes. The poisoning results from a contact between the person's body and the plant. If contact has occurred, the part should be scrubbed with laundry soap under running water.

The common house fly is not to be feared on account of size, but he is a dangerous enemy of the human race. For the reason that the fly feeds anywhere and everywhere all manner of filth is carried on its hairy body. The germs of disease or those which cause putrefaction of food are very apt to be spread by flies. The breeding places of flies should be destroyed, homes protected by screens and all food should be kept cold and covered so that flies and other insects cannot contaminate it.

Attention to such hot weather precautions will make your summer more pleasant and more healthful.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

CLARKSON

Flying through a car's open window and into the ear of a lady driver, a small insect was the cause of an accident here.

According to police, Miss C. L. Steward, Rosemount Avenue, Toronto, who was driving past the Sheridan Nurseries when the unwelcome visitor arrived, let go of the steering wheel and clutched at her ear. Miss M. Smyth, Playter Crescent, sitting beside her, grabbed for the wheel, and the car swung into the ditch, sideswiping the trailer on another car as it did so.

Miss Smyth, suffering head injuries, was treated by Dr. E. G. Vernon and taken to St. Jospeh's Hospital. Miss Steward escaped with a shaking up. Provincial Officer Hinchcliffe investigated.

PORT CREDIT

Firemen from all parts of Peel, Halton and York Counties joined in a parade to the First United Church, Port Credit, Sunday evening. Over 200 men turned out, including the Burlington drill team, and Oakville Citizens' Band, which headed the parade. Rev. T. W. Neale, Toronto, preached the sermon, and after the service, a sacred concert was held in Lakeshore Park.

Car Hits Hydro Pole, Driver's Son Injured

Swerving to avoid a cyclist who turned into his path, Frank Lowther, Scarboro Road, Toronto, swung his car off the Lakeshore road onto the sidewalk, and struck a Hydro pole as he was turning back to the road.

Bruce Lowther, his ten-year-old son, was badly cut about the face. Mrs. Perkins, St. John's Road, Toronto, also a passenger, was badly bruised. They were taken to Skinner's Undertaking Parlors and attended by Dr. E. G. Vernon Clarkson. Several stitches were required to close a cut in the boy's lip. Chief Telfer Wilson, Port Credit, investigated.

TURKEY'S STRONG MAN

Mustapha Kemal Rules With Iron Hand—Radical Changes Amaze Turks — Prove Beneficial.

The third-term bugaboo has apparently not reached the Republic of Turkey, where Mustapha Kemal has accepted another four years of the presidency, handed to him by the newly - elected Turkish Parliament without a single dissenting vote. Despite President Kemal's expressed desire for some sort of political opposition no other candidate presented himself.

Under the firm hand of the dictator, Kemal, a good deal of steady progress is noticeable to those who have been in the country during the past few years. The Ghazi, it is true, has treated unsympathetic factions with an iron hand, but a good deal of his strength has rested on a united nation, a rare thing in Turkish history, and the enthusiasm of younger elements.

Well into its seventh year as a republic, Turkey is beginning to show many signs of a national consciousness. Turkish patriotism expresses itself through pride rather than fear. While the muezzin still calls the faithful to prayer, the muezzin himself has changed. In place of the fez, or the turban, the crier from the minaret now sports a very cockney-looking cap, worn backward like a motor-cycle rider.

In outlawing the fez Mustapha Kemal showed that he understood

the Turk better than the Turk understood himself. There was no economic reason why the old red headgear should go. But the psychological effect was tremendous. The Turk, it was realized, could not think or act like a Westerner, he could not compete with a European, if his trousers were baggy, his slippers comic and his headgear like that of a lodge member. So the leaders of the new state appropriately started with his head to "shake him out of his shoes."

The change from Arabic characters to the Latin alphabet made the whole nation illiterate a little over two years ago, but since then almost everyone, old and young, rich and poor, has been industriously studying his new A B C's. The problem might conceivably have been greater had the percentage of literacy been higher before 1929. At that time only 15 per cent. of the population, it is estimated, could read and write Arabic. Most of the illiterates hired a professional letter writer and reader to take care of whatever correspondence was necessary.

The difficult Arabic script is now seldom seen. Railroad stations, postcard shops, steamer names, movie posters, newspapers and magazines all use almost the same letters we do, although they depict the sounds of the old Turkish language. The advent of a new alphabet hit the newspapers hardest. Their street sales dropped almost to zero when they first appeared in characters which many of their employes could not read. They are recovering, however, largely through the active demand for reading matter, in the new medium from hundreds of newly-established primary schools throughout Turkey.

THE VALUE OF A WIFE.

Woman Assessed Like a Slave, Says Noted Judge.

Mr. Justice McCardie, who is one of England's most well-known bachelors, offered some comment on the value of a wife in divorce proceedings at the Birmingham assizes.

The judge remarked the husband had said his wife was a good housekeeper, clean and industrious. He thought it was a description one would give a domestic servant.

"In arriving at the damages you have to assess the value of a woman as you would assess the state of a slave in some eastern part of the world. To my mind it is one of the most unfortunate aspects of the divorce law in this country."

The jury awarded the petitioner in the case $485 damages.

CURLY—A DOG.

Still another evidence of the devotion of a dog to those it loves: In Alberta a little pet named Curly which had been carried in a wagon several hundred miles across country from Lesser Slave Lake to Bassano, returned under its own power to its old friends and the old home. Curly was several weeks on the way, but knew where he wanted to go, and never faltered until he reached the familiar home scenes; and surely there must have been a boy among the magnets that drew him back.—Toronto Globe.

Ontario's Record for 1931

186 killed or injured because of faulty brakes

571 men, women and children killed by motor vehicles in 1931
8,494 injured

If a tire is about to blow out or the steering gear or axle is ready to snap, you may not know it—

But, you know whether or not your brakes are safe.

A few minutes spent in making adjustments, or a few dollars for new linings, may save you a lifetime of regret.

John Leslie Retires

1. John Leslie. 2. E. E. Lloyd. 3. L. B. Unwin. 4. E. A. Leslie.

John Leslie, Vice President of Finance and Treasurer of the Canadian Pacific Railway, after more than 53 years of service with that Company and its subsidiaries will retire from office under pension rules, on July 1st, according to an announcement made by E. W. Beatty, Chairman and President. Mr. Leslie will be succeeded by Mr. E. E. Lloyd, presently Comptroller of the Company. L. B. Unwin, Assistant Comptroller, will be appointed Comptroller and E. A. Leslie, Assistant Comptroller, will be appointed Deputy Comptroller.

"The Directors and myself desire to record our appreciation of Mr. Leslie's long, loyal and efficient service", Mr. Beatty said in announcing Mr. Leslie's retirement. Mr. Leslie has given a lifetime to railway work in this country. He became a railroader as a boy of 16, when in March, 1877 he entered the service of the Toronto Grey & Bruce Railway, as a junior clerk in their Toronto office. He became Vice President and Comptroller, Montreal in January 1926, and Vice President in charge of Finance, and Treasurer on February 10th, 1928.

Mr. Lloyd, who succeeds Mr. Leslie as Vice President and Treasurer commenced his railroad career with the Canadian Pacific at Winnipeg in December, 1887, when he became a clerk in the Stores Department. He became Auditor of Stores & Mechanical Accounts at Montreal, in December, 1904; and after holding different posts in that department, became Auditor of Disbursements in March 1918; Assistant Comptroller in February 1921, and Comptroller in February 1928.

Mr. Unwin, who succeeds Mr. Lloyd, was first a clerk in the office of the Assistant Superintendent at Chapleau, Ontario, in 1908 and served at Chapleau, White River and Schreiber until the outbreak of the world war. He early answered the call to arms by enlisting in the first Contingent. Mr. Unwin was awarded the Military Cross, earned his majority, being demobilized with that rank in April, 1919. On July 2, 1926, he was made Assistant Auditor of Miscellaneous Accounts, and on February 10th, 1928, he was appointed Assistant Comptroller.

E. A. Leslie, who becomes Deputy Comptroller is a son of John Leslie, and followed his distinguished father into the service of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. In 1912 he succeeded in winning a Canadian Pacific scholarship at McGill University, and became a student of transportation. He graduated in 1916 with a bachelor of science degree. Mr. Leslie immediately enlisted with the Canadian Artillery, and after serving in England and in France, was demobilized in May 1919 with the rank of Lieutenant. July of the same year found him back in harness with the Canadian Pacific as clerk in the General Managers' office in Montreal. Mr. Leslie was promoted to the post of Assistant Comptroller in February, 1928.

The Depression in the U. S. A. is Intense

Word was received that a family living on the border of Roseburg Michigan, were in such extreme poverty early last May that they were almost destitute. They had only a few very small potatoes left. They decided to plant them in the garden and continue to look for work and relief. But little help could be found. However, after they were planted two weeks, they were forced to dig up the potatoes to save life.

Drumquin

We have not noticed any items from our burg in your columns for some time. It is like what the girl said to a certain young man—"Absent but not forgotten"

Mr. P. D. Salter purposes moving into his fine new home at Agerton this week.

Mr. Blakeley, who has been absent for some years, having seen much of the United States, and the Emerald Isle, is visiting his sister Mrs. Goodwin.

Mrs. Emerson Ford has been visiting her sister at Port Perry recently.

Mr. Will Alderson has the brick work done and the roof on his fine new home on the 7th line. This is another fine addition to our district.

Anyone who has a large patch of potatoes will notice that all the big bugs are not at Ottawa attending the Economic Conference.

This district is fast becoming a garden centre, which is evidenced by the large quantities of fruit sold and the larger acreage of vegetables put in from year to year.

MARRIAGES

McKellar—Cook

A very pretty wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Cook here, on Wednesday, July 27th, when their only daughter, Vera Olga, was married to John G. McKellar, son of Mrs. Martha McKellar and the late Duncan McKellar. The ceremony was conducted by Rev. Geo. H. Purchase of Streetsville United Church and pastor of the bride, in the presence of immediate relatives of the bride and groom. A reception was held at the conclusion of the ceremony, the couple leaving afterward by motor for Toronto and eastern points as far as Halifax, N.S. On their return they will reside in Toronto, where the groom is Mathematics Master of Jarvis Collegiate Institute.

THIS AND THAT

It is claimed that the Bible is the best seller among books, but it seems to us it is very little read.

The Hon. Charles McCrea, Minister of Mines for Ontario, stated recently that "The worst of the crisis has passed." Here's hoping.

All eyes have been turned toward Wolf Week at Sault Ste. Marie. The doings of the week were brought to a fitting climax when the wolf hunters and trappers of Algoma dined together. All lovers of piscatorial sport have had to take a back seat for a week.

The beneficial result of British administration is being demonstrated in the case of General Smuts, who was at one time a vigorous and resourceful foe of the Empire and has become one of the Empire's staunchest upholders. After a period of comparative silence he has been found giving vigorous battle to the Natal secessionists within his South African party.

It is stated that manufacturers of woollens in England and Canada are far apart and that the two governments concerned will be called upon to settle the differences. So far as Canada is concerned the first great duty is to get the farmer on his feet. To us it seems when the farmer suffers everyone else suffers. The woollen industry, while important, is insignificant compared with this.

According to the records of the Motor Vehicles Branch of the Ontario Department of Highways, motor vehicle accidents during the month of August, 1931, averaged more than 33 per day. Included in this number there were 77 fatalities and 1,025 persons injured. This is for the Province of Ontario alone. The causes recorded were various, but it is noteworthy that more than one fourth of the motorists involved came to grief while driving on the wrong side of the road and almost as many were driving too fast for traffic and road conditions.

The address delivered by the Hon. R. b. Bennett at the opening of the Imperial Conference was a classic and will be a model for many years. For lucidity, straight from the shoulder, a knowledge of Dominion and Empire Problems, an appeal to the Patriotic ties which bind the Empire and the Dominion together, it is doubtful if there is another man in the public life of Canada who could have created so profound an impression not only upon those who heard him but also upon the whole Empire. It seems to the writer, were this Imperial Conference to fail the fault will not rest upon the shoulders of Mr. Bennett, who has laid his cards upon the table, face up, who has indeed started the play and has asked Great Britain to follow suit.

Conservative Picnic A Big Success

LAKEVIEW

As well as having a good time in Lakeview Park Saturday afternoon, members and friends of Peel County Conservative Association who staged their annual picnic, contributed the proceeds to the relief committee of Lakeview to aid the unemployed. A program of sports was run off during the afternoon, including horse shoe pitching, baseball and soccer.

Those donating prizes included: Sam Charters, M.P.; Hon. T. L. Kennedy, Gen. and Mrs. Cawthra Elliott; Gordon Graydon, president of the association; R. D. Salmond, president of the Lakeview Association. Among those who attended were: Dr. Anderson, M.P.; R. W. Lent, Brampton; ex-Warden O. R. Church; Reeve L. H. Pallett, and other members of Toronto Township Council.

Col. the Hon T. L. Kennedy, Minister of Agriculture, who was always a good football player, kicked off the ball, which started the game between Streetsville and Lakeview, for the Kennedy Challenge cup. This game lasted an hour and 20 minutes and when time was called, the score was 1-1. The game was postponed until Monday evening, when Lakeview defeated Streetsville at Peel Park by 3-1, thereby winning the silver cup.

The Tug-of-War between Brampton and Lakeview was won by a team from our county town and each of the winners received a sweater coat. Two Streetsville men helped Brampton to pull.

In the Girls' Softball game, Brampton defeated Clarkson by a score of 14 to 6.

Sam Charters, M.P., presented the prizes for the sports contests, and the ladies served refreshments.

A very enjoyable dance was held in the evening, the music for which was supplied by the Cowboys' Orchestra and the Peel County Old Time Fiddlers.

4,016 MOTOR VEHICLES COLLIDED IN 1931

83 deaths and injuries to 3,278 persons resulted from collisions between motor vehicles in Ontario last year.

This information is furnished by J. P. Bickell, Registrar of Motor Vehicles, Ontario Department of Highways. The figures are, therefore, official. And surely they are a sad commentary upon the driving habits of the men and women motorists of the province.

Occasionally, perhaps, there may be a legitimate excuse for the colliding of two automobiles, but according to official information the great majority of accidents occur in broad day light, on straight roads and the cars involved are almost always in good mechanical condition.

It may be, as some people claim, that the average motorist has little or no regard for the rights of the other fellow. Still, it should not be difficult for the habitually careless driver to see that sooner or later he is bound to be "the other fellow" himself.

W. W. EVANS FINANCIER DIES AT 42

William Watson Evans, president of Canadian General Securities and one of Canada's most prominent financial leaders, died Saturday. He was 42. His home was at 2 Hawthorne avenue.

In addition to being president and general manager of Canadian General Securities, Ltd., of which Rt. Hon. Arthur Meighen is vice-president, Mr. Evans was president of the Trader's Finance Corporation, Canadian General Investment Trusts and Canadian Insurance Shares, Ltd., and a director of numerous other organizations. He was particularly well known in Western Canada.

Born at Tara, Bruce County, he was the son of William P. Evans and the former Elizabeth Hearst. He was educated at Owen Sound, University of Toronto and Osgoode Hall Law School and was called to the Ontario Bar in 1914. He went to Winnipeg in that year, and was called to the Manitoba Bar in 1915. From 1916 to 1918, he was western solicitor for the Canadian Pacific Railway, resigning to form General Securities.

Mr. Evans married Mary E. L. Thompson, B.A., in 1916. The funeral took place Tuesday afternoon, from his home at Erindale to St. Peter's Church and cemetery at Erindale.

Weekly Crop Report

At last report Eastern and Northern Ontario were quite dry with the result that hay was not much over half a crop and pastures were brown, with a corresponding shrinkage in milk flow. Rain is needed in those districts to assure a good yield in spring grain and hoed crops. A 25-acre field of alfalfa in Peel which was cut June 8th, has blossomed again and was ready a week ago for the mower for the second crop. Dufferin reports an unpromising outlook for potatoes. Forty acres of alsike seed were threshed on one farm in Essex, with a yeld of two bushels per acre. Tobacco will not give as high a yield as last year in Norfolk. Prospects for a good tomato harvest are excellent in most districts. There are approximately 50 fields of registered grain in Renfrew County. Blueberry harvest is in full swing in Northern Ontario.

LET US SMILE

From old London comes the story of a woman who was interested in a British loan. She presented herself to a teller—as the official is designated in Canada—of the Bank of England, and asked for information regarding the loan that was engaging public attention.

"Conversion or Confirmation?" queried the Teller.

"Young man, is this the Bank of England or the Church of England?" shot back the woman.

A group of pilots were buzzing about something or other as the flight commander approached, and several times he caught the expression, "the last word in airplanes."

"Well," he said as he reached the group, "what is the last word in airplanes?"

"Jump!" chorused the group.

More Confidence in the West

Descriptions of conditions in the West a year ago were so gloomy that we greet with joy the return of that part of the country to less pessimistic sentiments. On his way to Sault Ste. Marie, Mr. J. T. M. Anderson, the Prime Minister of Saskatchewan, said: "The crop is magnificent; our population is getting on its feet once more; they are doing more with their own efforts than with the aid of the Government; the West will be the first to recover. This depression, in my opinion, has been a real blessing." We very much prefer this language to the depressing despatches we used to receive last year on Western conditions. "The West will be the first to recover." What courageous optimism! Three cheers for the Prairies!—Le Doit Ottawa.)

Britain's Loan Conversion

Great Britain's master stroke to bring about national financial readjustment by a monster loan conversion scheme has been greeted with acclaim throughout the world. The Old Country has thus staged a remarkable demonstration of her financial genius and of the character and faith of a people who will not be downed. In this matter as in war reparations, Britain has given the world leadership and inspiration at a time when they are most greatly needed.—(Calgary Herald.)

Pedestrians Get a Break

It would really seem that a better day is dawning for the pedestrian. First an Ontario magistrate rules that a person on foot is entitled to as much room on the highway as a motor car; then the Pedestrian Rights' Association springs into being and now along comes a Vancouver judge with a decision that pedestrians do not have to scurry out of the way at the sound of an automobile horn to avoid responsibility for being run down. This last judgment may be sound law, and the judge gave it point by awarding $1,200 damages, but it might be as well, The Examiner believes, to stay safe and watch your step when motor horns are sounding.—(Peterborough Examiner.)

Benefit of Spending

What puzzles everyone about this depression is the timidity of shoppers in the midst of irresistible bargains. It is contrary to normal psychological processes and can be explained only on the ground of that sheeplike attribute of human nature by which, for good or ill, mass conduct is governed by common impulses. A year or two ago, when prices were much higher than they are today, the tendency was to indulge in a buying orgy. Today though prices have never been so attractive, the purse-strings are tightly drawn, with resulting injury to commerce and industry. It is felt that the solution of our economic difficulties lies largely in the action of citizens themselves—that is to say, those of them who have money to spend, but who will not spend it.—(Hamilton Spectator.)

Unreadable Signatures

To overcome any difficulty in reading signatures, it is the custom of many offices to have the name typewritten directly below so that the reader will have no difficulty in knowing what is meant. This permits of the writer indulging his fancy that he is fooling the forger by writing his signature in a way that is very difficult to read, while it enables the reader to see at a glance what the name is. If this practice were followed more generally, it would remove a great source of trouble in business both to the party who is answering the letter from a stranger unplainly signed, and to the writer of the letter himself who frequently is quite annoyed if the answer to his letter does not bear his name correctly spelled.—(Monetary Times.)

Highway Danger

Those huge freight trucks that come zooming through the heavy traffic of the highways and through the main streets of provincial highway towns look strangely out of place. They are like wandering warehouses or like straying freight trains. They are a menace to pedestrian in the crowded streets, and their booming noise is an offence to the ears. These mammoth juggernauts should be made to pay dearly for the use of the highways or else be banished from the traffic.—(St. Mary's Journal-Argus.)

THE EMPIRE

Empire Settlement

Sir Robert Horne is not alone in thinking that British industries might now begin to establish branches of their organizations in the Dominions and transfer not merely plant but personnel to their new sphere of action. The Dominions can be persuaded that the influx of an organized community will not tend to increase but help rather to solve their local difficulties, since it will make a new centre of trade—of consumption as well as production. Such migrations, however, cannot succeed, can hardly even be attempted, without a revival of the old pioneering enthusiasm.—(London Morning Post.)

The Lancashire Cotton Trade

Like the Bourbons, the cotton magnates learn nothing and forget nothing. Yet for years science and common sense have been knocking at their closed doors. Without exception, everyone who has investigated the cotton trade has reported that wholesale reorganization and centralization is its only salvation. How much longer is Lancashire going to be content to allow its very machinery of existence to be destroyed by the stubborn obstruction of men living in the past? (London Daily Herald.)

The Colonial Empire

The Colonial Empire, in the past has been overshadowed by the Dominions. The dawn is now bright before us and the day is ours to make of it what we will. We are an Empire and slices of an Empire. We have each our own history, our own peoples and many of us our own languages. We are divided up into fifty-two separate administrations. We have 54,000,000 people and a trade worth together £400,000,000. Our importance almost takes the breath away. We have only to find a means of welding ourselves together in spirit as well as on paper. —(Trinidad Guardian.)

The Currency Problem

The world's monetary policy produces tremendous irregularities in price levels. But this does not necessarily call for the abandonment of the gold standard; and the opposition to anything of that sort would be so enormous as to make it practically impossible. What is possible is that the value of gold may be fixed by international agreement the value being determined by the general price level of commodities. This might mean that price levels would be lifted say 40 per cent. by the simple process of valuing gold at 40 per cent. less than the present fixed price. The level at which the change should be effected would be one of the toughest problems to solve. Here vested interests would speak very loudly.—(Sydney Bulletin.)

World Economic Co-operation

World conditions have outgrown the stage when the normal friction of markets could with fair rapidity bring prices to a serviceable level after any sudden rise or fall. Under such conditions, there was justification for allowing the process of adjustment to take its own course. Conditions are now vastly different. There has arrived an era of general artificial interference with economic tendencies, and the logical step is to come to a world-wide agreement to transform that interference into guidance for universal benefit. Every economic or financial question for any nation tends now to be a concern to every other nation. —(Auckland Weekly News.)

Empire Tea Preference

For our own part, we think that, apart from restrictions of output, which is immediately necessary, the salvation of the British tea industry may be found at Ottawa. If, as is hoped, arrangements can be made whereby British-grown teas will receive preferential treatment throughout the British Empire, thereby enabling Ceylon to recapture the Australian market, our worries should be at an end. The situation is frankly depressing, but it will not be improved by becoming downhearted to the point of being panic-stricken. — (Colombo Times of Ceylon.)

OTHER OPINIONS

New Leaders for the U.S.A.

The American people are looking for new leaders, for men who are truthful and resolute and eloquent in the conviction that the American destiny is to be free and magnanimous, rather than complacent and acquisitive; they are looking for leaders who will talk to the people not about two-car garages and a bonus, but about their duty, and about the sacrifices they must make, and about the discipline they must impose upon themselves, and about their responsibility to the world and to posterity, but all those things which make a people self-respecting, serene and confident. May they not look in vain.—Walter Lippmann in Time and Tide (London).

Britain Ready to Place Restrictions Against Soviet

Ottawa.—A report states that, after lengthy and frequent transatlantic contacts with the home government, the United Kingdom delegation to the Imperial Conference is ready to go a long way to meet the views of Canada, Australia, South Africa and Irish Free State with respect to the banning of trade with Russia.

Provided the dominions will grant concessions material to the welfare of British industry, it is believed Britain will be ready to enforce restrictions against Soviet exports, including lumber, wheat and base metals, that will have the effect of removing them from competition with Empire products.

World's largest grain-carrier and holder of all Great Lakes freight records, the S.S. Lemoyne which will officially open the new Welland Ship Canal on August 6th when His Excellency the Earl of Bessborough, Governor-General of Canada, together with delegates to the Imperial Conference at Ottawa, will be present. She will carry approximately 575,000 bushels of wheat from the head of the Great Lakes, thus bettering the freshwater record of 571,885 made by this same ship three years ago. She also holds the world's record for coal transportation, carrying 16,538 tons in May, 1930, a cargo which required more than 300 railroad cars to bring this to the vessel. Six hundred and thirty-three feet long, with a seventy foot beam, and a registered tonnage of 10,480 tons, the S.S. Lemoyne will now have a cruising radius of more than a thousand miles.

Rising Wheat Prices Enrich U.S. Farmers

$42,000,000 Jump in Value of Grain at Chicago

Chicago.—A steady three-day rise in grain prices theoretically put approximately $42,000,000 last week in the pockets of American farmers.

Recent advances in hog and cattle prices gave farmers about $50,000,000, leaving them about $100,000,000 richer than they were a month ago.

So eager were speculators to jump into the bull market, the first big one this year on the Chicago board of trade, that they ignored all news and ran prices up 5¾ to 6 cents a bushel over previous quotations, and 6⅝ to 7¼ cents over the lows of the season, but less than two weeks ago.

Old September wheat reached 53¼ cents and closed at 52¼, compared with the week's low of 47½ cents.

Commodity prices climbed on the bandwagon, with butter and egg futures moving up sharply. November storage butter reached its highest prices since last March. August and July fresh butter were at new highs for the year. October refrigerator eggs came within one-eighth cent of their season's high.

Twice as many wheat futures were sold as on the corresponding day the previous week; 37,233,000 bushels—a week ago, 19,965,000 bushels.

Winnipeg and Liverpool markets lagged far behind Chicago.. The Canadian market, suffering from heavy sales there against purchase at Chicago by spreaders closed unchanged to ⅛ cent lower on Thursday, but held its 10⅜c difference over the local market. Liverpool moved up to 1⅝ to 1⅞ cents, but did not fully reflect the sharp upturn in North American markets.

Car Falls 30 Feet to River Sinks in Water, None Hurt

Sturgeon Falls. — Five North Bay people miraculously escaped injury when their car, driven by Mary Greco, crashed through the bridge over the Little Sturgeon River, about 10 miles east of here, and plunged into the water about 30 feet below. The party managed to reach the shore with little or no injury. Their car sank in about 20 feet of water.

Britain's Achievement

By Sir Austen Chamberlain

A year ago, our budget was unbalanced, trade was declining and we were rapidly approaching one of the most critical financial situations our country ever had to meet. When the National Government appealed to the electors last Autumn they were obliged to impose great sacrifices on the people, but by an overwhelming majority the electors affirmed the government's policy.

Today we are beginning to see the first fruits of that policy. We have made our sacrifices and are beginning to reap the reward. Instead of the feeling which was prevalent a year ago that Great Britain had lost the secret of her strength, and a feeling in friendly circles of sympathy and commiseration, every country is now noting with admiration the recovery which this country has made. Other nations have been roused to wonder and envy by the magnitude of the operation which the Chancellor of the Exchequer has announced and the success of which was already assured.

I was talking a few days ago to an American, who told me that he thought the attitude of our people last Autumn when those sacrifices were demanded was more wonderful than anything we achieved during the war. I do not believe that there is another nation which could contemplate such an operation as we are now carrying out in the conversion of our great war debt. There is not another nation whose credit has risen so rapidly in recent months and is now so secure as that of Britain.

A Message to Women

By Mrs. Stanley Baldwin

I feel that so much depends on the woman, because, after all, she has to carry a great bit of the home on her back, and on her depends the happiness of her husband and of the family. And it lies in her hands with strength of determination and purpose to make things easier all around.

It is not easy when the man is not happy, because a man who is unemployed feels that he is losing his self-respect. But it is up to her to keep alive his feeling of self-respect.

Filled with the belief that better times are coming, there is one message I would send to my fellow-women, and that message is "Stick it, and with God's help we will win through."

Rescuers, Victims Overcome by Gas

Boys' Adventure Costs Five Lives—Trapped in Shaft

Minton, N.B. — The adventurous spirit of youth, which urged a group of lads to explore an old coal mine here, led to the deaths of three boys and two men, and for a time threatened to exact a larger toll.

The dead, overcome by poisonous fumes, were: Allen Gaudine, 12; Cyril Stack, 14; Vernon Stack, 9; Vernon Betts, and Thomas Gallant. Others affected by the gas were reported to be out of danger.

Betts and Gallant, both of whom leave families, sacrificed their lives in a vain effort to rescue the three youths.

With a fourth companion, Joseph O'Leary, the boys had been picking berries. Coming to the mine shaft, unused for several years, they decided to explore the area below, ignorant that "black damp," or accumulations of unbreathable gases, had worked their way nearly to the top of the shaft.

The Stack brothers, stepsons of Edward Gormley, and Gaudine started down a series of wooden rungs. They had only gone a few steps when they were overcome by the deadly fumes and toppled to the bottom of the 50-foot shaft. When O'Leary began stepping down the rungs he was horrified to see his companions drop and failed to realize the cause, as gas had not risen high enough to get him in its grip. He immediately clambered from the shaft and ran back to Minton, arousing the community.

Scores of people flocked to the scene and word was flashed to Fredericton for gas masks and respirators. In the meantime, veteran miners and others braved the fumes in an endeavor to save the three boys.

Betts, Gallant, Bartholomew Stack, a cousin of the dead brothers, and other men began descending into the mine, but all were overcome by gas and fell unconscious to the bottom, making a heap of eight forms.

When the equipment arrived from Fredericton, rescuers donned gas masks and all the bodies were hauled to the surface by ropes.

The youthful trio was beyond aid and Betts and Gallant could not be revived. Frantic resuscitation work finally succeeded in the other cases.

France Puts Restrictions Upon Imported "Talkies"

Paris.—A decree made public Friday bars from France so-called "dubbed talking films" unless the process of post-synchronization into the French language is done in French territory. The decree also limits the English version of films to showings in five movie houses in the department of the Seine (Paris) and to five in the rest of France.

The dubbing process referred to apparently is that process of stripping the American jargon from talkie films and substituting for it another language so that they would be intelligible in another country.

Man Aged 105 Recovers From Injury

Winnipeg. — George Shaw, in his 105th year, is now at home after two months in hospital following a street accident in which he was hit by a truck and his knee injured. He announced he was going into the bush again with an axe as his appetite is poor from lack of exercise. He blames his two months' lay-up on modern medicine with its new-fangled X-ray and similar gadgets.

"Good old Indian herb medicine is the only thing I ever used," he stated. "It cures anything."

Street cars and automobiles were marooned for hours. Hundreds of mud huts in the poorer districts were washed away.

S. Africa Imports On Way to Canada

Dominion Taking Sugar and Wool—Fruit from Rhodesia

Montreal.—More than 17,000 tons of South African sugar is on its way to Montreal. Elder Demster line Calumet is bringing 8,350 tons. Information that the sugar is on its way comes as a sequel to the announcement from Ottawa that some 60,000 tons of sugar from the Union would be imported during the current year.

In addition to sugar, the Calumet carries 100 bales of wool and a quantity of canned fruit. From Southern Rhodesia it is bringing 713 cases of oranges, loaded at Beira, Portuguese East Africa.

Because this citrus fruit was embarked at a foreign port it is not at present eligible for Empire preference. It is expected something will be done to provide for this peculiar situation. Discussing this subject, Premier H. U. Moffatt, Premier of Southern Rhodesia, now attending the Ottawa conference, said Southern Rhodesia at present has not a port of its own, and must ship its produce through Beira or south over 1,650 miles of rail to Cape Town, Durban or Port Elizabeth, which are within the Union of South Africa.

Newspapers Preferred As Advertising Medium

New York—Major industries continue to show a preference for newspaper advertising over that of other mediums, the American Newspaper Publishers' Association reported last week. The association's Bureau of Advertising announced the results of a survey showing 435 national advertisers spent $143,365,000 in newspaper advertising last year. Magazine space was used by 190 of these firms to the extent of $78,317,815, and 121 used radio broadcasts entailing an expenditure of $21,223,862.

The bureau reported that newspapers were the favored medium in 25 of the 32 industrial groups represented.

Partridges Repay Kindness Clear Up Webworms

Raymond, Alberta.—C. E. Allred, farmer, cared for a partridge injured by a mowing machine and reaped a rich reward. He gave first aid to the bird and placed it back on its nest of 20 eggs. The eggs were hatched and other partridges came to the farm.

Recently the farmer saw an army of webworms marching on his beet field. He turned his turkeys out for the worm feast and was astonished when a large flock of partridges, including the one he had befriended, reinforced the domestic fowl to check the invasion.

"They saved my crop, and no hunters will be permitted on my property," he remarked.

Bulgaria and Germany Reach Trade Pact

Sofia, Bulgaria.—Bulgaria's grain is to be given preferential tariff rates in Germany and German manufactured articles are to receive the same treatment here, in consequence of a trade treaty which Bulgaria has negotiated with Germany.

The treaty is the first Bulgaria has concluded with any first-rate western power in the course of 25 years.

One-Quarter of Earth Speaking at Ottawa

Warsaw Bars Streets For Social Center Use

Warsaw—A fine of two zlotys—about two cents—is now exacted from any person caught by a Warsaw policeman crossing a road in anything but a perfectly straight line. A fortnight of stern application of this safety-first rule has already had an effect on "jay walking."

Another amiable but traffic-disturbing habit of the Warsaw citizens, that of indulging in conversation while blocking the circulation of a busy street, is also disappearing under the pressure of constant rebukes from the police force.

Scandinavians High In Literacy

An illiteracy map of the United States based on the census of 1930 demonstrates that the "Scandinavian States" from Washington and Oregon in the West to Wisconsin in the East and from the Canadian border to Kansas in the South stand especially well, having only between 1 and 2 per cent illiteracy, says the American-Scandinavian Review. Only one State in the Union, Iowa, has less than 7 per cent illiteracy, while the average for the whole country is 4.3 per cent.

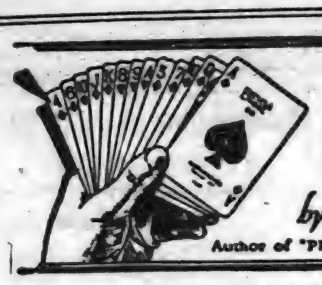
Asiatic Cranes Oldest Residents of London Zoo

A recent poll of the inhabitants of the Zoological Society's zoo in London, taken by E. G. Boulenger, director of the aquarium, reveals that the oldest residents are a pair of white Asiatic cranes, veterans of thirty-one years. Next comes a Banksian cockatoo, received in 1906, and two slender-billed cockatiels, which took up residence in 1909. Two Brazilian carrion hawks arrived in 1908, and two vultures, a griffon and a sinerius have completed twenty years of service.

Among the mammals, the oldest is beginning to show signs of age. She can still, however, climb up her own tail to make a getaway. Twenty years ago a New Guinea echidna, or egg-laying anteater, arrived at the aquarium. She is named Daydream, and is believed to be about 100 years old. Several bears were acquired in wartime and are still doing well.



Probably the most belligerent occupant of the household is a big Mississippi alligator, who has killed or maimed many tank companions during his twenty years' reign. Now his only co-resident is a large snapping turtle.

BABY'S OWN TABLETS

How to play Bridge AUCTION and CONTRACT

by Wynne Ferguson

Author of "PRACTICAL AUCTION BRIDGE"

ARTICLE No. 34

One of the puzzling questions that perplexes the average player of Auction or Contract is how to distinguish between a business double (that is, one intended to defeat the contract), and an informatory double, (that is, one asking partner for a bid). There is no better way to answer this question than by a careful consideration of the usual situations in which the point is involved:

First: A double of one of a suit or of one no trump always is a request for partner's suit. The smallness of the contract precludes any desire on the doubler's part to defeat the contract unless his partner has the necessary strength in his own hand. In that case, however, partner should be on the alert and try for the penalty.

Second: The double of an original bid of two no trump, however, is a different proposition. Such a double should indicate the desire of the doubler to defeat the contract and his partner should pass unless his hand is of such a freak type that a bid of his own suit is advisable. It isn't good judgment to double two no trumps and ask partner to bid three of his suit for the reason that if the two no trump bid is sound, a three bid is doomed to defeat before it is made. That is only common sense.

Third: In the case of a double of a suit bid of two, a little different question arises. It usually is more difficult to defeat a suit bid than a no trump bid; so it's good judgment to bid your own suit in case partner doubles an original suit bid of two. In case partner doubles a suit bid of three, it usually is better judgment to try to defeat the contract than to try for a problematical bid of your own. The double of a three bid marks the dividing line, for in only very few isolated cases will an informatory double of a three bid be of any value. The double of any higher bid than three is, of course, always a business double.

Fourth: Supose the dealer bids one no trump, second and third hand pass, fourth hand bids two spades and the dealer doubles. Is such a double intended to defeat the contract or is it informatory and asking partner for a bid? This is a very close question, but, in the writer's opinion, should be interpreted as a business double. The original bid of no trump and the double of the suit bid should indicate, in addition to the no trump, strength in the suit bid and a desire to defeat the contract. That seems only good judgment. The writer has carefully analyzed this situation for years, and has come to the conclusion that a business double after bidding no trump is at least three times as valuable as the informatory double. It is still an open question, however, and the writer is only giving his opinion for what it is worth.

Fifth: Suppose the dealer bids one spade, second hand bids two hearts, third and fourth hand pass and the dealer doubles. Is such a double intended to defeat the contract or is it informatory and asking partner for a bid? This is not a close question like the fourth case, for the bid of a suit merely indicates strength in the suit. The subsequent double indicates additional strength, but rarely in the suit doubled. For that reason it is good judgment to regard such a double invariably as an informatory double. Partner should bid either his long suit or, if his own suit is too weak, two of his partner's suit.

Sixth: Suppose the dealer bids one spade, second hand bids two hearts and the dealer's partner doubles. Is this double intended to defeat the contract or is it informatory and asking partner for a bid? There is no doubt about this situation. The double is made after hearing from partner and therefore must be intended to defeat the contract. The doubler is acting not only on his own hand but also on his partner's, the nature of which has been shown by the original bid of one spade. For that reason any double made after partner has bid should always be regarded as a business double.

Seventh: Suppose the dealer bids one spade, second hand passes, the dealer's partner bids two hearts, fourth hand and the dealer pass and second hand doubles. Is such a double intended to defeat the contract or is it informatory and asking partner for a bid? The answer to this seems simple. If second hand had wanted partner to bid, he could have asked him to do so by doubling one spade. Therefore, when he passes one spade and subsequently doubles two hearts, the reasonable conclusion is that he is doubling with intent to defeat the bid. In other words, if a player doesn't double an opponent's bid at his first opportunity, a double of a subsequent bid is always to be regarded as a business double.

Eighth: Suppose the dealer bids one spade, second hand doubles, the dealer's partner bids two or three spades, fourth hand and the dealer pass and second hand again doubles. Is this double intended to defeat the contract or is it informatory and asking partner for a bid? In this case, also, the answer seems simple. Second hand doubled one spade for the purpose of finding out his partner's best suit. The dealer's partner has tried to block that plan by his shut-out bid of two or three spades. If second hand again doubles, he is merely repeating his request for a bid and in even more emphatic terms. That is really the reasonable viewpoint and the only one that can be taken.

From the foregoing summary the writer would recommend the following interpretation of informatory and business doubles:

A double of a bid of one no trump or of a bid of one, two and possibly three of a suit is informatory and asking partner for a bid, provided the double is made at first opportunity and before partner has made a bid. The only exception occurs when partner bids a no trump and then doubles an adverse bid. Such a bid is always a business double. Conversely, a double of a bid of two or more trumps or of four or more of a suit, or a double after partner has bid, or a double not made at first opportunity, are business doubles and intended to defeat the bid.

Solution of Last Week's Problem

Hearts—none
Clubs—A, 10
Diamonds—8
Spades—3, 2

Hearts—none Clubs—J, 7 Diamonds—9, 7 Spades—6	Y A B Z	Hearts—none Clubs—Q, 9 Diamonds—none Spades—K, 10, 8

Hearts—J, 7, 6
Clubs—8
Diamonds—none
Spades—J

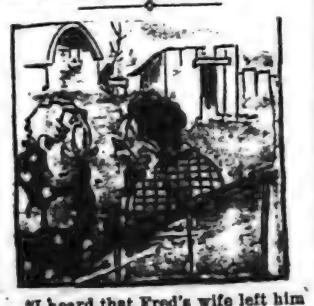
Z is in the lead, there are no trumps and Y Z are to take every trick against any defense.

Solution: Z should lead his three good hearts. A's first two discards are the seven of diamonds and the six of spades, but what should his third discard be? He cannot discard the nine of diamonds or Y's eight of diamonds will be good, so is forced to discard the seven of clubs. Y's first two discards are evidently the deuce and trey of spades and, when A discards the seven of Clubs, Y should discard the eight of diamonds. B's first two discards should be the eight and ten of spades, but what should his third discard be? He cannot discard the king of spades or Z's jack will be good, so is forced to discard the nine of clubs. Z should now lead the eight of clubs and Y must win the next two tricks.

This is a fine example of the "double squeeze," showing how both A and B were forced to discard clubs in order to protect their other winning cards.

British Fertilizing Project Increases Field Production

London—After extensive researches in fertilizers and fertilizing, Imperial Chemicals Ltd., announces that it is now possible to graze seven cows where four grazed before.



Granted the proper application of nitrogen fertilizers and the control of grazing in Great Britain, some interesting results would emerge.

Pasturage would be provided for more than 10,000,000 additional sheep, and the acreage required to feed a cow reduced by half. Pigs could be increased threefold. Poultry would rise from 70,000,000 to 110,000,000 head.

The production of home-grown foods in Great Britain could, in 10 years, be increased from its present level of 38 per cent. to 55 per cent of the country's total food requirements. This would reduce the bill paid for imported food by not less than £100,000,000 annually.

Like other authoritative advocates of British agricultural revival, Sir Frederick Keeble, director of Chemical Industries' experimental and advisory services, holds out no hope of Britain ever becoming able to compete in the grain markets of the world and points to grassland as the key to Britain's future agricultural prosperity. In his view even greater reliance should be placed upon oversea supplies for breadstuffs and British arable operations confined to raising food for livestock, English climate being exceptionally favorable to grasses and clovers.

According to Sir Frederick, a scheme which would make Britain virtually self-supporting in the costly protein foods — meat, butter, cheese, eggs—could become fully operative within a period of 10 years. The time necessary for the cattle to arrive at maturity could serve to make the farmers familiar with the new knowledge concerning fertilizers and better methods of grazing and pasture control.

"I heard that Fred's wife left him without any reason."

"So? Well, in that case, she left him as she found him."

Fish Pond

Here is a place to dream and pass away
The hours as ripples on the darkling water
That lap and pat the boat, and seem to say
"This is no time for haste. Here linger . . . loiter."
The boat glides like a ghost between the banks
Of torpid grasses lounging on the breeze,
And like a tawny skeleton of planks
The boathouse leans between two headless trees.

Here is an hour to sense the earthy peace
That drowsy birds and sun-drunk bullfrogs know,
And here the harassed brain may find release,
Lulled by the languid water's listless flow.
But man must fret, and cast a hook about,
To wreck the heaven of a bass or trout.

Telegraph-Radio Parley Will Be Held in Madrid

Madrid.—Spain again will be the site of an important gathering when the International Telegraph and Radio Congress meets here in September.

Preparations are going forward for the event, and the government recently published a decree naming Don Enrique Meseguer Martin, director of the National Meteorological Service, one of the members of the Spanish delegation.

The peninsula until lately was rarely the scene of important conferences. From the time of the Algeciras Conference in 1907 very few of that caliber were held until the League of Nations Council met here in 1929, following shortly upon the return of Spain to the League after its withdrawal from Geneva.

In 1930 the International Railroad Congress was held here, and in 1931 the Hispano-American Postal Conference, with the participation of Portugal and the United States as well, met here.

Flies steal many dollars from you every year

You Cannot Afford to Let These Pests Interfere with Milk Production

FLIES have a decided influence on the condition of your cows. They affect both the quality and the quantity of the milk produced. You cannot afford to let these pests rob you any longer when for a small expenditure you can equip your cow stables with AEROXON.

Hang up three AEROXON FLY CATCHERS over each milking stall. The flies which rise from the cow's back will be soon transferred to more permanent quarters, and with the happy result that your herd will be in better flesh and give much more milk.

AEROXON is the improved fly catcher with the wider and longer ribbon that stays flat. It is coated with a specially prepared glue which flies find irresistible. Every AEROXON FLY CATCHER is fully guaranteed not to dry out or deteriorate and is good for three week's service. THE OLD HOME TOWN

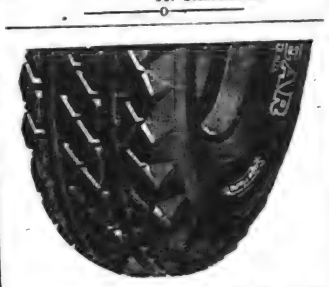
Every week-end and holiday brings an increasing number of visitors to our village and Civic Holiday proved no exception. The reason for this is easy to understand—paved highways and motor cars make the long tiresome journey of a few years ago a mere pleasure jaunt today and there is nothing that appeals more to city folks than to spend a holiday in the country. Some may come to visit relatives or old friends, others because they like our village and the many beauty spots surrounding it where one can spend a happy, carefree holiday, but those we like to see most of all are the ones who come just because it is the Old Home Town and because it holds a place in their hearts that no other spot on earth can take.



On Civic holiday the writer had the pleasure of meeting several of these old timers and was pleased to hear them making reference to the clean and tidy appearance of the village. It gave me a peculiar sense of pride to hear visitors making these comments, and as I walked home I began to think: How can we make our village even more attractive than it is? Of course there are several great improvements that could be made if we had the money to spend on them, which we have not. But there are numerous little improvements we could make with no outlay whatever, other than a little time, some hard work and possibly the price of a can of paint.

Let us see our homes as others see them; stand across the street and give the place the once-over. It would look better if the long grass in the ditch were cut and the boulevard mowed. A little paint would brighten up the buildings and we can take that old dilapidated sign down or have it repaired. Yes, there are a thousand and one things we could do at very little expense and we would have the satisfaction of knowing that we were not only improving the appearance of our own property but also that we are making the Old Home Town more pleasant than ever.

Our main street is swept off every Saturday morning so that it always presents a clean appearance for the week-end, the road down by the Soldiers' Memorial has been drained and levelled and the municipal scales and fire hydrants have been given a fresh coat of paint. These are little things but they all go towards giving our village that clean and progressive appearance that is so pleasing to ourselves and to visitors. Our council is taking the lead in this work, but, unless we do our part and improve our own property and frontages, it will be of little avail.

Might I suggest to readers of The Review that you send in some suggestions on How to Improve the Old Home Town. These ideas should be simple and not too expensive.

ANOTHER VICTORY FOR STREETSVILLE

In an exhibition game played at Streetsville on Saturday night, the Thistles successfully upheld their reputation. Their opponents were the powerful Oakwood Grads, who won the championship in their division of the Toronto Lacrosse League. They are nearly as solid as their name, and you can bet your hat they play the game.

The Thistles' goal-keeper played a better game than he has played this season. He certainly made some great stops. Harry Hill opened the scoring with a well placed shot. Bailey and Andy Hill also scored during the first period. Oakwoods scored one in the same period, thanks to Ireland. (That's the man's name. It has nothing to do with the "Emerald Isle".)

Clipperton showed some real speed and got a goal for Thistles during the second session, while Rawlinson and Kelloway scored one each for Oakwoods. Rawlinson got a lucky "break" and scored an ace in the third period. Hill (Harry) and Clipperton stepped in to break the tie and give the Thistles a two-goal lead.

Jack Nixon broke loose in the last period and scored two goals. Galbraith and Tupling scored for Oakwoods.

Shanks, on Oakwoods' defence, proved a stumbling block to the Thistles many times and when he got started down the field, it was some job to hold him. There were plenty of penalties, but Skee Warre did not let the boys get the best of him. He certainly knows how to referee.

The final score was 8-6 in favour of Streetsville.

Goals scored: Thistles, H. Hill, 2, Nixon, 2, Clipperton, 2, A. Hill, Bailey. Oakwoods. Rawlinson, 2, Ireland, Galbraith, Tupling and Kelloway.

These exhibition games certainly draw good crowds, and they are worth watching. Those business men who gave donations to the Lacrosse Club at the beginning of the season, are reaping benefits from increasing business, due to lacrosse fans. (Ask the man who owns one.)

Here and There

Four guests at the French River Chalet Bungalow Camp recently brought in four muskies totalling 73 pounds, of which the largest weighed 26 lbs. and the smallest twelve. Fishing at this popular resort is most successful this season, and there will be keen competition for the Canadian Pacific trophy.

Native Sons of Glasgow enroute to the big Convention of their Association at the Scottish city have been travelling across Canada via Canadian Pacific Railway from Victoria and points in Western Canada, Ontario and Quebec, for the sailing of the "Duchess of Bedford". Members will gather from all over the world for a monster celebration July 15-22.

John Findlay, who is by way of being the all time big game hunter of the world, arrived at Vancouver recently aboard the "Empress of Russia", enroute to England "for a little rest." He adds to his big game hunting the disciplining of Malay head-hunters, who disregard the white man's laws. "One raid we made," said Mr. Findlay, "left a trail of twenty dead men."

Canadian Pacific low rate bargain return trips, which have been a very successful feature of the company's operation this year, will include one to the Maritime Provinces July 22, when Nova Scotia and New Brunswick will be covered in round trips to take in most of the show places of the two provinces. The trip will be varied by a sea passage in the fast new steamship "Princess Helene" across the Bay of Fundy to the Land of Evangeline.

A hole-in-one, though rare, is not unique, but when it is made by a lady and for the first time on the course it rates a headline. This was done by Mrs. Guy Lapraik on the 150-yard par three hole at the Canadian Pacific Recreation Club Course at Sortin near Montreal recently.

Favorable development of this year's crop on the prairie provinces is noted by the Canadian Pacific Railway's weekly report issued recently by the Agricultural Department in Winnipeg. Most of the wheat in Manitoba and Eastern Saskatchewan is headed at an average height of two feet, and elsewhere ranges between advanced shot blade to headed stage. Hail loss has been only local and in scattered districts.

Bob Davis, roving columnist of the New York Sun, and probably the most travelled newspaperman in the world, has been staying at the Banff Springs Hotel on his way back from Hawaii, accompanied by Mrs. Davis. Mr. Davis has a flair for the unusual, and will likely unearth a wealth of good material for his column among the old timers of the Rockies.

Taxation comparisons in connection with motor vehicles and railroads should take into consideration that the railways pay for their own roadway, and also to some extent for the roadway used by their motor vehicle competitors, says the "Traffic World". This brings in the question of how much the motor vehicles should pay for the highways and whether they are doing it.

FOOTBALL NOTES

Streetsville and Lakeview battled eighty minutes for the "Kennedy Challenge Cup", on Saturday and neither team could win. So Col. Kennedy ordered another sudden death game for Monday night. In the game Saturday Johnston opened the scoring for Streetsville on the finish of a great combination play by the forwards, the goal keeper having no chance to stop it whatsoever. They then missed another golden opportunity to score by missing on a penalty kick. This ended the scoring for the first half. In the second half Lakeview decided to take all kinds of chances, and were rewarded after about forty minutes of play. This sent the Lakeview crowd in a fre and for awhile you could see noth but straw hats flying in all directions. After this neither team could score, so it was decided to play another twenty minutes of overtime. In the overtime the crowd of about twenty-five hundred were treated to the best bit of football ever seen around these parts, both teams taking all kinds of chances, but neither could score.

On Monday night both teams were supposed to have the same line-ups, but unfortunately for Streetsville their goalie, Smith, was unable to come. He played a whale of a game for the locals on Saturday and many think if he had been in the nets Monday Streetsville would have won. However be that as it may, there is no doubt that the fans will agree with me when I say that two more evenly matched teams could never be found. Although Streetsville lost this game by three to one, it is no discredit for them because they sure tried hard to win. Johnston, who got the goal for the Bluebirds at Lakeview, opened the scoring again on Monday shortly before half time was over. But Lakeview soon evened up matters, when Crooks kicked one over the goalie's head. In the second half, both teams put on full steam but Lakeview got the breaks, managing to put the ball in twice.

On Friday the strengthened Bluebirds travel to Lakeview again for a league fixture, Everybody should be down because they are sure to see football at its best. The truck leaves at 7.00 o'clock, game to start at 7.30.

Port Credit will be up on Wednesday, Aug. 3rd, but it will be too late for this weeks results. Well so long everybody until next week. Be sure and watch our football team from now on.

Mother Forced to Leave Fatherless Children

Annette looks at you gratefully as you pause at her bedside to admire her needle work. So expert has she become that she took first prize at the fair back home in "Back home"—words that bring tears as she tells you how she longs to be there to look after her family once more.

Annette's husband died of tuberculosis, leaving her to care for the children as best she could.

It was not long, however, before she too was claimed by this disease, when she was sent to the Toronto Hospital for Consumptives with no great prospect of recovery. Here, the careful regimen, the quiet, the fresh air and patient nursing are greatly helping Annette to climb the steep road back to health.

Such work can only be continued with the aid of many generous friends. Will you please send a gift to Mr. A. E. Ames, 223 College St., Toronto.

AGAIN SOMETHING NEW

French Deputies to Record Votes by Pressing Buttons.

The French Chamber of Deputies has decided to make a trial of the system of voting by electricity invented by M. Langlois. On the desk of each deputy—in the Chamber every deputy has a permanent seat of his own—will be four electric buttons, one for 'aye,' one for 'no,' one for abstention, and one that will enable a deputy who has pressed the wrong button to rectify his mistake. The pressure of a button will immediately register the deputy's vote in an apparatus behind the Speaker's chair, and the result will be recorded by a totalizator. The cost of installing the apparatus will be about $25,000.

The present system of voting in the Chamber when a division is demanded is very unsatisfactory. Each deputy puts in an urn carried around by an official of the Chamber a voting card with his name on it. The card is white if he votes 'aye,' and blue if he votes 'no.' Voting by proxy is allowed. The counting of the votes takes about a quarter of an hour.

IS AN OYSTER A FISH?

Difference of Opinion In Legal Case In England.

Whether or not an oyster is a fish was a question raised before the Colchester Area Assessment Committee when the Essex County Valuation Committee sought to have the Colne Oyster Fishery assessed. The oyster fishery is a lessee from the Colchester Corperation who from time immemorial have enjoyed the rights and privileges of the river. Counsel for the company, Gerald Benham, said he would admit that an oyster was not only a fish but a super-fish.

Frederick Levy, who appeared for the Committee, said that from the scientific point of view it was not certain that an oyster was a fish, but legally it had been established as long ago as Richard II., that an oyster was a fish. If that was so a fish was something that swam in a fishery, and a fishery was something that could be assessed.

The Committee held that the fishery was subject to assessment, and they fixed a figure of $3,500 on the property. Mr. Benham gave notice of appeal.

MODERN ART.

Artist and Editor See Sketches From Different Angles.

An amusing story as told by Sir Philip Gibbs concerns an artist who was sent abroad by the editor of a London illustrated paper.

His job was to make sketches of the country and the people. It was, however, his first experience, and he made a mess of it, the sketches he sent home being very poor, and at times quite unintelligible.

The editor took him to task on his return, and told him that if he could not make a recognizable sketch of anything it would have been far better to have indicated in writing what the picture represented.

"Take this one, for instance," he continued, picking up one of the artist's sketches. "Since you were apparently in such a hurry that you hadn't time to draw it more carefully, why didn't you write above it: 'This is a Windmill'? Then our people would have known what it was intended for, instead of which they had to guess."

"But it isn't a windmill; it's a man on horseback," replied the artist.

ANCIENT OAK BURNED.

Fine Tree, Six Centuries Old, Destroyed by Carelessness.

One of the splendid old oaks in Windsor Great Park, was destroyed by fire recently, the blaze being witnessed by the King and Queen, who were motoring through the park at the time. Their car was stopped a few minutes, while Their Majesties watched the progress of the flames, and the King enquired the cause of the fire. He was told that it probably was due to picnickers setting fire to rubbish, and he expressed regret that such a fine old tree should perish in such a way. This particular oak was 600 years old, and stood near Queen Anne's Gate on the main Windsor-to-Ascot road. There are now only a few of these fine old trees remaining in the lower portion of the park.

WHIRLPOOL IN OCEAN.

Curious Phenomenon Spins Outward From Its Center.

A whirlpool in the ocean, 150 miles east of Cape Cod, so strong that it repels a ship, was described by Captain William E. Parker of the Hydrographer, one of the four U. S. coast and geodetic survey vessels engaged in the first complete charting of George's Banks.

The whirlpool was reported by Captain Parker as spinning outward instead of towards its centre.

He said he had made several attempts to force the Hydrographer through it but the force of the water immediately threw the vessel off its course. He planned, he said, to investigate the phenomenon further upon his return to the Banks.

BULBS ON POTATO STALKS.

It is not true that a potato plant has "gone crazy or somethin'" when it has bulbs growing along its stalks; for they are not tubers but seed pods. The bulbs usually grow about the size of a cherry. They will grow in clusters. Certain seasons will not see any and some people who grow potatoes will never have seen them as they are not common. If tubers are planted you will not see such development; but it may happen when seed is planted.

Grounds for Divorce.

A shrill voice allied to a tendency to talk too much in a wife might well become grounds for a divorce, stated a French Government expert on deafness.

The games were scored as follows Clipperton 2, Nixon 2, H. Hill 1

One of the Streetsville men says the Port Credit team was made up of players from Port Credit, Long Branch, Lakeview, Mimico, Lorne Park and other places, and thinks that by the end of the season there won't be a Port Credit man left on that team—it will be a combination.

This was what might be called an 'off night' for the Streetsville boys

The ground was very greasy and there was lots of slipping.

Castoria... for CHILDREN'S ailments

ARE you prepared to render first aid and quick comfort the moment your youngster has an upset of any sort? Could you do the right thing—immediately—though the emergency came without warning—perhaps tonight? Castoria is a mother's standby at such times. There is nothing like it in emergencies, and nothing better for everyday use. For a sudden attack of colic, or for the gentle relief of constipation; to allay a feverish spell, or to soothe a fretful baby that can't sleep. This pure vegetable preparation is always ready to ease an ailing youngster. It is just as harmless as the recipe on the wrapper reads. If you see Chas. H. Fletcher's signature, it is geniune Castoria. It is harmless to the smallest infant; doctors will tell you so.

You can tell from the formula on the wrapper how mild it is, and how good for little systems. But continue with Castoria until a child is grown.

IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE

The Aztec Mystery

A Thrilling Story of the Old West

BY MURRAY LEINSTER

SYNOPSIS.

Sonny Holman, believing he is the rightful owner of the Aztec mine, holds up the payrolls. Janet Laurier holds legal title to the Aztec, and is kidnapped by Garcia's gang. Sonny rescues her. Garcia's men run off some cattle and Sonny, riding in pursuit, is cornered by some of Janet's mine guards. He escapes, but his horse is shot. Janet has the horse doctored and pleads with Sonny to leave the country. Janet and Sonny are pursued by Garcia's men. They take refuge in a cave that Sonny uses as a hiding place.

CHAPTER XX.

Sonny struck a match and lit a candle, a thick squat miner's candle. Its dancing flame steadied and threw a curious carmine glow about the interior of the strangely formed cave. Instinctively, Janet's eyes flickered to the two crumpled figures she had noted before. But Sonny had thrown a tarpaulin over them.

He was facing her, smiling strangely. Gunpowder and the other horse stirred uneasily in the inmost recesses of the cavern.

"Look here, ma'am," he drawled. "Yuh put up a reward for me, to set every Mexican an' lowdown white man huntin' me. I got yuh out o' Garcia's han's an' yuh tried t' take me to jail. Yuh tried t' trap me up at Little Canyon. Today yuh tried t' use the love my hawss has got for me to lead your posse of hired killers to where I was—knowin' they'd no more dream of takin' me to Moleville alive than they'd dream of flyin'. An' now, without me plannin' it all, yuh're holed up here with me. You're kinda helpless, ma'am, against me, an' I might get wiped out by Garcia's gang even yet on account o' you. Now, ma'am, why should I be considerin' you any longer?"

Janet stared at him. He was gazing at her with the same curious smile on his face. "Why sh'd I be a good outlaw any longer, ma'am?" he asked somberly. "Why shouldn't I act like the critter y' take me for? I c'd end this business once for all. I c'd make yuh turn over the Aztec t' me."

"You couldn't," she told him steadily.

"You're forgettin', ma'am—"

"I'm not forgetting anything!" she cried fiercely. "I am helpless, yes! You can do anything you please with me! But you can't make me turn over the Aztec! You can't make me marry you! You can't make me stop fighting you! Do you think I wouldn't have stopped before now if I could? Do you think I don't—oh!" She stopped, and her waxen pallor was replaced by a flush that stained her cheeks and throat a vivid crimson.

"Go on, ma'am," drawled Sonny. It was he who was pale now.

"Do you think," she asked more steadily, "that I don't love you?"

Sonny stood rigid for an instant. "Why, I got to kinda admit, ma'am," said Sony unevenly, "that I did have some such idea in my mind."

He moved toward her, gazing down into her face with eyes that were bewildered and unbelieving. She met his gaze bravely. He stirred, and suddenly she was in his arms with her head against his shoulder, sobbing as if her heart would break.

"Lordy! Lordy!" murmured Sonny bewilderedly, patting her shoulder helplessly. "Please don't cry, ma'am, please don't cry!"

She continued to weep until terror struck him. He lifted her face in alarm and her arms tightened convulsively about his neck. Her lips were lifted to his and he kissed her.

"But I won't stop fighting you," she sobbed. "I'm going to win! And I can't marry you! I'm going to make you leave the mine alone even if I have to send you to prison! And—and if I do that I'll die—"

Sony straightened up and laughed. "Lordy, Lordy!" He touched her cheek gingerly. "An' yuh expec' me to turn yuh loose to do all them desperate deeds? Not this hombre! Ma'am, I got yuh fast an' I ain't goin' t' let yuh loose again until we' made a more permanent declaration o' war before a preacher!"

"I can't marry you! I can't!" she cried desperately.

"Shucks," said Sonny calmly. He kissed her. "Yuh forget a lot o' things. One of 'em is that I'm a most horrific person, a fire eatin', abductin', mayhem committin' outlaw. For instance, I'm goin' t' kiss you again, an' then I'm goin' t' take you outer my own private back door that Garcia's hombres don't know about, to a place where nobody's ever find yuh for a million years, an' then I'll——"

There was a sudden, overwhelming explosion. The heavy bulkhead Sonny had lowered before the cavern opening was rent and splintered. It heaved up in fragments and collapsed to the floor. A blast of air extinguished the candle and utter blackness fell, while the penetrating smell of exploded dynamite swept through the cavern.

Then came the whisper of voices outside. Sonny had vanished with a sickening suddenness. Suddenly, a litle glow of light dropped from above into the cavern door. It was a flaming mass of yucca, and it burned yellowly, sending searching, flickering beams of light into the furthermost recesses of the cavern.

A pause, while unseen eyes searched from without. A still figure on the floor was plainly visible. Sibilant, excited whispers came within. Presenty a face showed outside. A pause, and then a figure. Then a man came boldly into the opening. He gazed in, grinning, and called over his shoulder briefly.

Two other men materialized and came eagerly forward. The first man pointed to the crumpled figure on the floor, half covered with debris and fragments of the door. He spoke triumphantly in Spanish. The three laughed. Then the foremost grinned at Janet, stanuing statuelike in the cave, her hand to her breast, transfixed with horror.

"El senor Garcia," grinned the man, "'e weel not be back unteel tomorrow, Senorita, but 'e would not weesh you to be lonesome. So seence Sonnee 'Olman ees dead, we weel try to comfort you!"

The others grinned evilly with him. They crowded inside the door, while Janet was unable to move.

And then Sonny's voice came once more, racked with pain and hardly more than a whisper, but deadly with determination though wavering in weakness. "I'm givin' you hombres thirty secon's to pray in. If yuh drop yuh guns I might make it a coupla minutes. Janet, get some rope an' tie 'em up before yuh try t' get me out from under this door. Drop yuh guns, hombres! Drop 'em quick, before I blow yuh t' hell!"

Dawn came to a still and breathless world. The east paled, and a thousand hills rose ghostlike out of darkness. Rose tints appeared, then pink, then gold, and the hilltops shone faintly, while mist curled sleepily in a thousand purple valleys, still shadowed and in darkness. Somewhere a snow-fed stream trickled lazily over a rocky ledge, and the sound of its trickling carried far in the stillness of the dawn. Somewhere, horses stirred and stamped among lose rocks, and the clattering they made re-echoed among a million cliffs and precipices.

Fires sent up smoke from at least three places in the hills. One was a single campfire, a bivouac of a half dozen men. A number of cowed and uneasy dogs were leashed nearby. The men arose and stamped stiffly by the blaze to warm themselves after the chill of the mountain night. They prepared no food. One or two bit off huge chunks of chewing tobacco and worked their jaws comfortingly. The others lit cigarets and smoked unsatisfied.

A little man with faded and expressionless eyes regarded the dogs without emotion. "They'll trail now," he said tonelessly. "We ought to've had better sense than to feed 'em like Tilford said. They'll trail now."

A man with a scarred face growled. "Tilford's a fool. We shoulda brought along somethin' t' eat."

"His mistake," said the man with the faded eyes. "He'll pay for it. An' we git paid for Holman. Then we start on the easy money."

Stiffly and still growling, the six began to saddle up. The dogs shrank back when the scarred faced man drew near them. Presently they followed unhappily, dragging behind the horses, when the six rode away holding fast to their leashes.

Elsewhere in those hills another camp awakened. There were fires, four or five huge blazes, to which a much greater number of men crowded for warmth. Nights in the hills are always cold, no matter what the temperature at midday. And a few hours of enforced rest without blankets will stiffen any man's muscles.

"Gosh," yawned a puncher. "I'd give a ten-dollar bill for a cup of coffee; I'm cold right down to my gizzard.

Thompson came by his face grim and set. Tilford was not far from his side, with something furtive in his gait.

"Get saddled up, boys," ordered Thompson curtly. "We're going to give Tilford another chance. He won't be leaving us, anyhow. But if he pulled us out here on a fool's errand so something could be put over while we were gone—well, he'll hear from us."

"I'm not an outdoor man," protested Tilford uneasily. "I couldn't find the place in the dark. The Mexican told me, but maybe I got my bearings mixed up."

"You'd better find them again," said Thompson coldly. "If anything's happened to Miss Laurier—and I don't doubt it for an instant—you'll pay for it, my friend."

Cuba Has 100,018 Cows

Havana.—The first enumeration of milch cows in Cuba has just been completed. The Bureau of Milk Inspection of the Department of Health reports that there are 100,018 of the animals on the island, producing 320,723 liters of milk daily.

The growth of the daily industry in Cuba can be appreciated when it is recalled that some ten years ago fresh milk was a luxury which only the well-to-do were able to afford, practically all milk consumed being imported. Even five years ago milk sold at 30 cents a liter, due to the shortage of domestic production.

At present 4,290 dairy farms furnish employment to 10,137 persons, according to the report. The provinces of Havana and Oriente lead in milk production, the former producing 126,559 and the latter 78,005 liters.

Statistics just published show that the importation of condensed milk during the first three months of 1930 amounted to 3,631,177 pounds and dropped to 256,493 pounds in the corresponding period of 1932. Increased import duties on evaporated and condensed milk, which have been approved by the Senate and are now waiting action of the lower house, will cause a further drop in importations, since at the higher rate imposed the price will be prohibitive.

Higher Education

By L. P. Jacks in "The Education of the Whole Man"

Not long ago I paid a visit to a great factory where hundreds of young women are employed. I remarked on their ease and dexterity and cheerfulness. "We have a school of physical culture attached to the mill," said the manager, "and we teach them to walk in our evening classes. The interesting thing is," he added, "that when we have taught them to walk and to carry themselves easily they begin asking for other things. Some want to sing, some want to dance and some want books, and three of them have been writing poetry. I expect we shall end up by becoming a little university."

Our vision of education as an episodic process conducted by professional drudges, whose dull humming goes on inside the walls of a school or a college should be expanded into the idea of it as a great romance, the summary adventure of our age, the central concern of every citizen, lifelong in its duration, universal in its scope, addressed throughout to the making of whole men, and having nothing less for its object than to convert the totality of knowledge into human skill, and bring it to bear on the pursuit of excellence in every department of social activity.

My own education was sadly defective as an education of the "whole man." It was divided into what are called "subjects"—just uncor-ordinated chapters of knowledge, parcels of book-say and hear-say, tied up with string, and pitched into our mind as into a basket. There was one set of operators who trained our minds in the class-rooms, and another set who trained our bodies in the gymnasium. And there was a third gentleman, called "the chaplain," who was supposed to train our characters and look after our souls. But there was no unity of aim. The mind department, the body department, the character department, the soul department were at sixes and sevens. In all this piecemeal procedure one thing was consistently lost sight of—the whole boy, who is mind, body, character and soul all in one.

At a meeting called to protect our beautiful countryside from the invasion of ugliness now threatening it—factories, jerry-building, hideous advertisments and such-like—I heard a speaker make a profound remark. "You will never keep your beautiful England," he said, "until you get a beautiful people to live in it." By "a beautiful people" he meant simply a people whose bodies had been liberally educated to correspond with a liberal education of the mind, and to support it at every point the eye trained to see beauty and to value it, the ear trained to hear harmony and to resent discord, the hand trained to fine craftsmanship, the whole man, mind and body together, to creative activity.

It is vanity to attempt to graft an A1 culture of the mind on a C3 culture of the body, or, as a foreign critic once expressed it, "to train the minds of the young men in your lecture-rooms as though you meant them to become clergymen and to train their bodies in the football field as though you meant to become policemen." The coeducation of mind and body would recognize that perfect health is not to be defined alone in terms of sound sleep, good digestion, muscular strength and animal spirits, but demands in addition an organizaton, an economy, a self-control not to be attained without careful training, and beyond all that, the development of the finer aptitudes for self-expression in creative forms. The human body is naturally skill-hungry, and until that hunger is satisfied it will be ill at ease, craving for something it has not got and seeking its satisfactions in external excitements which exhaust its vitality and diminish its capacity for joy. Short of skill, the perfect health even of the body is impossible.

Forms of physical culture are already in practice which train the whole body as an instrument of self-expression and self-control, teaching it the harmony and dignity of normal movement, both singly and in concerted operations of great beauty, and making all this fundamental to higher activities, a growing point for many arts. At all points control is ranked above effort, and the normal performance above the exceptional feat, to walk with the minimum fatigue being held more important than to run with the maximum speed, to speak the mother tongue with easy articulation than to utter a shout that can be heard a mile off, to breathe naturally than to hold one's breath for ten minutes under water. Strength of course is aimed at, but a strength that shows itself in economy rather than expense, in balance than in strain, in versatility than in violence—a different thing from the strength needed for a boat race or a prize fight. In every human being there is a latent passion for excellence, and the primary object of education should be to awaken and foster this passion, and let it loose to do its work in every department of labor and of leisure.

All of us might enjoy our leisure far more if we had been better educated, if we could import into our leisure occupations generally something of that passion for excellence which is so necessary in other connections. The pleasures that I have enjoyed most are not those which I bought ready-made, but those that I made for myself by exercising the very modest amount of skill I happen to possess. I believe that all men and women are made that way. No one ought to be considered educated, whether boy or girl, man or woman, until he or she has acquired at least the elements of some sort of skill. There is no better protection against folly and vice. There is no surer road to the real enjoyment of leisure.

A sound physical culture should be made accessible, along with mental culture, to all classes of the community; it should form an integral part of our national system, and be as "compulsory" as anything else. I am convinced that we have, in the bedraggled physique of the town-bred population, one of the chief reasons why popular education has failed to produce the effects expected of it.

There is such a thing as the higher education of the body, as well as the higher education of the mind. It is something quite different from what athletics aim at and goes much farther than any of the matters which hygiene is concerned with. It regards the human body as a whole as capabl eof being developed into an instrument of the highest skill, governed by a perfect self-control and exercising a beautiful economy of power which is itself a mental culture of a most valuable kind. Unfortunately, we are still in the grip of a very old tradition which regards mind and body as somehow hitched together in an ill-sorted partnership, the mind a celestial thing and the body an earth-born and inferior thing which one has to tolerate as best one can. This false idea, however, will not last much longer. We shall come to see, as many see even now, that the being we have to educate is always body and mind together. When that is generally recognized, the higher education of the body will be made accessible to all classes of the community along with the higher education of the mind—the higher education of the whole man.

Too Many and Not Enough

(Written on a Boston and Albany Local.)

There are too many people in the world . . .

Too many children whose ears need scrubbing,

Too many drummers whose jokes need snubbing.

Too many girls who touch up their lips,

Too many porters gaping for tips,

Too many fat men lolling and snoring,

Too many old men, piteous and boring,

Too many women with Main Street chins (A mouth leaves off where a neck begins)—

There are too many people in the world.

But there aren't enough in all of the world . . .

Not enough thoroughbred colts all prancing,

Not enough puppydogs dinky and dancing,

Not enough woodchucks dozing and dreaming,

Not enough daffodils glimmering and gleaming,

Not enough birches, or brooks, or wings,

Not enough sunrises, not enough springs,

Not enough time, between living and dying

To set our minds on one swallow's flying,

Not enough time to dip our free

Cupful of beauty from sky and sea—

No, not enough in all of the world!

Berlin Mail Tube Refrigerated

Berlin.—A refrigeration system has been installed in part of the 274 kilometers of the subterranean air tubes by which the Berlin postoffice facilitates its special delivery service.

The refrigeration was necessary to prevent overheating by friction in the tube from the main postoffice to Tempiehof Airport, a stretch of about six kilometers which the carriers make in ten minutes under a high-pressure system. The subway trains require seventeen minutes for this stretch.

"SALADA" ICED TEA is delicious

Where Fat is Fashionable

Slimness is a thing of beauty to the Canadian girl. But the women of West Africa must be fat if they wish to attract. The stouter the black mammy becomes the more fashionable is her figure.

Consequently, her meals are somewhat prolonged affairs. They usually consist of yams, ground into a pulp which is called "fou-fou," rice, and bananas. And to assist the process of putting on weight, she takes as little exercise as possible.

There is a certain tribe in Nigeria where girls about to be married, and who wish to appear at their best, are sent to what is called "the fattening house."

Here they are fed at short intervals on all sorts of luxuries—chicken, eggs, soups, and so on. They stay in the place for several weeks, stuffing for all they are worth, and taking care to move as little as possible.

When the happy bridegroom comes to claim his bride at the end of the fattening process he finds her so tremendously fat that she is unable to rise from her seat. He is a very proud man as he makes arrangements for this huge mountain of flesh to be carried to his home.

Once the dusky belles are married and resume their normal life they lose much of this unnatural fatness. Nevertheless, they do their best never to get below a certain weight.

It is the plump girl who gets all the admiration from the opposite sex. The thin girl is passed by unnoticed.

The Canadian girl nibbling dry biscuits and sipping orangejuice because fashion decrees that she must be slim, and the West African maiden gorging until it is unsafe to swallow another mouthful, because she is expected to be fat, are both slaves of fashion, and so "sisters under their skin."

Parasites and Manure

Manure is the greatest, source of danger from the eggs and young parasitic worms. It is also the breeding area for the numerous fly pests so injurious to domestic animals. The practice of permitting manure to accumulate about stables and yards for one day longer than need be should be avoided, as it increases the probability of animals becoming infested with the common animal pests. It is hard to get away from the old practice of carelessly throwing manure out into the yard and leaving it there for months. How much more sanitary it would be for the animals if all fecal matter were removed and placed in a protected pile or pit. Such practice would reduce the parasite and disease loss, that is generally present. In a recent survey covering some 32 farms the examination of the fecal matter from sheep showed every flock to be infested with a number of parasites. The parasite eggs were found in the manure in every case. Keep the animals away from their own body discharges if possible to do so. Such practice pays a good return in better health.

Sunday School Lesson

August 14. Lesson VII—The Ten Commandments—II. Exodus 20: 12-21. Golden Text—Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.—Leviticus 19: 18.

ANALYSIS.

I. RESPECT FOR HUMAN VALUES, vs. 12-14, 16.

II. RESPECT FOR MATERIAL VALUES, vs. 15, 17.

III. THE FEAR OF THE LORD, vs. 18-21.

INTRODUCTION—It is usual to think of the first section of the Ten Commandments (vs. 1-11) as declaring our obligations to God, and the second section (vs. 12-17) our obligations to man. This distinction may be invidious. It may draw a line between religion and morality which does not exist in fact. Israel certainly never thought of such a distinction. They knew that God was behind all the commandments, whether religious or moral. Their great motive for keeping the commandments was that God is the unsleeping Guardian of the obligations man owes to man. These obligations are singularly comprehensive. They suggest a moral order which has its source in the righteousness of God. The thought which underlies them all is of worthy respect for great values. Jesus lifted them from the level of duty to that of love—"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

I. RESPECT FOR HUMAN VALUES, vs. 12-14, 16.

Parents are entitled to the respect of their children with all that that involves, v. 12. In view of the low esteem in which womanhood was held in ancient society, it is remarkable that the father and mother are placed on a level of equality before Hebrew children. Both alike are deserving of respect. In other passages the duties of the parents towards the children are stated. They are responsible, for instance, for the training and education of their children, 12: 26. Parents represent and wield authority—the authority that comes from a wide experience in life. To honor them is therefore to show respect for authority, deep-rooted in life. When proper respect is shown to such authority then society is well-ordered and stable. It prolongs its days upon the land. For sound, social well-being there must be respect shown for human life. "Thou shalt do no murder," v 13. No reason is assigned for observing this commandment; it was regarded as self-evident. If reason were sought, however, it could be found in Genesis 9: 6: "for in the image of God made he man." Murder in any form is a defilement or destruction of God's image in man. Next, the well-being of the family is guaranteed, v. 14. The marriage bond is sacred; husband and wife must be faithful to each other. If there be unfaithfulness, the penalty is death, Deut. 22: 22. One reason why Hebrew society (unlike many another ancient society) did not decay with the canker of immorality, is that there were strict enforcements against all manner of impurity. The ninth commandment (v. 16), aims at safeguarding the reputation of others. Due respect must be shown a man's good name, which represents his very life. From time immemorial Oriental law courts have been notoriously corrupt; lying and bribery have been taken as a matter of course. Israel was not free from that corruption; on many an occasion reputations were blasted and property and life imperilled by false evidence. Hence the importance of telling the truth.

II. RESPECT FOR MATERIAL VALUES, vs. 15, 17.

Provision is made in the commandment, "Thou shalt not steal," for the safeguarding of property. God's people are to be an honest society, in which no member is unjustly deprived of his possessions. The great prophets carried this principle far. They applied it against the greed and cunning, the injustice and oppression by which men try to exploit their fellows. The last commandment (v. 17) leaves the field of external conduct, and descends to the heart. Hence it may be regarded as the deepest of all the commandments in this second group. Covetousness is an inner state; out of it come robbery, extortion and oppression. The desire for the property of another leads often to the steps by which that property is wrongly acquired. A catalogue of the more important parts of the neighbor's property is given. It is all summed up in the word "house." The house is the domestic establishment generally, including the wife, the slaves, the domestic animals and all the persons and things belonging to it.

III. THE FEAR OF THE LORD, vs. 18-21.

During the delivery of the law, God had come down in the fulness of his majesty upon Mount Sinai. Moses remained in his presence for forty days. During that time nature, in awe of his holiness, was disturbed on a stupendous scale, v. 18. A psalmist has put this poetically: "The earth saw and trembled; the hills melted like wax at the presence of the Lord," Psalm 97: 4, 5. The first impulse which men feel when confronted with the holiness of God is to escape from it. So when Moses returned to them they declared in a very human way that they preferred his familiar voice to the voice of God, v. 19. Moses, however, rightly interpreted the fear they felt before God. God had revealed himself in this awful way upon Sinai to put their obedience to the proof, and to inspire them with such fear of him that they would be saved from offending him, "The fear of the Lord" is one element in religion's redemptive power, v. 20.

After Lausanne

By Ramsay MacDonald, Prime Minister of Great Britain, in a speech before the House of Commons.

I should like it in as brief a time as possible to report on the proceedings—at any rate in their main features—of the conference at Lausanne. Let me begin right away with the claim I make for the importance of the conference. I make this claim: That the conference and its results can lead to a settlement of this question of reparations which lie somewhere about the root of every economic trouble which has overtaken the world, which have falsified national budgets, placed in the centre of Europe a country whose financial position is a menace to the whole world and have done much to throw national economy out of gear. While reparations last there can be no complete industrial recovery.

It is very difficult even to form sentences upon this subject which won't be misunderstood on the other side of the Atlantic. No American will have any sort of misunderstanding about this—that the mere putting of Britain on its financial feet is not enough to put Britain on its industrial feet. Our payments may be reduced or abolished. But that is not all we want. We are now facing the problem of trade, markets and international exchange.

She—"We had an expert on intensive gardening before our club last evening."

He—"Sounds interesting."

She—"Yes, he read a most constructive paper on how to raise a tulip in a tomato can."

Closed is the Day

The air's like cherry, the night's like plum,
The moon is a yellow chrysanthemum
Asleep is the mouse and the salamander.
Folded the blooms on the oleander.
A-nest is the lapwing, a-nest is the lory—
Closed is the day like a child's bright story.
Curled is the rabbit and the wood mouse curled,
Asleep is the lilac and her blue buds furled.
A-nest is the pewit, a-nest is the plover—
Closed is the day, like a page turned over.

—Bert Cooksley.

The 3000-acre tract along the international boundary between the United States and Canada is appropriately called a "garden," since it is to be used for the cultivation of better understanding between the nations.

Thumb Value

One has only to grasp a pen or a tool of some sort to realize that the different fingers are far from having the same value in regard to their usefulness in performing work. The most important is the thumb, for without it seizing or holding would be very imperfect. The hand is no longer pincers, but merely a claw, when deprived of the thumb. It may be estimated that the thumb represents fully a third of the total value of the hand. The total of the thumb is estimated by competent authorities as fifteen to thirty-five per cent. for the right and ten to fifteen per cent. for the left hand, except for workers in art, when forty to fifty for the right and twenty-five to forty per cent. for the left hand comes nearer the value.

The total loss of the index finger causes an incapacity at from ten to twenty-five per cent. for the right hand and ten to fifteen per cent. for the left. The middle finger is less important than the index. The ring finger is least important, and the little finger may be compared to its neighbor, except in the professions in which it serves as a point of support for the hand.

Life's but a word, a shadow, a melting dream, compared to essential and eternal honor.—J. Fletcher.

Moscow Gleanings

Migration to the "Dacha"

Late spring and early summer witness a huge migration of Muscovites to the "dachas," or summer cottages, in the surrounding countryside. Local trains on the various lines which radiate from Moscow are crowded, especially on rest days, and the inhabitant of a dacha may often be identified by the amount of luggage and packages which he or she carries, because the task of provisioning and supplying dacha is rather formidable. The stores of the dacha villages are considerably barer than those of Moscow, so that all sorts of things, from household articles and kerosene, to meat and butter (when the latter is obtainable at all), must be carried from Moscow. In past years the problem of obtaining a dacha has been complicated by the fact that many peasants were afraid to rent all or part of their cottages for fear that they might be denounced as kulaks and heavily taxed or subjected to still more severe penalties. This year the Moscow Soviet authorities issued certain rules in this connection which are calculated to reassure the peasants and hence to make easier the annual overflow from the city during the summer months. Fragrant pine and fir forests and convenient bathing streams are among the main attractions of the "dacha belt" which surrounds Moscow. Moreover, the Soviet capital in summer is apt to be unpleasantly dusty, because of the amount of new building and street repairing that goes on at this time.

Soviets Turn to Baseball

Baseball has been imported into Russia by American workers and specialists and seems likely to become widespread, if a decision of the Supreme Council of Physical Culture is carried into effect. This decision calls for the introduction of baseball in Soviet sport clubs, and Americans here have been invited to teach the fine points of the new game. The Soviet Union will begin to produce baseball bats, masks, gloves and other equipment, using American samples as models. Baseball games will be played this summer in the Park of Culture and Rest, Moscow's chief summer amusement center. Soccer is quite widely played in the Soviet Union; but the physical culture authorities have vetoed a suggestion to introduce American football on the ground that this sport is too rough.

Making Rain to Order

Not content with their efforts to plan in advance the output of coal, iron, oil, textiles, shoes, books, cinema films and many other objects, the Soviet authorities are embarking on serious experiments with a view to controlling that most variable and fickle object, the weather. The first machine in the world designed to produce rain artificially has been set up in Leningrad. It is an electrical apparatus with a power of 75,000 volts, and the general idea of rain production is to burst clouds by transmitting electrical currents into them. A second machine with a power of 200,000 volts is in process of construction. These machines will be mounted on a specially constructed high tower. It is stated that experiments with artificially created rain have yielded favorable results, and the significance of this discovery for agriculture, if it should prove practicable on a large scale, is obvious.

New Museum Building

An architectural competition has just ended for designs for a new and much larger building in which to house the Museum of the Revolution, which is somewhat cramped in its present location in the former British Club, on the Tverskaya, one of the main streets of Moscow. This museum, which conveys through the medium of paintings, sketches, newspapers and documents a bird's-eye view of various phases in the development of the Russian Revolution, is visited by 300,000 people every year. The new building is planned on a scale calculated to accommodate 1,000,000 visitors a year and some of the most distinguished Moscow architects, such as Mr. A. B.Shusev, designer of the Lenine Mausoleum, and Mr. I. V. Zholtovsky, one of the prize winners in the competition for the Palace of Soviets, are participating in the competition.

Westminster Abbey Chapel To Serve As War Memorial

In the lofty chamber beneath the southwest tower of Westminster Abbey and not far from the grave of the Unknown Warrior a new place of pilgrimage has recently been opened to the British public. With as little damage to the medieval structure as possible, and with all due reverence for the traditions of the historic abbey, a chapel in the nature of a war memorial has been constructed—the first new chapel to be opened in the abbey since the dissolution of the monastery.

The Warriors' Chapel, dedicated by the Prince of Wales in a solemn ceremonial, is to serve as a place for rest and meditation for the constant stream of visitors to the shrine of the Unknown Warrior. It has been the acknowledged purpose of the authorities to endow the chapel with a devotional atmosphere and this character is implicit in the design and decoration which have been carried out in the project. The idea of the chapel was the conception of an unknown benefactor who is said to have given half of his life's savings toward defraying the cost of the project, the rest of the sum being raised by "widows' mites" offerings. The cost of the project is placed at about £4,000 ($20,000).

More than four centuries ago the great room was enclosed on two sides by stone screens, one of which still stands; the other was removed 200 years ago to make way for a monument which has recently been transferred to another spot. One side of the new chapel has been closed off by a bronze screen of Renaissance influence—a light grille whose frieze bears a gilded scroll-work continuing across the face of the old stone screen. Across the medieval screen an arcade has been erected and elaborately wrought in gilt and red on alabaster. A gilt bronze crucifix occupies the centre of the arcade with lesser figures of the Virgin and St. John. The old altar which has stood for centuries has been replaced with one of solid concrete.

Facing the crucifix is the war memorial, an illuminated panel, whose inscription begins: "To the glory of God and to the memory of one million men who fell in the great war, 1914-1918."

The late Justice McKenna, of the United States Supreme Court, once took up golf in a serious way. He had a series of lessons from a professional, and was told he must practice assiduously.

So one day he went out to the Chevy Chase course, near Washington, to practice. He got a caddie and walked to a far-away tee.

The caddie teed up the ball and the justice took a swipe at it. He missed it a foot. He contemplated the ball for a space and then had another try. This time he hit the ground 18 inches behind the ball.

"Tut-tut!" said the distinguished justice. "Tut-tut!"

"Mister," said the caddie, "You'll never learn to play golf with them words."—Saturday Evening Post.

At the death of Edward MacDowell the American composer, a certain lady whose musical aspirations sadly outdistanced her abilities, undertook to write an elegy in his honor. After an arduous stint at the piano she produced an opus which, she felt, struck just about the last note in American elegy-writing. For her first audience she pounced upon Josef Hoffman, the eminent pianist, who chanced to be vacationing in the neighborhood. Graciously, Hoffman agreed to listen. Against a backdrop of rose lights and curling incense the lady "rendered" the piece with her own hands, then turned eagerly to sep up Hoffman's praise.

"It's really quite nice," murmured the pianist defensively, "but don't you think it would have been better if——"

"If what?" wheedled the elegist.

"If you had died and MacDowell had written the elegy?"—Contributed.

The distinguished English statesman and historian, John Morley, had just returned to London after a visit to America. It was a dinner party, and a lively young woman said: "Mr. Morley, you have seen this wonderful man in Washington (Theodore Roosevelt) about whom all the world is talking. Now what do you think of him?"

Rather ponderously Mr. Morley began: "You may take every adjective on every page of the Oxford Dictionary, good, bad and indifferent, and you will find some one to apply—" "That's too complicated; can't you tell us in half a dozen words?" the young woman cut in impatiently. "In half a dozen words," Morley repeated. "Half St. Paul, half St. Vitus."—Busbey, Uncle Joe Cannon.

When Bret Harte was editing a little paper in a mining settlement in California the wife of the leading citizen died and it became his duty to write an editorial obituary. This he did quite to his satisfaction, concluding the eulogy with the remark, "She was distinguished for charity above all the other ladies of this town."

"I dropped into the office later," said Bret Harte, "to look at the proofs. I found that the intelligent compositor had made me say, 'She was distinguished for chastity above all the other ladies of this town.' I crossed out the insulting s, put a big query mark in the margin and went home. To my horror in the morning I read, 'She was distinguished for chastity (?) above all the other ladies of this town'."—E. P. Mitchell, Memories of an Editor.

Will held out his hand, looked very confused, then said, "Excuse me, I didn't quite get the name." — Contributed.

Governor Franklin Roosevelt tells of a young Navy ensign whose marks in navigation had not been all that might have been desired, and who was once set at the task of shooting the sun to determine the ship's position. The vessel was on cruise, and was somewhere west of Penzance.

After a while the ensign delivered to the captain the result of his calculations.

Shortly afterward, the captain sent for the ensign.

"Young man," said the officer seriously, "remove your cap. We are now upon a hallowed spot."

"Beg your pardon, Captain?"

"Yes, sir," said the captain. "If you have calculated accurately we are now right smack in the middle of Westminster Abbey."—Collier's.

BLOOD PRESSURE

The number of questions concerning blood pressure which come to the Health Service is evidence that a large number of people are worried about high or low blood pressure.

For a number of years, in making an examination, doctors have taken the blood pressure of their patients. The doctor is interested in the blood pressure because it is by putting together all his findings that he is able to determine the nature of any abnormal condition which may be present in his patient.

The blood is always under pressure; otherwise it would not circulate. In the same person blood pressure varies as the result of such things as worry, excitement, position of the body and the use of stimulants. It also varies with age, sex, weight and general health.

High blood pressure is not a disease. It is the result of some cause which may be emotional, such as worry or excitement, but may be associated with some abnormal condition of other parts, such as the heart or kidney. There is no use in guessing as to the cause; that is for the doctor to find out. Worry about blood pressure may be the one thing which is keeping it above the average.

It is a mistake to try to interpret your own symptoms or the results of some examination. If, for some reason, you have an X-ray examination, you are not able to interpret the picture; very likely you have no idea that you can do so, and you are quite right, for it requires experience to enable the doctor to know the meaning of the lights and shadows which the picture shows.

Blood pressure readings appear so simple—much like reading a thermometer—that many people seem to believe that they should be able to know the meaning of a blood pressure of 150 or some other figure. It is not with any idea of suggesting that there is something mysterious about the subject that we say quite frankly that the interpretation of blood pressure readings is not simple. It is not simple because the significance of the blood pressure is not found in the blood pressure itself. It is obvious that, if the average blood pressure for a man of 50 years of age is 130, a man of 50 who has a pressure of 160 is above normal. Such a condition should receive attention, but need not cause alarm. The condition itself means nothing; it may be only temporary, but, in any case, until the cause is known the significance of the condition is obscure.

A few years ago people worried about uric acid; now it is blood pressure. Secure the advice of your doctor, follow his instructions, and leave blood pressure to take care of itself.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

BRITISH DIPLOMACY

Absence of Plan and Disposition to "Muddle Through" Is Thoroughly British, Says Chamberlain.

Writing in Foreign Affairs, Sir Austen Chamberlain disclaims any machiavellian subtlety in diplomacy. He endeavors to explain the difference between British, French and German psychology as follows:—

"The German is by nature a systematizer. He excels in organization.

SIR AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN

He likes to see where he is going, to foresee as far as may be the accidents of the route, and to be assured of good accommodation at the end of his journey 'according to plan.'

"How often did not the phrase recur during the war in German bulletins? 'The plan' was at once their security and their danger—often their most efficient instrument but sometimes their master.

"The Englishman, on the other hand, finds such systematic planning irksome and uncongenial. He submits himself to it with reluctance even when circumstances impose it on him, and, even while submitting, he distrusts the process in which he is engaged, doubts his power to pierce the mists of the future, and secretly relies on his capacity to meet emergencies as they arise.

"In difficult times there is no more common ending to a political discussion between Englishmen than the phrase: 'Well, I suppose we shall muddle through somehow.' It could never occur to a German or a Frenchman to seek consolation in such a reflection."

TAKES HIS HOUSE TO WORK.

Former Canadian Enjoys Home Comforts While on Road.

Taking their home to business is an experiment which is working out most satisfactorily for Mr. and Mrs. Jack Wylie.

Mr. Wylie, a former resident of London, Ontario, is a traveller whose territory cover the states of Florida, Georgia and North and South Carolina. In such a climate Mr. and Mrs. Wylie find no difficulty in taking their home with them as they travel, and the latter accompanies her husband on his journeys, keeping house most enjoyably in their "house car."

The travelling house is fitted most attractively, with all the needs of the small, modern home. A refrigerator simplifies the food question; there is a tiny stove and a charming "living-room," with couches, easy chairs, a handsome velvet rug and the general appearance of a small but cosy and comfortable home.

REGINA'S GREAT GROWTH.

Less than 50 years ago Regina was a boneyard. Its only industry was the shovelling and shipping of buffalo bones. In fact, the district was referred to as "Pile o' Bones." Then a tented town sprang up as newcomers visioned new life on the prairies. Tents gave way to shacks. Shacks strewn along uncertain prairie trails were then replaced by beautiful structures of brick, native stone, fine woods and cement. Straggling roads, treeless and unshaded, were straightened out. Plants, flowers shrubs and trees were made into borders for beautiful streets and boulevards. To-day, Regina is the capital of Saskatchewan, a city of parks and beautiful homes, and the distributing point for the rich farm lands to the north, south, east and west.

HELPING EYE TO SEE.

The eye, extraordinarily sensitive though it otherwise can be, experiences great difficulty in discriminating between white and nearly white substances. To this end, an instrument has been designed wherein the eye of the observer has been replaced by a photo-electric cell, which enables the instrument to measure accurately the extremely small differences between "white" surfaces. By this means differences inappreciable to the eye of even a trained observer can be detected.

COMPOSER HONORS PRINCESSES

"Nursery Suite," the most important work by Sir Edward Elgar since 1919 and dedicated to the Duchess of York and her two daughters was heard by the Duke and Duchess of York when they watched Sir Edward conducting the London Symphony Orchestra at the Kingsway Hall, London, for the making of gramophone records of the suite. The duchess enjoyed particularly one of the seven movements, "The Wagon Passes," and asked for it to be played again.

A Thriller on the Air.

Police, stopping a car near Smith Falls, Ontario, in response to a telephone call from a farmer who heard loud cries for help from the passing roadster, were invited to listen in to the final episode of a thriller coming through the loudspeaker of the portable radio set.

The British delegation to the Imperial Economic Conference at Ottawa, headed by Rt. Hon. Stanley Baldwin, Lord President of the Council and former Prime Minister of Great Britain, despite its heavy labors during the five-day voyage to Canada on the Canadian Pacific liner "Empress of Britain" had its lighter moments. The scenes above show members of the delegation visiting the Navigating Bridge of the big white flagship, and Rt. Hon. J. H. Thomas, Dominions Secretary, enjoying a game of quoits. Rt. Hon. Stanley Baldwin autographs a picture of the "Empress of Britain" for Captain Latta, her commander; looking on is Geoffrey Lloyd, M.P., a brilliant younger member of the House, who is his Parliamentary Private Secretary. Lower picture shows: Rt. Hon. Sir Philip Cunliffe-Lister, Lord Hailsham, and Sir John Gilmour, receiving a short lesson in navigation from Capt. R. G. Latta. While the delegates were on the bridge a small steamer showed a message of welcome, and above is seen the "Empress of Britain's" signal "Thank you."

TO IMPROVE BACON

Hon. Thomas L. Kennedy, Minister of Agriculture, has announced that new regulations have been adopted by the province and dominion jointly to improve the standards of bacon production. Under these provisions what is known as an advanced register of sows is to be established. Pigs from a first litter will have to make 200 pounds of pork in 200 days, will be slaughtered and their carcasses judged by the dominion graders and scored for value as bacon. In the event that they are scored as "extra good bacon," the sow will be placed on the proposed advanced register with proper ear-marking or tagging, and the farmer owning her will be bonused to the extent of $15, to which the province and the dominion will contribute equally. Any boar that is secured from this advanced register of sows will be looked over by judges at the age of six months, and if showing the right conformation will earn for its owner the amount of $15 from the governments.

CREDIT VALLEY MILL AS BUSY AS EVER

An Arcadian picture of a depressionless industry is presented by the Credit Valley Mills at Streetsville. For ten years more than a century, using Ontario grain to produce flour for Ontario housewives the mills rather than cutting expenses and laying off hands, are running twenty-four hours a day, and reconstruction is at present increasing the output.

First built in 1822, under the ownership of Hetty A. Beatty, the mills were burned and reconstructed in 1830. Since then they have been almost constantly in operation. In 1895 Duncan Reid, who learned the business with James Norris Company of St. Catharines, took them over. His son, Frank, has joined him in the business, and two grandsons, Frank and Donald, proudly show the village children the mechanical mysteries of the place.

After a century of use, the masonry put in when the mill was first built stands firm, and steel will have to replace the timbers taken from under wheel. Some of the timbers were two feet square, still sound, and good for years more service. Boards two feet wide were taken out and applied in re-construction.

The Reids have found Ontario grain best for their product, buying from local farmers and from nearby centres. The Chatham district supplies 45,000 bushels a year. Ottawa, Montreal, Brockville, Toronto and Hamilton are the Canadian centres where the flour finds its best market, but a large portion of the mills' output goes to the United Kingdom and the West Indies.

The big salaries for high school teachers will be deflated like a windbag when school boards get enough courage is the comment of the Wiarton Echo when it says:

"Eph Burt tells me that Amabel school section No. 14 has hired its school teacher for the next term at $500.00 and they could have plenty at that figure. That fact will interest everybody and many school boards will feel that maybe they were in too big a hurry in making their contracts as I hear figures ranging from $800 which prevail in Wiarton, on down to the $500. And she's darn lucky to get that, he added, for $500 is more than any of us farmers, who will have to pay her, will have for ourselves.

"Figures of $1,800 and thereabouts which one uses in talking of high school salaries, are simply ridiculous. Every sane man knows it, too. All these school boards are looking for a precedent on which to act. And when some board gets enough courage to cut the thing down to a few hundred dollars more than for public school salaries, the big salaries will be deflated like windbags all over the country. Mark my words.

PRESENTATION

Surrounded by 65 relations and friends, Thomas A. Rogers, pioneer farmer of Toronto Township, celebrated his 70th birthday at his home here on Thursday.

Mr. Rogers was born on the Rogers farm in Toronto Township, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Rogers, and had farmed in this section practically all his life. He retired and moved to Streetsville two years ago, where he and his wife are now living. He has two sons, David, a Provincial constable, and Albert, who works the farm.

The celebration was in the form of a surprise party staged in Mr. Rogers' honor by his two daughters-in-law, Mrs. David and Albert Rogers. They succeeded in enticing him from his home, during which time they decorated the house with gladioli and other flowers in preparation for the celebration, which took place in the evening.

An enjoyable evening was spent in a program of bridge and later old-time dancing. A feature of the luncheon was the large birthday cake decorated with 70 candles which was cut by Mr. Rogers wielding a large knife.

Following the luncheon, the guest was showered with numerous presents and congratulatory messages. Among the presents was a beautiful bridge lamp, a gift from his family.

Mr. Rogers after thanking his friends, started them off for old-time dancing, the music being supplied by his brother, William, of Toronto, and the festivities continued well on into the night.

Prize winners of the euchre were: ladies, Mrs. J. A. Pinney, of Toronto, niece of Mr. Rogers; and men, J. Harper, of Cooksville. Mr. J. A. Pinney and Mrs. A. Bentley won the consolation prizes.

Presentation to Bride and Groom

There are three great events in our lives. First, we are born, then we get married, then we have to die. And between times we are our own free agents to make or mar our lives, and the lives of others.

When a young man or girl makes the choice of a life partner, their neighbours, who were acquainted with their virtues and failings, review their past life to see if they are worthy of any public recognition.

When Jack McCarron, formerly of the Ninth Line, Trafalgar, was married on August 1st to Miss Loretta Beetham, West Toronto, Mrs. Cliff May, one of the leaders in social activities, thought it would be proper to show Jack's better half what the neighbors thought of her choice and how all his actions, when a boy, was the right material to make a good husband.

On August 6th on the beautiful May lawn, made as light as day with electric light, about fifty friends and neighbors assembled to show the esteem in which Jack was held and to welcome his bride. A bashful young couple was seated under a window, all unconscious of a large sack above their heads, contents unknown. The curtain rose on the first act, when Elsie and Murray, children of the host and hostess, appeared with a large basket laden with gifts.

When Jack laid the gifts on the table beside him and read the messages of congratulations and good wishes and we beheld the beautiful and useful gifts and the pleasure it gave to the givers and receivers, scenes like that make life worth living.

In a few well-chosen words Jack, on behalf of himself and wife, thanked them all for their great unexpected kindness and valuable gifts and gave everyone a cordial invitation to visit them in their home in New Toronto.

Just at this time the mysterious sack above their heads flew open and the contents, about a bushel of confetti, showered on the bride and groom.

Is life worth living, do we ask,
Well, scenes like this will tell;
And neighbors' judgment then will show
Life is worth living well.

Excellent refreshments of sandwiches, coffee and cake were served and several recitations and instrumentals were given in good style.

When Charlie Blackall, Fred McCarron, D. McGregor and Will, the groom's brother, were examining the presents, did we hear this?

Nothing but leaves our spirit grieves,
Over our wasted life;
If we could live our lives over again,
We would have a shower and a wife.

Then John Wagner, in his compassionate way, said:

My good, old neighbor, dry that tear,
There still is hope, this is leap year;
Don't be discouraged, you might find
Some who refused, have changed their mind.

BARN BURNT

A $5,000 barn on the farm of William Arnott, on the fourth line west, near Churchville, was completely destroyed by fire Sunday.

The Arnotts were not at home at the time and when they arrived half an hour after the blaze had started the barn was a smouldering mass of ruins. Fred Reeve, a neighbour, saw the blaze and summoned other residents of the district and endeavoured to save some of the implements standing near the barn.

Included in the loss sustained were 40 tons of hay, wheat from ten acres of the farm, two pigs, 50 hens, two wagons, two cutters, a set of scales, and a quantity of straw. Damage is partly covered, there being $5,000 insurance on the property.

Because of a north wind which carried the flames away from the house, the Arnott home was not endangered.

RECORDS SHOW DRIVERS OF MOTOR VEHICLES DESERVE SEVERE CRITICISM

Civilized nations engaged in war, protect children as non-combatants. But apparently the drivers of automobiles in Ontario are less considerate. In this province last year, a total of 1,827 children were injured by motor vehicles. Of this number, 884 were playing in the street. True, some of these accidents were unavoidable; true, also that parents should be made to accept some of the responsibility, but none the less the record is a shameful one.

The trust of children in grown-up persons in proverbial. Apparently this trust is being violated more than a hundred times a month.

HYDRO COMMISSION REPORT

The twenty-fourth annual report of the Ontario Hydro Electric Power Commission has just come to hand, covering the year ended October 31st, 1931. The report is in the usual book form and contains information of a reference nature interesting to those wishing to keep up on the work of the commission. There are numerous illustrations of the various developments and technical diagrams of the different systems, but what concerns us most, of course, is the local information.

The report shows that Brampton uses 2,345.9 horse power, Bolton 131.7 h. p., and Streetsville 376.2 h. p., and Port Credit 537.5 h. p.

The report is very valuable to anyone wanting to keep in touch with the operations of the H.E.P.C. of Ontario

LET US SMILE

An artist took the notion to paint portraits of himself and his wife standing side by side. He showed the finished picture to his son, who said, "That's fine! But who's the lady, dad?"

"Why, that's your mother."

After a pause the boy remarked, Well, in that case why have you painted her with a strange gentleman?

E. A. writes as follows: "One day last January Robert returned from school with his report card for his mother's inspection. 'But, dear,' she said, 'what the trouble? Why have you such poor grades this month?'

"'There's no trouble, Mon,' was the quick reply. 'You know yourself things are always marked down after the holidays.'"

TWO HURT AS MOTORCYCLE SWERVES AND HITS ROCK

Dixie, Aug. 7.—When they swerved their motorcycle to avoid a truck and struck a large rock, two persons sustained severe injuries Sunday morning on the highway near Dixie. Kenneth Wright, Dufferin Street, sustained injuries to his right leg and cuts, and Beaton Bain, Charlotte Street, Weston, who was riding on the back, possible concussion of the brain and an injured right leg. The truck, driven by Paul Syliba, R.R. 1, made a left hand turn. Traffic Officer W. H. Delaney investigated.

WEDDING

McCarron—Beetham

A summer wedding took place at St. Teresa's Church, New Toronto, when Loretto, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Beetham, became the bride of Mr. John McCarron, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. McCarron, of Hornby. The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a gown of white point d'esprit over moire taffeta made on princess lines with long lace mittens and white moire shoes. Her veil, which was arranged in cap effect, was of bridal tulle with a coronet of orange blossoms, and she carried a bouquet of Butterfly roses. She was attended by her two sisters, Miss Grace and Miss Catherine Beetham, dressed in pale pink and pale green eyelet embroidery respectively, with large picture hats to match. Mr. William McCarron, brother of the groom, was best man. During the Mass solos were sung by Mrs. S. Gilkinson, accompanied on the organ by Mr. Fred Sykes. A reception was held at the home of the bride's parents, Mrs. Beetham receiving in a gown of nigger-brown georgette and lace, with a corsage of pale yellow roses. The groom's mother was gowned in navy blue flowered crepe with corsage bouquet. Later the couple left for a motor trip to the north country, the bride travelling in a green and white printed silk ensemble with white hat and shoes.

The Aztec Mystery

A Thrilling Story of the Old West

BY MURRAY LEINSTER

SYNOPSIS.

Sonny Holman, believing he is the rightful owner of the Aztec mine, holds up the mine's payrolls. Janet Laurier, who holds legal title to the Aztec, tries to stop his activities.

Rustlers run off some cattle and Sonny, riding in pursuit, is cornered by Janet's mine guards. He escapes, but his horse is shot. Janet has the horse doctored and pleads with Holman to leave the country. Tilford, mine manager, apparently falls in with her plan but in reality schemes to deliver Janet over to a cutthroat named Garcia.

Janet finds Sonny, just as Garcia's men are closing in. They take refuge in a cave. Meanwhile, a search party has been organized and Tilford is made to go along and find the way.

CHAPTER XXI.

There were stampings and the scuffings of hoofs all about in the gray morning. Tilford looked scared. "I tell you," he protested nervously, "Miss Laurier insisted on it. The horse would take her to Holman's hangout. The guards were to pick up her trail and follow it. But it wasn't until after she'd left that the Mexican came in and said Garcia was wise and would be waiting to intercept her. I paid him a hundred dollars for a description of the way to Garcia's place. And I called you at once."

"The mischief's done now," said Thompson grimly. "He probably swooped down on her, shot the horse she was riding, and rode away leaving your gunmen to twiddle their thumbs! And that was last night!"

He swung into the saddle. Tilford had to be helped into his.

"Now try to find those landmarks!" snapped Thompson angrily. "You've got light now! If a white woman's fallen into Garcia's hand through you, by God I'll kill you myself!"

Tilford, shivering, rode to a post beside Thompson. There was no breaking of camp. The men simply had ridden until their horses could go no further in darkness, and had flung themselves down to rest until daylight. Now they rode on grimly to revenge Janet, since they were sure they no longer could save her.

Tilford had called the Circle plan to trap Sonny Holman, and added that a Mexican had just told him that Garcia had gotten wind of the plan and would be lying in wait to carry Janet off. He swore that he had been told the way to Garcia's stronghold, and would lead the riders to the spot if only Thompson could raise them. But —he had not dared!

To rescue Janet would mean Garcia or some of his gang captured alive, and Tilford's association with them revealed. It would mean the discovery of her pistol, with the firing pin filed away, which Tilford had given her. To rescue Janet alive would mean that Tilford's past crookedness would be revealed by those of Garcia's gang who surrendered whose surrenders would be accepted. But if Janet were found dead—why thre would be no quarter for Garcia or any of his men. The range riders would shoot them down mercilessly without giving them an opportunity to speak or pray. So it was necessary that aJnet should not be rescued alive lest she tell what she had learned, or Garcia or his followers tell what they knew.

And so Tilford had led the rescue party far from the actual hiding place of Garcia. He led them blindly about the hills until he was certain that Janet was dead. And now he oriented himself and led them straight for the spot where Garcia should be found. They would wipe out Garcia's gang. A set of enemies would be eliminated. Sonny Holman, doubtless, had been slaughtered by Garcia before this, Tilford would be again supreme, with nothing to fear, and no one to interfere with his thorough looting of the Aztec.

So the second cavalcade of horsemen rode away from their smoldering fires at daybreak.

But there had been three camps in the hills, and the third was the camp of Garcia's men, where ready saddled horses waited for sleepy men to drink their black coffee generously laced with aguardiente. They filed out of the narrow cleft that guarded their stronghold while the gray mists still held in the valley bottoms. A muffled, softly moving cavalcade, they filed out in the dimness and rode to where the first rays of the morning sunlight struck them. There they dismounted to wait, smoking and soaking in the sunlight warmth.

Garcia rested his bulk upon a stony seat and beamed. He had Sonny Holman and Janet Laurier practically his prisoners. They were cooped fast in Sonny's hangout. Indeed, perhaps they had been blasted out by now. One of the men left behind was a daring and a skillful man with dynamite. Garcia grunted comfortably as he recalled that the whole surplus stock of dynamite was in that man's saddlebags. But it was not important enough to be an annoyance. Garcia beamed as he recalled that Tilford had been thoroughly scared and reminded of his future position in the scheme of things—an underling, to be sneered at and beaten if he were insolent.

Such things were balm to Garcia's soul, but the fullest of contentment came to him only when he saw a long, thick cloud of dust arise at the edge of Moleville and creep slowly toward the hills.

It was the ore train of ten monster wagons, each pulled by many mules, moving at a snail's pace for the trail through the mountains and the railroad at Leftover. There was a fortune in the ore wagons, and it was coming to Garcia.

There was a fortune in the wagon train, indeed. The Aztec had a thick vein of quartz to work—six inches everywhere, and some places slightly more—and what quartz was gold bearing was also free milling ore. That meant that the quartz rock, crushed to a powder, would yield up its particles of precious metal as amalgam or even as gold dust with here and there a grain large enough to be felt with the fingers. Anybody could pound the best ore from the Aztec and get a part of the gold content, and so the ore was a highly marketable commodity. Garcia, in fact, had a primitive stamp in his stronghold and sometimes extracted the choicest ore for himself.

But besides the simple fact of ready convertibility into cash, the operation of the Aztec Mine made a still more profitable thing out of the ore as it came from the shaft mouth. For practical reasons, in order to take out a six-inch vein of quartz, it was necessary to make at least a four-foot tunnel, and where the ore wagons ran, a full six-foot height. That meant the hauling to the surface of a vast amount of worthless rock, and in practice the mixture of a good percentage of utterly useless stone with the quartz itself. To ship wasterock in any proportion twenty miles in ore wagons before a railroad could take the quartz ore to a modern smelter was wasteful. To sort out the rock, separators had been installed at the mine.

They crushed the bulk stone from the shaft and tunnels and whirled the mixture until the lighter rock could be cast aside. And it had even proved possible to carry the process to a point where it approximated a desert rat's dry panning so that only the high grade ore and a very little nonauriferous quartz remained to be carted by mule wagon to Leftover and the railroad. The stamps to crush the stone and the agitators that sifted off the worthless rock had been put in as econoiems for the mine owner, but they had been boons to Garcia. The ore that the wagon train carried was high grade ore, free milling ore, ore that could be sold readily across the border or somewhat wastefully powdered and washed by Garcia's own followers, with granular gold and gold dust as the product. And Garcia sat and beamingly watched something like forty thousand dollars worth of that ore marching at a snail's pace toward him through the alkali dust of the valley floor.

The crimson sun detached itself from the mountain tops and floated free in the sky, losing its ruddy color as it sailed upward. Its paling beams searched among canyons and valleys and began to warm rocks that were cold from the mountain night. And some of those still golden rays struck upon Sonny Holman and turned him to a figure of bronze as he rode out of the blocked canyon with Janet behind him and three led horses trailing behind their mounts.

Sonny rode stiffly. Broken ribs from a shattered timber door are not disabling injuries, but they can be agonizing ones when a had has to ride. "Those fellers we lef' tied up," he observed, "they sure talked free. An' they sure are scared of Garcia."

He winced a little as a sudden movement hurt him. Janet did not answer. Her face was clouded and bewildered, as if she had had news that bewildered and frightened her. Sonny swept the tumbled mass of hills and valleys all about him with his eyes.

"Smoke yonder." He nodded to where slender gray columns rose thinly to the sky. "Not Garcia's. Not your gang either, Janet."

"What are you going to do? Take me to them?"

"Tired of my company so soon?" he queried. "I rek'n not, Janet. I don't know who they are. Six fellers wouldn't make four fires to rest by. It might be somebody huntin' you, of course. Hm."

Advice to a Young Farmer

Build your house upon a rise,
Make friends with your arms and thighs.

Dig your spring below a pine,
Plant a morning-glory vine.

Have your bedroom face the dawn,
Have windows with no curtains on.

Though fields lie ready cleared a score,
Cut thickets down and make one more.

Sleep an hour in the sun,
Talk to your cows when milking's done.

By all that's good, be much alone,
Use no man's plow-horse but your own.

Plow as soon as hylas peep,
Mow before the crickets cheep.

Never hope to rise in life
Until you have brought home your wife.

Never trust your corn to grow
Before you have a son or so.

There is no rain to match a mother,
Sons and seeds help on each other.

Running An Old Sport

In the ancient great Greek athletic contest at Olympia the first event was always a foot race, called the stade race, according to Science Service. It was a dash the length of the stadium and was about twice the length of the 100-meter dash of the modern Olympics.

The Greeks regarded the stade race as the oldest contest of the Olympics, and Professor Walted W. Hyde of the University of Pennsylvania, who has studied ancient Greek athletics, found that the stade race was continued throughout the long series of Olympiads of ancient Greece. Three other races were usual at the national games of Greece, although many varieties of foot races were developed from time to time.

There was the diaulus, or double race, that requires the runners to go from one end of the stadium to the other and back again. This race corresponded roughly to the quarter mile of modern athletic contests.

The Greeks also had a long race, or dolichus, probably an outgrowth of the practice of sending messages by swift runners. This ranged in length from less than a mile to about three miles. Just as the marathon today is a test of endurance rather than fleetness, so the long races of the ancient Olympiads were for the demonstration of physical fitness rather than speed.

Amusing Anecdotes Of Famous People

I heard a good Kipling story recently about a fancy dress ball where every one had to wear a costume supposed to represent the title of a book by a well-known living author. One young lady turned up disguised as an automatic lighter—you know, one of those contraptions that never work when you haven't a match. Nobody could guess the answer, so finally, Kipling himself, being present, asked the young lady for a light—on the mystery.

"Why, Mr. Kipling," she purred. "You ought to know it, for it is one of your own books?"

Kipling gave it up.

"The Light That Failed," cried the girl triumphantly.

Peeps at celebrities from behind the "movie" camera—by Charles Peden, noted cameraman in "Newsreel Man":

"Calvin Coolidge is about the best movietone subject among public men in America. You can get him to do anything."

"President Hoover is very human and sincere, but he finds it difficult to put over a speech. He can't speak six words without looking at his notes."

* * * *

Among the kings:

"Most of the kings make good newsreel subjects. Alfonso, late of Spain, is the best."

"King George has made several voluntary interviews but his doctor forbids him to stand bareheaded for any length of time. This interferes with an effective personality shot."

* * * *

Some More. "King Victor Emmanuel, of Italy, insists that all film shots of him be made from a distance. It is said that he feels his short stature does not make him seem very imposing or regal on the screen."

"Newsreel men who photograph Emperor Hirohito, of Japan, must wear formal afternon dress with cutaway and striped trouses, and must back away bowing from his presence. Hirohito is the only man in the world who demands this."

Among European statesmen, Mussolini is the "best performer" declares Peden. "He can always be depended on to deliver a vigorous speech extemporaneously, and pictorially he is ideal."

Ramsay MacDonald is known to newsreel men particularly "as the first English cabinet minister to admit them to that Holy of Holies, the Cabinet Chamber at 10 Downing St."

"Lloyd George is a good subject, but he would rather tell the microphone about his ducks than about politics."

"President von Hindenburg, of Germany is a poor speaker, no doubt owing to his age, and is most at ease before the camera when surrounded by children."

* * * *

'Mahatma Gandhi is a tough old bird. He thinks he is a pretty hot subject, but he is testy and cranky to deal with."

"Thomas Edison was the only inventor who ever did a really good performance for the movies."

"The Prince of Wales is rather shy before the microphone, but he ranks as one of the most popular newsreel subjects."

"Editors concede that the late Sir Conan Doyle was the smoothest and pleasantest speaker they had ever heard on the screen, while lovable Sir James Barrie's voice was the poorest."

* * * *

"George Bernard Shaw was a hard man to win over" says Peden. "Ever averse to movies he resisted for a long time all solicitations to perform. It was only after he had witnessed a movietone of Mussolini that he agreed to pose and then he insisted upon directing the making of the subject. "I can do beter than he' was his characteristic observation concerning Il Duce's film. He made the subject at his cottage in Codicote, England, and after seeing his speaking likeness in the projection room later, he cried, 'Wonderful! You may release that to the entire world!' "

On his trip around the world — which he made in company with the young Marquis of Clydesale, Scotland's "Fighting Marquis" — Eddie Eagan, amateur heavyweight boxing champion, a gentleman, and a Rhodes scholar from Yale, was entertained at Delhi, India, by Field Marshal Sir William Birdwood.

"Know all about you Eagan," said the Field Marshal when Eddie was introduced to him. "My nephew wrote me."

* * * *

For the life of him, Eagan couldn't recall Sir William's nephew, and, embarrassed, stammered out some "clumsy generalism."

"You ought to remember him," said the Field Marshal. "You knocked him out in one round at Oxford."

"You must find it inconvenient in traveling to have to apologize for the people whom you have knocked out," added Lady Birdwood, who (chuckles Eagan in "Fighting for Fun"—a book worthy of its writer and his splendid record), "enjoyed my discomfiture immensely."

Ouida (Mlle. Louise de la Ramee), the Victorian novelist, whose "best sellers" used to shock our grandparents, was eccentric in her dress and habits, and often very disagreeable into the bargain. Her passion for dogs—she treated them better than she did her friends—is evidenced by the remarks she made upon hearing from a friend that a dog given her by the novelist had caused great trouble.

"What has happened?" asked Ouida.

"He has bitten one of my children severely."

Heavens! How you frightened me! I thought something had gone wrong with the dog."

"SALADA" TEA

"Fresh from the Gardens"

Among the Shan Hills of Burma

We were scrambling and pushing through the scrub jungle in search of the promised view. Branches of leafless trees and the twisted snaky stems of dry creepers sprawled across the track; our feet crunched sharply on the huge teak leaves, brown and brittle. But every here and there an early creeper splashed a trail of vivid green across the brown, and many of the forest trees were glossy with the dark shining green of new leaves. From the barren looking ground there sprang in sudden glory lovely peach-pink lilies on their tall juicy stalks. Mingled with the clear bird calls was the shrilling of cicadas from the lower hill slopes, and now and again came the oft-repeated confidential "tauk too" of the big spotted tree lizard peculiar to Burma.

Then, without previous warning of the change, we came suddenly on an outcrop of black rocks, great boulders flung down on the edge of the height and jutting out into space. Here, spread out in dreamy loveliness below us, and stretching far away into a dim and infinite distance, lay the wide wooded valley, touched here and there with blue cloud shadows, blurred and soft. On either side it sloped upward to a ridge of hills, while beyond again rose further hills, spur upon wooded spur, with hidden valleys between, till the haze of distance merged them into the sky.

The sun was bright and hot, drawing delicious scents from the semitropical jungle, but a cool wind, sharply sweet, blew strongly across the eastern hills. Far below us the curling mountain road wound itself snakelike round the curves of the hill, varying in color with the strata of the earth, now deeply red, now brown. Along it one or two climbing cars crawled slowly, like wandering beetles. A mile or two further up—whence we had come—it reached the pine belt and became stony and white, with a thick covering of the red needles on either side. There the whole air was fragrant with the scent of them, balmy and sweet, bringing with it memories of a cool and temperate land.

Boats of Cane

A traveller once told
How to an inland water slanting come
Slim boats of cane from rivers of Cathay,
With trembling mast so slight,
It seemed God made them with a hand of air
To sail upon His light;
And there
Soft they unload a jar of jade and gold
In the cold dawn when birds are dumb,
And then away,
And speak no word and seek no pay
Away they steal
And leave no ripple at the keel.

So the tale is writ;
And now, remembering you, I think of it.
—Geoffrey Scott, in "Poems."

The wireless novice's apparatus refused to work, and an expert neighbour was called in.

"Have you tried putting a sixpence under the valve setting?" he suggested.

The adjustment was made, and the novice listened again. For a moment there was silence. Then a voice was heard. "Aberdeen calling."

Canadians Walk More

Old as it is, the adage "It's an ill wind that blows nobody good" seems to hold true today, because they are not riding, people are walking, and that seems to be helping the boot and shoe industry. According to an industrial report there has been an increase of 10 per cent in the output of the leather footwear industry in Canada for the first quarter of the current year as compared with the corresponding period of last year.

During the first quarter of this year 4,390,813 pairs of boots and shoes were produced in Canada as against 3,991,810 pairs during the corresponding period of 1931.

The chief salesman of a certain firm had a very loud voice. One morning when the manager arrived at the office he heard a terrible noise coming from the salesman's office. "Who is that shouting?" asked the manager. "That's Mr. Hill talking to Edinburgh," replied the secretary. "Then tell him to use the telephone."

August 21. Lesson VIII—The Tent of Meeting—Exodus 33. 7-16. Golden Text—The Lord spake unto Moses face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend—Exodus 33: 11.

ANALYSIS.

I. THE TENT OF MEETING, vs. 7-11.
II. THE PRAYER OF MOSES, vs. 12, 13, 15, 16.
III. THE PROMISE OF GOD, v. 14.

I. THE TENT OF MEETING, vs. 7-11.

It should be remembered that the Israelites were leading a roving life in the desert. If they were to have a sanctuary where they could worship God it must necessarily be a portable one, which could be easily transferred from one place to another. They themselves were living in tents. So they made a specially beautiful tent, the tabernacle, to be a place for worshipping God. It was called the Tent of Meeting. It was a place where the Israelites could meet not merely with one another but, above all, with God. Here they would come with their perplexities and refer them in prayer to God. Further, the Tent of Meeting was set outside the camp of Israel. This separation between the holy tent and the common camp suggested to Israel that however near God comes to his people, he yet remains distinct, awful and holy, v. 7. When Moses, their leader, went out to the holy tent, the people of Israel ceased from all other occupations, stood at their tent-doors and watched him going on his holy mission. Then, as they thought of the great transactions which were taking place between God and Moses in the Tent of Meeting, the spirit of reverence came upon them, and they knelt down in solemn obeisance at their tent-doors, vs. 8, 10. When Moses came to the tent, God also came. His coming was marked by an unusual appearance. The pillar of cloud by which the Israelites were guided during the day descended from the sky, hovered above the tent and then settled before the door. In this way the tent was completely hidden from the view of the Israelites in the camp. In the Old Testament the appearance of God was frequently accompanied with strange signs in nature. Sometimes he showed himself in dazzling light. This suggested that his nature could be revealed to men. At other times, as here, he came with clouds of darkness. This suggested the mystery of God's being, the depths upon depths of the Godhead beyond all man's conceiving, vs. 9, 10. In this sacred tent God was wont to converse with Moses intimately, as on the basis of friendship. In treating Moses thus God was not showing favoritism. For God can commune only with those who have the spiritual capacity and inclination for such exalted converse. After these periods of fellowship with God, Moses would return to the camp with God's message to Israel, but Joshua, who was being trained as Moses' successor, remained permanently in charge of the tent, v. 11.

II. THE PRAYER OF MOSES, vs. 12, 13, 15, 16.

On one occasion Moses made bold to utter a complaint to God. Many a great saint of the Old Testament had this boldness with God. It should be noted, however, that they made the complaint to God himself, and not to others. So Moses took his complaint to God in prayer. He complained that while he was given the responsibility of leading the Israelites, yet he himself was in need of divine guidance. God had not yet indicated which of the promised angels was to guide Moses, cf. 32: 34 and 33: 2. It was on the ground of his intimacy with God that Moses could utter this complaint. For God had at one time assured him that he knew Moses' name, that is, he knew Moses intimately as an individual, or, as Driver says, "Like a king who knows the names of only such of his servants as he is on intimate terms with," v. 12. The prayer of Moses now became more wonderful, because more spiritual in its aim. He pleaded for a knowledge of God's ways of dealing with men. From a knowledge of God's ways he could rise to a knowledge of God's inward being. This knowledge of God was necessary if he were to lead God's people wisely, v. 13. Moses became importunate in his prayer. He declared that if God were not to go personally with his people they would prefer to remain where they were, in the neighborhood of God by Mount Sinai, v. 15. Finally, he prayed for a definite assurance that Israel had found acceptance with God. The one assurance, utterly satisfying, would be God's personal presence with them on the way. This would be a plain mark that Israel was distinguished from all other nations of the earth, v. 16.

III. THE PROMISE OF GOD, v. 14.

The prayer of Moses reads, in part, like a dialogue between God and Moses. So God interrupted Moses' prayer to assure him that he would go in person with the people of Israel, and that at the end of their desert wanderings he would give them rest in the assured possession of the land of Canaan.

Tracking Criminals With Plaster Casts

Frequently found at the scene of a crime are many bits of evidence, such as footprints, tire-prints, tool-marks, teeth-prints, wheel-tracks, and numerous other material clues.

All of these are perishable, and yet this very evidence will serve to identify the criminal in court, says Mr. J. Kaempfer, in Hygea (Chicago). We read:

The use of casts and molds has been of value in various fields of science to preserve in natural shape and size an object of importance. This process which at the present time is called "moulage" is extremely valuable in criminal investigation. Teeth-marks in an apple can be just as identifying as finger-prints.

If a door has been jimmied in the course of breaking into a building, there will remain along its edges markings produced by the tool employed. Casts of these marks can be made and compared with the suspected tool to determine its identity. Heretofore it was necessary either to saw out the part of the door involved or to remove the entire door for court demonstration. Alphonse Poller, an Austrian, is the creator of this method. His untimely death in 1930 constituted a terrific loss to the world of science.

Berlin to New York In Twelve Hours

By HEINRICH KLUTH,
In Die Woche, Berlin.

Four years ago one of the pioneers of rocket research, Max Valier, predicted that before long the enormous distances between the continents would be covered in a few hours with the rocket, the theoretic foundations of which were already laid at that time, while practical experiments had just begun. Valier believed that the six-hour mail service by rocket between Europe and America would become the slogan of the future.

Valier is dead, martyr of his idea. The experience of a rocket flight was denied to him by fate. But today thousands of research workers and practical engineers the world over study the problem of flying in the stratosphere with the same tenacity that knows no obstacles, the same hope and unabated optimism. The rocket is more alive than ever and is much nearer its realization than Valier imagined.

Just now, however, the ambitions of the rocket adepts are surpassed by the stratosphere plane. During the last few years much attention has been given to the stratosphere. Taking as a point of departure reliable meteorological calculations, scientists have reached the conclusion that far greater speeds than those of ordinary flying could be obtained in the stratosphere. In the experimental laboratories of universities and industrial plants the scientific principles of the stratosphere plane were worked out and tested. Thousands of motor builders now work on models suitable for great altitudes, trying to adapt the dimensions to the new task and increased demands of the rarefied atmosphere.

A preliminary solution of the problem appears to be contained in Dr. Asmus Hansen's graduation thesis, "Development Possibilities of the Stratosphere Motor." Hansen combines scientific knowledge with rich practical experience, acquired as a squadron leader on the front during the world war. His ideas have created a sensation and have so strongly impressed several of the leading German constructors that it was decided to place with the Junker works an order for an experimental plane built according to Hansen's principles.

Rumors that the construction of a new rocket plane was under way have been afloat for some time, although the secret was jealously guarded by the constructors. The new machine is not a rocket plane, however. Its builders do not strive to set up new speed and height records, the purpose being to use the plane for experimental purposes and scientific research. It is the first stage in the evolution of the stratosphere plane, which will be able to fly "above the weather." For the latest ascensions into the stratosphere have established beyond doubt that above the so-called stratosphere the atmosphere is constantly calm, and that there are no clouds and no disturbing atmospheric perturbations and winds, so that the usual risks connected with atmospheric conditions would be entirely eliminated in flying at great altitudes, it would permit constant and perfect navigation, day and night, sky and horizon being visible all the time, because of the scarce dispersion of light. Stars are visible in the stratosphere in daytime, which would permit a constant and crorect astronomic orientation and would make flying independent of the signaling organization maintained on land. Perhaps the day is not far away when passengers of the stratosphere service Europe to America, who feel time hanging on their hands, will spend the few hours of crossing in getting familiar with the position of the fixed stars. The serious drawback of the motor being blocked by ice would also be eliminated in the stratosphere, inasmuch as it contains no humidity.

The flier in the stratosphere, however, will have to face surprises and difficulties unknown in ordinary flying. Altitudes of ten to twelve miles mean extremely low temperatures, sometimes as low as 90 degrees or even lower. The air is so rare that its density does not amount to even one-tenth of the normal. These difficulties may be overcome, as was proved by Piccard, whose balloon, equipped with airtight cabin, ascended ten miles above the earth. Already, before Piccard's experiment took place, certain constuctors conceived the idea of equipping the stratosphere plane with an airtight and pressure-existing altitude chamber. The difficulties to be overcome by the stratosphere plane are of course far greater than those encountered by Piccard, for whom one outward grip was sufficient to pull the valve cord and make the balloon descend. In a plane the motor must be operated from inside the air tight cabin, and at the same time all requirements set up by Piccard for heating, airing, visibility, instrumentation, etc., must be complied with.

The altitude chamber built into the experimental stratosphere plane is absolutely airtight and gastight on all sides. There is room for two men only. It has double, gastight walls, with curved surfaces, secured against pressure above atmospheric from inside. The shape of the cabin is fitted to that of the human body, in order to insure perfect visibility. The window panes are double and protected against moisture from inside and ice from outside. The space between the window panes, which is isolated from the intervening space between the cabin walls, can be heated. To reduce the heat requirements of the cabin, the space between the walls is filled with a special gas, which is a very poor conductor of heat, and is maintained under a constant medium pressure, regulated by means of a special device. The steering levers are more or less the same used in ordinary planes, but the pilot is called upon to keep a watchful eye on a great number of scientific instruments, which are mounted on a board of the width of the whole cabin.

It was important to invent a method whereby the pilot would be able to look down on the earth, which is necessary for the determination of the direction when flying at such altitudes. After numerous experiments, it was decided to fix a special telescope between steering levers and pilot seat, so that it rests between the legs of the pilot.

Externally, the stratosphere plane is not very much different from other airplanes, but it is, of course, much larger than the ordinary single-motor machine. The span across the wings is 92 feet, and the length is 52½ feet. The carriage is unusually high, because it must support a propeller of twenty feet in diameter.

For the experimental flights the plane is equipped with an 850-h.p. Junker motor, operating a multiple-stage compressor. This compressor feeds to the motor a constant supply of air of a constant tension, thus eliminating the inconveniences of the rarefied atmosphere. The compression in the cylinders is just sufficient to insure a constant motor capacity in the stratosphere.

Although this plane represents the first practical step on the way toward the solution of the stratosphere problem, inasmuch as it will permit carrying out experiments on a large scale, it is far from being the ideal solution. Its importance lies, above all, in the possibility of testing such features as the compressor and the airtight cabin, without which flying in the stratosphere is absolutely impossible.

It will take some time before a suitable model for mail and passenger service is constructed. It is probable that the service will be limited to the transportation of urgent mail and valuables in the beginning. This would make it possible to acquire the experience without which the security of passengers could not be safeguarded.—Magazine Digest.

Irish Expert on Flax Studies Canadian Markets

Ottawa.—Continuing his survey of the flax-growing situation in Canada, Lewis Gray of the Northern Ireland delegation to the Imperial Conference, is now visiting Western Ontario. Mr. Gray has already been in contact with that section of the Dominion Experimental Farms Branch which deals with flax, and he is accompanied on his trip by R. J. Hutchinson, director of the fibre plants department.

Mr. Gray is observing Canadian methods in the pulling of flax, and arrangements have been made for him to deliver an address at Forest, Ont., to the flax-growers of that district.

Some time ago Mr. Gray declared that practically all of the flax used by the linen manufacturers of Northern Ireland was produced in Russia. These industrialists, however, were quite prepared to transfer this business to Canada, provided that sufficient volume and suitable quality of flax was assured from this country.

Sowing Wheat

And now the sun bore down on the prairie the whole livelong day. Bright and quivering in the forenoon, he swam through endless seas of blue; across the hazy afternoon he beamed caressingly; toward evening he opened wide his countenance; then the flood of light grew refulgent, only to die in splendour against a mysterious night which also had life.

As the fine weather continued, Per Hansa became more restless, but it only seemed to fill him with greater joy. Suddenly he would be up by the field. Wasn't it dry enough yet? . . He ought to have had the seeding all done by now; it was high time to begin breaking new ground.

On the 14th of April, the Sommermaaladag of his old fatherland, Per Hansa began seeding the wheat. Three times that forenoon he had been out to test the ground; the last time he made his great decision: Now we will start!

No sooner had he finished the noon meal than he rushed out, grabbed the seed bag that he had made for this occasion, and carried two sacks of seed up to that portion of the field where the ground was driest. He had paced off the whole field into one-acre lots, and marked each plot. . . .

Again Per Hansa thrust his hand into the bag and his fingers closed on the grain. He felt profoundly that the greatest moment of his life had come. Now he was about to sow wheat on his own ground! His hand tightened in the bag; he was on the point of lifting it out, when something queer happened—the kernels were running out between his fingers! He gave another grab, closing his hand still tighter; again the yellow kernels slipped through his fingers like squirming eels. Then Per Hansa threw back his head and laughed. These fellows aren't very anxious to go into the ground after riches for me! . . .

And now the wheat rained down in yellow semicircles from Per Hansa's hand; as the seed fell, the warm rays of the sun struck full across it, and seemed to wrap it in golden light.—O. E. Rolvaag, in "Giants in the Earth."

Twelve Hours to New York

If the claims of a German inventor can be substantiated, it may be possible before long to fly from London to New York across 3,000 miles of the Atlantic in about twelve hours. The new Junkers plane, upon which engineers have been at work for more than two years, is designed to have a speed of between 300 and 400 miles an hour when six miles above the surface of the earth.

One great problem facing aircraft designers is that the air grows rapidly rarer and thinner for every hundred feet above the surface. In a rare atmosphere it is difficult to obtain high speeds since the propeller has so little grip. That is why in the Schneider Trophy races pilots always fly low.

So confident are the Germans that they have solved this and other problems of great speed at high altitudes that Captain Hamm has already gone to the Berlin works to prepare for a flight from Berlin to New York, which he hopes to accomplish in a little more than twelve hours. At heights such as six miles the air is too rare to support life, and the pilot sits in a hermetically-sealed compartment supplied with oxygen. So great, too, is the cold that his clothes and even the knobs and levers of the machine are warmed by electricity.

Honest John Spense

A colored man, back in the 1870's who lived on the Fourth concession, north of Streetsville, when he could not get work even at a York shilling a day, went among the few settlers with a basket offering to sell spools, thimbles, matches, buttons, combs etc. When the emigrant fever broke out some called it the collera. It was raging in this section. Many who were not properly cared for died, and had to be buried immediately, so that John Spense's trade ended. One fall a neighbor asked him, if he had any provision made for winter. He said, little or nothing. Just a few potatoes and some sand in a bag, so that when he became cold he keep warm in that way. And with regard to making the winter shorter, he had a note coming due in the early early spring to pay the grocer..

TORONTO TP. COUNCIL

At a regular meeting of Toronto Township Council on Saturday, Reeve L. H. Pallett expressed the opinion that the construction of the Middle Road provincial highway is not being conducted in a business-like manner.

Albert Crooks, Lakeview, asked the reeve what his stand would be on the Middle Road extension at the next sitting of county council, in November. Reeve Pallett replied: "I don't know, but I will not be a party to paying 35 cents an hour for shovelling sand. I don't think that the job is being handled in a business-like manner. It is costing five times as much as it should. I have, on a trip over the road under construction, seen more trucks and teams on the job than men."

Toronto Township, said Mr. Pallett, is suffering from the 35 cents wage paid the men on the Middle Road job. The township pays 25 cents an hour for weed cutting and the men employed by the township on the whole are well satisfied, but according to the reeve, applicants for relief work will turn down township work to gain the extra ten cents an hour on the provincial job.

The reeve announced that the council will have to consider the back-to-the-land proposition of the Provincial Government at an early sitting. Under the terms of the agreement, he said, the Dominion and Provincial Givernments pay one-third of the cost of establishing unemployed families on farms, the municipality from which the families are taken supplying the remaining third of the cost. Mr. Pallett said that, in his estimation, the cost to Toronto Township for each family so established would be from $100 to $200. Mr. Pallett did not express himself on the matter, but R. S. Whaley, deputy reeve, announced that he would be definitely against the idea.

The preliminary tax sale of the township was held Saturday afternoon. Out of a list of nearly eighty properties not one was assumed, buyers evidently waiting to pick up bargains at the adjourned sale on August 27. At the preliminary sale Saturday $4,000 were credited on the properties in arrears. The entire list comprised some $19,000 of arrears. The sale was conducted by William Shook, William Courtney, treasurer, and G. B. Jackson, township solicitor.

A baptismal service somewhat unique in character, took place on Sunday, August 7th, in Erindale United Church, the occasion marking the christening of Cameron Spencer Pope, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Leonard C. Pope, of Streetsville. The service was conducted by the pastor, Rev. R. A. Spencer, grandfather of the young child, assisted by Rev. E. A. Tonkin, of Port Perry, great grandfather.

The fact that Rev. Mr. Tonkin is nearing his 90th year and that four generations took part in the service made it of somewhat unusual interest.

'Forgetting'

What a blessed thing it is that we can forget. To-day's troubles look large, but a week hence they will be forgotten and buried out of sight, says one writer. If you would keep a book and daily put down the things that worry you and see what becomes of them it would be a bene fit to you. You allow a thing to annoy you just as you allow a fly to settle on you and annoy you, and you lose your temper, or rather get it, for men, when they are surcharged with temper, are said to have lost it —and you justify yourself by being thrown off your balance by causes that you do not trace out. If you would see what it was that threw you off your balance before breakfast and put it down in a little book and follow it up and see what became of it, you would see what a fool you were in the matter.

The art of forgetting is a blessed art and the art of overlooking, quite as important. If we would take time to write down the origin and outcome of some of our troubles it would make us so ashamed of the fuss we made of them that we would be glad to drop such things and forget them.

The Wards held their 7th annual picnic at Peel Park, Streetsville, on Aug. 7th. Relations were present from Weston, Mt. Dennis, Toronto, Islington, Cooksville, Eldorado, Churchville, Tottenham, and Streetsville. About forty guests arrived and had a very enjoyable time. They thought the Park was just a grand place. There might have been more present had the weather been more favorable.

We are in receipt of a post card dated Coblenz, Germany, July 25 written by our old friend, Mr. J. H. Beamish, Principal of King George School, Toronto, who is on a trip through Europe. He left Brussells July 24 for Cologne, and went by boat up the Rhine. He says words fail to adequately describe the picturesqueness of the river. He visited Belfast, Dublin, Killarney, Bantry Cork, and Queenston, then crossed over to London, Dover, Ostend, and Brussells. He will spend three days in Germany, Switzerland 3, Italy 12, France 3, then home by the S.S. Montrose, from Charbourg on Aug. 19th, Montreal 27th.

A Different Matter

Saturday night's game against the Islington "Invincibles" was a different matter altogether. The Thistles seemed to be able to score just as often as they pleased. It was a very-much "one-sided" affair. Patterson was the only Islington man to score. He got his chance when Wheeler dribbled the ball down the east side of the field.

Harry Hill, Bailey and Clipperton each scored three goals, Nixon scored one. The Islington goalie was terrible, and the rest of the team could not score in a football net. (Neither can the S.C.U.) Penalties seem to be growng fewer each game, but Warr doesn't let anything go. Injuries are also fewer, and of a minor nature.

This Thistles vs. Islington Farce showed that the Islington boys have not improved as much as was rumored.

Pt. Credit Ties Thisltes 5-5

Port Credit lacrosse team journeyed to Streetsville on Aug. 3rd, with the avowed intention of sitting on the Thistles. The best they could manage was a 5-5 tie. They would have had to be satisfied with a score of 4-5 if it had not been for "Stogies" little gift just after the curtain rose.

The Streetsville boys couldn't get going in the first act and Port Credit had two goals to their credit when the whistle blew to end the primary session.

In the second period "Nix" stepped in and scored two in rapid succession. Harry Hill popped one in to give the Thistles a one-goal lead at the end of half-time.

The Credit team scored one in the third to make it "even stephen." Clipperton scored for Thistles but Port Credit scored again to tie the score.

In the last period Verne made an attempt to redeem himself for his early error. All would have been well for Thistles if it had not been for a snappy move on the part of "Sammy". He sent a sizzling hot one in where Haddon could not stop it. On account of darkness, no overtime was played. The game will be played off at Streetsville.

Scout Notes

Scouts Alert

Streetsville First Troop of Boy Scouts will leave for camp on Tuesday of next week. Doctor Montemurro and the boys have selected a beautiful camp-site at "Hill Crest View." This fine park is situated on the Fifth Line, near Huttonville. There is an abundance of pure, fresh air, and also a fine swimming hole, where the Fifth line crosses the Credit River. The property is being used with the kind permission of Percy Laidlaw, of Huttonville.

In order to cut down on general expenses and so decrease the necessary amount of individual fees, the local business men are being asked for contributions of food, fruit and provisions, etc. A list of all contributions will be published at a later date. If you have something to offer, tell one of the boys.

Scouts please take notice that a meeting will be held this evening, (Thursday), at the home of Scout Master. Everybody come and don't forget your papers. Uniforms will not be worn at this meeting.

Parts of an ancient friction fire making set were recently found by an American Scout in a cave on the Columbia River, Washington. The cedar spindle showed marks of a crude flint knife. Canadian Scouts have revived the old Indian fire making method of "rubbing sticks", and evening camp fires frequently are lit in this fashion.

Mother Forced to Leave Fatherless Children

Annette looks at you gratefully as you pause at her bedside to admire her needle work. So expert has she become that she feels sure a table runner she has made will win a prize at the fair back home, "Back home"—words that bring tears as she tells you how she longs to be there to look after her family once more.

Annette's husband died of tuberculosis, leaving her to care for the children as best she could.

It was not long, however, before she too was claimed by this disease, when she was sent to the Toronto Hospital for Consumptives with no great prospect of recovery. Here, the careful regimen, the quiet, the fresh air and patient nursing are greatly helping Annette to climb the steep road back to health.

Such work can only be continued with the aid of many generous friends. Will you please send a gift to Mr. A. E. Ames, 223 College St., Toronto.

WOLFE'S PATH TO GLORY

Lovers' Trysting Place Said to Have Been Responsible for Success of British in Reaching Heights.

On the dusty shelves of a Toronto second-hand book store recently the writer found a faded, loose-backed volume, "Tales of the St. Lawrence," published in Montreal 60 years ago. In one of the yarns of the collection, entitled "A Country Lost for Love," the striking claim was made that Wolfe's success at Quebec was due to the revelation of a suitable path up the Heights at the Foulon, now known as Wolfe's Cove, by Captain Stobo, who, as a lightly restricted hostage of war, some time before had been the hero of a romantic affair of the heart, the heroine of which is said to have been the wife of one of the officers of the French garrison. This precarious path to the river, the story says, was their rendezvous.

Robert Stobo, it was learned from a book of memoirs, was born in Glasgow in 1727. In early youth he emigrated to Virginia where he achieved some success as a merchant. Sterner business took him, in 1745, to the territory of Ohio, where the French troops from New France were giving much trouble. He was captain in the Virginia Volunteers, a body of "self willed and ungovernable men," under the command of one George Washington, then an ardent soldier of King George III. and was present at that regrettable encounter — never satisfactorily explained—when the French officer, M. de Jumonville, under cover of a flag of truce with some attendants, fell beneath a volley from Washington's men. Shortly after this tragedy the colonist force of about 500 men was with its commander, captured by the French at Fort Necessity. A truce being arranged by the two forces, articles were signed by Washington, the terms, among others, giving to his opponent two hostages in guarantee of good faith. Stobo was one of the pair selected. He was taken first to Fort Du Quesne, site of the city of Pittsburg, and afterwards to Quebec.

Attractive in appearance and personality, Stobo seems to have made many friends among the residents of Quebec, and on giving his parole enjoyed freedom enough to make a conquest of one of the fairest ladies of the ancient capital. All went merrily for both of them until the defeat of the British forces under Braddock. Among the papers of the unfortunate General were found letters, maps and charts describing certain French positions and strongholds, which Captain Stobo had sent to him while he was detained at Fort Du Quesne. Arrest, imprisonment and sentence of death as a spy followed this revelation in quick order. But official confirmation of the death penalty had to be received from France and in the meantime, with the aid of his lady love, Stobo escaped into the woods. He was recaptured, however, the offer of a reward of 6,000 livres for this event putting a large percentage of the Quebec population on his trail. A second attempt, which he and several other Britishers contrived with infinite patience, succeeded.

Silently paddling a canoe by night, hiding in the woods by day, they managed to elude their pursuers and every day increased their confidence and courage. A surprise attack made them masters of a wheat-laden shallop. From this, later, they boarded and captured a sloop. This craft, after a one-sided argument, was exchanged for a schooner with a cargo of furs. They kept the cargo. In 88 days after their escape they sailed into Louisbourg and learned that somewhere in the gulf the formidable fleet of Admirable Saunders had sailed by on the way to Quebec. Schooner and cargo sold, the spoil divided, Robert Stobo embarked on the first vessel for Quebec, and his knowledge of the city on more than one occasion was of priceless value to his fellow-countrymen. And, if his chronicle is dependable, it was Robert Stobo who pointed out that lovers' trail of romance that become Wolfe's path to glory on the Heights of Abraham. — From the Toronto Telegram.

HORSE IS STILL KING.

Ponies Had to Carry Tractors as Well as Explorers.

Members of the Central Asian caterpillar tractor expedition who set out to demonstrate to the world that they could traverse the entire Asian continent from Beirut to Peiping by tractors and automobiles, found to their dismay that the horse is still the king of travel in the Himalayas.

Not only did the expedition's 250 sure-footed ponies carry the 30 members of the party safely over the roof of the world to Astor, in Kashmir, through all manner of defiles, ravines and tortuous mountain passes, the faithful animals actually carried the tractors, too.

Members of the expedition were obliged four times completely to dismantle their tractors and cars because of the difficult character of the roads. The dissembled parts of the machines were then loaded on the ponies.

CANADIAN PLATINUM.

The opening of the Acton refinery for precious metals in England has called attention to the part now being played by Canada in world-wide markets for some of the rarer metals. This refinery, which is owned by the Mond Nickel Company, will draw its raw materials chiefly from the mines at Sudbury. A rich residue of platinum metals is recovered at the Sudbury and Port Colborne plants of the big company, and these will be refined at the new plant at Acton.

Big Surprise For T. A. Rogers

Thursday, Aug. 4th, was Mr. T A. Rogers birthday and that evening his two sons, and their wives, decided to give Dad a surprise. David decoyed him away to the farm and kept him there until about 8 30 p.m. On returning home and seeing so many cars parked around the house and in the entrance to Peel Park and on meeting relatives from Toronto, Dundas and surrounding country and on being congratulated by each one he, for the first time, saw that he was tricked.

After the usual chat and fuss was over with the card tables were set up and the game progressed until about 11 o'clock when the four prizes were awarded. Ladies, Mrs. Pinney, Toronto, Mrs. W. Bentley, Sheridan. Men, Mr. Campbell, Port Credit, Mr. Pinney, Toronto.

A continuous table was set with the folding doors open through the three rooms and loaded with eatables and flowers and birthday cake with 70 candles on it. After Mr. Rogers had blown out the lights and had stuck the knife into it, the cake was taken away. Then came the armfuls of presents to be unwrapped. After Mr Rogers had unwrapped the numerous parcels and Lorna had read the many good wishes they contained, Mr Rogers thanked those present for coming such long distances to bring them so many costly expressions of their kindness; He also spoke of the many bosom friends who had passed to the beyond; Albert Rogers filled the part of chairman, when many kind wishes were expressed. Next, the tables were removed and dancing commenced with Mr. William Rogers at the fiddle. Dancing finished, Mr. and Mrs. Rogers were placed in the centre of the room with the friends in a circle singing For he's a Jolly Good Fellow, and finishing with God Save the King.

The Conference

The Empire expects an immense improvement of conditions to come from this Conference. We shall see, in a few weeks, but more surely still in a few months, how far our hopes are going to be satisfied. For our part, we hope with everybody else that the dawn of a new prosperity is breaking over Canada. — La Tribune, Sherbrooke (Lib.)

Lure of Unearned Profit

Speculation cannot be sharply defined. The desire for profit enters into all commerce, and no one may say at what point honestly earned profit eliminates the implication of gambling. It is the desire for unearned profit that lures the speculator into rashness and makes all gambling demoralizing. The odds against winning are a hundred to one—often much more. For one man who gains a fortune by speculation a thousand reach comfortable affluence by slow but sure methods.—Brantford Expositor.

The Ancient Grudge

There isn't a battlefield in all of Europe not billowed by English and Irish graves. But though they have marched and fought and died together on a thousand fields, and their dust will forever mingle, the Irish and the English at home refuse to be friends. Knowing in their heart of hearts that their common interests lie in co-operation, they continue their bitter, futile memories of a dead past, continue to let suspicion and exaggerated nationalism and racial arrogance and pride dominate their relations. This Ottawa Conference cannot interfere. But is it too much to hope that the example which this Conference is giving of the possibilities and the value of right co-operation will contribute something to a more reasonable and better feeling between Englishmen and Irishmen?—Ottawa Journal

Agriculture's Prior Claim

The problem for the Government to decide is whether to allow the great industry of agriculture and the other primary industries of the country to remain in the doldrums for lack of a market or to permit a crushing blow to be dealt to those secondary industries which can not exist without high protection. It is a difficult choice. For fifty years under the National Policy, Canada has fostered her secondary industries. But that was in the days when her primary industries had a chance at the world's markets. There are no open doors. It may be necessary, under the circumstances, to make a change. The primary industries, in a country of primary production like Canada, cannot be allowed to die. If they go, the secondary industries will die too. There will be no market for their goods.—Vancouver Province.

Debts and Armament

It is totally erroneous to suppose that if debts and reparations were cancelled, British or French armaments, to name no others, would be virtually subsidized by the American taxpayer. Nothing of the kind could happen. Absolutely nothing. Germany — and for our part we are very far from objecting to it—would be the sole financial beneficiary. Britain and France would lose somewhat on balance. They would not have more means but less to pay for armaments. In the circumstances, the American taxpayers might possibly find themselves, to their astonishment, subsidizing the restoration of the Hohenzollerns, but could not, in any circumstances, pay a cent towards British defence or French security. If this truth were more widely known across the ocean, the world's moral air would be cleared.—London Observer.

Recapture of Cheese Market

Ontario is to have its own five-year plan. It was announced in Toronto by Mr. T. L. Kennedy, Ontario's Minister of Agriculture, and is concerned with the reorganization of the dairy industry of the province with a view to again capturing the British cheese market. As far as this eastern section of Ontario is concerned no more welcome statement has come out of Toronto in years. The prosperity of Eastern Ontario and Western Quebec has largely been built up around the dairy industry, with cheese the most important factor. This has been true of the cities and towns just as much as of the farming community, for no urban community can flourish in the midst of impoverished farms. As far as cheese is concerned the apex of our dairy prosperity was reached some 20 years ago, but since then there has been steady decline, until at present the predominant position held formerly by Ontario cheese in the British market has disappeared.—The Ottawa Journal.

Pure Milk Supply

Readers of the Montreal Star are so familiar with the long, arduous, and persistent fight for pure milk in the columns of this paper that it will come in the nature of a genuine surprise to them to learn that conditions in the City of London, the world's metropolis, are far less satisfactory than in Montreal, so far as milk is concerned. A report just to hand, presented at the Mansion House by the People's League of Health, recommends that with the exception of "certified" and "grade A" milk, all milk supplied to the public ought to be submitted to pasteurization before being sold. Many firms already do this, but it is not compulsory, and there are a large number who do not. Canadians have a special interest in the matter, since Lord Dawson of Penn advanced at the meeting as a powerful argument in favor of compulsory pasteurization the fact that bovine tuberculosis has been stamped out by this means.—Montreal Star.

Makes a Plea For 20-Minute Sermons

One of the problems of the churches these days is lack of attendance at the Sunday evening service. Often the night congregation is less than half the "full house" of the morning service. Many factors, no doubt, contribute to this undesirable lack of interest. Many ministers apparently have the idea that it is necessary to preach half an hour or even forty minutes. The result is a good deal of uninteresting and unnecessary repetition.. Anyone who does much public speaking of any kind has a tendency to be led into verbosity. For instance, a minister often suffers from a scarcity of words. Gradually he learns to elaborate a simple idea very skillfully. In the end he may become so proficient in enlarging upon his theme as to be carried far beyond the requirement of the occasion. In our humble opinion the speaker in twenty minutes gets the best hearing and usually has said something. — St. Marys Journal-Argus.

THE EMPIRE

Britain's Progress

Thanks to her abandonment of the gold standard, Great Britain's competitive power has been greatly increased, and she is securing a larger percentage of world trade than at any time since the bursting of the post-war boom. But there is now so much less trade for everybody that Great Britain necessarily suffers. All that can be said is that things would have been far worse if she had stayed on gold, and that she is immensely better off than most other countries, and in an excellent position to take advantage of any improvement. The outstanding economic fact of the present day is the failure of the gold standard system to grapple with the terrible fall in prices. Our London financial correspondent mentions to-day that prices in Great Britain are the same as last September, whereas gold prices have fallen 1 per cent. lower. Thus the sterling system in its effect on prices is more stable than gold.—Cape Argus.

Bermuda and Canada

Vegetable growers of Bermuda and members of the Trade Development Board of that colony are very anxious that additional shipping facilities should be provided to enable producers to send larger quantities of their tomatoes, potatoes, onions, celery, and other articles, to the Maritime Provinces of the Dominion. Time was, and not so long ago either, when Bermuda's dependence for the sale of her vegetables was centred on the United States. Twelve years or so ago, Bermuda, like Jamaica, was very chary about entering into a reciprocal trade agreement with the Dominion Government. But Canada, out of a spirit of generosity, held out the olive branch to these colonies, by admitting some of their products into her market under preferential rates even when she got nothing in return from Bermuda and Jamaica. The outlook of these colonies, in conjunction with every other unit in the British Caribbean zone, has changed since that period. Their vision is Canadawards in the marketing of a fair proportion of their crop. — Kingston (Jamaica) Gleaner.

Protection and Trade

Protection carried to the extent of killing trade is not beneficial even to the industries it professes to protect, because their productive scope is limited by the purchasing power of the people at large and if trade in general is unable to create wealth the protected industries languish.

OTHER OPINIONS

Trade With Russia

Many Americans have noted with great disappointment the heavy decline in our trade with Russia in spite of its great need of many American products and the diversion of that trade to England and Germany. Moreover, they are convinced that the present Russian Government is going to last whether recognized or not, and that in persisting in placing obstacles in the way of Russo-American trade it is this country which is losing out, especially at the present critical time. With the continued decline of business and the increasing number of Americans who believe that Russia, dangerous or not, will be more dangerous by becoming a customer, it is not unlikely that continued pressure will finally disclose some path pointing toward recognition.—Baltimore Sun.

Adversity

A general storekeeper and his wife out in a small Iowan community wrote off $75,000 worth of debts from their books the other day—and told their debtors to forget it. At about the same time a chauffeur in New York, who owed two brothers $50, was lured by them into a dentist's chair, where all his bridgework was taken from him, and, after he had been robbed of all his clothes except his trousers, was left to shift for himself as best he could. Adversity brings out the best and the worst in human nature. The duty of brother-keeping is put to a severe test. The whole country is in the same boat. Those who exact their pound of flesh rock it. Those who live by letting and helping others to live, are casting gread upon the troubled waters that surround it.—Detroit Free Press.

Fruit Crops Plentiful Throughout Dominion

Ottawa.—Considerable variation in the production and prospects for fruit crops throughout the Dominion was reported recently in a review issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

In general the production in the Maritime provinces will be lower than a year ago, the cool spring with local frosts reducing the possibilities of harvest. In Quebec production will be slightly lower, while in Ontario the outlook varies. Raspberry and strawberry production was less than last year and a greatly reduced apple crop compared with 1931 is in prospect, says the bureau.

Cherries, peaches, pears and grapes, on the other hand, probably will yield better than last year in Ontario.

The season has been favorable in British Columbia, and apples and cherries will probably yield better than a year ago.

Ossuary Holding Bones Of 320,000 French Dead

Verdun, France, Aug. 7.—The great Ossuary of Douaumont, a necropolis holding the bones of some 320,000 French war dead, was inaugurated by President Albert Lebrun to-day as "testimony to a great human folly."

"Never in any time did any country on earth drink so much blood," the President, speaking in the presence of Marshal Petain and Marshal Franchet D'Esperey, said in reference to the war dead.

A conscience void of offence before God and man is an inheritance of eternity.—Daniel Webster.

New Ship Canal Officially Opened By Governor-General of Canada

Lever's Turning Signalizes Welland Waterway Ready for World Trade

Thorold, Aug. 6.—High on the top of the control house of the greatest flight of marine locks in the world, Canada's Governor-General to-day dedicated in two brief sentences Canada's contribution to the trade and commerce of the world.

Attended by representatives of all the nations of the British Commonwealth, each of which sent its message of congratulation and praise to a sister Dominion, His Excellency climaxed 19 years of engineering effort when he turned the little lever which galvanized into action the mechanism of the new Welland ship canal, and said:

"It is a privilege to dedicate this canal to the trade of the world.

"I hereby declare the Welland ship canal open to the commerce of the world."

In front of him, to the south, rose the gentle slopes of the Niagara Peninsula over which Canadian skill and labor had triumphed. To the north the line of the canal fell away into a thin line which faded into the mauve haze of Lake Ontario, dotted with plumes of steamers' smoke and etched with the faint skyline of Toronto. To the west lay the fruitlands of Ontario; to the east the canyon of the Niagara River and the farmlands of New York.

Spectators Line Banks

Directly below the steep canal banks were lined by thousands of spectators to whom His Excellency had been introduced by Hon. Dr. R. J. Manion, Minister of Railways and Canals. They looked like flowery tributes clinging to a monument molded by a giant's fingers; the heat of the blazing sun had not dispilled the enthusiasm behind the cheers which had met each address carried to them by the loud-speakers.

And these addresses had been the voice of the British Empire rejoicing with Canada in a great advancement in world relations.

Up the canal the blunt prow of the Lemoyne, red and white of the Canada Steamships' fleet, slipped into view shortly before noon. She had passed through cheering rows of spectators as she majestically emerged from the giant No. 8 lock at Port Colborne—largest and longest lock in the world—and dropped slowly to Thorold. She lay in readiness for her part in the ceremonies. She appeared gargantuan, even heavily laden, as she reared her red nose and white superstructure over the gates.

Beneath her the gates dropped she to the next water level. The three twin-flight locks are the most advanced type of marine engineering skill; they are the only example of their kind in the world. They each permit the passage at the same time of one ship on the upward trip and one on a downward trip.

In Descending Row

Above Thorold the canal narrows to the lock entrances. Here the flight—taking its name from the similarity to a flight of steps—begins. The locks lie in a descending row to the northwards. They are twin because they lie in pairs; two ships side by side pass each other, one ascending, the other descending. Between them lies a vast concrete island upon which is the lock mechanism. There are three pairs of such locks, one immediately abutting the other. A ship passes directly from one lock to the other.

Upon the island in the centre of these flights, the ceremonies were held. The locks, 880 feet long and capable of accommodating ships 820 feet long have gates at each end. These gates are 130 feet high; the leaf of each gate weighs 454 tons. The total gate and fixed mechanism weight is 23,000 tons. Each leaf contains 76,000 rivets. Yet a man, when the canal is empty and not bearing its weight of water, could swing one of the gates shut, so carefully are they balanced on their sills.

At the lower end of the lock is the control house, the operation of the gates being performed from the second floor, which is walled in glass to permit full visibility of the canal section. On the top of this house was erected a wooden platform to-day covered with an awning and decked with bunting and banners. Into it had been wired a special control lever.

9 Are Drowned Boy Rescues 3

Ontario Resorts Take Toll—Three Killed in Traffic

A sick boy's gallant rescue of three drowning hysterical women at Port Stanley while their escort on a launch trip sank to his death, and the drowning of a father with the son whom he tried to rescue, featured a week-end of tragedies at Ontario lakeside resorts in which nine persons lost their lives.

Highway and street accidents took a further toll of three, raising the list of violent deaths to 12, exclusive of suicides.

Frank Varley, a 16-year-old St. Thomas boy who was recuperating from a week's illness, was the hero of the Port Stanley tragedy in which Clifford Honsinger of St. Thomas was drowned. Aided by a friend in a rowboat, young Varley saved three young women whom Honsinger had been taking on a motorboat which upset.

Trout Lake, near North Bay, was the scene of the double drowning which cost the lives of William Johnston, 36, and his son Samuel, when the father dashed, fully clothed, into the water to die with his struggling son.

St. Thomas, Aug. 7.—Exhausted after enabling three young women to cling to an overturned motorboat at Port Stanley late Sunday afternoon, Clifford B. Honsinger, son of B. F. Honsinger, tobacconist and cigar manufacturer of this city, sank to his death as Frank Varley, a 16-year-old boy of St. Thomas, was swimming to his rescue.

The three young women were rescued by young Varley.

Honsinger was seated at the rear of the boat, operating the motor, when it capsized. The three young women, Mrs. June McIntyre, Miss Grace Taylor and Miss Marion Ward, all of this city, were toward the bow.

Crowds Witness Niagara Suicide

Toronto Man Makes Effort to Save Hamiltonian

Niagara Falls, Ont., Aug. 7.—James Ruben, 60, of East Avenue North, Hamilton, committed suicide Saturday night in full view of hundreds of tourists, by walking into the Horseshoe Falls near Table Rock.

A gallant attempt at rescue by Frank Stewart, 791 Manning Avenue, Toronto, proved unavailing, and Stewart went out so far that he himself was in danger of losing his life. He desisted from his attempt to dissuade Ruben from suicine only when the water was above his own knees and the current was almost too strong for him to stand.

Careful search by Constable Walker and the staff of the scenic tunnel on the rocks below the Horseshoe Falls failed to reveal the body, and it is believed to have been drawn itno the great pool immediately below the Horseshoe.

Mr. Reuben walked behind the railing, and was well out when he was noticed. Stewart jumped over the railing and went out into the current, calling to Ruben to return. He was himself getting into difficulties when he had to stop. Ruben paused for a moment, then walked steadfastly into the deep water and was swept over the crest.

Mr. and Mrs. Ruben came here for the week-end, and went for a walk around the falls. They became separated in the crowd, and Mrs Ruben did not see her husband's suicide. On being notified she collapsed..

The suicide took place when the nightly crowd was gathering for the illumination, and there were hundreds at the scene, drawn there by the shouts of those who were watching the suicide and the man attempting to prevent it.

Could Not Turn Her Head

Her Body Had to Turn With it

Tortured By Muscular Rheumatism

An ounce of help is worth a ton of pity. It was to this woman. Many friends pitied her. But one gave her a word of advice. After that word of advice she was no longer an object of pity.

She writes:—"I suffered with muscular rheumatism in the neck—it was torture. I spent quite a large sum of money in trying certain treatments and medicines, but could get no relief. I could not turn my head round when I wanted to—I had to turn my body as well. My friends all pitied me. Then one advised me to try Kruschen Salts, which I did. And in six months I was a different woman. Now if I feel the least twinge of rheumatism, I take a dose of wonderful Kruschen Salts, and it vanishes. I shall never fail to recommend Kruschen after what I have suffered."—Mrs. S.

Kruschen is a powerful solvent of the torturing crystals of uric acid. It swiftly dulls their sharp edges, then flushes them out of the system. Your pains ease; swellings subside, knotted joints become loose. Afterwards, the "little daily dose" of Kruschen so stimulates the liver and kidneys that regular and complete elimination is ensured. Your inside is kept clean. Mischievous uric acid never gets the chance to accumulate again.

Kruschen Salts is obtainable at all Drug Stores at 45c, and 75c per bottle.

Owl Laffs

The day is coming when the fellow who has horse sense will be considered terribly old-fashioned.

The average man who attends the movies cannot understand why the husbands of the actresses should desire to be divorced from them.

Changing Conditions

A girl may love you from the bottom of her heart, but there's always room for some other guy at the top.

Sunday-School Teacher — "William, can you tell me what we must do before we can expect forgiveness of sin?"

William—"Yes sir. We must sin."

Dumb—"Funny, how Fred is so lucky at cards and then loses his winnings at the race tracks."

Notsodumb—"Not so funny! They won't let him shuffle the horses."

A buzzard does a man much more service than a humming bird, but it isn't nearly as popular.

Wife—"The couple next door seem to be very devoted. He kisses her every time they meet. Why don't you do that?"

Husband—"I don't know her well enough yet."

Nevertheless

But for Thomas A. Edison we would not have the moving picture, the talking machine, or the telephone—but he was a great man nevertheless.

An angry telephone patron who was charged extra for a call, roared:

Telephone Patron — "Outrageous! Why, in my home city one can talk to Hades and back for ten cents."

Telephone Operator (chirping) — "No doubt. That's inside the city limits."

Wife—"Oh, I'm so sleepy. Is everything shut up for the night, dear?"

Husband—"That depends on you. Everything else is."

"My idea of a cheapskate is a person who'd reverse the charges on a long distance call to the poorhouse," said Awful Oswald, the Brushville pest, as he picked up another cigarette stub, and asked for a light.

Wife—"When I married you I did not know you were such a coward. I thought you were a brave man."

Husband—"And so did everybody else."

Convalescent (in hospital, to a friend)—"Thanks very much for the brandy peaches. Although the doctor wouldn't let me eat the peaches, I enjoyed the spirit in which they were sent."

Many people have found out that the only way to end divorce is to marry the second wife first. Before letting your conscience be your guide it is a good idea to be sure you have one.

Polite Book Agent—"Have you a Charles Dickens in your home?"

Lady of the House (snapping) — "No."

Book Agent—"Or a Robert Louis Stevenson? Or a Eugene Field?"

Lady— No, no, we haven't, and what's more, we don't run a boarding house. If you're looking for those people, you might ask across the street."

Men who stand around waiting for something to turn up should begin with their sleeves.

Movie Director—"Can you act "

Applicant—"Act! Why on the stage last week I died so realistically my life insurance agent, who was in the audience, fainted."

Medical Examiner—"And what did your grandfather die of?"

Patient—"I don't remember, but I am sure it was nothing serious."

Too many young couples come to look upon marriage as an endurance contest.

"Do you like simple things?" "Are you proposing?"

How to play Bridge

AUCTION and CONTRACT

by Wynne Ferguson

Author of "PRACTICAL AUCTION BRIDGE"

ARTICLE No. 35

With what type of hand should a player raise his partner's bid? One of the first points to notice is that no player has a justifiable raise for his partner's suit bid unless he has at least three small trumps or two to an honor. Lacking such holdings in the trump suit, a player should deny, not assist his partner's bid. Provided, however, that the player does hold at least three small trumps, he may assist his partner's bid if he holds any of the following supporting values: (first) aces, kings and queens of the other suits; (second) ability to trump some short or missing suit; (third) the fact that the supporting hand holds four or more cards of partner's suit, or three to an honor. Please note, that the values of the high cards in support of partner's best bid are very nearly double their sure trick or defensive value.

"Ability to trump some short or missing suit" is usually valued as follows:

A doubleton is worth ½ trick with 3 trumps and 1 trick with 4 trumps.

A singleton is worth 1 trick with 3 trumps and 2 tricks with 4 trumps.

A blank suit is worth 2 tricks with 3 trumps and 3 tricks with 4 trumps.

"The fact that the supporting hand holds four or more cards of partner's suit of three to an honor,' 'is usually valued as follows:

Three small trumps	0 tricks
The ace or king	1 trick
The queen	½ trick
Four small trumps	1 trick
Four trumps headed by an honor	1 trick plus honor value
Five small trumps	1½ tricks
Five trumps headed by an honor	2 tricks

Two values must be placed on all high cards; First, their values in defense of opponents' bids. This is their sure trick value. Second, their value in support of partner's best bid. The latter valuation is much higher than their sure trick valuation because the chance that they may be trumped is less and the chances of setting up a suit much stronger. Their value as cards of re-entry is also considerable. These additional values are practically double their sure trick value.

There are no trumps and Z is in the lead. How can Y Z win six of the eight tricks against any defense?

Z should lead the nine of spades. If A covers with the jack, Y should play the queen and then lead the three of clubs. If A refuses to cover, Y should also play low. Y should then play the king of clubs. In either event, Z would win the second trick with the king of clubs. He should then lead the four of clubs. A can either (a) win the trick with the queen or (b) allow B to win with the jack.

(a) If A wins the trick with the queen of clubs, he can lead a club, which Y will win and lead a diamond, putting B in the lead and forcing him to lead hearts to Z's tenace or spades to Y's tenace. A can also lead a diamond, putting B in the lead with the same result. A can also lead a spade to Y's tenace. Y would win these two tricks and lead a diamond, putting B in the lead and forcing him to lead hearts to Z's tenace.

(b) If A allows B to win the third trick with the jack of Clubs, the result is the same. All B can make is the king of diamonds, so that Y Z must make six of the eight tricks against any defense.

One of the best liked members of one of the New York Card Clubs is an old Professor of Greek at one of the local universities. He has read everything that has been published on the game, but has never been able to become a good player. Every once in a while he has a bad night, and, when he does, his partners try to grin and bear it. The following hand is an illustration of the Professor's game, and is applicable either to Auction or to Contract:

Hearts—7, 5
Clubs—9, 6, 2
Diamonds—Q, 10, 2
Spades—Q, 9, 8, 5, 2

	Dummy
A		B
	Professor

Hearts—K, 4
Clubs—A, Q
Diamonds—A, 8, 5, 4, 3
Spades—A, K, J, 10

The Professor's contract was five spades and A led the ace of hearts and then a low heart, which the Professor won with the king. He then took out the trumps and led a small club from dummy and finessed with his queen. The king was in A's hand, so that the Professor failed to make his contract as he subsequently lost the king of diamonds, which was also in A's hand.

After the hand was over, the Professor said to his partner, "Well, partner, if the king of clubs had been on the right side, I would have made my bid." His partner, a very good player, replied: "You could have gone game without taking the finesse. After you had taken out the opponents' trumps, you should have led a low diamond toward the queen in dummy. A had the king, so that your diamonds were set up an on the last two in your hand, you could have discarded two losing clubs in dummy." This criticism was correct and the Professor apologized for taking a finesse when it wasn't necessary. His partner was silent for a minute, and then said: "Well, Professor, it looks as if anybody can teach Greek but bridge seems to require a head."

A LITTLE ONE'S PRAYER

Lord, teach a little child to pray,
And, oh, accept my prayer.
Thou hearest all the words I say,
For Thou art everywhere.

A little sparrow cannot fall
Unnoticed, Lord, by Thee;
And though I am so young and small,
Thou carest still for me.

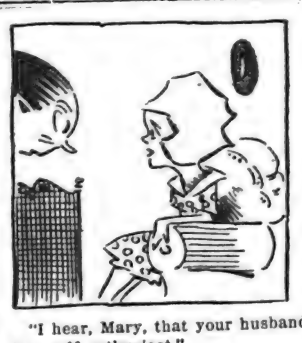
Teach me to do whate'er is right,
And when I sin, forgive;
And make it still my chief delight
To love Thee while I live.

WAITING

One of our severest lessons is to learn to wait. We have been so hypnotised by the popular thought of doing.—C. B. Newcombe.

Relief for That Exhausted Feeling

Happiness Came Back With Health



There is a relief for the drain on your vitality caused by Summer heat. Read how tired-out women and growing girls have been benefitted.

"Since taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, my daughter has lost that tired, sluggish feeling," says Mrs. Asa Dow, Port Daniel West, Que.

"Before taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills I was always tired. Now I am full of pep," states Doris Andrews, London, Ont.

"Dr. Williams' Pink Pills built me up and put me in fine condition," asserts Mrs. James Doughty, Brantford.

Men, women and growing girls by the score write in similar high praise of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. The Pills rebuild health by actually creating an abundance of new blood and increasing the blood cells, thereby restoring wasted tissues and revitalizing the exhausted system. Try them. At your druggist's—50c a package.

"I hear, Mary, that your husband is a golf enthusiast."

"He is, mum."

"Well, does he do good work in the links?"

"Indeed he does, mum, he is cutting grass to-day."

Self-Reliance

This is self-reliance—to repose calmly on the thought which is deepest in our bosom and be unmoved if the world will not accept it yet. To believe that what is truest in you is true for all; to abide by that certain that, while you stand firm, the world will come round to you—that is independence. It is not difficult to get away into retirement and there live upon your own convictions, nor is it difficult to mix with men, and follow their convictions. But to enter into the world, and there live firmly and fearlessly according to your own conscience—that is Christian greatness. —F. W. Robertson.

Genius

The universal genius who can manage all himself has yet to appear. Only one with the genius to recognize others of different genius and harness them to his own car can approach the "universal." It is a case of different but co-operating abilities, each part of the complicated machine fitting into its right place and there performing its duty without jarring.—Andrew Carnegie.

CONTACTS

The word "contacts" is used with many different meanings. We speak, for example, of social contacts; but when the term is used in preventive medicine it refers to persons who have been closely associated with or exposed to the discharges from the body of a person suffering from a communicable disease.

A tuberculosis contact is a person who has been living with or frequently in company of one who is suffering from tuberculosis.

The communicable diseases are, as a rule, spread by contact. The contact may be direct, as in kissing, or when the saliva is passed directly from the sick to the well by uncovered coughs, sneezes or vigorous talking. When the saliva is deposited on some article, such as a cup, which is used later by a second person who in this way receives the saliva of the sick person, then contact is said to be indirect.

The germs which cause disease, and which leave the body in its secretions and excretions, do not generally survive for long. Sunlight and drying destroy them. This explains why it is that direct contact is chiefly responsible for the spread of disease germs, as in such cases the transfer is direct, the number of germs passed is apt to be large, and the germs are not exposed to those forces in nature which destroy them.

Indirect contact does account for many cases, however. The danger is in proportion to the length of time that elapses between the germs leaving one body and gaining entrance to a second. It is well to keep in mind that "it is persons, not things, which are dangerous"; or, in other words, that it is direct contact with the secretions of those harbouring disease germs which is dangerous rather than the room and other inanimate objects which they have touched.

We say "those harbouring disease germs" because it is not only those who are actually ill with a communicable disease who have to be considered, but also those who are coming down with the disease and those who are "carriers" of the germs, although they themselves are apparently well.

It is evident that we are vitally concerned in the health of those with whom we come in contact. The menace of the careless cougher, sneezer and spitter, or the person who talks right into your face, is obvious. The protection secured through the thorough washing of hands before eating, and the reason why the hands should be kept away from the face, is apparent when one considers all those articles with which the hands come into contact, and which may be soiled by fresh human germ-laden secretions.

Life brings us many contacts. Reasonable care makes such contacts safe.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

Bert's Desire

From a window in a little back street in an Ontario town, a small boy gazed longingly on the "ball players" in an adjoining lot. A strange weakness kept him resting on a chair or on his cot, unable to join in the fun.

When the doctor was called, a glance told him the story, and it was not long before little Bert was hurried off to the Queen Mary Hospital for Consumptive Children. Here the great desire of his life seems likely to be granted. Bert has made wonderful progress, and the nurse says hopefully that in a few months more he will be able to try his prowess on the baseball nine —and what greater happiness could befall a little bed-ridden lad than this?

To save many such as Bert from consumption, this great work must go on, helped by subscriptions upon which the hospital so largely depends. A gift from you will be gratefully appreciated. Please send it to Mr. A. E. Ames, 223 College St., Toronto.

STREETSVILLE REVIEW — PEEL COUNTY CALF CLUB MEETING

The largest meeting of the series was held on the farm of Oscar Armstrong & Sons, Mono Road, on August 4th, by the members of the Peel County Calf Clubs. Over 100 people were present to see the demonstrations and to hear the talks.

Stanley Gardhouse, Shorthorn Breeder from Weston, gave a demonstration on fitting a beef calf for the show ring and Oswald Warman of the B. H. Bull & Sons firm, Brampton, demonstrated the fitting of a dairy calf by clipping the head and neck, polishing the horns, and trimming the hoofs. Both of these demonstrations proved very popular with the crowd.

Geo. Downey, Bolton, outlined the points to look for in judging beef cattle and used Mr. Armstrong's herd sire as a model. Douglas S. Dunton, Britannia, was in charge of a class of Shorthorn cows in judging practice.

The crowd adjourned to the spacious lawn for the remainder of the programme. Allison Pinkney, Cooksville, gave a very worthwhile address on the origin and development of Shorthorns, showing that the improvement of the breed up to the present time has been accomplished through the matings of outstanding sires. The Gardhouse family have been pioneers in Shorthorn Breeding in Ontario.

Moving picutures of beef cattle on Ontario farms and at the C.N.E. were shown by J. C. Shearer, Agr. Rep.

Musical numbers were supplied by Messrs. Robt. Thornton and Thos. Smithby.

The next meeting is scheduled on the farm of Col. Leonard Bertram, Snelgrove on Friday, Aug. 26th, when the judging of ayrshires will be featured. Final details for the annual exhibition of calves which is being held on Wednesday, September 28th, at the Brampton Fall Fair will be given the members of the cl

COULD NOT EXPLAIN

Private Soldier Found Himself Under Superior Officer's Boots.

Speaking at St. Peter's School near York, England, Field Marshal Sir William Birdwood, who was general officer commanding the Australian and New Zealand army corps during the great war, said the men from the Dominions under his command were often endowed with individuality. This was due largely to the Australians living in lonely spaces, he thought.

The Field Marshal related how, when visiting Australia after the war, he was hailed by a man whom he failed to recognize. "You ought to remember me because one night when you were going along the trenches I was asleep and you stepped on my stomach," said the man.

"I told him I failed to see how I could be expected to remember his face," the Field Marshal said. "It was more likely I would remember his voice, I told him."

"'You never gave me a chance,' the soldier replied. 'Your other foot was on my mouth'."

DUTIES OF LAW-MAKERS

Words of Wisdom From One of Britain's Outstanding Public Men.

Sir John Simon delivered an address recently, in which he said:—

"Our rulers will best promote the improvement of the nation by strictly confining themselves to their own legitimate duties, by leaving capital to find its most lucrative course, commodities their fair price, industry and intelligence their natural reward, idleness and folly their natural punishment, by maintaining peace, by defending property, by diminishing the price of the law and by observing strict economy in every department of the State."

In these threescore and eight words is compressed the measured opinion of a learned and experienced man on the true function of government. They comprise a sentence that every man whose vote is cast to put another in authority should read and ponder. A land ruled in accordance with Sir John Simon's formula would be well ruled; what more can man seek from the rulership under which he lives his life?—St. Catharines Standard.

BALDNESS IS INCREASING.

Many of Great Leaders Have Smooth Domes.

Baldness is increasing with such alarming rapidity that it is estimated that within a few hundred years all men over the age of 40 will be bald, says a London despatch.

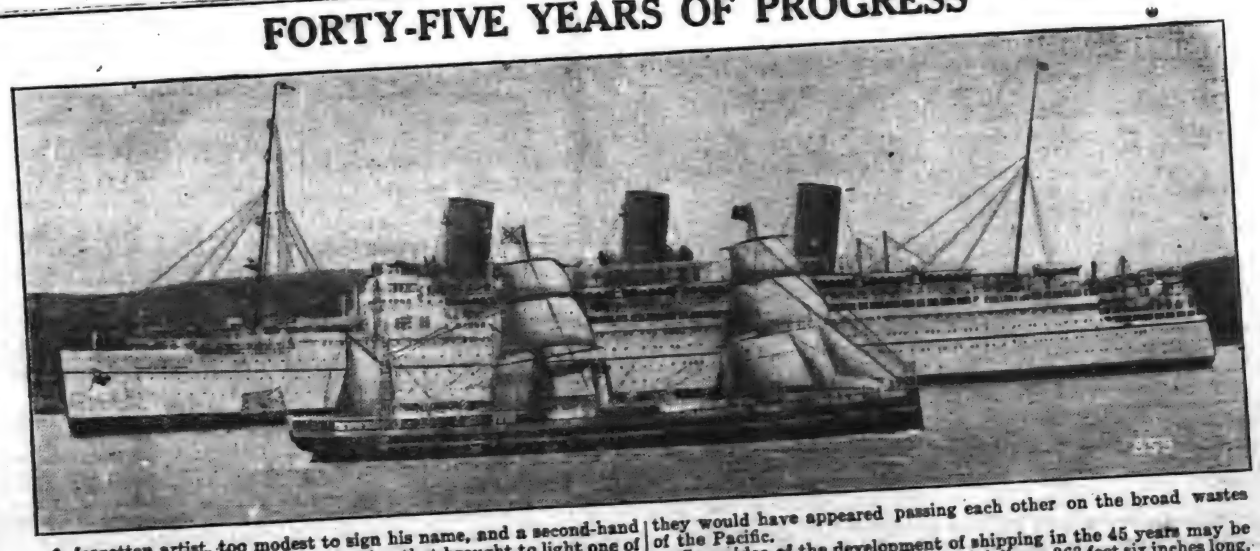
Look down from the gallery of the House of Commons or the House of Lords and you will see a goodly number of bald heads.

Nearly all the famous kings of history have been bald. One French King was actually known as Charles the Bald. And Mussolini has set the fashion for bald-headed dictators. The Pope is also bald.

Nearly all British business magnates are bald. The late Lord Melchett was bald, and so is Sir Henry McGowan, his successor as chairman of the Imperial Chemical Industries.

PICTURE IN SECRET CHAMBER.

An interesting discovery was recently made at Ross Castle, Killarney, Ireland. Some workmen, who were making repairs to the old fortress, entered a secret room of the castle and on the wall discovered a mural painting in colors. The figure represents a man with his hands joined as if in prayer. It is thought that the figure represents one of the O'Donoghues, former chieftains of the district. The painting has suffered much from exposure, and parts of the wall, on which the picture is executed, is falling away. It is expected that the Earl of Kenmare, who now owns the castle, will do something to preserve this very interesting relic.



SALT PLENTIFUL IN CANADA.

Among the natural resources in which Canada is abundantly rich is salt, which is found principally in Ontario and Nova Scotia. In 1930 the total production was 271,695 tons valued at $1,694,631, an average price of $10.05 per ton. In Nova Scotia it is estimated that the Malagash deposit contains 60,000,000 tons of developed salt reserves sufficiently pure to sell directly after mining and crushing. There is also an additional 300,000,000 tons of slightly lower grade salt. An interesting feature of this deposit is the presence of potassium salts which may ultimately prove of economic importance.

English Birth Rate Low.

English census figures indicate that if present tendencies continue, the population at the end of another twenty years will be on the decline because the birth rate is falling so much faster than the death rate. The present birth rate is less than half that of forty years ago.

FORTY-FIVE YEARS OF PROGRESS

A forgotten artist, too modest to sign his name, and a second-hand dealer form the strange combination that brought to light one of the best examples of the growth of Canada's trade with the Orient. Forty-five years ago the first ship ever to fly the house-flag of the Canadian Pacific, a flag that has since found its way into practically every port in the world, set out from Port Moody, B.C. She was the barque-rigged steamer "Abyssinia" and, such a marvel was she that the modest artist referred to transferred her graceful shape to canvas with painstaking detail.

Another artist, chancing upon the picture, imposed it upon a photograph of the latest Canadian Pacific ship in the Orient trade, the magnificent Empress of Japan. They are shown above in exact proportion as they would have appeared passing each other on the broad wastes of the Pacific.

Some idea of the development of shipping in the 45 years may be gained by a comparison. The "Abyssinia" was 363 feet six inches long, 42½ feet wide, had a tonnage of 3,376 and a speed of 15 knots. The "Empress of Japan" is 670 feet long, 87½ feet wide, has a tonnage of 26,000 and, during her record-breaking passages between Vancouver, Victoria, Yokohama, Shanghai, Hong Kong and Manila has developed as high as 23 knots—more than half as fast again.

A strange coincidence is that the "Abyssinia" was chartered from W. G. Pearce; who later became the Fairfield Shipbuilding Company which famous Clydeside shipyard built the Empress of Japan two years ago.

The day was very hot and the farmer became uncomfortable. He took off his coat and was severely lectured by his wife for doing so. A little later he removed his waistcoat and was still more severely upbraided by his wife for his rudeness. County councils throughout Ontario are out to reduce educational costs. The Halton County council have accepted an invitation to meet representatives of other County Councils in Orangeville on August 24th to consider ways and means of effecting economies.

A letter was received by the Halton Council from the Dufferin Council pointing out that educational costs in Ontario have increased 514% since 1913. The letter also stated that in 1929, 33% of all taxes collected was devoted to education, whereas only 19% was used for this purpose in 1913.

The Dufferin Council proposes to have the parents pay the total cost of the secondary education of pupils after the sixth year. Its resolution stated that the majority of pupils throughout the secondary schools are now taking from seven to eight years to complete their course thus adding greatly to the cost of education.

LOCAL PEOPLE HURT IN CRASH

Four persons were seriously injured early Sunday morning when the car in which they were riding on the highway crashed into a parked moving van. They were Eleanor Naylor, of Hornby, driver of the car; Roy MacGregor, of Brampton; William Naylor, of Milton, and Clarence Trimble, of Hornby.

All were taken to Cobourg Hospital. Roy MacGregor was found to have suffered a concussion from which he was still unconscious on Sunday night. William Naylor was badly injured, and Clarence Trimble received a broken back.

John Courie, driver of the moving van, told police his truck had broken an axle and he had been forced to park upon the highway to await the arrival of mechanics from a garage. He said the lights were burning upon the truck and he had been flagging approaching motors to warn them.

Fatal Auto Smash Mond'y Night

One young life snuffed out and seven other persons more or less injured, was the result of a collision of an auto and a truck on Monday evening about nine o'clock, on the Streetsville Road, about one mile South of the village.

Percy Hodgman, aged 15 of Toronto, was so seriously injured that he died four hours later in St. Joseph's Hospital, Toronto, where he was taken in Woodruff & English's ambulance.

The boy, who was in the back of a truck driven by Frank Dinning, Streetsville, sustained a fractured skull, concussion of the brain, a badly crushed leg and other injuries. All involved in the accident were returning from a lacrosse game at Port Credit, at the time.

A car driven by Vic Hope, son of Reeve H. W. Hope, collided with the rear of the truck. Hodgman was thrown quite a distance by the impact. The car veered off and struck a guard rail. It was badly damaged.

F. Dinning suffered bruises and arm, leg and hip injuries. Arnold and G. Dinning and Ned Langdon sustained bruises and cuts, as also did A. Lovatt, A. Beehoo, John Lindsay, V. Steggall and Arthur Dinning.

Hope sustained lacerations and bruises. The injured were treated by Drs. Hills and Montemurro.

Provincial Officer Delaney, Chief Sydney Belford, Chief A. Herkes and Chief F.J. Elderfield investigated.

The Telegram, last night, said that Victor Hope was arrested on a charge of reckless driving and remanded on bail until after the inquest. Dr. Sutton is the coroner in charge.

Much sympathy is felt for the parents of the dead boy and for all others connected with the mishap.

Mr. Cathcart, of Erindale, has been in charge of the services at Omagh Anglican Church, during the absence on holidays of Rev. J. M. Robinson.

Walter H. Bull of Trafalgar and Miss Margaret Menzies of Brantford were married last week. Miss Menzies formerly taught school at S.S. No. 11.

LAWN TENNIS TOURNAMENT

To Be Played August 20th to 27th

A record entry list is anticipated for this year's Toronto and District Lawn Tennis Tournament which will be played on the courts of the Toronto Cricket Club, Armour Heights, Toronto, during the week of August 20th to 27th. Present indications are that last year's entry of nearly 400 will be exceeded by fully twenty-five percent.

The T & D tourney is unique in that it provides competitive tennis during an otherwise "dead" period of the local tennis season. Revived last year as a late-season fixture after a lapse of some years, it has also proved particularly popular with the younger players who appreciate the opportunity it offers for match play after a full season of training.

A complete schedule of events has been arranged including Men's Singles, Ladies' Singles, Men's Doubles, Ladies' Doubles, Mixed Doubles and Junior Singles for both boys and girls. Juniors to qualify have to be eighteen or under as at January 1st last.

It is expected that last year's champion, Grant (Pinky) McLean, will defend his title, and the calibre of the other players who have already signified their intention of entering is such as to ensure a week of keenly contested matches.

Officials in charge of the arrangements have spared no effort to make the tournament a success. The Cricket Club's clay co[illegible]s have been re-surfaced and are now in better condition than ever before. Arrangements have been made to provide transportation from the city limits to the club house, and locker space will be available for those players who require it.

AUTO ACCIDENT EVERY 40 MINUTES IN AUGUST LAST YEAR

According to the records of the Motor Vehicles Branch of the Ontario Department of Highways, motor vehicle accidents during the month of August, 1931, averaged more than 33 per day. Included in this number there were 77 fatalities and 1025 persons injured. This record, be it understood, is for the province of Ontario alone, and not for the whole country as one might imagine from the size of the figure.

The causes of the accidents recorded were various, but it is noteworthy that more than one fourth of the motorists involved came to grief while on the wrong side of the road and almost as many were driving too fast for traffic and road conditions.

MORE CHEAP TRIPS BY RAILROAD

Cost of travel to eastern Quebec, the lower St. Lawrence and to resorts in the Maritime provinces has been deflated this summer in a fare revolution that has never been equaled in the history of the railroads of Canada. This reduction works out at about fare and one tenth for the round trip to any of a score of glorious summer centres on Canada's unsurpassed Atlantic Seaboard, with proportionately reduced fares to many other destinations in eastern Quebec and the Maritime provinces, which are also in effect from stations in the province of Quebec, Montreal and west, and also in Ontario, Sudbury, Capreol, Windsor, Sarnia and east. This great concession by the railroads of Canada is on offer during the current months with a return limit of 21 days, excluding the date of sale. From Sudbury, Northbay, Windsor, Sarnia, London, Hamilton, Toronto, Otttawa and Montreal the fare and one tenth rate is available to Annapolis, Royal, Charlottetown, Chester, The Bras d'Or Lake District, Digby and the land of Evangeline, Fredericton, Gaspe, Halifax, Moncton, Pictou, Riviere Du Loup, Saint John, St. Andrew's, St. Stephen, Sidney and Yarmouth. Tickets are good for stop over at any point in either direction within the limit of the trip going and returning by the same route only.

This brings the seashore of three of Canada's most delightful provinces and the beauty spots of the lower St. Lawrence within the reach of the most modest purse. Canadians, too, will have the feeling that they are spending Canadian money in the confines of the Dominion, where it will be accepted at par, while hotel expenses everywhere are reasonable. Travelling from the far west of Ontario, from Windsor to take an extreme example, is at cost for the return trip to Nova Scotia below $45.00 and from Montreal is nearly half that amount. It is an opportunity that has not been offered to Canadians with a lifetime.

Log Schoolhouses in Ontario

Far more attention is being paid to the esthetic phase of education in rural schools now than in years past. Evidence of this is seen in the modern design of rural school buildings and in the school gardens surrounding them. It seems a far cry, indeed, from the rural schools of the present day to the little log schoolhouse of our fathers' or our grandfathers' youth. And yet the annual report of the Department of Education for 1931 reveals the fact that the time-honored log structure has not actually disappeared.

In fact, some counties in Ontario added log schoolhouses to their quota in 1930 and 1931. York County, for instance, is shown to have added one log school during the year, while Simcoe reported two in 1931. Neither of these counties had any in 1930. The total decrease in this type of construction of 14 for the province, however, is unchanged from the previous year. In all there were 87 log schools in Ontario, chiefly in Northern Ontario, but a decrease there of five from the previous year.

An aggregate of 6,503 public schools in the province is reported, or a decrease of 63. Classified as to construction, 3,517 are built of brick, 409 of stone, 176 of concrete, 2,214 frame and 87 log. Every category shows a slight decrease in comparison with 1930. York County has 187 public schools, of which 160 are brick, 1 stone, 2 concrete and 11 frame, while Halton has 59 schools, 35 being brick, 13 stone, 4 concrete and 7 frame.—Toronto Mail and Empire.

Free Medical Service

According to a statement at the convention of the Canadian Medical Association, Canadian doctors gave $10,000,000 worth of free attention in 1930. This year the amount is expected to be trebbled or quadrupled. This is a financial sacrifice which is not appreciated as it should be.—Calgary Herald.

Young Ontario Craftsmen

If genius is correctly defined as an infinite capacity for taking pains, there are at least forty-seven Ontario boys who have demonstrated their right to a place within that classification. This number of youths, of ages ranging from twelve to nineteen years, have spent many spare hours in producing replicas of a Napoleonic state coach. The exhibition of these tiny working models which have been on view for several days, reveals the high level of craftsmanship of the boys of this province.

These young workmen have followed with remarkable fidelity the design and measurements furnished to them. They are competitors in a contest under the auspices of The Telegram Chapter Fisher Body Craftsman's Guild, the winners in which go on to an international competition, the higher awards in which are university scholarships.

In wood-work, metal-work, painting, upholstery and glazing the competitors have emulated the minute attention to detail of the craftsmen of the mediaeval guilds. They have put into their work the loving interest that characterizes good workmanship of all time. The exhibition is a credit to the persevering industry and the constructive ingenuity of the Ontario boy. —Toronto Telegram.

Piano Returning

An exchange asserts that the last few months, particularly, have seen a great change in the attitude of the people of Canada toward the piano. In the United States the turn of the tide set in earlier—about a year ago. Some observers of the situation there have attributed some of the piano's revived popularity to the interest stimulated by the extensive series of piano talks and piano lessons that have been given over the American broadcasting chains and to the widespread system of piano class teaching in the public schools—a movement that is now well established in Canada. — Brockville Recorder and Times.

Industrial Progress

During the year just closed 78 new industries have been established in Manitoba. In addition to the new industries, existing industries added 47 new products to their lines, which is another phase of the same movement. These facts indicate vitality and adaptability which, to borrow a phrase from the biologists, are prime factors in survival. Actually the foundations of a great industrial development in Manitoba are being laid under present conditions. Industries which can gain a foothold and make progress now are bound to forge ahead rapidly with returning prosperity. — Winnipeg Tribune.

Self Help Necessary

There are thousands of cases where, employment being lacking, it is necessary to subsist by the charity of the community; but how many people refuse to try and help themselves, and, instead of persisting in looking for work or in organizing their lives so as to emerge from their misery, resign themselves to complete inaction and are ready to live like parasites on their fellow-citizens, abandoning all their pride and dignity. People of this character are surely holding back the return of the world to normal activity and are helping to prolong the crisis. —La Presse, Montreal.

Symbol of a Nation's Power and Culture

The August number of the National Geographic Magazine, official organ of the National Geographic Society, Washington, has as its leading article "Ontario, Next Door." This article of 53 pages, accompanied by a map and 55 beautiful illustrations, was written by Frederick Simpich of the Geographic's editorial staff, after an extensive survey and study of present-day Ontario, during which he traveled by airplane, train and boat from Windsor to Hudson Bay and from Ottawa to Lake of the Woods.

Mr. Simpich must be an accurate and intelligent observer, for this is how he describes Toronto:

"The symbol of a new nation's power and culture. You cannot gauge it by mere figures. You may set down that greater Toronto has 850,000 people; 2,350 factories producing each year more than 554 million dollars' worth of goods; or that it has ten miles of waterfront, welcomes hundreds of conventions a year, besides two million paid visitors to its Canadian National Exhibition; the greatest hotel, the highest building and the largest department stores. But Toronto is more than that. It is, to a singular degree, the focal point of much of all fresh thinking and industrial planning that goes on in the Dominion."—Toronto Mail and Empire.

Needed

Instead of a New Year's resolution why not a week-end pledge to drive carefully and help prevent accidents generally? — St. Thomas Times-Journal.

Back to the Land

The back-to-the-land movement may not be as extensive as some of us have hoped. But even reduced to less ample proportions, it will have accomplished a useful work. There has been too much readiness to believe that the towns are paradises, and that money can be picked up there in abundance. The sad discovery has now been made that they are far from being Klondykes. Though there may be something alluring in the thought of receiving every week a salary which the farmer would take a month or more to make, the needs of a town life multiply so rapidly that wealth often disappears as fast as it is earned.

THE EMPIRE

Britain's Foreign Loans

If Ottawa does nothing else, it will have been worth while if it ensures that a check is put to the headlong rush of British investors to put their money into foreign loans. In ten years £203,000,000 of British maney has been thus subscribed—seventy per cent. of the interest now being in default. Before the crisis—the sum is much larger now—Britain was owed by foreign countries the stupendous sum of £3,000,000,000; and an uncomfortably large amount of this must be regarded as a bad debt. But loans within the Empire are not bad debts; not to the extent of a single farthing has any colony or dominion defaulted. —National Graphic (London).

Mutual Concessions

What the Conference will have to seek is agreement on some general principle which can be applied equally to the agricultural industries of Great Britain and to the manufacturing industries of the Dominions. Whatever compromise is adopted must apply to all. There is no need to measure too exactly concessions against concessions, but any glaring inequality would defeat its own ends. Public opinion in none of the Dominions would long tolerate an arrangement under which, for instance, British textiles were admitted freely into its market while its meat, or flour, or fruit was only admitted into the British market on conditions which prevented any competition with the British product. And the converse is equally true. Any agreement to be lasting must be reciprocal in its advantages, and the lower the scale of protection on which that reciprocity can be effected the better will the general interests be served.—London Times.

United Europe

Dealing with the aspect of Lausanne, psychologically the fact is of soving value to a disillusioned world.. It means that its self-respect and its belief in its leaders have been re-established. It means that realism has at last won the day, and that the crazy system elaborated at Versailles and precariously maintained by every prop and artifice since has been decisively discredited. Materially, it means as much or more. Epropo has done what the doubters said she would never do —she has achieved unity on the central condition of economic recovery. She has forgotten the past in determining to make a saner future, and in so doing she has presented America with a situation which, Presidential or no Presidential elections, America will find herself unable to ignore.—London Sunday Times.

Reward of Industry in the U.S.

A recent issue of Collier's mentioned that a gentleman named Magnan, of Fort Ripley, Minn., shipped to market a 215-pound hog that cost him ten dollars to raise. The commission company that disposed of the hog sent Mr. Magnan notice of the sale, with a cheque and statement of the transaction. The animal was sold for $1.61. From the tremendous sum the company deducted expenses, state taxes and its own commission, and sent Mr. Magnan the balance—5 cents. Such an incredible thing was almost too much for Mr. W. H. C. Carriere, of this city, who dropped a line toMr. Magnan. Here is the answer: "What you saw in Collier's was straight goods. It was a small enough rice, so I had it put in the paper. I am saving the cheque, which I am going to put in a cheap frame as an evidence of the hard times we had in Minnesota in '32 —and I think the hard times are not over yet."—Ottawa Citizen.

Bobbies Arrest Bees Then Owner Arrives

London—An errant swarm of bees has just been arrested by four policemen in Battersea, a popular suburb of London.

The swarm alighted on a bush in a front garden. The police were called in. The first officer of the law said, "Oh, my." The second and third waited in support. The fourth brought a sack. There was a strategic movement to the rear.

About that time the bees' owner turned up and the law decided that the prisoners might go home.

British Humor Weekly Comments on Conference

London.—"Punch," famous humorous magazine, has several comments upon the Ottawa Conference.

Attention is drawn, it says, to the difficulty poets experience in finding rhymes for Ottawa.

When a slight fire broke out on the Empress of Britain it was rumored that Mr. J. H. Thomas had fused.

A sketch in "Punch" shows a lady at her door talking to a tramp.

Lady—"I don't suppose you have done much work in your life."

Tramp—"No, lady. But I have great expectations of this here Ottawa Conference."

Big Battle Staged For Rowing Honors

Californian Wins by Fifth of Second — Canada Get Third Position

Marine Stadium, Long Beach, Cal., Aug. 14—In a finish that left 60,000 spectators gasping, the University of California's unbeaten crew came from behind with a closing surge to whip Italy's powerful boatload on Saturday by just 15 inches, one-fifth of a second, and win the crowning event of the Olympic regatta for the United States.

Bow to bow in the last few strokes, it was so close as both crews swept across the line that it was not until the official decision came over the loud speakers that the crowd let loose its ovation for the triumphant Californians.

The official times were 6 minutes 37 3-5 seconds for the United States, 6.37 4-5 for Italy.

Almost unnoticed in the terrific din of excitement, even though they were close enough to make it a "blanket" finish, Canada's Hamilton Leanders and the Cambridge University crew of Great Britain finished third and fourth in a battle that was almost as sensational as that between the first two boats.

The Canadians, on a re-check by the judges, got the third position by two-fifths of a second. Their time was 6.40 2-5 and Great Britain's 6.40 4-5.

It was the third victory in two days and seven finals for the Americans. It followed the decisive triumph of Garrett Millmore and Kenneth Myers of Philadelphia in the double-sculls and gave the United States the winning total of 38 points for the regatta.

ENGLAND DOUBLE WINNER.

Great Britain, with two championships won, finished second with 26 points, Germany third with 20 and Italy fourth with 17. Other points were distributed as follows: Poland, 13; Australia, 10; Canada, 9; New Zealand, 8; France and Uruguay, 4 each; Holland and Brazil, 3 each.

RESULTS OF FINALS.

Summaries, Olympic rowing finals:

Four-oared, without coxswain—Won by Great Britain (George, Beresford, Edwards and Badcock, stroke), 6.58 1-5; second, Germany (Maier, Flinsch, Gaber and Aletier, stroke), 7.03; third, Italy (Chiardello, D'Este, Cassu and Provenzani, stroke), 7.04; fourth, United States (Johnson, Pierie, Mattson and McCosker, stroke), 7.14 1-5.

Double sculls—Won by United States (W. E. Garrett Gilmore, bow, and Keneth Myers, stroke), 7.17 2-5; second, Germany (Gernard Boetzeler and Herbert Buhtz), 7.22 4-5; third, Canada (Noel de Mille and Charles Pratt) 7.27 3-5; fourth, Italy (Orfet Parolo and Mario Moretti), 7.44 1-5.

G. B. S. Receives Reply In Like Humour

Mr. Shaw recently received a stiff rebuke.

In a magazine article he boasted that he knew how to make an excellent cup of coffee. A country parson wrote to him asking for the recipe. Shaw granted his request, but at the bottom of the letter was the following manifestation of his stupendous conceit:

"I hope that this is a genuine request, and not a surreptitious mode of securing my autograph."

To this the parson replied:

"Accept my thanks for the recipe for making coffee. I wrote in good faith, and, in order to convince you of that fact, allow me to return what it is obvious you infinitely prize, but which is of no value to me—your autograph."—New York Morning Telegraph.

Hurricane Sweeps Southern Texas

Extensive Damage Done to Property—Seawall Protects Galveston

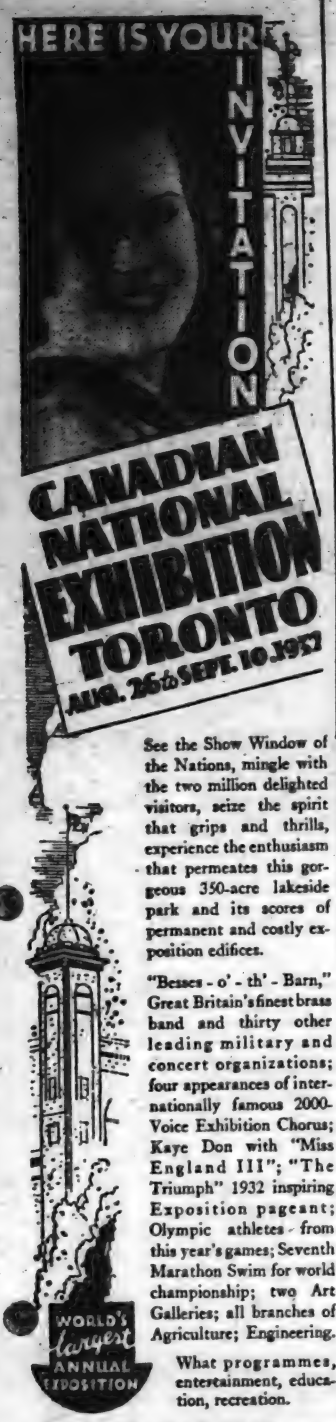
Houston, Texas.—Seventeen persons were dead, at least 50 were injured and property damage was estimated at many thousands of dollars in the wake of a tropical storm which buffeted South Texas Sunday night.

The list of dead and injured slowly mounted as crippled communications were repaired and rescue workers moved into the stricken area, which centred roughly about this city with a radius of 75 or 100 miles.

The storm moved slowly through South Texas in a southwest direction with rapidly diminishing force, after sweeping an area near Taylor, about 200 miles northwest of Houston.

Striking the Texas coast between Galveston and Freeport, 34 miles from Galveston, the storm raged for many hours, the wind attaining a velocity of about 70 miles an hour at Houston. From Galveston and Houston it moved north to Taylor before turning southwest.

"It is following the usual course of such disturbances," the weather bureau at Dallas reported. "It probably will blow itself out without further violence."



Protected by the great seawall, constructed many years ago after a storm in 1900 had devastated the city, Galveston reported no great amount of damage, although a number of flimsy structures on low beaches were swept away, houses were unroofed, windows were broken and trees uprooted.

Galveston passed the night in darkness, power having been shut off to lessen the danger of fire. About $10,000 damage was done to buildings at Fort Crockett, army post.

Early reports that the city was isolated were denied, although telegraph and telephone wires were out of commission at intervals and the causeway connecting Galveston with the mainland was clogged by motor vehicles stalled when motors were drowned out by rain.

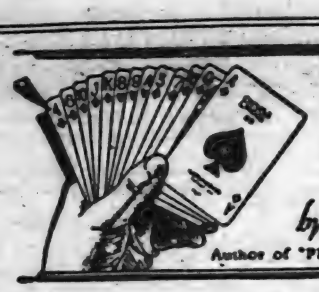
Child in a Garden

(From Poetry)

O treasure! O joy!
The little sacred Boy
Upon His Mother's knee
No sweeter was than she
Who now upon my heart,
Artless and speechless,
Worketh with more than art.



Innocent flesh and frail!
The spirit's holy veil!
No older than the leaf—
Young April's first
First herald of the sheaf—
That trims the poplar bough
With tremulous light,

Will you grow strong and tall,
O spirit infinite,
O body small,
Here where all things are growing
And the spring air is blowing?
My heart is in your hand.
Grow tall and charm the land.

How to play Bridge
AUCTION and CONTRACT

by Wynne Ferguson

Author of "PRACTICAL AUCTION BRIDGE"

ARTICLE No. 36

During the course of a discussion at one of the New York Card Clubs the other night the writer made the statement that, in his opinion, an average player would lose from 500 to 1500 points in an evening's play at Auction or Contract, either by bad bidding or bad play or both. There was considerable difference of opinion so the writer suggested that a player of average skill be selected and that a record be kept of any bad bids or plays that he might make during an evening's play.

The test player was selected and three other players, of whom the writer was one, made up the rubber. It was the duty of these three to call attention to any mistake of play or bidding by the test player and, if in the opinion of all three it was a loss that could have been saved by average skill, it was charged against him; but not otherwise. Play continued for about three hours and, during that time, the test player made only five mistakes, two as to the play of the hands and three as to the bidding, but those five mistakes cost over 1000 points. The mistakes as to play were unimportant: one due to failure to count trumps, which cost game; the other to a failure to size up an opening lead as a marked singleton. The latter mistake only cost contract and a small loss.

The following example hands have aroused considerable interest and much discussion. Decide upon the proper bid in each instance and then compare with the writer's analysis.

Hand No. 1

Hearts—8
Clubs—A, Q, J, 7, 4
Diamonds—7, 6 5, 2
Spades—K, Q, J

Y / A B / Z

Auction Bidding:

No score, first game. Z dealt and bid one spade, which A doubled. Y passed, B bid two clubs, Z bid two diamonds. A bid three clubs, Y and B passed and Z bid three diamonds. A passed and Y bid three spades. What should B now do with the foregoing hand?

B should bid four clubs. A's double of one spade and subsequent bid of three clubs should indicate more than a fair chance for game. B's hand is much above the average and worth a three-club bid, irrespective of A's double and raise. As a matter of fact, A B could have made five clubs and game, but B doubled three spades and defeated the contract by only one trick. In the writer's opinion this double of three spades is unsound.

Contract Bidding:

The bidding at Contract should be the same.

Hand No. 2

Y / A B / Z

Hearts—none.
Clubs—A, J, 10, 7, 2
Diamonds—K, Q, J, 9, 7, 5
Spades—K, 8

Auction Bidding:

No score, first game. Z dealt and bid one diamond, A bid one heart, Y one no trump and B two hearts. What should Z now do with the foregoing hand? Z should unquestionably bid three clubs and force his partner to choose between clubs and diamonds. If Y has anything that looks like a no trump, Z should make game either in diamonds or clubs. In the actual play, Z bid two no trump and Y Z failed to make game while, at diamonds, they could have made five odd. With a two-suit hand of this type always bid both suits if you get the chance.

Contract Bidding:

At Contract, the bidding would be the same up to B's two heart bid. Z should then make a forcing bid of four clubs and thus command or force Y to try for game either in clubs or diamonds, the suit that best fitted his hand.

Hand No. 3

Y / A B / Z

Hearts—8
Clubs—Q, 10, 9, 8
Diamonds—A, Q, 10, 4
Spades—K, 8, 7, 5

No socre, first game. What should Z, as dealer, bid with foregoing hand at either Auction or Contract?

The dealer should bid one diamond. This is another hand of the type discussed many times in these articles. The singleton heart is a danger spot, so the diamond bid is better than one no trump. If partner bids one heart, then the dealer should bid one no trump.

Hand No. 4

Hearts—A, 9, 4, 2
Clubs—K, 10, 9, 2
Diamonds—A, Q, 9
Spades—5, 2

Y / A B / Z

No score, first game. Z dealt and bid one spade, which A doubled. Y passed, B bid two clubs, Z bid two diamonds. A bid three clubs, Y and B passed and Z bid three diamonds. A passed and Y bid three spades. B doubled three spades and all passed. What should A lead from the foregoing hand at either Auction or Contract?

A should open the five of spades. Z has bid two suits, spades and diamonds, and Y has showed preference for spades. That probably means that he is short of diamonds and, if so, it is very necessary to lead trumps and thus try to prevent Y from trumping A's good diamonds. As a matter of fact, the lead of the spade is the only one that will defeat the contract. If A opens the club, Y Z will just make their contract. Note that Hands No. 1 and No. 4 were held by A and B as partners.

Three-on-a-Match Wartime Superstition?

"Three on a match? No, thanks, not for me! I'll light my own!"

So say many of us, smilingly, but nevertheless more earnest than we would care to admit in our deference to this curious superstition.

Where did it come from? It seems to be a comparatively new addition to the already imposing array of black cats, horse-hairs and four-leafed clovers that encumber the petty activities of our lives.

Some attribute its "back-luck" abilities to the old "Curse of Three"; others declare that devils can be drawn by the sulphurous flame of a match burning for any length of time. The best explanation, however, is that offered by a returned soldier from over-seas quite convinced as to its validity.

They quote a certain general in the Allied Forces as having said during one particularly lengthy siege:

"Be careful of lighting cigarettes in trenches. In the time that it takes to light three cigarettes from one match, enemy aircraft can compute our location accurately enough to blow us all from the face of the earth."

And this, in the light of the possible result, seems about as strong an argument as ever gave rise to a superstition!

Vine Yields More Rubber

A hybrid rubber vine which yields twice as much rubber as either of its parents has been produced by the United States Department of Agriculture near Miami, Fla. It is a cross between two plants both native to Madagascar one long grown in Florida as an ornamental, and the other naturalized in many places in Mexico and the West Indies.

The planting of Madagascar rubber vines as ornamentals is spreading rapidly in Florida, Arizona and Southern California, says a recent bulletin from the department.

The new hybrid rubber vine showed a rubber content between 4 and 5 per cent. in monthly periods of analysis, reaching nearly 7 per cent. in some cases. The vines of the parent species seldom yield more than 3 per cent.

Because the seed of the hybrid does not run true and produce the same type of plant as the hybrid itself, the rubber workers propagate new plants by cutting. The vine is a perennial, and once planted a regular production of rubber might be practicable. Propagation methods are being studied to increase the supply of hybrid material, but none is available for distribution at present.

The department is also experimenting with desert plants which grow in Southern Arizona and California and which show prospects for rubber production. The most promising is a native milkweed that could be grown in large quantities in the desert districts, in the event that a domestic production of rubber became necessary.

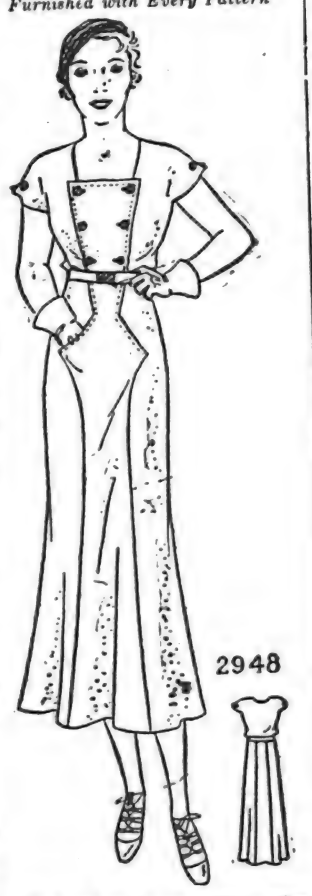
New Colors for Fall Chosen By British Fashion Creators

London.—In addition to the "Empire Shades" already announced for the Ottawa Conference, British fashion creators are sponsoring an interesting list of colors for the autumn season. The usual piquant titles are in evidence again, with nature furnishing most of them, but with emotional implications providing a few (such as "love-in-the-mist"), and a modern soft drink orangeade) helping out the general scheme.

Morning and afternoon shades will include, in the browns, Jacobean and briarwood; yellows, marigold, musk, and orangeade; reds, holly-berry, nasturtium, peony, damson juice; greens, chestnut leaf, Gretna green and lovebird green.

COULD NOT BUTTON HIS COLLAR

Weak after Rheumatism



There is only one way to deal with rheumatism. It is not sufficient merely to clear it out of the system—it must be kept out. For 10 years this man has been free from the trouble:—

"A bad attack of rheumatic fever 10 years ago laid me up for four months. When I started work, I could not raise my right arm sufficiently to button my collar at the back. Having to get my own living, I became very anxious, because of my arm being so weak, so I started taking Kruschen Salts in small doses straight away, and have been taking it ever since. I am pleased to say I have not been troubled with rheumatism during this time. Although I am 61 years of age, I feel quite fit for my work."—J.E.M.

Kruschen dissolves away those needle-pointed crystals of uric acid which are the cause of all rheumatic troubles. It will also flush these dissolved crystals clean out of your system. Then if you keep up "the little daily dose," uric acid will never form again.

"What is the most useful creature in the world to mankind?" asked the teacher.

"A hen, sir," replied Freddie Wilson.

"A hen?" echoed teacher. "How do you make that out?"

"We can eat it before it is born and after it is dead," explained the boy.

Kleber—"What started the Grand Canyon?"

Guide—"A Scotchman lost a penny in a ditch."

Nitt—"Once I saved a man's life but I never got a medal for it."

Witt—"Give particulars, please."

Nitt — "An inebriate once came home to his apartment, turned on only hot water to take a bath in, and he would have been scalded to death only I happened to be janitor of the building and there was no hot water."

Judge—"You told the waiter you were going out to get money to pay your bill. Why didn't you return to the restaurant?"

Accused—"I was caught getting the money."

Jones picked up the daily paper and was astonished by seeing an announcement of his death in an accident. He immediately rang up a friend.

Jones—"Bill, have you seen the notice of my death in this morning's paper?"

Friend Bill—"Yes, where are you speaking from?"

Is there anything more disconcerting than to have a June bug crawl up your pajama leg?" To which we answer: "Only one thing, neighbor, and that is having a June bug crawl up your own leg."

Sparks

This is the machine age and about thirty a woman enters the reducing machine age. A girl's greatest problem is not whether to let her hair grow, or which boy to marry, but when to stop being twenty-five. A bookkeeper may hold his job by getting the accounts so balled up that no one else can understand them. Have you ever noticed that all great men have been great workers?

Irate Parent—"Didn't I see you kiss my daughter, sir?"

Nervy Youth—"How should I know? Do you think I'd be gawking around when I was doing a thing like that?"

Two salesmen met in the smoker of a train.

Number One—"Well, I've had a good month. Orders have been coming in good."

Number Two—"I can't say as much. I've had only three orders all year."

Number One—"Three orders! Sakes alive, man! What is your line?"

Number Two — "Railway locomotives."

Luxembourg Garden Beehives

Paris at heart is rustic. In the midst of all its proud buildings and rush of traffic it dreams of meadows, little gardens, and the drone of bees. And at the heart of it you will even find certain of these rustic things. Paris almost in the center of it cherishes its beehives. In a secluded corner of the Luxembourg Gardens you will find the city's apiary. There, within a hedged enclosure, just like some little garden in the country, you may see the hives, some in straw like Byzantine domes, others in wood like miniature cottages. And there you will see the busy bees winging outward to seek the nectar hidden in the garden's flowers, others speeding inward laden with spoils, to vanish into the mystery of a hive's interior. Sometimes about the little colony you may see a little group of people gathered for instruction in the ways of bees and the secrets of acquiring much honey. Not far away is the drone of the traffic on the busy boulevard, but nearer is the drone of the bees, soothsomnolent, amid the flowers.—F. G. Hurrell, in "The Lantern Show of Paris."

40 Fine Horses From Toronto

Forty-one of R. Y. Eaton's horses from the Hayter St. stables, Toronto are spending their vacation on one of the McGregor farms, Trafalgar Township. The general manager T.H.Irwin, is greatly pleased with the improvement in all the horses. He says the soil and grass is similar to the soil in Ireland, putting on bone and muscle, which makes the Irish Hunters so famous all over the world.

Some horse lovers may be interested in the past performance of one of the famous hunters now holidaying at this farm. This chestnut mare named Glen Ireton, belongs to the Oriole stables, owned by Mr. R. Y. Eaton, of Toronto. She has won scores of ribbons, including five foot classes, touch and out. At the Olympia Show in England, she was second and at the Dublin, Ireland show was fourth in military classes. This year, at the Toronto Horse Show she won the Open Middle Weight class, and second in the knock down and out.

VALUE OF FARMING

Canada's Biggest Industry Produces Four or Five Times as Much Wealth as All Others.

Agriculture is Canada's leading industry, the net annual value of agricultural production averaging double that of all other primary industries put together. It is from four to five times as great as that of either forestry or mining, which come next in order of importance. The farmer supplies the raw material for many of Canada's leading manufacturing industries, such as flour milling, feed and grist milling, bread and bakery products, slaughtering and meat packing, butter and cheese making, boot and shoe making and fruit and vegetable canning. The farmer, too, is a large consumer of the finished products of nearly all other manufacturing industries, more especially of such industries as agricultural implements, motor cars, binder twine, sawmills and fertilizers.

There are upwards of 700,000 farmers in the Dominion.

The census of the farms of the Dominion is taken for the benefit of the farmer. While the average farmer, however, probably does not make individual use of the statistics, they are used by the leaders of the farming community, by professors and teachers in agricultural colleges, by local agricultural representatives of Provincial Governments, by Dominion and Provincial Departments of Agriculture, by Members of Parliament and the Legislatures, as well as by the general press and agricultural newspapers.

Agricultural information has been collected by means of the census since the earliest times, but the amount and the variety of information secured has been steadily increasing with the growing complexity of the operations carried on by farmers in the Dominion. The questions asked in the 1931 schedules covered a greater variety of subjects than in any previous investigation. Not only was every outstanding expert in agricultural matters in Canada consulted in connection with the questions, but advantage was also taken of the work of the International Institute of Agriculture, representing some 60 countries, which had a staff of experts at work for the last four years making plans for an ideal census of agriculture.

THE SILVER FOX LEADS

Takes Premier Place In Canadian Fur Production.

The silver fox has been the pacemaker in the Canadian fur trade now for a number of years, but now has achieved the leadership of all furs in the value of its production. The fur trade year is measured from July to June, and in the last statistical year the value of silver fox pelts sold was $2,716,264. Nearly the whole of this amount was contributed by the fur-farming industry. Next in value among the furs for the last fur season came muskrat with $1,781,651. White fox was third at $1,228,917, beaver fourth at $1,025,033 and mink fifth with a value of $1,010,198.

The fur farm is playing an increasingly important part in the fur trade of Canada. In 1927-28 fur farms supplied 11 per cent. of the production value of the industry, and in 1928-29 it was 12½ per cent. In 1929-30 the proportion of the production value of the industry supplied by fur farms rose to 19 per cent.

HUGE ELM REMOVED.

Stood for Over Four Centuries In Fruit District of Ontario.

A huge elm tree, said to be over 400 years old, and an outstanding landmark near Vineland, Ontario, has been cut down in the interests of public safety. It stood right on the shoulder of the highway against the pavement. When the highway was laid, this tree, on account of its age and beauty, was left standing. It stood about 150 feet high and measured over five feet across. Lately, however, it was decreed that the monarch had to go.

Ten to fifteen foot pieces were cut from the top at a time, chain blocks and anchor lines being used to prevent damage to the telephone and power lines. The limbs measured up to two feet in diameter.

A 95-year-old old lady living at Vineland recalls having milked the cows under the shade of this big tree when a young girl.

Only one accident is known to have happened at the tree since the highway was laid years ago. In that case a man was killed when he drove his car into the tree.

SMOKE AND CANCER.

Meeting at Glasgow, the Royal Sanitary Institute Congress made two startling disclosures with regard to that most dreaded disease — cancer. One was the evidence that soot is directly responsible for the most deadly forms. The other that the soot in the atmosphere is equal in weight to three days' output from all the British collieries. As one delegate pointed out, the "penalty for the romantic coal fire is twofold. It first implants the disease and then robs the sufferer of the means of combatting it by creating a fog which virtually shuts off the vital rays of sunshine, and thus lowers the powers of resistance."

THE AUTHOR'S REWARD.

It is true that authors write for the sheer love of it. But at the same time, the construction, plotting and execution of a worth-while story involves much hard plodding work. And no divine enthusiasm is going to drive the most inspired fictionist into this labor when the most he can expect from a Canadian magazine for his effort is from $25 to $75—if he is lucky. With ordinary energy in the same length of time, the author could earn as much or more selling peanuts or peddling apples.—Winnipeg Tribune.

Castoria... for CHILDREN'S ailments

ARE you prepared to render first aid and quick comfort the moment your youngster has an upset of any sort? Could you do the right thing —immediately—though the emergency came without warning—perhaps tonight? Castoria is a mother's standby at such times. There is nothing like it in emergencies, and nothing better for everyday use. For a sudden attack of colic, or for the gentle relief of constipation; to allay a feverish spell, or to soothe a fretful baby that can't sleep. This pure vegetable preparation is always ready to ease an ailing youngster. It is just as harmless as the recipe on the wrapper reads. If you see Chas. H. Fletcher's signature, it is genuine Castoria. It is harmless to the smallest infant; doctors will tell you so.

You can tell from the formula on the wrapper how mild it is, and how good for little systems. But continue with Castoria until a child is grown.

IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE

The Aztec Mystery

A Thrilling Story of the Old West

BY MURRAY LEINSTER

SYNOPSIS.

Sonny Holman, believing he is the rightful owner of the Aztec mine, holds up the mine's payrolls. Janet Laurier, who holds legal title to the Aztec, tries to stop his activities.

Rustlers run off some cattle and Sonny, riding in pursuit, is cornered by Janet's mine guards. He escapes, but his horse is shot. Janet has the horse doctored and pleads with Holman to leave the country. Tilford, mine manager, apparently falls in with her plan but in reality schemes to deliver Janet over to a cutthroat named Garcia.

Janet finds Sonny, just as Garcia's men are closing in. They take refuge in a cave. Meanwhile, a search party has been organized and Tilford is made to go along and find the way.

CHAPTER XXI.—(Cont'd)

A sudden uproar came thinly to his ears. The distant barking and yelping of dogs, frenziedly excited. Somehow it did not sound like the noise of dogs trailing. It sounded more like dogs being beaten, and the uproar they would make when leashes prevented their escape.

"That'd be your gang, Janet," said Sonny. "There's their dawgs. An' they ain't so far away, either."

The yelping ceased suddenly, as if the beating had stopped while a consultation was held as to another way of making them trail.

"I won't let them hurt you," said Janet uncertainly, "but if they can catch you, it's what I hired them to do."

"Y' won't call 'em off?" asked Sonny, smiling. His smile became fixed, suddenly, when the horse he rode stumbled and wrenched his body.

She shook he head. "I'm going to make you leave the mine alone," she said resolutely. "I love you, but I've got to!"

"An y' still won't tell me why?"

She shook her head, her eyes misting suddenly.

"Then yuh' kidnapped," said Sonny soberly. "Come on."

He led the way, but alertly. A dash for freedom even had she dared to make one, would not have gotten her far. Sonny fell silent, listening intently. They way was narrow here and there was no chance to pick and choose a path. When the last of the led horses kicked aside a stone, it rolled and rumbled, gathering companions until a small sized landslide went roaring down the hillside, making a noise that was audible for a long distance.

"Dawggone!" murmured Sonny. "I hope nobody was listenin'."

He had chosen this route for exit from his hangout for perfectly sound reasons. Not knowing where Garcia or his men might be, he had elected to come out of the back exit from his hangout, a tortuous path among the fallen boulders which had been unsuspected by the Mexican. But this route, when once embarked upon, admitted of no deviation lest the rider find himself in a blind alley. Sonny now was committed to the route and it bothered him that the noise had advertised his movement. The mine guards might not have noticed it, of course, or they might attribute it to any of a myriad natural causes.

The little cavalcade of two riders and three led horses went clattering loudly over the stony way, while Sonny's frown grew deeper and deeper. Twice they heard the barking of a dog, and once a shrill and startled yelp. Each time the sound was faint, but each time Sonny's expression grew a trifle more grim. And suddenly the trail ended abruptly in a rocky chute down which the horses picked their way gingerly. They came out abruptly into a space of level ground in which stunted trees grew sparsely and through which the stage road ran for a space.

Hardly had they merged from the hillside chute when there was a yell and a bullet whined over Sonny's head. A moment later another gun took up the fusillade, and there were shoutings showing that still others were taking up the pursuit.

"Get goin' to yuh frien's, Janet," drawled Sonny. "I aim t' do a li'l shootin'."

"I won't, she returned. "While I'm here they'll have to try not to hurt you. I want you caught, but not—"

Sonny grinned, though his face was white from pain. "It wouldn't be playin' fair to plug them while you kep' 'em shootin' high," he drawled. "What say we mosey along?"

He swerved to the right and began to tear through the thin undergrowth, which soon gave way to knee-high grass and then to the road itself. Janet spurred her horse and rode desperately beside him. Sonny whistled and Gunpowder ranged up alongside, running splendidly with his head up and no trace of a limp. Even the horses the Mexicans had been riding and which Sonny had captured with their masters, seemed to consider this a race, and rested by a night's idleness, they came along in a bunch behind.

"Lordy," drawled Sonny, "I reg'n we look like a herd o' antelope."

"Sping-ng-ng!" Something whistled viciously a yard from his elbow. "Hn-nn-nnhn-n-n!" Another bullet whined by. There was a sudden shriek from one of the horses romping behind and it rolled over upon the ground, kicking, the heavy stirrups of its empty saddle flapping as it struggled desperately.

"They ain't carin' where they shoot," said Sonny suddenly, his voice deadly. "Janet, ride off t' one side. I'm goin' t' do some shootin' now."

He swung in his saddle and blazed away. Five of the mine guards were in full cry after them, shooting as they came. The sixth came half riding and half tumbling from the mountain side to join in. He spurred his mount.

Janet called loudly and frantically. It was the scar-faced man who had been with Gleason when Jake Hornaby was killed.

The scar-faced man scowled and bent lower, urging his horse on. His revolver came up. His gun and Sonny's went off together, and the scar-faced man reeled from his mount and toppled to the ground. Sonny's horse stumbled, but as it went down Sonny flung himself clear. Gunpowder came racing to his side.

Sonny leaped to the stallion's back and was away again, shoving shells into his gun with his lips compressed. He seemed to be planning grimly. But his face was ashen from the pain of broken rib ends grinding upon each other from his movements.

The stage road narowed here and went along the side of a hill for a long way, winding and dipping, disappearing for long spaces as it followed the only practical grade, and finally disappearing toward Gila Valley and the town of Moleville. It was unspeakably isolated here. No living thing was to be seen except a soaring creature far away which might have been some feathered scavenger, waiting for something to die. There was no sound but the clattering hoofs of three horses—Gunpowder, the horse Janet rode, and the remaining mount taken from the members of Garcia's gang left bound in Sonny's hang-out.

"'S long as they keep far enough ahead," drawled Sonny, "they can't do nothin' here. But you better drop back. They're shootin' mighty reckless, those fellers. The stage road ought to be kinda safe. You drop behind an' let 'em pass yuh. Don't follow 'em too close. I'll lead 'em on a ways."

He stopped. Far in the distance a dark mass of men and animals had appeared. Too many men to be accompanying the ore wagons, and wearing undeniable sombreros, the sombreros of Garcia's men. Sonny swung his head about as if trapped. He was. The hillside above and below the road was nearly precipitious. The mob of Garcia's men ahead would stop at nothing to pull down the pair of them. The five mine guards behind would never stop to listen to their own danger before they had killed Sonny, leaving themselves with Janet to be overwhelmned by the bandit gang.

There was no turning. Sonny and Janet were being driven into the arms of Garcia's men by her own guards.

The horses galloped swiftly down the winding road. The Mexicans ahead were shut out of sight momentarily by a shoulder of the hill.

"They've took the ore train," drawled Sonny very quietly indeed. "They'll be bringing it to Garcia's hangout to unload, an' then they'll take the wagons on an' dump 'em in Buttercreek Canyon. By the time its all figured out, that ore'll be outer the country. An' them an' us, and your frien's back yonder, Janet, are all right likely to come together."

"I'll tell my men not to fight you," said Janet, "and together we may retake the ore train."

Sonny shook his head grimly. "Riskin' you? Not much! I got me a idea. See where there's a break in the rock wall? We dive in there. Con aprisa. Your gang'll ride past an' slap into Garcia, an' you come out behind an' ride like hell for help. Meantime I go sky-nootin' into the frucas, like I had a million Rangers behind me. An' if your gang is any good at all, we'll hold that mob till you get back with all o' Gila County to clean 'em up."

Down the roadway the three horses clattered, galloping swiftly. The heavy saddle bags on the lead horses flapped clumsily as the saddle rose and fell from his stride.

"Here, now, ma'am," drawled Sonny. They swung to the right and into the little canyon. "Garcia's home grounds," said Sonny grimly. "If your gang don't ride past, ma'am, we're sure out o' luck. We'll get behind these rocks."

He crowded the three horses out of sight behind a tumbled mass of reddish rocks fallen from the canyon walls. Gunpowder stood instantly docilely still. Janet's mount stood with drooping head, panting. The third animal moved skittishly up to them, away from them, and as Sonny reached out his hand to grasp its bridle seemed to remember again the habits of its Mexican owners. It jerked its head away and danced off into the middle of the canyon

And as Sonny raced after it, and having caught it, back with it, the five mine guards swept past the canyon entrance.

Storm

All other storms were playthings to this storm.
It was as if God broke the moulds of Form
And the huge fragments, hurtling, whizzed like wires.
Confusion stalked across the blotted shires.
Now they joined hands. They doubled the wild din.
They fought once more. Earth's crust seemed fallen in.
What could withstand such turmoil? Rocks only could
By twining their stone roots. Nothing else stood.
Trees groaned like mandrakes. Sap in sweaty beads
Stared from their barks. Boughs broke. But the crude weeds,
Hemlock and ragwort, plantain, parsley and dock,
Held out more grimly against the furious shock
Than those gnarled trees that like a leather tether
Knit the broad acres of this land together.

—Louis Golding, in Time and Tide.

Peace

How shall a man think on that which belongs to his peace, if he yields himself wholly a servant to those things which be without; and how shall he carry any message to others, who cannot hearken to the voice of his own soul?—Lady Dilke. (The Book of the Spiritual Life).

Custom

Custom is the great enemy of faith, and of Reason likewise; and one of the worst tricks which custom plays us is, making us fancy that miraculous things cease to be miraculous by becoming common.

Premature Discoveries

By Friedrich Freksa in Die Woche, Berlin

Similar to a great, unyielding army, humanity forges ahead on its march towards progress. It is preceded by the scouts, in our case the geniuses. Over the heads of the vanguard these scouts push ahead into time. History of human progress teaches us that its pioneers were sometimes two or three centuries ahead of the masses, if not more.

After the pioneers comes the vanguard. scientists, explorers, poets, philosophers, the host of methodic workers and searchers, who in their turn are far ahead of the so-called educated class. Their thoughts and ideology are handed over to the teachers, in whose following march columns of students, the latter at least one generation ahead of the educated class, whose ranks they join after completing their studies. After that they apply in practice the knowledge and experience acquired in schools and universities and make it accessible to the great masses of the people.

Round these practical workers, the jurists, physicians, engineers, technicians, journalists, the educated classes are grouped, who are moved by the desire to make the wisdom of the former their own. Still, they remain way behind the explorers. After the educated classes comes the mass of the people, who assimilate the former's ideology, doctrines, mode of speaking. Usually the masses are more fanatical followers of a doctrine than the class from which they took it, and they continue to profess a faith long after it is discarded by scholars and scientists.

Thus materialism was born from the observation of nature itself. The conception of matter is a theory which goes back to the pre-Christian era, to the Greek philosopher Democritus, who believed that the universe consisted of a substance, composed in its turn of infinitesimal particles or atoms, the differentiation of the bodies being determined by the various degrees of density of these atoms. The alchemists of the middle ages based their research on this ancient theory and studied the means of converting plain metals into gold through condensation of the atom.

In the beginning of the nineteenth century, which saw the triumph of physical science, the idea of force was born, and a new theory on the origin and composition of the world gradually evolved from the combination of the two principles, atom and force. From this purely materialistic conception Marx and Engels drew the inspiration for their social teachings, and their doctrine is still the creed of their socialist and communist followers.

But the great physicists of modern times reject this theory of crude materialism and of the infinitesimal and indivisible particle. Inspired by the glamorous discoveries in the electrical and electrochemical fields, scientists evolved a new theory, whereby the simple atom became the complicated electron. In the imagination of the twentieth century physicist this infinitesimal particle the electron has acquired the likeness of a whole world in itself, in which other particles revolve round the nucleus at a terrific speed. Thus the electron has acquired the likeness of our stellar system, in other words, it is a little sun, with the planets revolving round it.

The day will come when even this audacious theory will seem obsolete and will have to make place for another conception. Newton's ideas are slowly but irresistibly being replaced by Einstein's relativity theory. The scientist is aware, however, that the theories with which he works are but expressions of the philosophy of the period in which he lives, and suited to it.

The scientist does not erect his hypotheses into articles of faith. He is satisfied with having found a working theory, and he lets his thoughts wander through an imaginary, not through the real world. This is in opposition to the methods of the layman, who wants, above all, to believe, even though he proudly calls himself an atheist. All misunderstandings and spiritual troubles which afflict the so-called educated classes come from this desire to believe. The misuse that was made of Darwin's theory in the beginning of the past century is one aspect of it. Yet the evolutionary idea of Darwin's work goes back to 1800, to Hegel. However, only one hundred years later did the words "development" and "evolution" become part of our current language.

Every great idea that was put into circulation as a rare gold coin has finished by becoming a worn out small coin. The intellectuals glorified the American Constitution of July 4, 1776, as a symbol of greatest dignity and highest civilization, because it was inspired by the philosophy of fifty years before the slogans of which became familiar to the peoples only in the second half of the eighteenth century.

In our time of triumph of technique, which is still under the influence of the World War, our vocabulary is rich with technical and martial terms. We speak of economic wars, political fronts and lineups, and even the pacifists do not seem to be able to get along without this bellicose terminology.

A striking example of how an invention may be made ahead of its time is television. It has now come to stay. In 1865 a German magazine published the picture of a camera invented by a certain Caselli which transmitted a perfect picture of the great physicist Ampere. Yet it took another 67 years to make television an everyday occurrence.

All inventions and discoveries are the result of man's dreams. They mature through millenniums and are anticipated by myth and legend. Dedalus built wings for himself and soared up, but his son Icarus, having come too near the sun, paid for his temerity with his life. Yet it was his dream that showed mankind the road towards the realization of flying. Dreams become ideas and, through the process of research and experience, they bear fruits after many centuries.

280 B.C. a Greek philosopher proved with calculations that earth and planets revolved round the sun. His theory, developed by his disciples, remained confined to a narrow circle, as it was in opposition to the current belief of the revolving sun. At that time humanity was better prepared to listen to the Egyptian Ptolemy, who proved with elaborate and artificial calculations the truth of the established theory. The Greek principle was therefore entirely forgotten until Galilei and Copernicus revolutionized the middle ages with their sensational discoveries. Despite persecutions and anathemas, the new teachings sent a thrill through mankind, and they finished by being accepted.

When Columbus discovered America the world had already forgotten that in the year 800 A.D. Eric the Red and his Norsemen had come as far as Labrador and settled there, but were subsequently wiped out by cold, starvation, and the hostile natives.

The nineteenth century is justly hailed as the era of the steam engine. Yet how many people know that at the time of the Emperor Adrian, about 100 A.D., Roman engineers built pump works in Egypt operated by steam. At that time, however, human labor was so cheap that the value of mechanical force was no made the object of further investigation, and the project was dropped.

The above are but a few examples of how ideas and inventions may come too early, and, humanity not being ready to absorb them, lay idle for centuries.

Man's thought, his inventions and discoveries, are ruled by the immutable laws of maturity. All that is born outside of this state of maturity invariably passes unheeded. This explains the tragic fate of so many great geniuses, to whom success was denied, sometimes almost at the threshold of it. Robert Mayer, the thinker to whom science owes the law on conservation of forces, was declared insane by his contemporaries.

We humans live together and each of us is convinced that his world is the same as the world of his neighbor. Therefore, the creative genius who strives to give humanity something new, something it had never seen before, meets with a harsh reception.

Population 8,203,942, London Census Reveals

London.—The population of greater London now totals 8,203,942 ,as revealed by the first analytical report compiled from the census figures of last year. The increase in population, as compared with 1921, has been 9.7 per cent., or nearly three times the increase of the preceding decade, and nearly twice the current increase for the nation at large.

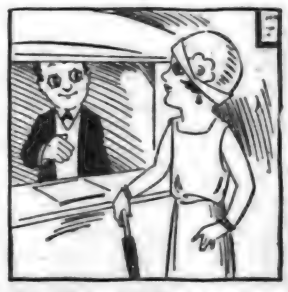
Greater London's population numbers 4,371,026 females and 3,832,916 males. The report advances no reason for this predominance of women.

The largest contributor to the increase is Dagenham, for during the ten years in question it went from a meager 9,127 to 59,362. It is one of the few districts in which men outnumber women.

Figures for the City of London and the twenty-eight metropolitan boroughs which comprise the "administrative County of London" (as distinct from "Greater London") show a decline of 87,520 for the ten-year period. This population is now 4,397,003.

Important deductions to be drawn from the report are that families are growing much smaller than formerly (families of eight persons are 50 per cent. less numerous, while the two-person family has increased enormously); that there is much more living accommodation a person, with a heavy drift to apartment houses; and that living conditions are much improved.

Dogs and Sheep



Numerous cases of sheep being infested with the cysts of the dog tape worm were reported this past winter. Another reason why dogs should be kept away from sheep. Of course the sheep infested with these bladder worms, which locate on the brain, died. If a sheep is so unfortunate as to pick up the eggs of a single segment of a dog tape worm, her chances of continued life are poor. Dogs infested with tape worm drop the segments containing the tape worm eggs about the fields and yards, these are picked up by the sheep while feeding or drinking, and then the trouble begins. The remedy is to kill the tapeworms that the dogs carry by dosing every dog at least three times a year with a suitable worm remedy. Eight sheep died in one community, where some wormy hounds were allowed to run at large. If you are a sheep owner, keep your eye on the dogs as they are dangerous to the well being of the sheep in more ways than one.

Cigarette as Bait Used By Pennsylvania Angler

Fish like cigarettes and bite eagerly when the white-wrapped rolls of tobacco are used as bait, according to the Pennsylvania Fish Commission.

Oliver Deibler, Fisheries Commissioner, circulated the story of the new bait as told him by S. W. Frank, Jeanette, in relating the experience of his brother, Dr. Claude Frank, Oil City. As told to Deibler, Dr. Frank discovered the bait qualities of cigarettes accidentally when he threw one into the water. A large trout, that had disregarded other lures, struck at it savagely.

Frank then baited a hook with half a cigarette. He caught a trout within a short time. Before he finished he had landed three brook trout, ranging in length from 13 to 16 inches. Fishermen believe the trout were attracted by the white paper wrapping of the cigarettes.

Sunday School Lesson

August 28. Lesson IX—Gifts for Building the Tabernacle — Exodus 35: 21-29. Golden Text—Honour the Lord with thy substance, and with the firstfruits of all thine increase. Proverbs 3: 9.

ANALYSIS

I. THE SPIRIT OF GIVING, VS. 21.

II. THE GIFTS OF THE PEOPLE, VS. 22-26.

III. THE GIFTS OF THE RULERS, VS. 27-29.

INTRODUCTION—The tabernacle was a place of worship erected by a people who were wandering in the desert. Its architecture, althought elaborate in its details, resembled the simple architecture generally to be found in the desert. It was a tent of oblong shape, with a flat upper surface; it was made of curtains or hangings which were held by cords and tent-pins. Like the tents of modern Bedouin, it comprised two compartments, divided each from the other by hangings. The one compartment was a court for the lay worshipers, the other a shrine or holy place within which was an inner shrine or holy of holies. Only the priests had admittance to the holy place, and only the high priest could enter the holy of holies. "Let them make me a sanctuary," said God; "that I may dwell among them," 2: 8. "We may observe," says Driver, "that by one of its principal names, the dwelling the tabernacle expresses, in a sensible form, the truth of God's presence in the midst of his people; by another of its principal names, the tent of meeting, it gives expression to the truth that God is not only himself with his people, but that he reveals himself to them; by its third name, the tent of witness or testimony, it reminded the Israelites that in the Decalogue (the Ten Commandments) inscribed on the tablets in the Ark, it contained an everpresent witness to the claims of God and the duty of man.

I. THE SPIRIT OF GIVING, VS. 21.

People living in the desert are usually very poor. The building of the tabernacle for the Israelites was a heavy undertaking. It could be carried through only by the co-operation, and especially the liberality, of all the people. The eager spirit with which they gave was wonderful. "Their heart stirred them up," or more properly, "exalted them"; their contributions were made in a spontaneous mood of religious enthusiasm and exaltation. Further, their spirit was made willing; they did not give grumblingly or gradgingly, but willingly and cheerfully.

II. THE GIFTS OF THE PEOPLE, VS. 22-26.

The common people brought their offerings in kind—metals, fabrics and hides. The principle of the tabernacle, with all its appointments and furnishings, was that material forms expressed spiritual ideas; everything had symbolical significance. So the gold, which was contributed in the form of ornaments for personal attire—bracelets, earrings, rings, v. 22, was melted down and used for making those vessels and parts of the sanctury that were nearest to God. The other metals, the silver and brass or more properly bronze, were used for those parts and vesels which were farther off rom the Divine Presence, and hence less important, v. 24. The shittim wood, or rather the acacia, which was found in the Sinaitic peninsula, was used for making staves to support the sides of the tent and for building the ark. Among their possessions the Israelites had various cloths; they gave these also. Evidently there was not enough of these various cloths on hand. So the women who had technical skill in such matters ("whose heart stirred them up in wisdom") set to work to spin more fine linens and coarse goat-hair material vs. 25, 26.

III. THE GIFTS OF THE RULERS, VS. 27-29.

Like most people of the desert the Israelites had a simple, patriarchial system of government. Their rulers were the heads of families and chiefs of tribes. These rulers did not consider themselves exempt from the general call to sacrifice. They brought precious stones, notably the onyx. These were to be set as ornaments in a vestment of the high priest known as the ephod. The ephod was an elaborate waistcoat in the front of which was a so-called breastplate, or pouch, in which were the Urim and Thummin by which decisions were received from God. The onyx stones, each of which was engraved with the names of six of the tribes of Israel, were fixed on the top of two shoulderstraps holding the ephod (28: 9-12), while twelve precious stones, arranged in rows of four each, were fastened in front of the pouch of the ephod, 28: 17-21. The rulers brought also oil—olive oil for the light which was lit every evening in the sanctuary, and olive oil mixed with fragrant spices such as myrrh, cinnamon, sweet-smelling cane and cassia. This mixture was used for anointing the priests to their holy office. Further, they contributed the aromatic spices which were burned on the altar of incense. These offerings, both of the common people and of the rulers, were all given freely.

Facing the Future

By Pierre-Etienne Flandin, Former French Finance Minister in a Radio Speech From Paris.

For a long time nations believed that they could remain isolated from each other and become immune against the contagion of the world crisis. Experience has proved the contrary, and it is to be hoped that they will now agree to look straight at the results. . . .

It is useless to believe that a miracle, with a magic stroke of the wand, will re-establish prosperity. We shall not be able to get out of the crisis except by employing efficient remedies.

To speak of international peace and co-operation while restricting in a thousand ways the free circulation of goods of capital and of individuals, is about the same as if one boasted of the liberty of people who are kept imprisoned.

The Lausanne conference has made European opinion stage a great step forward. It will be continued by a committee which will study the question of the restoration of the countries of Central Europe and by an economic conference which must resolve the problem of the reduction of the external indebtedness of certain nations and the more general problem of international economic relations.

However preoccupied American opinion may be with its own internal problems, I trust that it will associate itself with this work which is indispensable for the restoration of the world's business.

Germany' Security

By Kurt Von Schleicher, German Minister of Defence, in a Radio Speech.

I did not think it possible that after all the bitter, sad post-war experiences there should still be Germans who believe our small army is sufficient for the protection of our frontiers.

The naked truth is that no other European nation has so little of that security for which, paradoxically enough, the world's strongest military power keeps on calling. Stresemann characterized this attitude of our western neighbor as hypocrisy, and I believe there are few Germans who do not agree.

The other way for Germany to obtain security is by transforming—not expanding—her army so that it will guarantee a certain degree of security; and with reference to the final German declaration at Geneva, I do not want to leave the slightest doubt that we are going to choose this way if full security and parity are denied us in the future.

Women Sewing Again Embroidery Comes Back

Those old-fashioned girls who are clever with their needles and like doing embroidery work need no longer feel ashamed of themselves. They are not behind the times, after all, but right in the swim—a Modern Embroidery Exhibition is now open at the Victoria and Albert Museum, in London.

There is a distinct revival of all sorts of arts and crafts at the moment, and needlework is possibly the most popular of the lot. It is in a way a revulsion against the sameness of the old machine production, and it is already having its effect commercially by making industry pay more attention to variety and beauty of design.

But no matter how good a machine product may be, there are always people who prefer something which is hand-made. And as a visit to this exhibition will show, we are finding out new possibilities in needlework.

Not that the old work wasn't good. Even when they were merely trying to turn out something useful, our grandmothers often got on to a good thing. This was especially the case in the villages, and some of the old shawls, smocks, and other articles still preserved in country cottages are really beautiful pieces of work.

This is being realized now, and the village women of to-day are reviving these old crafts, with the encouragement of the rural institutes. There are about 5,000 village institutes which are interested in this movement, and county hand-work exhibitions are now being arranged, to prepare the way for a great national display of country crafts to be held in London in November.

The old craft of smocking will be one of those in evidence at these exhibitions. Smocks themselves are creeping back into favor—a number of women are realizing that they make very attractive overalls—and this process will be accelerated by the work of the institutes and the interest it will arouse. But smocking does not stop at smocks—it is being applied successfully to a number of other garments as well.

Another craft which the institutes are encouraging is carpentry, which is now being taken up a number of women. Even in the villages women are breaking into what were once purely masculine preserves.

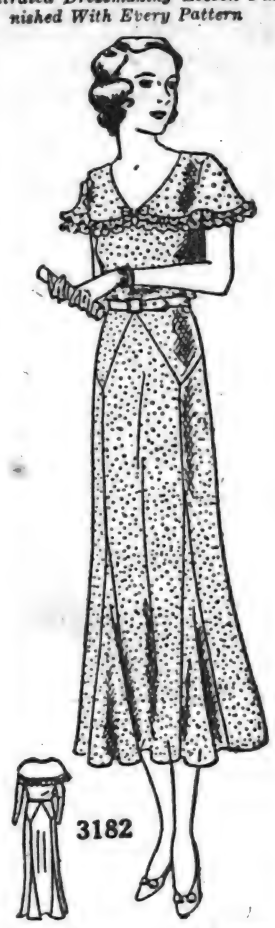
Basket-making is also proving popular, and skin-curing, fur craft, and glove-making all have their adherents. The gloves are made principally from sheep and lamb skins, and the skins of rabbits, moles, and hares are pressed into service by the workers in furs.

"Are you going back to the city?"

"In about a week or so. I have two engagements to break before I go."

Cleaning Reveals Old Architecture

London—A "spring clean," that has lasted for 10 years, ended here recently when the delicate, carved work of the Henry II Chapel at the east end of Westminster was revealed in all its original beauty.



The chapel has been regarded since its construction, just before the Reformation, as one of the architectural masterpieces of England.

Hamilton May Buy Winter Coal Supply From Wales

Hamilton.—According to a recent statement issued by the Retail Coal Merchants Association, the price of fuel will not be advanced here this winter over the prices in force last winter. A report that the government might increase the duty on American coal following the Imperial Conference, for the purpose of encouraging Canadians to buy the Welsh product, has reached the dealers. If action along this line is taken, the coal men will ask the authorities to arrange for shipments from Wales of more convenient sizes.

Libraries of Ontario Growing In Popular Favor

The rapid increase in our cities of lending libraries of late years, and the growing appreciation of the service rendered by our public libraries, as evidenced by the demand of the citizens for reading thus offered, make the annual report of public libraries of the province one of great interest. During the year, seven new public libraries were established, six being of the association type, and one former library of this kind having become free. The travelling libraries have been well patronized, residents of small places with no library facilities availing themselves of the opportunity of getting good books at the minimum of expense. Another splendid service rendered during the year was the sending of thirty cases of books—5,890 volumes—to the construction camps of the province. This branch is therefore, playing well its part in Ontario's educational work.

The bringing of reading opportunities to rural communities is engaging the thoughtful attention of the library world today. To this end county library idea has been suggested, to reach even sparsely settled sections county library laws must, however, first be enacted, and a fund provided for library purposes raised, possibly by a tax levy. An increase of the Government grants to assist in the incipient stages of the undertaking might be obtainable. —Toronto Mail and Empire.

Sea Lions Biggest Enemies of Pacific Coast Salmon

Leave the sea lions alone, free to carry on their depredations unchecked, and the British Columbia salmon fishery would suffer seriously, and that's why the Dominion Department of Fisheries sends one of its vessels to the Pearl and Virgin rookeries, west of Rivers Inlet, to carry on a lion hunt for a few days every year.

This year over 1,100 lions and pups were destroyed on these two rookeries when the hunt was carried on by C.G.S. Givenchy in June. Bad weather interfered with operations, especially at the Pearl Rocks, and the lions were very wild and difficult to reach, but, nevertheless, the result of the hunt, will be that the sea lion family won't work as much damage to the salmon fishery in the future as they would otherwise have accomplished.

The purpose of these annual hunts is not the extermination of the sea lions; the hunts have been undertaken for some years but the lions are still numerous—too numerous to suit the salmon men. The purpose sought is not to exterminate the herds but to keep them within something like reasonable limits in numbers and thus to protect the salmon resources, which mean so much to British Columbia and, indeed, to the Dominion. Just how much these resources do mean is indicated by the fact that, in normal times, the value of the prodution from the British Columbia salmon fishery may be as much as $16,000,000, and even more. The salmon runs are worth too much to allow them to be jeopardized by marauding sea lions.

Where Churches Are Fullest

The larger the community, the smaller the percentage of church attendance, according to a survey by that noted statistician, Roger W. Babson. Thus:

"In incorporated areas and villages under 2,500 population, the churches showed an average attendance of 71 per cent. This dropped to 66 per cent. in villages of 2,500 to 5,000 population. Towns of 5,000 to 10,000 showed an attendance average of only 46 per cent. In the cities of 10,000 to 50,000, the attendance was 42 per cent. Cities of more than 50,000 population could show an average attendance of only 30 per cent.

A much-married man had arranged with his wife that they should spend their holidays separately. On the eve of the wife's departure, she asked fussily, "When does my train go exactly, John?" A trifle tactessly he answered, "In three hours twenty-eight minutes and sixteen seconds."

Writing Good English

To write good, forcible English, which will be read and remembered, requires constant practice and careful thought. The other day Lord Riddell told me a story of a talk he had with President Wilson. I have no permission to use it, but I am sure he will not mind my repeating it for your benefit. He asked the President how it was he had acquired such a fine literary style. He was told that, at an early age, Mr. Wilson pere, who was a great admirer of good English, made his boy read a page or two of the best examples of literature. "Now take a pen," he would say, "and mark every unnecessary word." President Wilson said it was a difficult and weary task, but, in doing it, he began to perceive how exquisite was the workmanship, and so gradually developed a clear and limpid style of his own.

Nobody who aspires to write English can do so without a close study of the Old Testament, Shakespeare, and the Prayer Book. There are many other authors with whose works a writer should make himself intimately acquainted, but these three are the foundation of good literature. Take a few verses from Samuel. You remember how David mourned for his son Absalom, who had driven his father out of Jerusalem. . .

This is perfect literature for you! You can see the brave Joab and the depressed king, and hear the ringing words of remonstrance. It is a real word-picture. You have not to shut your eyes and hear the sonorous sentences, to bring the whole thing before you.

I will give you another example. You remember the women who were brought before Solomon, each claiming the same child. We are told how the two mourned and lamented over the baby, and then, suddenly, from the oblique narrative the writer drops into the direct narrative.

"And the King said: Bring me a sword." Not: "And the King asked for a sword," but, "And the King said: Bring me a sword." The introduction of direct narrative into oblique narratives gives a lightness and color to the story that otherwise would not be possible. Study these old writers, for they knew all the tricks of the trade.

Words are the journalist's tools. He must learn to use them rightly and to understand their uses. A leader-writer must before everything learn to write good English. When he has done that, his own particular style will develop of itself. Therefore study the best masters.—From "Journalism," Leader-Writing, by H. A. Gwynne.

"Mr. Huggins, you seem to be quite a favorite with the ladies at this hotel. If I give you free room and board will you agree to flirt with all the wall flowers?"

"Not me. I'm no lemon squeezer."

THE APPLE

Experience and science unite to give the apple a high place as a food, even though they cannot support its claim as a preventive of ill health to the extent of endorsing "an apple a day keeps the doctor away."

It may surprise many people to learn that a very large percentage of what they consider solid food is water. Most fruits and vegetables are over ninety percent water, potatoes when boiled are three-quarters water, and meats run well over fifty percent, so it is not surprising to learn that a ripe apple contains more than 80 percent water.

The apple, along with other fruits, has many virtues. It has a definite nutritive value. The young apple contains a large amount of starch which, as the apple ripens, is converted into sugars, so that by the time the apple is fully ripened there is little or no starch. The sugars formed are readily digested, and they give the fruit its nutritive value.

The unripe fruit may be irritating, but the ripe fruit acts as a mild laxative. The whole apple should be eaten, as the skin is of value in assisting elimination, and it is said that the best flavour of the apple is to be found right under the skin.

The apple, like most fruits, is alkaline or base-forming. The blood is alkaline, and this alkalinity must be maintained in order that the blood may perform its function of carrying waste carbon dioxide to the lungs, where it picks up oxygen in exchange. If alkalinity is reduced below a certain point, we have the condition known as "acidosis."

The actual eating of a ripe apple is not only a pleasure but good for the teeth. Biting into and chewing the firm flesh of the apple brings the teeth into use, cleanses the teeth and stimulates the gums. Too many of our foods do not give the teeth anything to do, and disuse means decay.

Fruits are an abundant source of vitamins and minerals. They are classed as protective foods because they supply those essential substances which are apt not to be provided in the diet. They have this great advantage—they can be eaten in their natural state and their vitamins are thus undamaged by heat. Then, too, there is no loss in potency after several months' storage.

The apple is a good food. It is nutritive, an abundant source of vitamins, acts as a mild laxative and is of value in maintaining the alkalinity of the blood. To these qualities is added an attractive flavour. No wonder the apple is popular.

Lacrosse

The Thistles defeated the Brocks of Toronto here last Saturday night by a score of 7—4 in a well-fought game, although some of the regular players were absent. The star man was H. Hill, the Indian, who did most of the scoring with apparent ease. The Brocks, being winners of their group, makes it all the more creditable for the Thistles to trim them. The usual large crowd was present to witness the game, which was pretty rough, with plenty of casualties and lots of thrills.

The goals were scored as follows Hill 3, Evans 2, Doherty 1, and Clipperton 1.

Streetsville Lacrosse team were defeated by Port Credit at the Port on Monday. The score was 8—7 and owing to the regretable and fatal accident just after the game people won't talk lacrosse. Everybody was shocked by the news of that terrible affair.

One player said that the Port Credit team was composed chiefly of Six Nation Tiger Indians from Caledonia, and that without the Indians Port Credit cannot whip Streetsville.

Malton plays here this Saturday night.

The game billed to be played at Malton last night was cancelled on account of rain.

An Old Letter

How strange the feeling with which we read an old letter, the writer of which has long ago gone home. As I read the letter of a dear brother, many, many years ago, just as he was beginning his life's career as Pastor, many thoughts passed through my mind. Its pages are yellow, its ink is dimmed with time, the creases where it is folded are nearly worn through, but I've spread that letter out carefully and read the endearing words it contains, slowly one by one, dwelling on each word. Old memories stir the heart and thoughts of the day. When the last farewell was said, although written many years ago, yet slowly within your soul opens that pale blossom called memory, whose fragrance gives pain and joy, mingled so closely that though your heart aches at its presence you would not let the flower die.

Dear old letter, only one of the many signals left us that the loved ones ever were with us, and though their lips be dead yet the words from their hearts still live.—Cont.

BEGGAR GIRL'S ROMANCE

Tattoo Marks May Prove Her to Be of Royal Blood.

European experts in heraldry are studying a minute design reconstructed from bits of the tattooed skin of Marthe, a Normandy shepherd-woman and beggar, 40 years old, who may prove to be the illegitimate daughter of a duke and a princess belonging to illustrious royal families of Europe.

All that is known of Marthe, officially, is that she was sent to the orphanage of the Assistance Publique in Paris in 1890, when she was four years old. Like most of these waifs, Marthe was put in the hands of farmers and became a shepherd girl in Normandy, subjected to constant harsh treatment.

Marthe lived as best she could, through 35 years of her life, mostly by begging for her food. Then, in 1926 a doctor treating her discovered 16 scars on her body. He recognized them as tattoo marks which had been burned more than 30 years before.

On the doctor's advice the scars were examined by experts who concluded that, as a baby, she had been tattooed by a clever artist with 16 identical coats of arms and that before she was three or four years old the marks had been clumsily removed by painful operations.

The traces which remain, examined by a magnifying glass, show an escutcheon of an alliance between two celebrated families. It is a question whether this was done by her parents and then cut out when they decided to return to their families and put the girl in the orphanage.

The experts in heraldry reported no trouble in identifying parts of two royal coats-of-arms.

The official records in the French Government show that the birth certificate of the shepherd-beggar had been tampered with in the great volume of the 1st Arrondissement. Certain marginal annotations had been scratched out and there is no clue from that record as to who her parents may have been.

REDUCED HIS OWN SALARY.

SIR ISAAC ISAACS

As a contribution to national economy, Sir Isaac Isaacs, first Australian-born Governor-General of that country, voluntarily reduced his salary by $5,000. He had previously relinquished his judicial pension of $7,000 per year and does not receive the $10,000 living allowance paid to his predecessors in the office.

SOVIET FIVE-DAY WEEK.

Complicated System But Workers Know Their Day Off.

In Soviet Russia the name of the day of the week is without significance. Instead, the populace figures its dates according to its day off. "The fifth day" is the key to the calendar so far as the present-day Russian is concerned. Ask any passerby in the street what day of the week it is and he will shake his head in ignorance. But follow him to his home and you will find there a calendar on which he has placed a red mark on every fifth day. That signifies his day off under the Soviet five-day week.

Fundamentally, the universal calendar still exists, although it is varied somewhat for government and industrial purposes by the adoption of the 30-day month. One day in each of the seven 31-day months is considered an "extra day." From these seven "extra days" are subtracted two to make up the difference of February. The net total of five "extra days" is required of each worker for government service in some form or another.

In turn, the government "pays back" these five days by granting five days of national holidays—two for May Day, two to commemorate the October revolution and one for the anniversary of Lenin's death.

FRANCE THE EMPIRE.

France is a nation of 100,000,000 people spread over 12,000,000 square kilometers. From the point of view of the area which she occupies upon this globe of ours she is, thanks to her colonies, the third largest country in the world, the first being the British Empire, and the second Russia: She is larger than China or the United States. With regard to population, France is the fifth country of the world, the first four being the British Empire, China, Soviet Russia and the United States. Without her colonies France would be, measured by area, only the seventeenth, and by population only the eleventh country.—The Nineteenth Century.

MOST OF TALC EXPORTED.

Of the 11,841 tons of talc and soapstone produced in Canada last year 8,512 tons were exported. Practically all the talc found in Canada comes from Ontario and the soapstone from Quebec. Crystalline talc is now used extensively in the ceramic industry for the manufacture of various kinds of tile and to mix with cement to give it greater plasticity in order to produce a smooth surfaced concrete.

On Saturday afternoon last the veterans of the Streetsville Post, with their families to the number of about ninety, held their annual picnic. Patterson's Flats over Trafalgar way proved an ideal spot for an outing. The water was fine, the field spacious for races and games and the maple grove a shady retreat for the eats. Len Pope moved a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Patterson for the use of his picnic ground and to Mr Smith for the splendid entertainment provided.

The committee of veterans who made such a success of the picnic were Comrades Arch, Lee and Pope.

The next regular meeting of the Post will be held on the evening of Thursday, September 19th, in the town hall. All veterans keep this date in mind and be on hand for a real get-together.

Community Club Lawn Social

A lawn social was held by the North Trafalgar Community Club, Aug. 17th, at the Beattie homestead on the 10th line.

It is an ideal place for a garden party. There is a large verandah facing a well-kept, sloping, beautiful lawn, where seats were placed for a large audience.

The frequent number of thunder showers in the afternoon and evening did not prevent a large number from attending. For this Club of Community Helpers are famous for so many good deeds done in the past, and will be written down by the recording angel.

"For a kind thought always brings forth a kind act,
Our memories with kind deeds of this club are well packed.
At every meeting they seemed to hear a voice say,
There is sorrow and trouble along life's highway.
For the weary, heavy-laden they help to set free,
All kindness to others, Jesus says, is for me,
Their time and money they were willing to share
For the gift without the giver is bare."

The Programme

Whenever the dry side of the seats would be turned up another shower would come. Then a good-natured, appreciative audience stood to hear the following interesting programme: Nat. McCracken, chairman's address; Selection by Streetsville Alfalfa Boys' Orchestra; Duet, Helen Price and Pearle Fewster; cello solo, Miss Effie Bird; comic song, King Hollingshead; violin and piano duet, Mary and Jim Steen; reading, Miss Margaret McMeekin; selection by the Alfalfa Boys.

Rev. R. K. Cameron, in a short address, said it gave him great pleasure to be present at this Club's social meeting. He had heard a great deal about the work they had been doing and commended this get-together community spirit. Then the President, Mrs. Cliff May, appeared with a bushel box containing the names of all who had purchased tickets, in the hopes that they would be forunate enough to win one of the three valuable prizes. Miss Le Ora Buck, Streetsville, won first prize, a blanket; second prize went to Omar Turney, Streetsville, a motor rug; and third prize, two silver candlesticks was won by Mrs. Harry Robinson, Hornby. A handsome present was won by Mrs. Harold Beaty for selling the greatest number of tickets for the contest and was presented by the President, Mrs. May extended a vote of thanks to the Beaty's for the use of their beautiful home, for their help in supplying material for the booths and seats and also to all who assisted with the program, which was carried by hearty clapping of hands. We were asked who were the young men in the Orchestra, known as the "Streetsville Alfalfa Boys." For general information their names and favourite instrument are as follows: Len Pope, piano; Herm McClintock, mouth organ; Fred Buckingham, mouthorgan; George Buckingham, mouthorgan; Lloyd McClintock, bones; King Hollingshead, banjo; Kirby Burns, piano accordian; Joe Burns, Spanish guitar; Hec. Graydon, drum and conductor.

If we are young, or if we are gray,
We love to hear the Alfalfa boys play
The good old tunes we used to know,
When Angels were calling for Old Black Joe,
Or the Golden Slippers we used to wear,
That makes us forget our trouble and care.
Now, boys, lend an ear to this sweet refrain,
Many who heard you that night, want to hear you again!
At the lunch counter before going away
Mabel said you could eat as well as play.

LET US SMILE

In a New Orleans court a man was charged with abusing his team and using loud and profane language. One of the witnesses was an old negro.

"Did he indulge in profanity?"

The witness seemed puzzled, so the lawyer put the question in another form.

"What I mean, Uncle Sam, is did he use words that would be proper for a minister to use in a sermon?"

"Oh, yes, sah," the old man replied, with a grin, "but dey'd have to be 'ranged in different order".

DEATH HAUNTS TRAIL OF JAYWALKER

Startling Nunmber of Fatalities In 1931

According to figures furnished by Hon. Leopold Macaulty, Minister of Highways, the practice of crossing streets diagonally at intersections, or crossing between intersections, brought death or injury to 900 persons in Ontario last year.

The responsibility for these accidents must be shared equally between drivers of motor vehicles and pedestrians. Both must realize that in these days of speeded up traffic, safety lies in full and earnest co-operation between those who walk and those who drive.

PEACOCK FAMILY RE-UNION

Last Saturday the descendants of Wm. Peacock, pioneer settler of Trafalgar Township, celebrated the centenary of his coming to Canada with a family re-union at LaSalle Park, Aldershot. Born at Beptin, England, in 1796, and married to Harriet Asby 1817, the first settler emigrated in 1832, and bringing his wife and children with him, first settled at Oakville in Trafalgar Township, later taking up the homestead on the Middle Road, which has remained in the family possession contiuously for 100 years. In 1845 it was the same William Peacock that built the pretty little Anglican Church at Palermo, where for many years he directed the congregational singing. The event, in addition to marking the family centennial., was incidentaly the fifth reunion of the clan, and was arranged by the Peacock Family Association of which Herbert Peacock, of Jarvis, is the President for 1932, and W. P. Burch, Toronto, Secretary.

The Aztec Mystery

A Thrilling Story of the Old West

BY MURRAY LEINSTER

SYNOPSIS.

Sonny Holman, believing he has been defrauded of the Aztec mine, holds up the mine payrolls. Janet Laurier, who holds legal title to the Atec, offers a reward for his capture. In reality, Tilford, the mine superintendent, and a cutthroat named Garcia are behind the ore robberies. Janet's mine guards shoot Sonny's horse. Janet secretly has the animal doctored and pleads with its owner to leave the country. Tilford plots to have her kidnapped by Garcia. As Garcias men close in on her, she comes on Sonny Holman and they take refuge in his cave hideout.

Meanwhile, a search party has been organized for Janet, and Tilford is made to lead the way. Sonny Holman, defending the cave, is wounded, but he and Janet get through the back of the canyon, where they are menaced by Tilford's mine guards in pursuit of Sonny.

CHAPTER XXIII.

They saw the horse. They pulled up and came whooping into the canyon. Sonny glancing bout him, muttered, "No cover. Come on, Janet," and went streaking away from them on top of Gunpowder. The frightened horse, perhaps for company, rejoined them and followed closely once more.

"Our chance, ma'am," drawled Sonny, as Gunpowder led the way down the canyon, "is mighty slim. First place, y' can't calm those hombres o' yours until after they've plugged me. Becon', they're mighty few t' handle all o' Garcia's gang anyways, especial' after I'm gone. An' third, this here's a pocket canyon an' Garcia'll be holdin' the mouth of it in about three shakes. So—"

There was a narrow, knifelike crack in the rocky wall before them, the entrance way into the circular sink that was Garcia's stronghold. From this, now, came twin puffs of smoke. A bullet whined over Sonny's head and another zipped through his blanket roll across the back of his saddle.

"Another bad card," said Sonny quietly. "I was hopin' maybe to surprise his guards at that gate. Now I got to plug 'em so we'll have us a fort of sorts. Get under cover, ma'am."

He flung himself from Gunpowder's back and fairly jerked her from the saddle of her own mount. He tapped Gunpowder's knees with the flat of his hand. The big stallion lay down. A bullet came just then, and the horse that had trailed gallantly behind them the whole way shuddered and collapsed without a kick. The bullet had gone fairly through the animal's brain.

"Lucky these Mex's are keen for repeatin' rifles" said Sonny coldly. "I'm goin' to do a li'l dustin' now."

He jerked the Winchester from the saddle of the dead animal and flung himself forward. They had halted in an indescribable mass of fallen rock and boulders from the cliffs above, and they had what was nearly a stronghold. The repeating rifle began to crackle. Bullets spat up the dust before the mounts of the mine guards.

"Ain't aimin' to kill any of 'em jus now," said Sonny grimly. "We need 'em to kinda help lick Garcia when he turns in.

Whining lead spattered upon the rocks about him. He fired again and again. Shouts came from Gleason, who by common consent seemed to be the leader. The horsemen scattered and dismounted.

"Settled down to seize us," drawled Sonny. "All the better. There's five fellers Garcia's got to wipe out before he gets to us."

He sighted carefully and fired, then a volley of bullets began to splash upon the boulder that had sheltered him, he wormed his way back and inspected the inlet to Garcia's stronghold.

"Right nice," he commented. "Right nice. Those Mex's built them a kinda breastwork outer boulders. Yuh have t' look close to see it ain't natural. But there's chinks in it to shoot out of, an' there ain't a chance even to make a bullet bounce on 'em."

Yells made him wriggle back to look. Janet was gazing white faced at the sight at the head of the canyon Garcia's gang, fully twenty-five strong, was swinging into the canyon, the ore wagons with their mule teams following. The trail was to be erased more or less later, but the ore train was not due back in Moleville until the next day. It might not be missed until then.

Bullets began to sing over Sonny's head. The sentries at the gateway were firing to warn Garcia of the state of siege. And as their guns sent their spiteful cracklings down the valley the five mine guards opened on the Mexicans with a sudden, raking fire. They could expect as little mercy from Garcia as they would give themselves to Sonny, and they shot with deadly desperation. And they were good marksmen.

One horse dropped. Two others plunged and kicked, evidently hit, and Garcia's men were thrown into confusion. But the small number of guns opposed to them was soon evident. Garcia shouted orders and in a space of minutes there were no men to be seen at all, only the uneasy mine mules standing uncertainly in their traces, and a bunched knot of riderless horses being led out of the canyon out of range. Garcia was toppled abruptly from his perch on the peak of satisfaction. It had become immediately and desperately necessary for him to wipe out the men between himself and his stronghold. For one reason alone, the loot of many season's robberies was cached behind the guarded slit.

Silence fell in the canyon for a time. The sun rose higher and flooded the place with warm light. Then, suddenly, there was a tiny puff of smoke from a heap of rocks. A shot answered it. Another shot from another spot. Others, fired without rhyme or rhythm, began to crackle here and there. Garcia's men were taking advantage of the boulders and were creeping up upon the mine guards, who were now caught between two fires, as was Sonny himself. On the one side the sentries at the gateway spat fire at any incautious movement. On the other there were two dozen of Garcia's men to send a stream of missiles when as much as a hand's breadth of flesh or cloth was exposed.

Sonny rolled a cigaret and smoked, frowning and biting at his lips. "I rek'n," he said quietly, "we'll sit still an' save ammunition. An' maybe in the middle of all this excitement we might kinda get overlooked so's we horn in at a suspicious moment or to speak. What's that?"

Yells and an outburst of firing warranted his jerking his head out from cover. And he grinned from ear to ear.

"Lordy!" he chuckled. "The party's gettin' warm. There's a bunch of fellows—Thompson leadin' 'em or I'm cockeyed—ridin' into here just a-rarin' to go! There they pop!"

Guns were going off with a decidedly impressive rattle of musketry. The Circle Bar riders, with what others they had gathered from neighboring ranches, had swept into the valley led by a thoroughly terrified Tilford. Believing Janet the victim of Garcia, they found guns pouring lead into them and went whooping for their assailants. Charging a boulder barricade from which shots had been fired, they literally flushed a shrieking Mexican from his cover. But the first panic of Garcia and his followers changed to desperation. They began to pour in a heavier fire and a better directed one, and since the whole canyon floor and the gentle slopes leading up to the walls were thickly spattered with boulders, Garcia's men were under cover.

In two minutes they checked the range riders' rushes and forced them from their horses and under cover as well. Then for ten minutes or more the firing lulled slightly. It never stopped. There were not less than sixty or seventy men in the canyon, each intent upon helping to annihilate another party. Each man seized upon the slightest exposure of an adversary as a chance for a shot. And the crackling of guns went up and down the canyon without a halt.

After a little while a new fierceness in the fighting developed. Garcia's sentries held the mouth of the stronghold, but they were few. Sonny Holman alone was between the five mine guards, firing upon and being fired upon by both. The five mine guards were now being attacked savagely by the main body of Garcia's men who, being outnumbered by the range riders, had to reach their stronghold or die. And the only way to get there was over the bodies of the mine guards.

One of the guards sprang convulsively to his feet, his rifle held in wide-flung arms. Half a dozen rifles spat at him and he dropped. But his first leap had been the automatic reflex of all his muscles when a ricocheting bullet found his heart. He had been dead before he jumped into sight.

A Mexican crawled snakelike from one protecting boulder to the next. He had seen fire flash from between two wedged-in stones, and he had wormed his way to this new spot to get a clear shot upon the unseen marksman from the rear. He saw the man — Gleason — watching a spot across the canyon with his rifle trained, his whole pose that of a cat, watching a mouse hole, ready to fire on the instant of the other's appearance. The Mexican, grinning savagely, drew a bead.

And a bullet came ripping out of nowhere, from Sonny's gun, and the Mexican did not fire. He lay instead in a sagging heap, his weapon trailing from his fingers.

Colour in Nature

The shadows of the trees in the wood, why are they blue? Ought they not to be dark? Is it really blue, or an illusion? And what is their color when you see the shadow of a tall trunk aslant in the air like a leaning pillar? The fallen brown leaves wet with dew have a different brown from those that are dry, and the upper surface of the green growing leaf is different from the under surface. The yellow butterfly, if you meet one in October, has so toned down his spring yellow that you might fancy him a pale green leaf floating along the road. There is a shining, quivering, gleaming; there is a charming, fluttering, shifting; there is a mixing, weaving — varnished wings, translucent wings, wings with dots and veins, all playing over the purple heath; a very tangle of many-toned lights and hues.

Then come the apples: if you look upon them from an upper window, so as to glance along the level plane of the fruit, delicate streaks of scarlet, like those that lie parallel to the eastern horizon before sunrise, and apple-green, and some that the wasps have hollowed, more glowingly beautiful than the rest; sober leaves and black and white swallows: to see it you must be high up, as if the apples were strewn on a sward of foliage.—Richard Jefferies, in "Field and Hedgerow."

A Cheshire Market

We traveled into market from the vales of Congleton,
From Disley, Rushton, Wilmslow, Reel House Brow and Torkington;
And I flaunted my big basket in the eyes of each I met,
Though all I had was tuppence for a bunch of mignonette.

A rosy little woman in a wide, starched pinafore,
With boxes of fresh radishes around her on the floor,
Called, "Fancy rhubarb, cauliflowers, apples, butter, eggs,"
The man beside her tried to sell me shoes and wooden pegs.

"Cheeses," cried the dairy woman, with a friendly beam,
"Gruyere, Cheddar, Gorgonzola, Camembert and Cream."
Puppies, rabbits, guinea pigs, good scissors, currant buns,
Were offered with black puddings, dusters, chins, Sally Lunns.

Curtains, treacle, dripping, Tam o' Shanters, tripe and ham,
Penknives, toffee, crumpets, muffins, lozenges and jam,
Sausages and overalls, and all the coats of arms
Of Cheshire towns on teapots; Whitby jet in seals and charms.

I strolled about the market till the houses hid the sun,
Bowing to folk from Disley, Marle, Rushton, Congleton.
The large, housewifely basket which I took is empty yet,
For all I had was tuppence for a bunch of mignonette.

Ducks Due to be Plentiful In Western Canada This Fall

Winnipeg.—Ducks will be plentiful in Western Canada this fall, hunters who have traveled over the north during recent weeks declare. The ducks are experiencing ideal conditions this season for breeding and hatching, and there is every prospect there will be record numbers flocking southward when the ice begins to coat northern lakes.

In lakes and swamps hundreds of flocks of ducks are passing the summer. There is no lack of water this season, such as last year decreased the flocks.

Children's Eyes

Those in charge of infants should take special care that they are not exposed lying on their backs in perambulators with their eyes to the sun.

It needs only a moment's reflection (says Mr. W. J. Elliott, Director of the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children) to realize the intense discomfort caused to the child, and a very little further thought is necessary to convince anyone of the danger of inflicting permanent injury. Should the provision of a canopy be impossible, all that is required is that the pram should be moved from time to time so that, while the benefit of the sunshine is experienced, the eyes remain shaded.

This Week's Science Advances

Why Coal Smoke Is Dangerous—Protecting Concrete with Asphalt

Sulphur dioxide is the constituent of coal smoke that menaces health and corrodes buildings. Even in diluted quantities, sulphur dioxide in the air will corrode steel and other metal and eat away marble, brick and mortar. In more concentrated amounts it may destroy vegetation and even human life.

According to an announcement of the American Chemical Society, discoveries which have been made by Dr. Robert D. Snow of the University of Illinois, and by Drs. S. W. Griffin and W. W. Skinner of the Bureau of Chemistry and Soils, will probably do much to free cities from the dangers of the noxious gas.

Dr. Snow's discovery is important because it shows that sulphur can be removed from coal before it is burned. The coal is first ground in the mine and then treated with an acid solution of ferric sulphate. Thus treated, it is washed and heated in an atmosphere of hydrogen, by which the sulphur is removed to form hydrogen sulphide. As much as 93 per cent. of the sulphur originally present in the coal can thus be extracted.

The work of Drs. Griffin and Skinner has been confined merely to the detection of sulphur dioxide, so that measures may be taken to prevent a repetition of the Meuse Valley disaster which occurred in Belgium in December, 1930, when sixty lives were lost in a poison fog. Drs. Griffin and Skinner have invented an apparatus in which sulphur dioxide is absorbed in an iodine solution. From the amount of iodine used up the chemists are able to calculate the percentage of sulphur in the air.

Asphalt to Protect Concrete

Concrete is attacked by sea water, alkaline fresh water and moist soil. In 1920 the harbor engineers of Los Angeles dipped concrete in hot asphalt at a temperature of 450 to 500 degrees Fahrenheit, for a period of from fifteen to twenty hours. Out of this early experiment came a method of impregnating concrete with asphalt by a vacuum pressure process, similar in many respects to that used in creosoting lumber. After immersion in the sea for a period of seven and one-half years concrete thus treated has remained intact.

By this so-called penocrete process —that is, the penetration of concrete by asphalt—the concrete after curing is thoroughly dried by air in a temperature chamber, for eighteen to twenty hours. The temperature is then raised to 240 degrees Fahrenheit and maintained there from two to four hours. The slabs are then rapidly moved into the main treating cylinder, which has been preheated and dried. Thus free water is driven off and a vacuum is produced in the voids created. Asphalt fills the chamber and rushes into the vacuous ores. Air pressure maintained for twelve hours completes the impregnation. The temperature is then allowed to drop slowly to cool the asphalt and the slabs. Concrete is thus impregnated to a depth of 1½ inches to 2 inches. The asphalt cannot be detached from the surface.

In describing the process in Civil Engineering, G. F. Nicholson, harbor engineer of Los Angeles, observes "that a well-constructed impregnated pile is practically permanent and will serve until the structure of which it is a part becomes obsolete—in any event for seventy-five years or more."

Large structures of concrete, such as sea walls, which cannot be treated in a retort, are impregnated in various pre-cast sizes.

Sodium Lamp Experiments

The various efforts of European and American physicists to give us an electric gas-lamp have inspired more than one item in this column. There can be no question that the present filament lamp is doomed Its efficiency cannot be greatly increased. The future of illumination belongs to the gas-lamp, which we now see on every hand imitating a red neon or blue argon the most complicated designs and facsimile signatures.

The physicists have been turning their attention to sodium, because it glows with an agreeable yellow light when its vapor is electrified in a tube. So we find Professor Georges Claude, Professor Pirani and others experimenting with it. In Holland the firm of Phillips, Ltd., and in the United States the General Electric Company are experimenting with identical types of sodium lamps that show clearly enough what may be expected a decade hence.

This new lamp consists of two cylinders, one within the other. The inner contains a little sodium and argon. When the cylinder is heated the sodium is vaporized and glows when a current is passed through it. The argon glows first and then communicates its heat to the sodium. The outer cylinder, from which air has been pumped, is required to keep the inner cylinder at a constant temperature and to reduce heat losses.

When drivers of fast cars in Holland entered a length of road brightly illuminated by these new gas lamps they switched off their headlights unasked. The laboratories of the General Electric Company report that the light is not suitable for homes or shops, but has possibilities for spectacular effects. For interiors, a whiter light with better color values is wanted. Still, the efficiency of the sodium light is extraordinary—amounting as it does to three or four times that of an ordinary filament lamp of the same candlepower.

A Window for the Heart

In The Journal for Experimental Biology and Medicine, Professor Walter L. Mendenhall describes an invention of his which makes it possible to see and even to photograph the heart as it beats within the breast. He fits a window of transparent celluloid (photographic film) in the muscles of the chest and squeezes the skin tightly upon it. An operation under ether or chloroform is necessary and arrangements must be made to draw out air from the chest so that the outer air may press upon the window and hold it in place.

Windows for the chest and abdomen are not new, but never before have they been made of hotographic film or fitted with such simplicity. Their primary purpose is to make it possible for students to se the heart, lungs and other internal organs of animals at work. Professor Mendenhall suggests that windows of quartz, which transmit ultraviolet rays, may even make it possible to treat the internal organs with beneficial light.

The Sea

This will... terrible beauty shall leave no pattern—
No pattern upon the sand
When the last bright flash of jeweled foam is spended
Like a coin within the hand.

This dark and emerald music rising and falling,
Crashing, note upon note,
Shall leave no echo of its cold, clear singing
For Time's deep throat.

Let us linger long and passionately on this shore
Where the breakers fall,
Knowing there will be left no fragment of its pattern:
Knowing this is all.

New So. Wales Calls For Lash and Hanging

Sydney, Australia.—Powerful citizens' organizations, with the support of newspapers, are demanding that the government restore the lash and hangman's noose in the state of New South Wales. Recent atrocious crimes are alleged to have been due to the modern humane treatment of prisoners.

It is proposed to restore the whipping triangle and the cat-o'-nine tails in all jails. It is also demanded that all first-degree murderers shall be executed, the court decision to be unalterable by the government.

"You must remember, my boy, that wealth does not bring happiness," said the fatherly parson.

"I don't expect it to," answered the modern youth. "I merely want it so that I may be able to choose the kind of misery that is most agreeable to me."

"When they came back from the wedding trip he had just $2.65 in his pickets."

"What a tight-wad!"

Planes Used as Ballast Save Helium on Akron

Washington.—Navy officers believe they have found a way to save money for the government by using airplanes as ballast for the giant dirigible Akron.

Atmospheric conditions often have enabled the Akron to land without releasing a considerable quantity of costly helium gas. Rear Admiral William A. Moffet, Chief of Naval Aeronautics, revealed recently that on recent cruises from Lakehurst, N.J., the Akron overcame this difficulty by radioing Lakehurst for two combat airplanes. These were hooked on to the dirigible and gave it sufficient weight to land without wasting any helium.

Youth of To-day

By Alexander Nairne, Regius Professor of Divinity, Cambridge University, in an Interview in London.

The modern young man hates to be thought an idealist. He prefers to think of himself as a realist, a little cynical about fine words and large hopes. Nevertheless, the ideals are still there.

It was almost shocking to me to find the way the latest generation seems to despise the war, and the heroic ideals behind it, as a folly which could have been prevented. But I believe it knows something which is hidden from the older people, for all their experience, and because of that attitude war will stop. The undergraduate nowadays is far more serious. He begins work at 9 in the morning and often spends his afternoon in the "labs." He is much less of a schoolboy and more a man-of-the-world than those of my own generation. His distinctive "Cambridge accent" is going, but so are blasphemy and drunkenness. He is not, as a rule, so well dressed as his predecessor, but he is far more gentle and considerate in manners—far more expert, in act, in the gentle art of living. His attitude of mind, whether he is evangelical or Anglo-Catholic, is more tolerant, more broadly sensible, and he is not troubled nowadays by "party" questions in religion.

Zero is Eliminated From Car Numbers

Springfield, Ill.—W. R. Smith's mind runs to figures. He has passed eight years working at his home in Centralia to complete an automobile number system eliminating the use of the zero and combining numerals and letters so four spaces can list almost 2,000,000 motor cars. The Secretary of State is studying the plan.

Royal Records

A unique collection of special Royal postmarks, forming a record of the Prince of Wales' Indian tour, has been completed, after ten years' work, by Mr. J. M. Cooper, a well-known philatelist, who travelled from India by plane to present it to his Royal Highness.

Every letter posted from the Royal Camp Post Office was franked with a special postmark, and Mr. Cooper collected covers bearing postmarks which account for every town and place visited during the tour.

The Prince already possesses very full records of his various tours and other activities, in the library of personal Press-cuttings which is kept at York House. There are over forty volumes, each containing nearly 7,000 cuttings, and they have been found very useful as a means of reference to past speeches and visits to persons whom his Royal Highness has met.

Comprehensive as this collection it, it does not contain all the Press-cuttings about the Prince. Only a selection of those which are received is actually kept.—Answers (London).

Review of Canadian National Exhibition Reveals It As World's Largest

Only 53 Years Since Inception — Has Gained World-Wide Prominence — Every Activity and Products Shown in Detail—Aptly Called "Show Window of Nations"

After the comparatively short existence of fifty-three years the Canadian National Exhibition at Toronto has achieved the unique success of becoming the world's largest annual exposition. This is not an idle boast for the attendance has at times exceeded the two million mark and the park buildings and equipment have a value in excess of twenty-one million dollars.

Eleven years after the Confederation of the Canadian Provinces was effected and hope surged high in the breasts of Canadians, the Exhibition came into being, and from that time forward kept astride with the new country and in many instances was a source of inspiration for new and astounding achievements from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Through the decades the industrial development and the Canadian National Exhibition have progressed together. From the time of its inception in 1879 as the "Toronto Industrial Exhibition," until the year 1904, its influence was almost entirely local, but it was steadfastly becoming Dominion-wide in activities. In that year the Board of Directors realized that the whole Dominion of Canada was vitally interested in the future and the activities of the institution and had the name changed to meet the new conditions.

From the exposition of 1904 to the close of the Great War it served only Canada, but with the cessation of hostilities the nations of the world turned their thoughts to trade development and sought a means of fostering world trade. The Canadian National Exhibition presented the opportunity, and to-day most of the manufacturing nations of the western and eastern hemispheres are increasing the size of their exhibits at this institution. It has now out grown its purely national characteristics and has become a permanent "World's Fair."

To say that it is one of the wonders of the world might be considered by some to be a broad and extravagant statement, but nevertheless it is one of the most important and most unique wonders existent in the 20th century. For here are gathered for the short space of two weeks of every year the prized possessions and the best of the products of the world. Every phase of human activity is represented in a detail of astounding completeness.

The display of the Federation of British Industries is the largest sent by any country to an exposition and represents a combined capital investment of approximately thirty billions of dollars. France, United States, Bermuda, Cuba, British West Africa, Mexico, New Zealand, Australia, India, the Union of South Africa, Panama and many other countries have exhibits at the Canadian National Exhibition.

It is a constant wonder to the visitors who view the Canadian National Exhibition for the first time that such a project could be perfected in the span of 53 years. Here within the limits of the city exists the phenomena of a second city. For that is precisely what the exposition is. It is populated yearly by a cosmopolitan population drawn from every quarter of the globe. It contains 100 permanent structures of solid and lasting construction, many of which have cost hundreds of thousands of dollars to erect, and four in excess of one million dollars each. It stretches along Toronto's waterfront for a distance of 1½ miles. The grounds have an area of 350 acres, through which winds 9½ miles of paved streets. It has its own telegraph, telephone, street lighting, street cleaning, transportation, customs, postal, police, fire and hospital systems as well as its own administrative department. The buildings provide over 2,000,000 square feet of exhibit space. Its prize lists yearly amount to the excess of $100,000. To stage this colossal attraction costs about $1,000,000 annually.

It has been the constant endeavour of the management to provide a judicious admixture of education and recreation. The arts and sciences, industry, agriculture, sport and pageantry are offered for fourteen days and nights, this year from August 26th to September 10th. The buildings are of stone, steel, brick and concrete, and of exquisite architectural design. The park is covered with groves of beautiful trees, magnificent horticultural effects have been obtained throughout the 350 acres, and the whole affords a most desirable place for the combination of business and pleasure.

Designed primarily for the stimulation of trade, the broadening of markets and the promotion of the general welfare, the Canadian National Exhibition has now reached the point at which it is described as the "Show Window of the Nations"—a truly international organization for the promotion of business without losing sight of the cultural phases so necessary to the all-round advancement of the people and their interests. Canada, the great young giant of the North, continues to expand and progress, stimulated immeasurably by the Canadian National Exhibition.

Scout Notes

The Streetsville Boy Scouts had to change their camping grounds on account of the ground near the 5th Line being too low and wet, so they moved into Huttonville Park, where they rendered a very fine program Monday night,, with the assistance of the Alfalfa Boys Orchestra. They had an audience of about 300 people who were delighted with the entertainment.

Addresses were made by Revs. R.J.W. Perry and Ross Cameron.

The program will be repeated to-night (Thursday) from 8.30 to 11, and everybody is invited to be present. Turn out and let our boys see that you are interested in them. If you are driving a car take somebody that hasn't one with you—it is not right to be taking somebody that has a car, for that person might drive it himself and take some body else, who hasn't one ——and thereby help to swell the crowd.

British Railroad Scout Societies

A Scout Society has been formed by Scout members of the Great Western Railway staff at Paddington, London. Other important divisional points such as Swindon, Bristol, Newport, Birmingham and Swansea are organizing similar societies.

How Many Scouts in Ireland?

In Northern Ireland 2,602 Boy Scouts, 618 Rovers, 2,306 Wolf Cubs and 515 leaders—a total of 6,051. Free State: 1,025 Scouts, 303 Rovers, 128 Sea Scouts, 26 Rover Scouts, 553 Wolf Cubs, 256 leaders—a total of 2,291.

Camp Good Turns

In carrying out their daily good turn while in camp Scouts have discovered some novel forms of service. One troop provided an all night guard for a girls' camp near which a suspicious character had been seen. Another troop "shaved an old gentleman." Numerous cars have been pulled from sand and mud holes, and one car was dragged from a lake. Many farmers have been assisted in various ways.

Mr. R.H. Greig showed us a stalk of corn taken from his garden, which had 8 cobs on it. This is quite a freak in the vegetable line. Has anybody got anything more unusual than this?

Mr. H. W. Dawson, ex-Mayor of Brampton, had several ribs broken when his car collided with one driven by a woman, on the Sixth Line west Chinguacousy. He is 78 years of age. There will be an investigation.

DRUMQUIN

Mr. Stanley Plum lost a valuable horse last week.

There was what we would say a family re-union at the Fuller home on Sunday.

Messrs. F. Dent and A. Hillmer propose going on a fishing expedition to Bracebridge next week.

A number from here took in the Masonic Street Fair Saturday night at Oakville. They report it was real good.

At present the weather is both pleasant and good for harvesting.

In Third Form Mae Gibson and Chas. Hersom led the class, obtaining seven subjects each.

An analysis of the Middle School results show 168 candidates' papers with 123 successes or 73%. Of these 147 were recommended, so that the per centage of those recommended to write and who passed is 84 for the school. In both Geometry and Latin Comp. all candidates passed.

The following who wrote Upper School here were successful in all subjects—Anthony Ironsides, Russell Langmaid and Melville Steggall

School will re-open at 9 a.m. on Thursday, Sept. 1st. Pupils will find out on opening day the books and supplies they require and will be able to procure them at the local stationers.

Mr. Editor

I noticed a small item in your paper of Aug. 18th about our new house, and wish to thank you for the comment. I simply wish to add that the contractor Mr. William Arch is to be congratulated upon the neatness with which he did his work. Experts have examined it and say that the work could not be improved on and Streetsville should be proud of having such a competent man in our midst—R.H.Greig.

John Irwin

Death came very suddenly yesterday to Mr. John Irwin, 2nd Line, west, Toronto Township, in his 79th year. He had been around as usual a few days before. He was a prosperous farmer and well and favorably known. He was a Reformer and a staunch member of St. Andrews Presbyterian Church.. He is survived by his widow, who was formerly Matilda McClelland, and four sons, Murray and Oscar, at home, Arthur, Toronto, and Robert, Guelph.

The funeral will leave the home Saturday afternoon, at 2 30 D.S.T., for St. St. Andrews Presbyterian Church, where service will be held, and interment will take place in Streetsville Cemetery

ENGAGEMENTS

Mr. and Mrs. A. Harvey Forster, Mississauga Road, Port Credit, wish to announce the engagement of their daughter, Marjory Gertrude, to Mr. Alexander Shearer, B. A., eldest son of Mrs. Shearer and the late Mr. A. G. Shearer of Toronto. Marriage to take place on Sept. 10 at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Anson C. Forster, Cooksville.

Lacrosse

Last Saturday evening a very large crowd watched the game here between the local boys and Malton, and were well repaid for coming out as there were plenty of thrills, heads were split open, players were bumped with terriffic force against the fence and others had the wind knocked out of them while trying to check their opponents in rushes on the goal. And there was nearly a fight when some men walked on the field to remonstrate with the referee on a certain decision. But you cannot put anything over Referee Warr of Brampton — for he knows his onions. Oh boys, it was some game and there will be more like it. The Malton boys are a husky bunch and hard to beat. The score was 10——6 and goals for the locals were made as follows—Hill 5, Bailey4, Nixon 1.

Tuesday night there was another game when our team went to Malton. The Malton team tried to win back their lost ground, but after fighting hard until it was too dark to see the ball, play was suspended, the score being a tie 5—5.

Streetsville are now leaders of the League, with Malton a close second. The finals will be played in the afternoons, dates to be announced later.

There will be an exhibition game at the local 'box' this Saturday night with a team from Brampton. The game is called for seven sharp as the days are getting short. Come out and root for our town boys and help them to win. We know they can lick the Excelsiors if they get enough support.

Football

The local football team suffered a defeat last Friday at Sheridan. The score was 3—0

Lakeview football team will play the locals at Peel Park tomorrow—Friday—evening. This will be an exciting game. Come out and help your home team to win by your support.

Community Club

The last meeting was held at the home of Mrs. Ritchie, on Aug. 16th with a goodly number present. The afternoon was spent in planning for the lawn social held the next evening.

After all the business had been attended to the hostess, assisted by her daughter, Mrs. May Workman, served a dainty lunch.

The next meeting will be Aug. 31 at half past two at the home of Mrs Ern Fullerton.

Village Council

Minutes of a special meeting of the Streetsville Council held Monday evening, August 22nd, 1932, at the Town Hall. All members present, the Reeve occupied the chair.

C. G. Quennell interviewed council re the public school drain and the grading of Pine Street. The road and bridge committee will meet with Mr. Quennell over these matters.

C. D. Evans requested that council re-imburse him in some way for the wiring done by him on the Rappaport cottages, for which he was never paid. The property committee will report on this matter at the next regular meeting.

Arising out of the discussions of the evening, the following resolutions were moved, seconded and duly passed:

Johnston and Foster: That the electrician be given one week's holiday with pay. He to arrange for his own relief, who will be paid by the village.

Johnston and Evans: That the Public School board be granted the use of space in the town hall to be used for the purpose of a school room. The School Board to look after the work of making alterations and renovating. The Council agree to bear half the expense of such work and all the expense of a suitable heating system. The school board to pay for the heating of the building.

Bailey and Foster: That the Fire and Light Committee be authorized to proceed with the work of laying a 4" water main on Maiden Lane from Queen to Church Street, and 60' north on Church Street.

Johnston and Evans: That the rate of pay for all extra labor hired by the village shall be 25c per hour. And that the rate for a team and man shall be 50c per hour.

There being no further business the meeting on motion adjourned.

Foster—Bailey—

—That the Village Solicitor is hereby instructed to make a demand of the Bank of Nova Scotia for payment of the amount of our claim against them, covering the cheques that were given the said Bank at different times, and which were not credited to the Village account. H.W.Hope, Reeve.

Here and There

Lord Nigel Douglas-Hamilton, in charge of a party of thirty English Public School boys, who will arrive in Montreal Aug. 26, under his supervision, claims that there is no better "finishing school" than a tour of this nature.

First wheat harvesting reports in the Canadian West were reported by the agricultural department of the Canadian Pacific Railway from Winnipeg, July 23, with barley and rye going under the knife in the Alida and Estevan subdivisions of the railway. The wheat was harvested in southern Manitoba.

August will see the season in the Canadian Rockies at its peak with the Prince of Wales Trophy, already bringing in golf entries from far and near, scheduled for August 15-20 and coinciding with this event the Indian Days' celebration, August 19-21, which will be attended by Stoneys, Crees and Kootenays.

Conducting five French and five Swiss professional men from Paris, France, to this continent, Nicolas Racz, of the Paris office of the Canadian Pacific Railway, is visiting Toronto, Niagara Falls, Detroit, Chicago, Washington, New York, Albany, Montreal, Quebec, and returning to Europe on the Empress of Britain, August 6.

Mystery cruises, so popular out of New York, Scuthampton and other great ports, were ushered in on the British Columbia coast with the sailing of the coastal liner Princess Patricia, of the Canadian Pacific coastal service, to an unknown destination under sealed orders, recently. Close to 200 passengers were attracted by the trip.

Juicy, red, succulent buffalo steaks grilled to a nicety, greeted the Australian and New Zealand delegates to the Ottawa Imperial Conference as they entered the dining car of their special train over the Canadian Pacific Railway out of Vancouver recently. The Anzacs were particularly impressed by this menu and pronounced it better than any beef they had ever eaten.

Governor Franklin Delano Roosevelt of New York, Democratic Nominee for the Presidency, has for years been one of New Brunswick's most distinguished non-resident visitors, members of his family annually spending several weeks at the Roosevelt summer home at Campobello, one of the Grand Manan Island Group in Passamaquoddy Bay. He first came there as a mere lad back in 1895.

Answering the call of Mt. Assiniboine, Matterhorn of the Canadian Rockies, old and new members of the Trail Riders' Association, gathered at Banff July 20th with the objective of climbing the long ascent to the roof of the world and the Alpine country of the Great Divide in the vicinity of the Mountain. The ride required five days in all. Twenty American girls, summering at the Lake Windermere ranch, were among these taking part. (860)

LOW VOLTAGE MAY KILL

Depends to Great Extent Upon Points of Contact.

It has now been quite definitely established that death may result even from 110 volts, provided it is passed through the body at certain points and under certain circumstances. If the body is in contact with a moist surface and if the current passes through portions of the body where there are vital tissues, death is more likely to result than when it passes into the body under other circumstances.

In a recent consideration of the subject, two investigators emphasized the fact that the location of the contacts determines to a large extent the pathway of the current through the body. For example, if the contacts are made with one arm or leg on the same side, it seems hardly possible that a great amount of current will pass through the head. The brain is easily injured by electricity, and in legal executions it is customary to put one electrode on the skull so that the electricity will pass through the brain. In an analysis of 479 cases, an industrial surgeon found that the current in the vast majority passed through the body by the hands or arms and then was grounded. Occasionally current enters into the legs of men working on telegraph wires.

In an endeavor to determine absolutely the facts in these cases, the investigators mentioned undertook to study the effect of electric shock on rats, and applied the electrode at various parts of the body. It was found that a continuous circuit produces more danger than alternating current. It was found that no rat subjected to a continuous circuit survived permanently. Their death was due largely to the burning and destruction in the place where the current entered.

Death from electric shock is largely due to failure of the breathing apparatus. Such deaths were not so frequent when the current passed through the hind legs and did not pass through the brain, and still many died from failure of the breathing apparatus. When the current does not pass directly through the chest or the upper portion of the spinal cord, the respiratory apparatus is, in men, not so likely to be affected.

PROFITABLE BEGGING

One Vienna Professional Employs Three Girl Secretaries.

The swarms of beggars in Vienna streets who are generously supported by the sentimental Viennese, despite the obviously business-like methods by which they set about the business of begging themselves through life, have now begun to cause interest to Viennese newspapers.

The latest development is for the Vienna beggar to open a bank account and request his patrons to pay into it their "contributions" to save him postage.

One beggar in a Viennese suburb has three girl secretaries whom he keeps hard at work all day dealing with his correspondence. A recent case in the courts developed the fact that the familiar figures who go from table to table of Vienna cafes offering stationery, court plaster or matches to the public who generally pay readily enough, are in this man's employ. His income easily exceeds that of a high state official.

The Vienna police look with a very lenient eye on beggars, and there is even a class of disabled beggars who receive licenses and proudly inscribe themselves in official documents as "professional beggars."

In nearly every shopkeeper's cash register is a bowl containing copper coins of very low value. On Friday, the "beggar's day," this bowl is put out on the counter and every beggar is allowed to help himself to one or two of the coins.

STRANGE OLD CASTLE.

Glamis Castle Rich In Romantic Associations and Legends.

Glamis Castle, immortalized in Shakespeare's "MacBeth," is one of the most interesting places in Scotland. It was the girlhood home of the Duchess of York.

The castle, as seen nowadays, dates mostly from the seventeenth century, but the walls of the tower, 15 feet thick, were built when MacBeth was Thane of Cawdor. Shakespeare took a dramatic liberty when he had MacBeth murder Duncan within these walls, but nevertheless Glamis is rich in romantic associations.

On the authority of Sir Walter Scott, we are told that the castle contains "a secret chamber, the entrance to which, by the law or the custom of the family, must only be known to three persons at once, namely, the Earl, his heir apparent and any third person they may take into their confidence.

Weird stories have been told of some ghastly creature being imprisoned in the secret chamber for centuries, but the mystery has never been cleared up to appease the curiosity of the public.

CENTRAL PACKING.

There is no doubt that the reputation of Ontario apples will be greatly enhanced by central packing which ensures uniformity and higher quality. The cold storage plants, which have given a fresh impetus to central packing and exporting are likely to contribute very considerably to the marketing of berries and tender fruits. Such product can be held in storage for a time and thus the season can be substantially extended. Moreover, by pre-cooling, and shipping in properly refrigerated cars, berries and tender fruits may be landed in satisfactory condition in Winnipeg, or Quebec and the Maritime Provinces.—Farmer's Advocate.

Pulse May Vary.

A person's pulse rate over a period of time may vary 10 to 15 beats a minute without causing particular reason for considering him abnormal.

United Kingdom producers to receive full opportunity of reasonable competition in Canadian markets.

Canada will appoint the tariff board, which will review tariffs on request of the United Kingdom.

Duties against United Kingdom products not to be increased except on report of the tariff board.

Existing surcharges on U.K. products to be abolished as soon as finances of Canada will permit.

Race With Serum Saves Boy's Life

Motorcycle Officers in Relays Speed From London to Guelph

Roaring for 87 miles through the thick of holiday traffic Saturday afternoon, five motorcycle officers in relays between London and Guelph averaged a mile a minute in an effort to bring serum to save the life of a six-year-old boy who was facing death in Guelph General Hospital.

When Dr. H. O. Howitt of Guelph found that the life of his patient depended upon obtaining a serum which could only be obtained from the laboratories of the Victoria Hospital at London, he called in the aid of the city police, who in turn, turned to the provincial police in an endeavor to make all speed in saving the child's life. From hospital to hospital the officers sped, losing no moment, and they were rewarded last night by the assertion of the doctor that only their effort had brought his patient to safety.

The child had been suffering from inflammation of the brain. The Victoria Hospital had a diagnosis of the case, and when Dr. Howitt 'phoned the hospital that the police would call for the serum, the serum was prepared with haste, and despatched immediately. From the time the aid of the police was first called until the serum reached Guelph Hospital, scarcely one hour and 50 minutes had elapsed.

Clause Prevents Soviet Dumping

Ottawa.—Embodied in the Anglo-Canadian agreement is the following clause designed to prevent Russian dumping:

"This agreement is made on the express condition that, if either Government is satisfied that any preferences hereby granted in respect of any particular class of commodities are likely to be frustrated in whole or in part by reason of the creation or maintenance directly or indirectly of prices for such class of commodities through state action n the part of any foreign country, that Government hereby declares that it will exercise the powers which it now has or will hereafter take to prohibit the entry from such foreign country directly or indirectly of such commodities into its country for such time as may be necessary to make effective and to maintain the preference hereby granted."

Ultra-violet Rays Used as Antiseptic by Doctors

Copenhagen, Denmark.—Successful use of artificial sunlight, ultra-violet rays, as an antiseptic in 200 cases of surgery has been reported to the second international congress of light by Dr. Frank P. Corrigan and Dr. William Boukalik of St. Alexis Hospital, Cleveland, Ohio.

The lamps used in Cleveland, they stated, adiate virtually the same wave lengths of ultra-violet as reach the earth in sunlight filtering through the atmopshere in the Summertime.

Belgium to Increase Duties

Brussels.—The Belgian Government is considering an increase of duties on woolen and cotton fabrics and furniture. The market has been invaded by British woolens and cottons and French furniture, and Belgium, being unable to export its own goods to any extent, has decided to reserve its home market for domestic manufactures.

London Plans to Rid Streets of Horses

London.—The horse is on its last legs in London. Although drastic action is not yet contemplated, the police have decided to introduce regulations which will ultimately result in horse-drawn traffic disappearing from principal streets.

Recently, the suggestion of restricting motor coaches to certain areas in the outer circle of Central London was found to be impracticable. Horses were then recognized as a serious difficulty, but the consensus of opinion was that they were practially indispensable for some classes of traffic. Since then, however, the largest concerns employing horses have shown a marked tendency in favor of motor vericles and not much opposition is expected to the gradual passing of the animal.

It will entail no hardship on the faithful horse, whose lot on the crowded, hard-surfaced streets of the metropolis is, to say the least, unpleasant. In London's narrow thoroughfares the pace is often set by the slowest moving vehicle, and much of the congestion during rush hours is directly attributable to the horse.

It is stated that the first step taken will be to restrict the busiest central streets to motor traffic. Meanwhile, the whole subject of London's traffic is being carefully studied. Traffic has outgrown efficient control, and authorities find it increasingly difficult to cope with the growing congestion. London streets, narrow and curiously intersected, are unsuited to modern traffic.

Italy Led in Tonnage

Rome — The Italian Mercantile Marine again held first place in the tonnage passing through the Dardanelles during 1931. The total was 5,016,973 tons, followed by England with 3,684,132 tons and by Greece with 3,351,389 tons.

Canada-India Trade Agreement?

Ottawa Expresses Hope Direct Negotiations Will Begin Soon

Ottawa.—Conversations have been opened for a trade agreement between Canada and India. A statement issued by the Dominion Government follows.

"Advantage has been taken of the presence of the Indian delegation at Ottawa to initiate conversations with respect to the desirability of a trade agreement between the two countries. There have been found to be a considerable number of openings for mutual trade and it is hoped that these conversations will shortly lead to direct negotiations between the two governments, for a trade agreement, which will be of substantial benefit to the development of trade between Canada and India."

London's Heat Wave Takes 21 According to Report

London.—England's heat wave subsided Sunday as the temperature dropped to 90 degrees and the northern part of the country received rain and cold breezes off the North Sea.

At that, it was hot enough and hospitals appealed for loans of electric fans, rare in London. The weekend movement to the seaside swamped transportation facilities.

The deaths of 21 persons, including three suicides, were attributed to the heat Friday when the temperature reached a high point of 99 degrees, nearly an all-time record, and thousands sweltered in the greatest heat wave in years.

Dominion's Exports Increased to Britain

Ottawa.—Canada's domestic exports to Great Britain in July amounted in value to $16,047,000, which was an increase of $4,675,000 over the exports of June and also an increase of $2,973,000 over the exports of July, 1931. It is reported by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

Exports to the United States amounted in value to $12,522,000, which was a decline of $3,229,000 from the exports of June and a decline of $9,532,000 from the exports of July, 1931.

The chief items which brought about the large increase in exports to Great Britain compared with a year ago when prices generally were higher than at present were: Barley from $97,000 to $188,000; wheat from $4,674,000 to $6,393,000; cattle from $258,000 to $343,000; cheese from $1,374,000 to $1,561,000, and meats from $157,000 to $540,000.

The export of square timber increased from $54,000 to $109,000; wood pulp from $36,000 to $350,000; automobiles from $15,000 to $27,000; machinery from $184,000 to $334,000; copper from $192,000 to $406,000; films from $144,000 to $177,000.

France and Portugal Sign Trade Treaty

Lisbon.—A treaty has been signed with France allowing 150,000 hectoliters of Portuguese wine to enter that country yearly when the French production is not less than 60,000,000 hectoliters. When the output runs below that figure Portugal may increase the quantity.

The recent 15 per cent increase on Portuguese goods imported into France has been abolished in exchange for concessions from the Portuguese Government to French imports, including automobiles, perfumes, pharmaceutical products, farming machines and textiles.

A commission has been named by the Portuguese Government to investigate the causes of the low prices of cork with a view to remedying the situation. Growers are unable to cut cork from trees at present prices.

Cure is Announced For Sleeping at Wheel

New York.—Science has perfected a cure for the driver who falls asleep at the wheel of his automobile. Narcolepsy, the name given to sudden spells of irresistible sleepiness, has been found to succumb to doses of ephedrine, a drug which in the form of mahuang was used in Chinese medicine 4,000 years ago.

Dr. Harry A. Collins, who announced the cure, declared one case had responded instantly after recurring attacks for 12 years had caused the man to have several automobile accidents.

Free Movies Attract Westerners to Town

Lucky Lake, Sask.—Merchants of this town have adopted a unique plan to get business back on an even keel. For the past six weeks they have financed a free motion-picture show to attract farmers to town, and the plan has been so successful in a material and social way that it will be continued for another eight weeks at least.

Africa's wild life is often subjected to disease and herds of animals of all kinds are decimated by epidemics.

Oregon Earwig Exterminated By Fly From Europe

Portland, Ore.—The earwig, a summertime pest which destroyed gardens, damaged trees and invaded the home, is rapidly being exterminated in this vicinity as the result of a three-year campaign.

The warfare, financed by the city, county and Oregon State College, was waged with the tachinid fly, a natural enemy of the earwig, imported from Europe. Thousands of the flies were raised in cages and pits, some even in individual glass phials to protect them from parasites, and released to destroy the earwigs.

Million Farms Electrified

Washington.—Gaining more in 1931 than in any previous year, electrification has now been extended to approximately 1,000,000 farms in the United States. The gain last year over 1930 was approximately 90,800 farms.

And brown bees drone their honey-call.

Little Time Gained by Reckless Driving

You may be surprised to find how little time is gained by weaving and reckless driving in traffic. The Rochester Police Department made a test over a recent period of one month. Every morning when traffic was heavy two cars were sent from Kodak Park to Police Headquarters. One drove as rapidly as possible without actually causing an accident. It weaved in and out of traffic and jumped lights when possible. The other was driven in a careful, prudent manner.

When the reports from the operation of these two cars over a period of a month were tabulated, it was found that the recklessly driven car had gained an average of a minute and a half overhalf over the other car on the three-mile traffic congested course. In other words, by endangering themselves and others, the drivers of the carelessly driven police cars had gained approximately a half minute on each mile.

One morning the police followed another car that was weaving in and out of traffic. When they located the owner at the end of his dangerous journey they found him in his office, his feet on the desk and the morning newspaper spread out before him. He had had no real reason for his speed.—Public Safety.

May—"No, indeed—I was on them."

Man and His Diet

By I. M. Rabinowitch, in The McGill News (June, '31).

Although many causes may be assigned to the alleged deterioration of the human race, the unwise choice of foods is not one of the most important factors. Given an ordinary every-day diet—a diet balanced by the individual's preference for quality, variety, taste, and economy—it makes no difference what the healthy individuad eats. Most people need know very little about the ash content of their orange juice, the caloric value of bacon and eggs, or carbohydrate, fat, protein of mineral contents. In the selection of food man may still profitably heed the dictates of his instinct and experience.

Yet the gullibility of the average individual, particularly in matters of health, is notorious, and he is easily impressed by the recommendations of advertisers and pseudo-scientists with respect to certain foods. Orange growers, for instance, would have us believe that a large number of people are suffering from acidosis, and that the prevention and cure of this disease lies in the consumption of large amounts of orange juice. Now acidosis implies an acid reaction of the body tissues. The description of the physiological factors governing this reaction is a long story, but I may tell you that of all the mechanisms the human body possesses to combat disease, that which prevents acidosis is one of the most efficient we know of. Except in prolonged starvation and in a few serious illnesses, acidosis does not exist.

One cereal manufacturer would have us do away with coffee. Is coffee to lead to the deterioration of the human race? Life insurance companies, with their vast experience in mortalities and morbidities, might have some information on this subject. These companies, in order to prosper, must be very alert in investigating the health and habits of their applicants; they pool their information and take advantage of every medical advance, but I believe they have, as yet, to ask an applicant—Do you drink coffee?

The dairy industries would have us flood our tissues with milk. Is milk an indispensable part of the adult's diet? The answer may be found in the natural history of animal and man. Briefly, milk is supplied by the mammalian adult to its young, and this supply varies in different species from approximately one month to one year after birth. Thereafter, none of the species in the state of nature is furnished with milk. Milk, therefore, cannot be considered a natural food for the adult animal. Since these animals live and continue to propagate, it is obvious that the adult diet must contain all of the necessary food elements which are present in the maternal milk. Man's diet affords no exception to this rule.

Whole-wheat bread offers an example of psychological bias running contrary to experimental facts. Since milling became known, civilized man has tended to depart from the whole-wheat bread of his ancestors. In spite of all "bread reform" efforts to keep up the use of this product, white bread has almost universally displaced it among civilized peoples. With the advent of the Great War, Germany, and eventually the entire world, of necessity took to whole-wheat bread, but shortly afterward reverted largely to the white product. Insistence upon the use of whole-wheat bread has been based latterly upon its high content of a certain vitamin, its value in the relief of intestinal disorder, and its nutritional value. It might therefore be of interest to those who do not relish this article of diet, to know that Vitamin B is found in a variety of other and more attractive products, and as far as the intestinal disorder is concerned, other substances may be used more economically and efficiently. As for its nutritional value, the verdict is "not proven"; white flour is beyond any doubt a better source of energy. One of the sugars which whole-wheat bread contains, called pentose, yields about 25 per cent. less energy than the sugars of white flour. In addition, it has been shown that the proteins of bran are digested with great difficulty, and are only partly utilized. Whole-wheat bread is therefore uneconomical.

We now come to the vitamins. We are told in the advertisements that man has become his own arch-enemy by adopting a diet that deprives him of proper nourishment. Thus weakened, he is subject to all illnesses from which he now suffers. To protect ourselves against the ravages of civilization we must take tablets of vitamins in concentrated form. Foods must now be exposed to ultra-violet light if civilized man is to be protected against himself. When we read of similar practices among the Medicinemen of the Congo we call them fetishes and tabus.

The reaction of the medical profession in general, to the incorporation of vitamins in food, is succinctly put in The British Medical Journal of April 18th, 1931. Apropos of incorporation of vitamins in bread, the statement reads as follows:

It is possible that good results on the general health of the population might follow an increased consumption of Vitamin B, though the point is open to much controversy . . . It seems, on the whole, unlikely that the artificial addition of vitamins to bread would profit any but the firms who could advertise the article to the disadvantage of their rivals.

Because rats fed on a diet deficient in Vitamins B1 and B2 cease to gain weight and die in three weeks, it does not follow that we must eat foods exposed to ultra-violet rays. This experiment merely proves that these vitamins are a necessary part of food; but experiment has also shown that vitamins are very widely distributed in nature and our natural foods. We are told in one advertisement that one must become almost a student of the subject in order to obtain the proper supply of vitamins. May I suggest that one must be a very expert student on the subject to avoid them.

One can hardly dismiss this subject without mention of yeast—a product so prominent in the public eye at present. In spite of its well advertised high vitamin content, I believe I may state without hesitation that notwithstanding the endorsement of "the physician to former Spanish Royalty," a "noted Viennese hospital authority," and others, that good health and long life are still perfectly compatible without the daily consumption of a cake or two of this product. If you ask for an explanation of the use of these physicians' names, my answer is that all of these endorsements come from parts of Europe where the struggle for existence is at present acute.

I am not attempting to belittle the very valuable work which has been done in the science of nutrition. But as new facts are established the medical profession applies them where it believes they should be applied. The exercise of judgment is most important, for we now have definite experimental proof that excess quantities of at least one of the vitamins can do no harm, producing a condition not unlike that found in hardening of the arteries.

If left alone man will choose a variety and sufficient quantity of foods, and because of this variety and quantity his diet will contain all of the essential food elements. Modern comforts may at times tempt him to eat too much but he will eventually learn as insurance statistics show, that when he adds ten pounds to the belt-line, he subtracts about one year from the life-line.

The American salegirl is probably the most snobbish person alive. In the shopping world, Price reigns supreme. The firm belief among all the $16-a-week girls seems to be that every customer is a millionaire. Why cannot salespeople be taught that it is better to make a $20 sale than not to make a $50 one?—Corothy Garesche Holland.

SHE WAS GETTING FATTER

Now Down to Normal

"I was putting on flesh very rapidly," writes a married woman, "and also suffering from constipation, and was very liverish. Three months ago a friend advised me to take a teaspoonful of Kruschen Salts in hot water every morning. I have kept this up regularly ever since, although I have been down to my normal weight (126 lbs.) for several weeks. I never felt better in my life, and I intend to carry on with Kruschen always. Several of my friends have remarked how slim I was getting and how well I was looking. After my having told them how it was done, they are doing the same."—(Mrs.) D. H.

Overweight arises frequently because the system is loaded with unexpelled waste, like a furnace choked with ashes and soot. Allowed to accumulate, this waste matter is turned into layer after layer of fat. The six salts in Kruschen assist the internal organs to throw off each day the wastage and poisons that encumber the system. Then, little by little, that ugly fat goes—slowly, yes—but surely. You feel wonderfully healthy, youthful and energetic—more so than ever before in your life!

Don't Quit

When things go wrong, as they sometimes will,
When the road you're trudging seems all up-hill,
When funds are low and debts are high,
And you want to smile but you have to sigh,
When care is pressing you down a bit,
Rest if you must, but don't quit;
Life is queer with its twists and turns,
As every one of us sometimes learns,
And many a failure turns about,
When he might have won had he stuck it out.
Don't give up, though your pace is slow—
You may succeed with another blow.
Often the goal is nearer than
It seems to a faint and faltering man.
Often the struggler has given up,
When he might have captured the victor's cup,
And he learned too late, when the night slipped down,
How close he was to the golden crown.
Success is failure turned inside out—
The silver tint of the clouds of doubt.
And you can never tell how close you are,
It may be near when it seems afar;
So stick to the fight when you're hardest hit—
It's when things seem worst that you mustn't quit.

Young Clerk—"Could you learn to love me, do you think, Josephine?"

Gay Young Stenographer — "Well, Napoleon, you never can tell. I learned short hand in six weeks."

A young man fell into a state of coma but revived before his friends could bury him. One of them asked what it felt like to be dead.

Young Man—"Dead! I wasn't dead, and I knew it because my feet were cold and I was hungry."

Friend—"But how did that make you sure?"

Young Man—"Well, I knew I would not be hungry in Heaven and my feet would not be cold in the other place."

Pastor—"You say you cannot get along with your husband? People must learn to bear and forbear. Did you every try heaping coals of fire on his head?"

Young Wife—"No, I never did. But I've tried boiling hot water."

Father (to son who has just spoken to a pretty girl)—"Do you know that girl?"

Son—"Know her? Wh, I'm engaged to her."

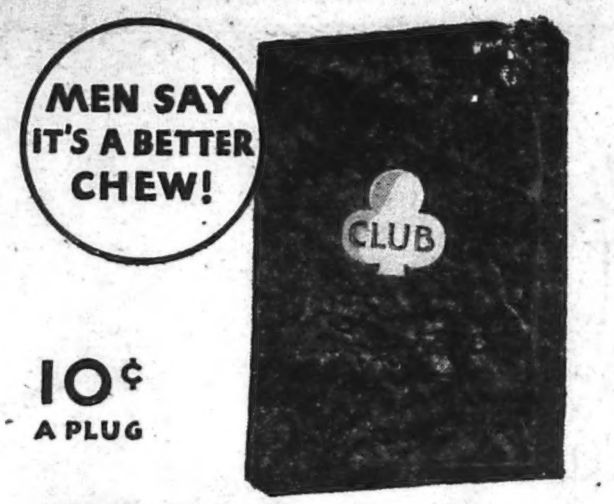
Father—"Heavens! Are you serious about her?"

Son — "Oh, no. Just a passing fiancee."

"Good-bye," said Sandy MacDonald, "and don't forget to take little Donald's glasses off when he isn't looking at anything."

German Invents Plane With Auxiliary Wings

Templehof, Germany.—A plane that "trims" its wings while in the air has undergone tests before aviation experts and the Berlin air police.



Professor Werner Schmeidler, Breslau mathematics teacher, is credited with the invention. His principle is carried out by attaching to the body of the plane two additional smaller wings which, when not needed, rest in the fuselage. It is claimed that the use of such valuable surfaces makes flying safe and more economical.

Demonstrations here showed that the inventor's plane, when starting with enlarged wings, rose within a few seconds. It required half the time to lift itself from the ground that an ordinary craft needed. The plane automatically increased its speed from seventy miles to ninety miles an hour when the auxiliary wings were removed during flight.

The extra spread also works as a brake when applied during the landing manoeuvre. The larger wing surface offers a strong resistance to the wind.

A FOUNDATION

How much more powerful a motive in human actions is love than fear! How much more readily does the heart of the man or of the child respond to kindness than to harshness! There is a very remarkable reflection attibuted to the Emperor Napoleon when, as an exile at St. Helena, he looked back on his past life. He is reported to have said, "My empire, and those of the other Great, Caesar, Charlemagne, were all founded on fear, and all have perished. There was only one based on love, that of the Great Author of Christianity; and that alone continues, and will endure."

Guarding the Great

Ministers of the Crown in Gt. Britain—and even Royal personages—have often been a little resentful of being dogged or having their homes guarded by detectives, though there are times when such precautions are very necessary.

But in some respects the full rigour of this guardianship is now being relaxed—as, for instance, at Chequers.

Mr. Ramsay MacDonald is probably responsible for the change at Chequers. But in getting the Home Secretary to consent to it he has been more fortunate than some past Premiers.

Gladstone, for instance, once demanded that the guard on Hawarden should be withdrawn, but Sir William Harcourt, who was then Home Secretary, refused, and the Premier had to submit.

At that time, as the Phoenix Park murders showed, the dangers of public life were very real, and Mr. Gladstone's guards must have had an anxious time. So had those of the late Earl Balfour, who often tried to dodge them.

Queen Victoria was also impatient of guards, and on one occasion informed the then Home Secretary, with great delight, that two "suspicious persons" had been arrested at Osborne. One of them was Prince Arthur, now the Duke of Connaught, and the other the Queen's maid.

But it is when foreign Royalties or statesmen from overseas come to this country that the most stringent precautions have to be taken. Mr. de Valera, for instance, was heavily guarded when he visited London recently.

The recent threats to put Miss England III out of action call attention to another aspect of the matter. There are fanatics who will attack a person or thing that happens to be in the public eye at the moment just to advertise their views. At the first aviation meeting ever held in Europe Anarchists tampered with some of the machines, and a number of crashes occurred.

Wifey—"I guess we had better change hotels."

Hubby—"Why?"

Wifey—"Everybody at this hotel has seen my gowns and heard your monologue."

The theatre like the church is one of the most conservative of our institutions. It follows and does not lead the crowd. Like the church, it is hostile to new ideas and yields to them slowly and reluctantly. But unlike the church, it does not find it necessary to justify its obscurantism by invocations of the supernatural. —Elmer Rice, Famous Playwright.
